Ontario Shoot Twelve Million Tons of Coal

Manufacturers Are Anxious About the Situation—To Confer with Railway and Steamship Companies—Appoint Committee with Powers to Act in Common Interest.

2,000,000 TONS OF ANTHRACITE NEEDED

Toronto, August 1.—Officials of the Canadian Division of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association met in conference yesterday with representatives of the various coal dealers, the Grand Trunk, Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways, the Canada Steamship Lines and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine to discuss the problem of the coal supply. It was finally decided that the various organizations mentioned above should appoint representatives to a sub-committee, vested with full power to act as they may see fit in the common interest.

Canada Exports.

Statistics, prepared by the Mining, Metallurgical and Chemical Branch of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, were laid before the meeting, which showed that any possible shortage would be confined to Ontario, Quebec and part of Manitoba, since the other Provinces supplied themselves with bituminous coal. In 1921 Nova Scotia produced in addition to that consumed within the Province, 2,100,000 tons of bituminous coal; Alberta, 1,700,000 tons of bituminous and lignite; British Columbia, 1,300,000 tons of bituminous. Of this surplus of approximately 5,000,000 tons, two million were exported and three million consumed in Canada.

According to the statistics Ontario and Quebec require 12,000,000 tons per year, in addition to supplies delivered up to the present, upon mine to ten million tons of bituminous coal and two million tons of anthracite. Similarly, Quebec will require two and one-half million tons of bituminous and one million of anthracite. It is expected that Nova Scotia will supply one and one-half million tons of bituminous coal to Quebec before the close of navigation.

"At the present time," says the report, "no anthracite coal and very little bituminous coal, is being shipped from the United States mines into Canada. The United States strike has closed all the anthracite mines and has cut the production of bituminous coal from an average daily production of more than 1,200,000 tons in the last week of March, 1922, to less than 600,000 tons in the week ending June 29, 1922.

Troubles in Canada.

"Labor troubles in Nova Scotia decreased the output in the mines in the month of April, and the closure of some mines in Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia cut production in these Provinces so that the output from all mines in Canada for the month of April was only 650,000 tons, as compared with 1,400,000 tons in the preceding month.

"Under normal conditions Canada consumes between 30 and 35 million tons of coal, of which from 18 to 21 million tons is imported from the United States, the balance being obtained from Canadian mines. During the past two years Central Ontario has imported annually about three million tons of anthracite from the United States and an additional third of a million tons of anthracite coal has been dumped at Upper Lake ports. Central Ontario imports annually about ten million tons of bituminous coal and two million additional tons is dumped at the head of the lakes."

HERBERT HOOVER,
U.S. Secretary of Commerce, who announces that Canada has been advised to import coal owing to the uncertainty of the Dominion's usual source of supply, the United States.

HOOVER ANNOUNCES HIS COAL PLANS

Fuel to Be Given Public Utilities First of All

Washington, August 1.—The signature fuel distribution system in the government and individual states, designed to save necessary industries from full effect of the fuel famine—will be in full operation within 48 hours, Mr. Hoover announced to-day. The first action will be to convey sufficient coal from producing mines to public utilities throughout the nation, he said.

Price Go Up.

New York, August 1.—Sharp rise in coal prices and increasing shortage were reported from industrial centres throughout the United States to-day as the government announced its fuel distribution scheme will be in effect in 48 hours.

"Ten days' supply only" is the report from many industrial centres, including Cleveland, Dallas and Philadelphia. Elsewhere public utilities are showing to a halt, substitute fuel is in use, while the outlook for the householder is dark, with dealers declining to meet orders.

PHYSICIANS ANXIOUS ABOUT LORD NORTHCLIFFE'S CONDITION

London, July 31.—The physicians in attendance upon Lord Northcliffe say that the condition of their patient still is causing them anxiety. The endocarditis, they assert, is showing no noticeable signs of improvement.

MONTREAL MAYOR'S LION AGAIN

Montreal, August 1.—The stone lion that stands sentinel in front of Mayor Martin's window lost one of its teeth in the dark watches of the night, sometime during the week-end. At first it was thought that some budding dental student had operated on the animal to get a little practice. Another supposition was that the rear lion had used its tusks through old age, but as he had been parked in front of the city hall for only a month or so, that deduction was ruled out. Then it was the one that the old boy was moulting. This latter scintillating piece of deduction due to the fact that the fore part of the alleged king of beasts closely resembled the pin feathered stage of an ostrich, but ostriches have only two legs while this work or art has four hoofs without on it. So that also got the air.

After some high class sleuthing on the part of The Herald which was undertaken regardless of expense, it was discovered that two honest to goodness lions are now installed in Labrador park where they cavort as all good lions should, imbibing the occasional explosion of a twelve-cylinder roar. Hence the missing molar.

Superintendent Bernadette, of the parks department, installed the two lions in their nice new brick den on Saturday, and all day yesterday they were the cynosure of a multitude of admiring eyes which failed to find any deficiencies in their leonine makeup, which is more than can be said for the teeth in front of the city hall.

Both the lions are still in their cocks but they are growing like mush rooms and by the end of the summer it is expected that they will compare favorably with anything in the line that Ballou and Barjer's circus can produce. They have been christened Mike and Ike—they look alike.

ALL SAFE ASHORE EXCEPT WAITER

One Life Lost as Result of Stranding of Rapids Prince

WORK BY RESCUERS

Mayor of La Tortue and Boy Helper Heroes of Occasion

Montreal, August 1.—Charles Rose, head waiter on the steamer the Rapids Lines vessel Rapid Prince, which has been aground on the Lachine Rapids since Sunday morning, was drowned about 7.30 last evening, according to a wireless message received from the ship to-night.

The message stated that Rose and his assistant, Robert Armstrong, were returning to the steamer in the lifeboat when it upset. Armstrong was saved.

Passengers All Safe.

If four hundred passengers were safely landed from the pleasure steamer Rapids Prince between 10 a. m. and 5 p. m. to-day, it was principally due to the untiring energy and superior navigation of Mayor H. Guerin, of La Tortue and his young helper, who covered the distance forty times, with ten people in each load, through the turbulent current of the Lachine Rapids.

So say those who were landed, and all are unanimous in praising this chief of the small municipality, who undertook to steer the lifeboat, and who, in every case, delivered his shipload without the slightest mishap.

Simple But Dangerous Process.

The problem of landing passengers from the Rapids Prince was solved by a very simple, if rather dangerous, process. One of the lifeboats was launched, and a long rope was attached to it, which on deck, the two above-mentioned manning the craft. The first of the lifeboats turned out to be that of the ill-fated Rapids. With this boat was done comparatively easily, for it was a matter of judging a short leap from the lower ledge of the steamer onto the lifeboat, but when it came to the women and children considerable difficulty was experienced and had it not been for willing aid of sturdy men above in holding them by the arms and equally sturdy men below in the lifeboat to catch them as they were lowered, it is probable that numerous accidents would have resulted.

As soon as ten people were aboard the lifeboat, the signal was given and the craft was loosened to its full length from the winches. The rushing current drove the lifeboat along at a swift pace and at the end of the rope, where the boat was quiet, small rowboats took the passengers away, landing them on Heron Island. The life boat was then hauled back by the power of the winch and the trip was repeated until forty boat loads had left the Rapids Prince.

Another Short Boat Trip.

After being landed the passengers had to walk to the south end of Heron Island, and here they again embarked in other boats and were rowed across to La Tortue wharf. Automobiles and motor buses provided by the Canada Steamship Lines, Ltd., then took the passengers to their respective homes or hotels in Montreal.

The entire process of landing the 400 passengers took roughly seven hours; no mean feat, the rescued ones say, considering the dangerous position they were in and the short but extremely rough piece of water which had to be passed before gaining terra firma.

Cannot Move Boat.

At six o'clock tonight, Mr. J. W. Norrow, Vice-President and Managing Director of the Canada Steamship Lines and other officials of the company, left the Rapids Prince. The captain and the crew remained on board. Efforts to free the vessel were made both on the night of the stranding and the whole day to-day, but it was found impossible to move the steamer from the ledge.

UNREST DUE TO COST OF BEER

London, August 1.—(Canadian Press Cable.)—J. Rose Clynes, Labor Leader of the House of Commons, and reporter of Sir James Barr, the noted Liverpool physician, who declared before the British Medical Association that the existing social unrest in England would be reduced if the cost of beer were lessened. To Labor Leader says that there is no great demand for stronger beer. What the workers want, he declares, is cheaper beer.

It is worth remembering that likewise members of Parliament years ago pledged themselves to abstinence before performing their parliamentary duties.

NO EMBARGO ON U.S. COAL

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Aug. 6.—The United States has placed no embargo on the exportation of coal to Canada, according to Tom King, writing from Washington to the Toronto Star to-day. Hearst, Fedderal Fuel Distributor, is given as author of statement.

Personally, he said, he had no application for allotment of coal from the Canadian Government, but any representations would be made by the Canadian Government. He was very reluctant to say much about the subject for Canada was estimated that if provided first claim of public for the government.

HARDING MAKES PROPOSALS TO ALL STRIKERS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, August 1.—President Harding's proposals for the settlement of the railroad strike were made public to-day at the Canadian Press office in full. The heads and are three in number.

The first sets forth that men and railways abide by wages decisions of the Labor Board.

The second would provide that all law suits brought by either side in connection with the strike be withdrawn and settlement with Labor Board.

The third suggests that strikers return on the basis of seniority which they enjoyed before strike.

A conference of railroad executives is being held at Grand Central Terminal. Secretary of Commerce Hoover presented, position of administration. No action was taken on the proposals and conference will continue this afternoon.

20,000 MOTORMEN GO ON STRIKE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Chicago, Aug. 1.—Surface and elevated railroad companies of Chicago, and unofficial reports indicate that practically all of the 20,000 motormen employed by these companies have responded to the strike call issued by their union officials.

Company officials declare that only a small number of cars are being operated by strike breakers and that service is virtually paralyzed.

Mayor Dever has declared that he will not interfere with the strike unless violence occurs, but that he will see that all property is protected.

DOGS POISONED IN THE CITY

A Number Obtained Poison Set Out on Park to Destroy Rats

Several dogs whose owners reside in the vicinity of the C. P. R. station and Canifton Road have been poisoned by securing poison which was placed in Memorial park to exterminate rats. The park is located at the junction of Canifton road and Bridge street.

One of the owners has through his solicitors asked the Council to make good for the loss of his canine. As the City Council did not engage the rats exterminator it is understood the matter has been referred to the Board of Health under whose instructions it is alleged they were acting. Some of the dogs poisoned were valuable.

CAN STILL SAVE LIFE

Half-Blind Hero Receives Humane Society Medal For Gallant Rescue

Montreal, August 1.—The heroism of Bernard Donovan, who although almost blind, plunged into the Lachine Canal on May 14th last, and rescued Earl Gough, 13, from drowning, was rewarded this morning when he was presented with the bronze medal of the Royal Canadian Humane Association.

One of Donovan's eyes was smashed in by a baseball some two years ago and the pupil of the other eye is so badly affected, that he is barely able to guide himself around the streets, and has been unable to find permanent employment since he first enlisted.

While walking near the canal on the day of the accident he heard a voice say "He has fallen in!" Although unable to see the floundering boy in the water, Donovan scrambled down into the utility crew, and, guided by the drowning boy's cries and splashes, seized him and brought him to the shore's edge, holding him there until they were hauled to their by onlookers. Donovan reported Earl Gough by inserting his fingers into the cracks of the perpendicular canal wall.

REMEMBERS FAMILY CAT IN HER WILL

New York, Aug. 1.—A clause in the will of Barbara Webendoerfer, of Scarsdale Ave., Yonkers, just filed with Surrogate Geo. Slater, of West Chester County, and made public today, remembers the family cat and provides for its maintenance. She left a personal estate of an "upward of $5,000." The distributes gifts of money and jewelry to several relatives. "I request that my sister, Theresa, take care of my cat, if it be alive, at my decease," reads a provision of the will.

DUM-DUMS ARE USED BY IRISH REBELS

Dublin, August 1.—Among the eighteen irregulars captured by the National army after their recent night's ambush of Government troops near Athlone, dum-dum bullets and explosive bullets were found, says the official report on the affair. The report states that the dum-dum explosives killed seven wounded. In the exchange of fire in the fighting which followed the ambush reinforcements for the Free State troops were rushed to the scene and it was not long before the Free State troops had the rebels surrounded. Those who were captured were forced to seek immediate transportation.

DIES A MARTYR TO SCIENCE

Toronto Professor Succumbs to Disease Induced by Experiments

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, August 1.—Dr. Frederick L. Mackenzie, head of the department of Pathology at the University of Toronto, died at an early hour this morning at Dr. Parfitt's sanitarium at Gravenhurst. He was recognized as one of the world's greatest pathologists. He was a member of the staff of number four base hospital in France during the war, and following the Armistice he returned to Canada, and engaged in investigating streptococci which resulted in an illness which caused his death.

Streptococci are a group of germs which give rise to a series of symptoms varied through the body's blood stream.

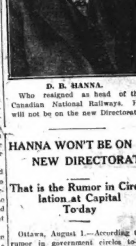

The late Professor was born in St. Thomas 47 years ago.

The late Prof. Mackenzie was of Scottish origin and was born in St. Thomas 47 years ago. He was educated in the University of Toronto and in the Universities of Leipzig and Berlin. He was for some time a fellow in biology of Toronto University and was later bacteriologist for the Ontario Board of Health, and in 1914 was appointed professor of bacteriology and bacteriology. He received the degree of F.R.S.C. in 1909. He was professionally associated with various medical bodies and wrote frequently on medical subjects. He was married in 1902 to Agnes Kathleen, daughter of W. F. Rogers, Dublin, Ireland.

Professor Mackenzie was reported on Friday of last week to be suffering from an attack of acute ulcerated endocarditis which he had incurred as a result of his experiments with streptococci germs deadly pus-forming bacteria which played havoc among the allied armies operating in the Balkan theatre during the War. His medical service at Salonika had necessitated him with the disease germs and it is as a result of his desire to undergo scientific experiments upon himself that he became himself a victim to it. He made for several days a brave fight and seemed to be holding his own. The infection, however, had become too general and all yesterday he sank rapidly.

A Prisoner's Pledge.

A prisoner is required to sign the following pledge before the question of his release is considered: "I promise not to use arms against the Parliament elected by the Irish people or its Government for the time being responsible to that Government. I will not support in any way any such action, nor will I interfere with the property or possessions of others."

D. B. HANNA.
Who resigned as head of the Canadian National Railways. He will not be on the new Directorate.

HANNA WON'T BE ON NEW DIRECTORATE

That is the Rumor in Circulation at Capital Today

Ottawa, August 1.—According to a rumor in government circles to-day Mr. D. B. Hanna, president of the Canadian National Railways will not be a member of the new directorate.

According to the rumors the directors who handled in their resignations within the past ten days have been informed that they were accepted by the government. In connection with Mr. Hanna it is stated that it had been decided that he would not be on the new board to be named for the unified lines.

RAIL EXECUTIVE TO PREPARE FOR PEACE

Washington Attitude on Rail Strike Settlement Changed

TWO DEVELOPMENTS

Enthusiasm Discounted Because Neither Side Know Detailed Plan

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Aug. 7.—The standing committee of the American Association of Railway Executive went into session here to-day to prepare a reply to President Harding's peace proposals.

Washington, July 31.—Official Washington's attitude toward acceptance by employers and employes of the Harding proposals for ending the railway strike has changed from one of "utmost confidence" to one of hopefulness.

Advices of the administration still profess optimism that President Harding's compromise plan will be accepted before midnight of the meetings to be held simultaneously in New York and Chicago where now, but frankly confess that hope of speedy and unanimous approval by both sides has gone glimmering.

The change of attitude is attributed to two developments. One is that the movement against the compromise inflicted by some of the larger eastern managers has established formidable proportions. The other is that the expressed enthusiasm of some of the labor leaders must be discounted because these leaders do not know what the plan really contains.

The latter development was made known to-day by one of the strongest figures in the administration when it was expressed that any speed or unanimity of acceptance by both sides depended upon the information contained in the executive session. It was intimated that much concerned about the possibility of rejection by the unions in meeting of executives to be held in New York.

GERMANS SAY THEY CAN'T PAY

Find it "Impossible" to Continue Monthly Payments

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Berlin, August 1.—The German reply to the French note regarding the payment by Germany to the allied clearing house on account of the debts contracted by German nationals with allied nationals prior to the outbreak of the war, was telegraphed to Paris last night. It asserts that Germany finds it impossible to continue the monthly payment of two million pounds.

PORTAGE LA PRAIRIE VISITED BY STORM

Considerable Damage Done to Crops by Hail in Vicinity

Portage la Prairie, Man., Aug. 1.—Considerable damage was done to crops in the district of Portage yesterday afternoon by a severe storm accompanied by hail, but the extent cannot be definitely estimated as will be learned to-night. In some parts, notably between Portage la Prairie and MacDonald, the damage will be very heavy.

It is reported that the hail damage will amount to about thirty-five per cent. in the MacDonald district. Just south of McDonald, the storm was more severe and reports from the district report a total crop loss. This district was struck by a storm about two weeks ago, suffering still more loss, and to-day's storm completed the damage.

In the city widows with northern exposure were smashed and at the city hall twenty-five panes of glass were broken. A downpour of rain followed the hail and continued for half an hour. The rain was general over the Portage district.

The storm evidently made Portage la Prairie its centre, and having here passed south to the Oakville district. Reports from there are that hail damages will amount to about twenty-five per cent. in the path of the storm.

A "TALL STORY" OF A TALL WAVE

St. John's, Newfoundland, August 1.—A "tall story" was the way local papers described the following when it appeared in a British weekly some time ago:

"Two steamers ran a large berg anchored itself outside the entrance to the harbor of St. John's, Newfoundland. Two boys in a row boat, fishing for cod, saw the danger and headed for the open sea through the bottle-neck approach. The berg, following, struck the steamers and broke up close to shore. The waves which were raised tore boats from their moorings and threw them on the rocks. The boys did not return and friends set out with little hope of finding even a fragment of the boat, and returned to mourn. The following day a fisherman leaving the harbor thought he heard weak shouts high up on the cliffs. He climbed the cliffs and found a mere ledge where the boys had been thrown by the waves. They were overjoyed to see their friends, but could not get down. The waves had created such havoc within the harbor had lifted the boat and deposited it high and dry on a ledge of the five hundred foot cliff by a rope to take the lads to safety.

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM:

Plenty of Time!

When I went down to the Morgue and saw him lying there looking perfectly absurd I realized that the most pitiful thing about the whole business was that he never knew what hit him.

There were no chairs, but I leaned up against the wall and wondered if anybody would ever tell him what hit him. It seemed to me a and thing that he would be kept in ignorance, perhaps for millions of years, till the triumph of doom, and he would never know what hit him.

I attended the funeral, and the officiating clergyman went to great pains to assure us that he had gone to his rest. I find this hard to accept. How can he go to sleep and have a real good sleep, if he doesn't know what hit him? I never miss a flower show or a prize fight, and I have noticed a remarkable thing about the latter. I have seen hundreds of prize fighters knocked out, and I have assisted to resuscitate many of them, and invariably the first thing they say when they come to is "What hit me?" I don't recall that any of them asked "Where he is?" They didn't seem to be interested in that; but I am satisfied that recovery would have been impossible unless they found out what hit them. And one would think that they ought to know! I can envision a lonely traveller climbing the golden stair, and when he gets to the gate the first thing he asks St. Peter is, "What hit me?" Just as if he doubted saint had nothing better to do than find out what hit every candidate.

In teaching the people the value of time, I can't help thinking that it is overdone. It is everstastingly dinged into the heads of helpless little children that time is short. As a matter of fact, there is more time than anything else. There is so much of it that you can take time whenever you feel like it. There is more time than sex, more time than sand, more time than space. That being the case, why does a man try to beat an express train to a crossing? And then, for a couple of million years he will lie on the broad of his back wondering what hit him, and he will never find out till Gabriel blows his horn—if then. Fancy a man lying for a thousand of years, let alone a million, wondering if it was a stroke, or did he bust a blood vessel, or what? It would prefer not into his fool head that the train hit him, for the last thing he can remember is that the train was still a mile away.

We should reverse our educational system altogether, and teach the young and such other that there is plenty of time. Almost all of us want to live for a long time. This is possible if we take the time. That's simple, ain't it? There is lots of time, and always will be There was time before the universe was fashioned. There will be time when it is rolled up like a scroll. There always was, is now and ever will be plenty of time. Then why waste time?

A friend of mine dived into a pool the other day and his head against a submerged stone and now he is with the angels. (I am not sure of that, either). It is hard to say where he is. If he had just taken a minute and explored that pool he would have located that stump; but, oh, no. He was in the big a hurry. And now, I have no doubt, whatever he may be, he is wondering what or who hit him. Dreadful thought! He may get it into his head that I hit him! On Resurrection morning he may walk up to me and ask me what I hit him with. And I never touched him. And yet it will take a large part of eternity to convince him that I didn't

FROM NORTH OF TWEED

A Home Letter for Scottish Exiles

(By Robert S. Angus, in Montreal Gazette).

Edinburgh, July 13.—One of the most interesting bits of news I have heard this week is the expectation of the Glasgow Herald have bought the Glasgow Evening Citizen, not as might be supposed, for the purpose of merging it in their own paper, The Evening Times, but with the intention of carrying on both. This transaction, ends a long period of uncertainty as to the future of this Citizen. It has been on the market for some years, and more than once its sale has been reported. More than one London syndicate was after it for political purposes, and I suspect that it is partly to keep out intruders into their arena that the Herald proprietors have stepped in. For many years the Citizen had easily the best of it among the Glasgow evenings, and to this day it has a supply of small advertisements which is almost unrivalled. But it paid the penalty of old age in being a bit old-fashioned in its methods, and with the Evening News brilliantly run by Mr. Neil Munro and an able staff, and with the Evening Times enjoying all the resources of the Herald, the citizen's hold was weakened, and the proprietors, who were understood not to be on the best of terms with each other, probably had not the capital to keep pace with their rivals. Moreover, they were late in wakening up to the importance of sporting news, especially on Saturdays, and were content to make a sober appeal to the older and more substantial readers. Under its new proprietors I expect the Citizen to take a fresh lease of life, and the staff will welcome the change, for the Herald has long been noted for its generous treatment of its employees.

Dr. Harrison's Death.

We have lost one of our oldest and best citizens in the death of Dr. John Harrison, son of Lord Provost Sir George Harrison, head of a leading firm of cloth merchants, and long a prominent figure in municipal and social life. But for an uncertainty of temper, he might have occupied the civic chair like his father before him, and he was actually a candidate on one or two occasions. He was for three years Master of the Merchant Company, and served for some years as Treasurer of the City. Dr. Harrison was a living example of how much literary culture are not incompatible. He wrote a history of the University, from which he obtained his LL.D., and a number of Holyrood Police, and was a keen student of antiquarian matters. Whenever he was in difficulty with an article about old Edinburgh, I used to step across to his warehouse in St. Andrew Square, and there from behind a barricade of cloth bales he would either give me the information or tell me where to get it. And as we parted he would pat me on the back as one of the few men he knew who took an interest in the history of the city. I never had the heart to avow that my interest was primarily compulsory and professional.

Mr. Taft at Aberdeen.

Mr. Taft had a boisterously enthusiastic welcome from the students of Aberdeen when he went north this week to receive the degree of LL.D. from the University there. In presenting him, the Lord Rector of the Marischal College Guild of foundation was exploding the dilatory processes of the Roman Church, recalling the days when the Reformation was beating his way westwards to the New World, that the masons were busy with King's College, and on the sunny banks of the Don when the word America was first heard in Scotland, and, more recently, that William Wallace Smith, the first Provost of Pennsylvania, whose famous "Plain" inaugurated a far-reaching academic reform throughout the United States, was a native of Slains and a graduate of Aberdeen. Mr. Taft left himself quite at home in Aberdeen for his host, Principal Sir George Adam Smith, is an old personal friend.

Arran War Memorial.

While places like Glasgow and Dundee are still disputing as to the form and site of their war memorials, the island of Arran has settled the problem in a highly practical and beneficent way by building and suitably endowing a cottage hospital at Lamlash. Not only the natives of the island, but those who resort to it for health or holiday have supported the movement, and a sum of over £14,000 has been raised. The Marquis and Marchioness of Graham, who are the proprietors of the island, gave the site for nothing, and Mr. Archibald Cook, a Glasgow man, has given the equipment free. The building has cost under £8,000, and Lady Hamilton did the furnishing, and has also left a handsome legacy in hand for endowment. This is pleasant reading at a time when the big towns are almost drowning in the flood of voluntary hospital system. The new institution will be an inestimable boon to the holiday visitors to Arran, while hitherto to have had to go to Glasgow or Edinburgh to get hospital treatment. The opening ceremony was performed by Sir Harold Stiles, the world-famous surgeon, who recalled that he had known the island since his earliest days, when, on holiday in company with one Alexander Thomson, now his fellow professor of surgery at Edinburgh, he journey every day on foot to and from Brodick.

New Solicitor-General.

After much delay in Downing Street, the announcement is officially made of a decision taken some weeks ago to appoint Mr. William Watson as Solicitor-General for Scotland in succession to Mr. Craigie Aitchison, who has gone to the judicial bench. Mr. Watson is the son of one of the greatest British judges of last generation, Lord Watson, who for many years was the virtual leader of the House of Lords Appeal Committee, and is remembered as the last occupant of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. For some years he was a member of Parliament for Lanark, and the Government would like to get him back to the House of Commons if a seat could be found for him. That is not easy, but I am told that both the Unionists and the Liberals in Galloway are willing to take him when Major McMicking retires at the general election.

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" SAVED HER LIFE

This Fruit Medicine Always Gives Relief

117 Dundas St., Montreal.

I suffered from Indigestion and Dyspepsia. I had it for years and all the medicines I took did not do me any good.

I read something about "Fruit-a-tives" being good for all Stomach Troubles and Disorders of Digestion, so I tried them.

After finishing a few boxes, I was entirely relieved of the Dyspepsia and my general health was restored; and I am writing to tell you that I owe my life to "Fruit-a-tives".

lived off the country as he went. 8 years travelling was necessary to reach civilization but the engineer plans to return by airplane, the journey which would ordinarily occupy 2 year, taking but a few days. On the return journey he will make a camp-ers with him, and by photographs will substantiate his remarkable tale of the "hot water" valley and its luxuriant plant and tree growth and other strange discoveries made by him.

BUILDING ACTIVITY BECOMING SOUNDER

The First Stage of Speculative Development is Now Passed

During July, construction contracts awarded in Canada, according to Mc-Graw Building Reports, Limited, amounted to $26,054,200 compared with $35,020,400 in June and $17,741,400 in July, 1922. Residential building accounted for 53.3 per cent. of the July total and amounted to $13,424,000 as since building amounted to $6,146,400 or 20.5 per cent. of the total; industrial building $1,397,000 or 5.4 per cent.; public works and utilities $7,715,000 or 29.8 per cent. The value of contemplated new work reported for June July was $30,970,000.

During June, the Wholesale Price Index of 46 building materials advanced slightly are is now 79.7 per cent above 1913, compared with a peak of 183.9 per cent reached in May '20. Prices have now declined 36.6 % from the high. The recent slight increase is due to increased costs as a result of a sudden demand for material and labor at a time when material stocks are low. It is interesting to note, however, that production is increasing and that a large proportion of the building material plants are working full time, and in many cases overtime, in order to meet the demand. It is not anticipated that cost increases will be great, in fact, the cost of building will, over a long period of years, be more gradually with here and there a brief increase as the volume of activity becomes unusually large. This is a logical prediction and indicated that the average building project may now be undertaken without fear of any great decrease in reproduction value with a consequent shrinkage of investment and mortgage loan offered.

It is apparent that we have passed the crest of the first wave of building activity represented by speculative development. We are now entering the second and somewhat slower wave, better types of buildings will be constructed, and they will be much greater activity in architectural effect. Many large building projects which have been held up during past years are now ready for revival, and considerable activity is in prospect in the better types of housing and the provision of a great number of educational and institutional buildings, public buildings and business premises. Now that general business conditions have become partly readjusted, good harvests should prove an active stimulant. If they turn out as well as now predicted, they ought to put a decided kick into fall trade.

TO EXPLORE COAL AREA

Hamilton Men Financing Test of Reported Valuable Find

Sudbury, Aug. 1.—The latest controversy over the question of whether anthracite coal exists in Northern Ontario in commercially possible position and quantity has aroused great interest throughout the north country, for it is realized that now is the time to test the truth of A. F. Coyne's contention that he has found a huge field that will transform the northern part of the Province into one of the continent's greatest hives of industry. Coal in the north with all the other products that are here would undoubtedly start a remarkable boom.

Coyne Is Certain.

Hamilton, July 31.—The coal problem, which at present is acute, has brought about a great deal of public interest, stated A. F. Coyne, Toronto geologist, who is also associate Director of Instruction in Geology and Engineering to the Petroleum-Extraction University, Fort Wayne, Indiana, when interviewed here.

"I wish it pointed out that a report was issued by the Provincial Department of Mines in 1907, that a deposit of coal-like substance known to exist at Larchwood, Ontario, was classified as Anthracite in the Government report. While I am of the opinion that this deposit is anthracite coal, which has been crushed by a slipping of the containing rocks, it has little or nothing to do with the subject of anthracite coal near Sudbury now, as a new seam which was dynamited in one of the rocks some miles away by instructions is admittedly true anthracite coal.

"The authorities of a coal bed is produced by compressing plant and results generally from a basin-like formation. The first requisite geologically exists near Sudbury, caused by the surrounding nickel ridge. Feldspathic sandstone, with hard shales, cracking into coal-like, are the next geological requirement. Having delineated these structures in their true geological sequence, together with surface samples of graphitic coal hitherto unknown and unfound, I at once came to the conclusion that Sudbury had in the remarks of an authority, "a coal field in the true sense of the word" and could expect to find coal, and a coal slate outcrop. One of many was situated and identified, with the result that anthracite coal became exposed within 20 inches from the surface, and from which over C.P.R. trains can be seen hauling Pennsylvania coal to Toronto.

Samples Complete.

"Samples of this coal have been analysed by me and my first assistant, C. B. W. Anderson, late assistant analyst, Department of Science, Government of British Guiana, and also by outside independent analysts, as well as one of the United States universities, and all agree that the product is anthracite coal of excellent grade."

Queried about how soon development work would start, Mr. Coyne stated that Hamilton coal interests had retained him, and that certain coal rights were to be immediately turned over for mining.

"This is the proof of the pudding," he said. "There's no use arguing technically about this Sudbury coal. I am quick of technical opinion and so on, there is the anthracite coal," and with that statement Mr. Coyne scattered a couple of pounds of the coal on the table.

"This is not a fake; this is anthracite coal, found in Ontario right at transportation. The coal is there. This is proven, and I am glad to state that Hamilton is the first to recognize this fact, and that Hamilton coal men are now on the job. It's not a stock-jobbing proposition, and the public will be well advised to leave coal shares alone, and let coal men take the risk. The coal will be mined, shipped and sold at a price nearly half that of Pennsylvania coal, and we will show that Ontario has coal under yet that a lot of coal timers are prone to believe. The prospect is assured of a thorough test by me, and I am of the opinion that the coal is in commercial quantity. I have some right to make this statement with confidence when I was the first to prove to you that authracite coal exists in Ontario, despite all previous notions."

Leave Stock Alone.

"Some people think that the government should do everything. This is a wrong attitude. The government department is there for passing mens evidence brought to light by enterprise and discovery, and, in so far as my establishment of the actual occurrence of anthracite coal is concerned, the government inspection held last week was fair and courteous, but I can say you can be cast on any further concerned. There's your authracite coal. Hamilton coal men are on the job already, the Ontario public will buy it, therefore once more Ontario will prove the man or the province big fish. That's good news, so why be pessimistic?

"I am content to buy Ontario anthracite as soon as it is on the market, and leave coal shares and promoters stocks alone."

Questioned about the report of coal discovery at Shelburne, Mr. Coyne said:

"Regarding the occurrence of coal at Shelbourne, I made an examination and report on that. This is not a true coal, but a metamorphosed bitumen. There are commercial possibilities here, but the technical problem in this prospect is such that any stock company would be bound to fail in attempting to commercialize the product, while there are good possibilities here, capital for which is being arranged to test out at present. I am quite in accordance with the views of the Department of Mines of Ontario on this matter."

"RALPH CONNOR" FOR ARBITRATION BOARD

Montreal, Aug. 1.—R. C. McCutcheon, Canadian vice-president of boilermakers and helpers and member of the executive board of division No. 4 stated here that the appointment of Hon. Dr. Gordon, on the arbitration board between the Canadian railways and their shop employes would be quite acceptable to labor. He added that if the reply from the government in regard to the enforcing of wage resolutions by the railways is unsatisfactory, "we intend to take that answer as final, for we are not negotiating with you in that way. It will then be a case of letting the big' Bertha fire,' general strike in other words, or a general lockout. The Ottawa report, however, is unofficial.

The selection of Isaac Pitblado, of Winnipeg, as company representative, and of James Simpson, of Toronto, as nominee of labor employes, was formally notified to the parties on Friday by the department of labor, and these two representatives have been in consultation as to the choice of chairman since that time.

CANADA TO HOLD GERMAN EFFECTS

London, Aug. 1.—Will Canada keep $20,000,000 worth of sequestrated German property in lieu of the German reparation money, which she has little hope of getting? That is the issue being thrashed out at a series of meetings between Thomas Mulvey, Under Secretary of State for Canada, officials of the Canadian High Commissioner's Office, and the Reparations Clearing Office in London.

The Dominion received approximately $6,250,000 from Germany as payment of the cost of her army of occupation on the Rhine. She has received nothing since, and the indications now are that it is all she can look for from this source. The Government at Ottawa apparently thinks so, and is pressing to be allowed to retain the sequestrated property of German nationals. Britain has not yet returned its sequestrated property, but the United States is understood to favor such an action on its own part. Canada, of course, stands to receive about four per cent. of any reparation money received by Great Britain for the Empire as a whole. Britain, however, seems disposed to forego her claim as a means to promote a European cooperation.

Germany has disconfirmed the payment of recent claims, including those of Canadians, against her subject.

WOMEN OPPOSE RAFFLE LAW

Toronto, Aug. —Many interesting discussions have taken place among members of various women's organizations as a result of the recent announcement of General Victor Williams, Ontario Police Commissioner, concerning the holding of sales at bazaars. According to the provisions of the Act, all lotteries are prohibited with the exception of raffles at affairs for religious and charitable purposes, for prizes of small value—not more than $50—after permission has been obtained from the municipal authorities. The point which, if rigidly enforced, would probably meet with some opposition, is contained in the last clause of the provision, which states that the article raffled must first be offered for sale.

"If the law is rigidly applied it will certainly mean a decided curtailment in our receipts," said Mrs. W. R. Jackson, Municipal Regent, I.O.D.E., when asked as to possible consequences. "At almost all our bazaars there is a small raffle, the tickets seldom costing more than 25 cents, and generally selling at 10 cents. It has always been an easy and popular way to raise funds, and, personally, I am not opposed to it. We could not possibly sell an article for the same amount as could be obtained in a raffle.

"Of course, we always secure permission from the Police Commissioner before we make our plans, and I do not remember ever being refused," Mrs. Jackson added.

Some of the chapters during the past year have realized between $200 and $500 from raffles and like sales, and they argue that any measure of a prohibitory nature would have a decided effect on their money-making resources of such organizations.

SUB-TROPICS IN NORTHERN B.C.

Remarkable Valley of Hot Spring Discovered in Arctic Region

Edmonton, Alta., Aug. 1 (By Canadian Press).—Strange tales have been told by explorers from subArctic regions, but none more strange than those of Frank Perry, mining engineer of Vancouver, who is back to civilization after 17 years' time prospecting in an immense unknown territory in far northern British Columbia, close to the Yukon boundary. Discovery of an almost tropical valley with rivers of boiling water and many mineral springs, abnormal plant growth and plentiful with game, is reported by Mr. Perry.

The area of the terrain in which the engineer has been travelling for the past seventeen years is roughly 700 miles north and south and 300 miles wide; it lies between the coastal range and the Liard and Fort Nelson rivers, and contains factors hitherto unknown to Canadians.

For mineral reasons, Mr. Perry, at the present time, is not divulging the exact location of the "hot water" valley which he came upon in the depth of winter. The unusual sight of a heavy fog in winter attracted him to the valley and later exploration showed it to be approximately 300 miles long and about 40 miles wide. Rivers of hot water run through it fed by hundreds of hot springs, which bubbled out of the ground in all directions, the steam from these being condensed on rising, forming the fog which he had first seen from the range east.

Mr. Perry remained in the valley and its neighborhood for a year and never before in his experiences in a game country had he seen so many wild animals. These congregated due to the luxuriant vegetation made possible by the heat generated by the springs, and in the valley were hundreds of mountain sheep and goats, caribou and moose, with also bears and other fur-bearing animals. The moose, almost square from fat, were so tame that he has been able to walk amongst them and could almost touch them. The Indians, although knowing the valley to be a hunter's paradise, never visit it through the superstition that prehistoric animals still roam the district.

In addition to the hot springs, some of which break from the ground at a boiling temperature, there are mineral springs of various descriptions, and to these the explorer attributes the extraordinary fatness of the wild animals in part.

The tree growth in the valley was abnormal, Mr. Perry states. The ordinary wild rose bushes were like trees, with stems as thick as a man's forearm, and so dense that it was impossible to force a way through, while the willows grew to tree size, and it was possible to walk along the branches. Some of the trunks of the latter were fully one foot and a half through, vines grew to a length of about 60 feet add nettles and ferns were both of unusual height. Birch trees, says the explorer, grew to the height of 700 feet, and for some particular reason these bent over and almost touched the ground, while the grasses and shrubs common to the north, were all of unusual size.

Another peculiar feature was that the valley was free of frost in the winter due to the action of the boiling springs and the consequent vapor. Important mineral deposits were discovered by Mr. Perry, including gold, silver and copper. Coal, iron and oil formations were also found.

While Mr. Perry found the blank spaces at the top of the map his companions were two pack dogs who carried his equipment, and he

RANNEY FALLS BARGAIN

"Let Public Ownership Pay Its Way" is the title of an editorial in the Financial Post dealing with Sir Adam Beck's recent bargain with the Federal Government in connection with the Ranney Falls. The article is very brief, and runs as follows:

"Sir Adam Beck claims credit for driving a hard bargain with Ottawa and getting water rights at Ranney's Falls at lower prices than private consumers would have to pay for the same water supply. Public ownership in Ontario gains nothing in an adjustment of private ownership when that advantage is at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada who depend upon revenues from Dominion resources to lighten their tax burden.

Whatever may be said for or against public ownership, in this instance at least, The Post has got a very poor stick to beat it with. It is mightily concerned about the revenues from Dominion resources, but what about the expenditure on the Trent Valley Canal? This river is maintained as a navigable waterway at a big expense to the taxpayers of the Dominion. A very few people have the free use of the water and all the locks for pleasure purposes and yet when the people of the district want the use of the water to turn the wheels of industry they are told that they must pay the top-notch price. The Post should realize that whatever will increase the industry of any province is good for the Dominion at large. There is no comparison between a public-owned enterprise and a private commercial concern. One is for the benefit of the whole community while the other is run for personal profit.

THE FUTILITY AND DISASTER OF STRIKES

The ends of a severe industrial dispute are far-reaching. Here is an example: Last summer, down in little Newfoundland, the paper-makers of the Harmsworth paim at Grand Falls struck against a reduction in wages, although the London publishers were confronted with the competition of cheap Scandinavian and German wood pulp and paper.

Just previous to that strike a test had been made of some machinery manufactured in Belleville, and a tentative agreement for a considerable order was given. When the strike came the order was cancelled; thus the manufacturer and worker at Belleville suffered indirectly from an industrial dispute in which they had neither partake lot.

Instances such as these could be multiplied indefinitely. Entire villages have been practically swept away by strikes in the Old Land. The industrial life of cities in England has been permanently ruined by strikes. There was no busier and more prosperous city in the world than Northampton when it was in its prime as the shoe manufacturing centre of Great Britain.

The shoe factories were overflowing with work, so that private citizens made parts of shoes in their own homes and added considerably to their incomes. But such prosperity was too good to last—at least it was so evidently the view of the labor leaders, who set to work to sow the seeds of discontent among the workers. They did their work very effectively. The workers threw down their tools and the whole of the shoe trade was suspended in that city. The strike lasted so long that people who were once happy and prosperous were reduced to starvation, and in many instances were actually fed by the masters whom they had rebelled against. The morale of the workers was so reduced that they were eventually glad to get back to work at any price. But the mischief had been done, and it was irreparable. Trade had gone elsewhere.

It is the duty of the press and the churches to not only emphasize the futility of national wars, but also of industrial wars.

The Mayor and Aldermen are to be congratulated for taking action toward securing coal for the city. We look to them in co-operation with local coal dealers to provide the necessary black bullets to fight the winter.

The city will be well advised to keep out of the coal business; it has enough to do to mind its own.

We always had a warm corner in our heart for a coal man, although he is not particularly immaculate in person, there are many ladies who would be ready to embrace him if he would only fill their coal bins, and we would not mind treating him personally to an ice-cream soda on the same conditions.

HERE AND THERE

BEARS ARE HUMORISTS.

Dunmow, in Essex, like most another English village, has frequent visits from the skilful training of dogs, bears and cats. It amuses youngsters mightily, and their seniors as well, when two baby tom cats box one another as deftly as if human rivals in a prize-ring. Young bears are the humorists of the animal world; their high intelligence gives unconscious point to fun. I have seen a young bear pace the side of a pond with unfeigned pride of ownership, warning a chum rushes at him and knocks him into the water with the utmost glee. Dogs can be taught to chase one another by name, so that when Fido is told to fetch Bill, he finds Bill, and seizing his cur within his teeth, brings him to his master.

How to Choose a Monkey.

Monkeys, of course, excel all the other lower animals in the range of their accomplishments. They have been taught to arrange cards from an alphabetical series so as to spell "John" or "Paul." Many tenants of the cages in the Zoological Gardens in London might profitably be captivity, so that their young are redundant and sold by the pound. One day Joe Beck, a gypsy trainer of animals, came to the Garden and asked the price for young monkeys. "Ten shillings," was the response. He rejoined, "I'll give fifteen shillings if you let me pick them out for myself." Accordingly he chose five or six from a total of about thirty little manikin-makers. The keeper said, "Joe, you have picked monkeys that look like the rest of them. How do you choose, which is logic?" "I'll tell you. I shake a big red handkerchief near the cage, and one or two take notice, and the rest don't. Then I make a noise like a rat gnawing and squeaking, and them very monkeys take notice again. There's the kind I want. It's a great deal easier to train a monkey that takes notice than a monkey that doesn't."

LONGFELLOW WROTE IT.

There has been some controversy as to who wrote celebrated lines of "Excelsior" we say?—screen verse about the little girl who was horrid. Now the authorship by Longfellow is established by the poet's son, Ernest Wadsworth Longfellow, in "Random Memories," recently published, in which he says:

"My father and mother had six children in all: my brother Charles, who was born within a year of their marriage and was a year and a half my senior; a sister who was eleven or three years after me, but lived only a short time; and my three sisters who figure in the 'Children's Hour':

"Grave Alice and laughing Allegra
And Edith with golden hair.

—the latter of whom came really between the other two.

"It was while walking up and down with his second daughter, then a baby in arms, that my father composed and sang to her the well-known lines:

"There was a little girl
Who had a little curl
Right in the middle of her forehead.
When she was good
She was very good indeed,
But when she was bad she was horrid.

"Many people think this a Mother Goose rhyme, but this is the true version and history."—"Bystander" in the Globe.

AFTER MONEY.

Only the seniors in Canada Methodism will remember the Rev. William Morley Punshon, whose first visit to Canada slater bark fifty years at least. In those days the chief Methodist church of Montreal was on St. James street, where the Canadian Bank of Commerce stands now. One evening the Missionary Society held a grand rally, and Dr. Punshon was the central figure on the platform. At the close the treasurer appeal le said, "Dear Friends, on the cards of admission to this building tonight, you may have noticed after my name the letters M.M." being interpreted they signify ther Money." The collection will now be taken up."

THE WHARVES OF SLUMBER.

Upon the wharves of slumber,
I watched the ships of dreams,
Come sailing in through mist and moon,
With slow-worn lights and gleams.

Their holds were stuffed with plunder
Of every land and time,
With Ophir gold and gods of Greece,
And scraps of ancient rime.

And shows, both men and women,
Most fair to look upon,
Whose chanting made the breeze to blow
That swept the dream ships on.

I had the pick and thing
Of every precious thing—
The spice and gold, the gems and slaves,
And myrrh and pearls and vair.

But while I stood debating
What thing to take and choose
A voice cried, "Let the good ship Dawn, Drawn in across the dews."

And all the dream ships vanished,
And left me wide awake,
To think of many, many things
It had been fine to take.

PRESS OPINIONS

SUSPICIOUS OF PROGRESSIVES

La Presse, re-echoing its objections to a Liberal Progressive alliance, says:—"The Progressives and the United Farmers, whatever may be pretended otherwise, are one and the same group. The only difference is in the name, but the label does not change the nature of the body. Fundamentally the United Farmers have one gospel, one common object, one single aim, which, according to the typical definition of a Winnipeg newspaper, is to save the West from the spoliation with which it is menaced, by preserving it united and aggressive, front, alike to Parliament and onlookers. Do not let us become Conservatives in disguise. The only line of fresh it only remains for us to prepare for the battle and place ourselves on the ground—that of the national interest."

ANOTHER CANAL
(Hamilton Herald)

Sir Adam Beck is bold even to audacity.

While the opponents of the Hydro project and the critics of the Hydro Commission are criticising the expenditure on the Chippewa-Queenston power canal and predicting that only a commission is curbed it will ruin the province, Sir Adam coolly and calmly announces another scheme which means the duplication of that same canal.

Speaking at Niagara Falls, the chairman of the H.E.C. Commission said the commission is now considering plans for the construction of another 15-foot canal from above Niagara Falls to Queenston, which will make available a million additional horse-power and will cost about a hundred million dollars.

Sir Adam thinks in terms of hundreds of millions now. Well, it is possible that his confidence and audacity are due, in part at least, to the fact that he has a larger gift of vision than the average man, and is not afraid of huge expenditure because he sees more clearly than most of us what that expenditure can and will produce.

PROTECT THE BIRDS

By L. Stevenson, B.S.A.

Of what use in nature, is this host of winged creatures that with their changing seasons sweeps over our land and sea? Birds are the most destructive agent of bird life. In the past century many who are living to-day recollect the flights of passenger pigeons that obscured the sky,—or remember seeing great flocks of partridges, quail, prairie chicken, and water fowl. Many birds common to our country fifty years ago are almost extinct now. The wild turkey, the sandhill crane, and the passenger pigeon are gone, and many other food birds are becoming more rare each year, the smaller bird such as the robin, swallow, sparrow, and woodpeckers are becoming few and fewer each year, so much so that they are not sufficient to control the insects on which birds generally feed.

The destruction of these birds can must first understand the causes for the apparent increase in numbers, and what birds of old are of use. disease. The main causes of bird decrease is lack of food, the severity of winters, and the direct agency of destruction of their nesting places and young.

During March of this year many migratory birds appeared before the settled warm weather came. They were subjected to wind and snow storm, were forced to hunt for food during rainy weather at a time when there is but little food. Numerous of these early migrants perished from cold and starvation. Food would have saved them. Now that man has destroyed the feeding grounds with their fruitful weed, seed and insect infested patches and other bird food producing vegetation, there is but one thing for man to do, and that is supply foods suitable and attractive to the early visitors, to protect them from storms, ignorant people, and the stray cats and dogs. This can be done by building a small shelter in the brick yard tree, and keeping a supply of bird foods, such as hemp seed, strips of pork rind, suet, dried berries, small seed of various kinds, broken grain, and apples. The planting of berry producing and seed producing bushes and trees in the door yard or field is a great aid to bird life. With the clearing of land for farm and building purposes the natural home of birds is destroyed—nesting trees and food trees and bushes are being removed. Birds are not breed, if there is no nesting place. The best trees and shrubs to plant are those that offer resistance to cats and predatory boys. Evergreens, shrubs, climbing wild rose bushes, mountain ash, Virginia creeper, mulberry, black cherry, flowering dogwood, red cedar, common juniper, and staghorn sumac, are all very desirable bird trees and shrubs. By supplying protection, birds are induced to stay in a locality, nest, and increase in numbers sufficient to destroy the insects, and the weed seeds on which they feed. The common practice of burning over pasture areas during the spring season destroys thousands of bird nests in the vicinity of Toronto each year. This burning up of weeds and rough places safe from cats can be erected above ground, or enclosures of wire netting can be made in which birds can feed in safety. The wire netting should be open enough to permit the free passage of the birds, and small enough to keep out cats. A few shurbs or brush placed around such an enclosure makes it more attractive to the birds.

Providing suitable nesting boxes is a splendid practice in bird protection. The nearer the nest box is an inhabited building the more surely will be birds like the swifts and swallows which frequent buildings for the variety of insect prey constituting miniature houses. Woodpeckers, wrens and blue birds require an entirely different type of nesting place, so does the robin and the oriole. Study the birds that you desire to attract and prepare the nest box being guided by nature. Birds are attracted by food in the same way that any other creature is attracted. Plant sunflowers and Japanese millet in the back yard, or set apart a portion of the garden for the growing of feed for small birds that work for you protecting your food crops and your homes from locusts during the entire season. Build a bird stuff outside a window of your house. If you need the pleasure and community of interest to be had in thus catering to the wants of birds. Teach the children to watch, rig and feed them, and thus benefit both the child and the bird. A few chickadees or nuthatches or downy woodpeckers kept about the house during the winter, will give pleasure to all, and every rural home can have such if protection and food are supplied.—Agricultural Gazette.

Woman's Sphere

LEISURE.

What is this life if full of care,
We have no time to stand and stare

No time to stand beneath the boughs
And stare as long as sheep or cows

No time to see, when woods we pass
Where squirrels hide their nuts in grass.

No time to see, in broad daylight
Streams full of stars, like skies a night.

No time to turn at Beauty's glance
And watch her feet, how they can dance.

No time to wait till her mouth can
Enrich that smile her eyes began.

A poor life this if, full of care,
We have no time to stand and stare.

OUR TALLER GIRLS.

Few observers will be surprised a the statement of President McCrack en, of Vassar, that physical education of our girls in the last ten years ha had noticeable effects upon their physical measurements. He says tha the students at Vassar have gained a inch and a half in height and an ei ghth of an inch and a half in chest girth, while the hands and feet ar have increased their girth measure ments. That the girls of today ar taller than those of but a few year ago, despite the passing popularit; within that period of the extremel small girl, is apparent. Tall girls ar not so uncommon as they were. Th small foot, small hand are not anot a source of pride as once they were Our girls are more active in all ex ercise involving bodily exertion They show the benefit of this in thei healthier appearance over that of the girls of other years.

We should not, however, take to much satisfaction out of these facts It is known that nervous affection are still common among young wo men and the progress of heart trou bles in recent years has not spare them. We have not yet had time to learn whether the habits which they now appear to enjoy will bring them greater length of years. We may le glad bi the vigour, health, and ap pearance and hope that it means al that it should.—Rochester Post Ex press.

The Daily Recipe

VEGETABLE SALAD.

One of the reasons that many people do not serve salad is that the family does not like oil. Another reason is that one does not always have let tuce, and most recipes for salad call for lettuce.

The following recipe uses very little oil and no lettuce:

1 cup shredded cabbage.
1 cup celery cut in small pieces.
5 cucumbers, pared and cut in very small pieces (or they may be chopped).
3 tomatoes, chopped.
1 red pepper, fresh or canned.
3 green peppers cut in small pieces.
1 teaspoon salt.
1 teaspoon paprika.
1 tablespoon sugar.
1 tablespoon vinegar.
3 tablespoons oil.

Mix all the ingredients in a bowl thoroughly, and serve very cold.

If you do not have celery use twice as much cabbage and add one-fourth teaspoon celery salt.

This salad is especially good served with fried or broiled fish and with cold meat.

PRINCESS YOLANDA IN LONDON

Princess Yolanda, of Italy, who has been on an incognita visit to London, is a very attractive, charming lady indeed, as in person. Possessing magnetism in an astonishing degree, she is also a very fine character, and has grown up to nearly her twenty-first year in the best possible surroundings. Her father, Victor Emanuel, is one man; her mother, a splendid sportswoman and a lover of her kind, is made herself a favorite in many parts of Italy. She is a splendidly handsome woman, and Princess Yolanda is like her, and also like the Queen-Mother of Italy, the peerless Pearl of Savoy. Princess Yolanda is a fine horsewoman, very accomplished and clever. Her welcome when she goes again, not incognita, will be a genuine and warm one. They say she is quite broad-minded about religion, and since she could think for herself has always been so. The time of her visit gave her the opportunity for seeing London at its brightest and best, for the week of the Prince's return was to be fullest of the season.—Saturday Night.

WASHING SILK STOCKINGS.

Silk stockings should be soaked for two hours in cold water before being worn for the first time.

When soiled, prepare a lather of soap flakes and warm water. Turn the stockings inside out, and leave to soak for a few minutes. Squeeze out of the water, turn right side out very carefully, and squeeze in the above mixture before rinsing in tepids of warm water and finally in cold.

Don't wring out, but arrange loosely on a towel, in a breeze, but not in the sun.

NEW INDUSTRY

OF "WOOL-RUNNING"

Saskatoon, Sask., Aug. 1.—Brought about by the enactment of the Fordney Tariff Bill, a new industry, legitimate Canada but taboo in the United States, is reported to be making rapid progress on the international boundary line between Saskatchewan and the United States. It is a smuggling industry but is not allied with the commonly known gum-runners who work along the border. Those working the new industry are known as "wool runners" from the fact that they deal in wool, bought from Canadian farmers, which they smuggle across the line.

Southern Saskatchewan, for many years past a country containing many sheep farmers, was virtually cut off from the American wool market something over twelve months ago by the Fordney tariff legislation which placed a duty on the Canadian clip of 15 cents a pound. The duty amounted to a complete ban and while wool is selling at 40 cents a pound in the United States with no opposition to the raisers, the Canadian market price is about 25 cents for the same standard.

Baby's Poor Little Raw Legs

The pitiful part of it is that Baby's suffering is unnecessary. Every time diaperscome changed, dust Baby freely with KORA-KONIA. Raw, inflamed skin is quickly healed and Baby suffers no more discomfort. Isn't it worth it to have a happy, healthy growing baby who sleeps nights?

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

This was at night, during an intermission in a dance on deck which had been arranged by special permission of the weather, the latter holding very calm and warm. Between halves Staff had succeeded in disentangling Alison from a circle of admirers and had marched her up to the boat-deck, where there was less light—aside from that furnished by an obliging moon—and more solitude.

Under any other circumstances Staff have been enchanted with the situation. They were quite alone, if not unobserved; and there was magic in the night, mystery and romance in the moonlight, the inky shadows, the sense of swift movement through space illimitable. Alison stood with back to the rail at near him that his elbow alloyed touched the artificial orchid that adorned her corsage. He was acutely sensitive of her presence, of the faint persistent odour of her individual perfume, of the beauty and grace of her strong, free-limbed body, of the impeccable Paquin gown, of the sheen of her lustrous maculate arm and shoulders and the rich warmth of her face with its alluring shadowed eyes that seemed to mock him with light, fascinating malice, of the magnetism of her intense, indefinable vitality diffused as naturally as sunlight. But—the thought rankled—Arkroyd had won three dances to his two, and through all that day Alison had seemed determined to avoid him, to keep herself surrounded by an obsequious crowd, impenetrable to her lover.

On the deck below the band began to play again, signaling the end of the first intermission. Alison hummed lightly a bit of the melody, her silken slipper tapping the deck.

"Do I get another dance?" he asked suddenly.

She broke off her humming. "So sorry," she said; "my card is quite full and running over."

"May I see it?" She surrendered it without hesitation. He frowned, endeavouring to decipher the scrawl by the inadequate moonlight.

"You wanted to know—" she enquired, with a laugh back of her tone. "How many has Arkroyd, the half?" he demanded bluntly.

"Two, I think," she answered coolly. "Why?"

He stared gravely into her shadowed face' "Is that good advertising, too," he asked quietly—"to show marked preference to a man of Arkroyd's calibre and reputation?"

Alison laughed. "You're delicious when you're jealous, Staff," said she. "No; it isn't advertising—it's discipline." "Discipline?"

"Just that. I'm punishing you for your obstinacy about the play. You'll see, my dear," she taunted him, "I'm going to have my own way or make your life perfectly miserable."

Before he could invent an adequate retort, the beautiful Mr. Bangs came tripping across the deck, elation in his manner.

"Ah, there you are, Miss Landis! My dance, you know. Been looking everywhere for you."

"So sorry; I was just coming down."

Alison caught up the demi-train of her gown, but paused an instant longer, allowing Staff full in the face her air taunting and provocative.

"Think it over, Staff," she advised in a cool, metallic voice; and dropping her hand on Bangs' arm, moved languidly away.

Staff did think it over, if with surprisingly little satisfaction to himself. It wasn't possible to ignore the patent fact that Alison had determined to make him cease to be;That apparently was the only attitude possible for one who aspired to the post of first playwright-in-waiting and husband-in-chief to the first actress in the land. He doubted his ability to supple his back to the requisite degree. Even for the woman he loved. . . Or did he? . . . Through the wrathlike mists of fading illusions he caught disturbing glimpses—dark shapes of lurking doubts.

Dissipated, he found distasteful the thought of returning to the lower deck, and so strolled idly aft with a half-formed notion of looking up Iff.

From a deck-chair a women's voice hailed him: "Oh, Mr. Staff. . . ."

"Miss Searle?" He turned in to her side, experiencing an odd sensation of pleasure in the encounter; which, wisely or not, he didn't attempt to analyse—at least further than the thought that he had seen little of the young woman during the last two days and that she was rather likable.

"You're not dancing?" he asked in surprise; for she, too, had dressed for this celebration of the last night of the voyage.

Smiling, she shook her head slightly. "Neither are you, apparently. Won't you sit down?"

He wasn't at all reluctant to take the chair by her side. "Why not?" he asked.

"Oh, I did dance once or twice and then I began to think I had tired and bored and stole away to think."

"Long, long thoughts?" he asked lightly. . . .

"Rather," said she with becoming gravity. "You see, it seems pretty serious to me, this coming home to face new and unknown conditions after three years' absence. . . . And then, after six days at sea, out of touch with the world; practically, there's always the feeling of suspense about what will happen when you get solid earth under your feet. You know what I mean."

"I do. You live in New York?"

"I mean to try to," she said quietly. "I haven't any home, really—no parents and only distant family connections. In fact all I do possess is a little income and an insurance desire to work."

WALLY REID'S NEW PICTURE "RENT FREE" REVEALS LIVELY PLOT.

In these days of high rents and profiteering landlords, "Rent Free", a new Paramount picture starring Wally Reid, which was shown at Griffin's last night, starts an audience off with a happy thought and proceeds in keeping them laughing to the final fade-out.

There is a lively plot and plenty of action, a good deal of which supposedly takes place on the roofs of two New York rooming houses. Wally Reid plays the young artist who shuffles for himself rather than study law in his father's office. To get the better of the rent problem, he moves up on the roof, and later establishes himself in a house, the owners of which are away. There he finds a mysterious note about a will, which is uncovered in the end of the story and awards the girl, whom he has met in the meantime, also a roof dweller, the home and estate of which she has been defrauded by her unscrupulous stepmother. Lila Lee plays the part of the girl and Henry Barrows, Gertrude Short, Lilian Leighton, Charlotte Greenwood and Lorien Littlefield are excellent in their portrayals.

The Sand Hills country is sand bleak, barren place. So much so that a posse, inclined to hang a supposed horse thief, couldn't find a tree to do it on. That is one of the amusing situations in "Tracked to Earth," a Saturday Evening Post story, produced as a Universal five-reel feature offering, and which was the second feature production shown on the same program in which Frank Mayo and Mona monates. the almost-victim who was saved by Geography.

TRAIN TRAVEL IN RUSSIA IS COSTLY BUT COMFORTABLE

Moscow, Aug. 1.—Passenger travel on the restored Russian railways is again approaching a state of comfort and luxury to those who can pay for it.

Through sleeping cars are now operated between Moscow and Petrograd, Moscow and Odessa, Moscow and Chita, Siberia, and other important terminals. Restaurant wagons have been put on some trains.

The fares and berth charges have been increased to Soviet rubles to equal the pre-revolution gold rate.

There are no restrictions on first class travel and there generally is a waiting list for places on these luxurious cars.

The great majority of Russians, however, still travel packed like sardines in dingy third-class cars or box cars, which contrast sharply with the cleanliness of the accommodations afforded those who can pay for them.

MARVELS OF OUR DAY

(By Byron Stauffer.

My father died in 1887. If he could come back and see how we are living to-day, how filled with wonder and awe he would be!

Right here, over this remote lake, he would have seen, this very month, a ship of the air soaring swiftly out of sight. The Ontario government is employing the airplane as a chief fire ranger.

And here, within three hundred yards of our camp, I could show my father the latest achievement of our generation—the wireless telephone. For a Toronto gentleman of leisure, who spends his summers here in search of health, has installed a radio receiving station. Nightly he listens to messages from Toronto, Buffalo, Pittsburg and Chicago.

Had my father been with me as I rowed across the lake the other evening, he would have been amazed to hear the sound of music coming from a box in a passing canoe, for some campers across the bay have brought a phonograph with them.

And he would also have been surprised at the flash-light I used in lighting the way to our porch for a belated camper.

Thirty-five years ago fishermen knew nothing of copper wire for trolling lines, for the simple reason that the process for its manufacture was as yet undiscovered.

I could imagine my father amazement at the stenciling on a package box in the camp kitchen. It reads, "One dozen 6-pound squares of corned beef, from Westfield Canning Company, Limited, New Zealand." In 1887 refrigerator ships and cars had not yet made possible the transferring of beef, fish and rabbits from the antipodes, eggs from China and fish and fruit from the Pacific coast.

A can of condensed cream and a white powder will, when mixed with water, become milk, are other wonders of our day.

Of course, my father never saw an automobile, nor use its possible launch. Nor did men then suppose that a conversation could be held by wire between Toronto and Winnipeg, let alone without wires. Twenty years ago, when a sportsman came to this region, he needed to set a definite time for his return to civilization, arranging with wagoner and steamer for the various stages of the journey out. But the other day, when a Winnipeg man wanted to talk with his office in the Manitoba capital, they hurried him across the lake in a high-powered launch, a Ford carrier him over the portage in thirty minutes—it used to take three strenuous hours by wagon—and within twenty minutes the village "central" had him in touch with Winnipeg.

In 1907, the first moving pictures to arrive in Buffalo was exhibited there as a novelty than a theatrical proposition. No attempt was made at dramatization, the simple movements of men, animals and vehicles being marvel enough. And constant blurring marred the pictures.

When my father died, there was one lonely little electric railway in al Canada, an uncertain toll of a thing down on the Niagara peninsula. Three years later, Toronto was discussing matters of franchise for street railway companies.

In 1887 men never dreamed that the cataract of Niagara would furnish power for politics with burning question of Hydro. How our pioneer farmers would have laughed at a prophet bold enough to declare that the day would come when farmhouses and barns would be lighted, fodder would be cut, wood sawed, churns operated and ironed, butter churned, ice-cream frozen, yes, and women's hair curled—all by the power of the falls to which they made the trip of their lives to see.

Will the next thirty-five years see as many inventions as have come in the last thirty-five? Will our children have as much advantage over us as we Edisons and Marconis have discovered? Who can tell? One thing is sure: the very men who have brought our modern conveniences to light are humble enough to assert that we are but in the suburbs of control of nature's forces and that the coming generation will witness wonders which will make mankind's present achievements pale into insignificance.

KINGSTON WILL ENTER CENTRAL ONTARIO LEAGUE

Kingston, July 31.—The Whig says:—

"Baseball fans here are already thinking about putting a local team into the Central Ontario Baseball League next year. It is believed that there would be no difficulty in recruiting a line-up that would show up well in the series. This year Belleville, Leaside, Oshawa and Peterborough participated in the series and there has been exceptionally fine attendance even in the smaller towns.

"Efforts are to be made here to have the Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs boost the idea of a Kingston team in the league, and it is the intention of those interested locally to secure the co-operation of the Athletic Board of Queen's University. It is hoped that the stadium will be available for the games as large gate receipts will be necessary to pay the expenses of Kingston's participation."

RIVERSIDES DEFEAT CAMPBELLFORD 10 TO 0

The Riversides senior lacrosse team of Toronto, played an exhibition game in Campbellford on Saturday, and defeated the intermediates of that town by 10 to 6 before the largest crowd that ever witnessed a lacrosse game in that district. The visit of the O.A.L.A. senior champions was heralded as one of the great events of the summer, and spectators came from all the surrounding districts, while the merchants declared a half-holiday. The game was a fast and clean exhibition of the national game, and while the home team was defeated, their supporters were more than pleased with the manner in which they stood up against the champions. Fred Wachorne, of Toronto, and Dick Cole, of Campbellford, handled the game. The Riversides were greatly pleased with their reception there, and state that Campbellford had an excellent intermediate team and that every prospect that Gore's gang will make a return visit before the end of the season. Riversides were without Goucher, Starling and Keith. They score by periods was 2 to 2, 2 to 3, 7 to 4 and 10 to 6.

SUNDAY GAMES ARE DISCUSSED

English Cities are Debating Whether they Should Follow London

London, August, 1.—The recent decision to allow games in London parks on Sundays is causing considerable discussion in other centres. Royal parks such as Hyde Park and Hampton Court, which are under the control of the National Government and over no other authority, will follow the London precedent, Sterling and Keith. These score by periods was 2 to. which are under the control of the local authorities, will follow the London precedent, but no organized games will be allowed.

Liverpool, cosmopolitan centre as it is, has for years steadily refused to [illegible] Sunday [illegible] between permit band performances on Sundays.

Manchester will shortly be asked to follow London's lead.

Preaching last night in Manchester Cathedral, Dean McCormick said he failed to see anything wrong in Sunday games, but he feared their permission on an organized basis would inevitably lead to the defenceless classes of the community being deprived of Sunday rest. He urged that before restrictions are removed, legislation ought to be passed prohibiting Sunday labor for amusement purposes.

FEAR OF TURKISH OCCUPATION PROMOTES ARMENIAN EXODUS

Aleppo, Syria, Aug. 1.—Armenians have begun an exodus from the Aleppo and Alexandretta districts, according to reports reaching Aleppo from the surrounding country. They are fearful, it is said, of the possibility of Turkish occupation, and they know what this means from the experiences of their countrymen in Cilicia.

Rumors are current here of some understanding between Paris and the Angora Turks by which France undertakes to cede to the Turkish Nationalists the districts of Aleppo, Alexandretta and Deir ul Zor. This would account for the American unrest. The reports, however, cannot be confirmed, but nevertheless the restlessness continues.

It is argued here that France might take such a step as this in order to lessen her military responsibilities in Syria. Recent disorders in these territories have been serious.

Despatches from Paris last March said that Henri Franklin Bouillon, acting for France, had signed a new treaty with the Angora Turks which contemplated the abandonment of the non-Moslem populations in specified Turkish territory. Mr. Bouillon, however, made haste to deny this statement in unmeasured terms.

A despatch from Constantinople, June 13, said that Colonel Mougin, unofficial French representative with the Turkish nationalist government, had reached Angora, and that his mission was to clear up certain misunderstandings consequent upon the non-execution of the Franco-Turkish agreement.

NO STRIKE IN CANADA.

Canadians want no railway strike to interfere with the return of improved business conditions, such as are now apparent, and little sympathy will be given to any organization or corporation which allows itself to be made the cause of a cessation of business activity. Let that fact sink into the minds of those concerned and there will be no strike.

MANIAC CREATES SCENE IN CHURCH

Bleeding With Gashes From Knife Madman Rushed Wildly Down Aisle

NEAR PANIC

Women Fainted —Church in Disorder Before Lunatic was Overpowered

New York, Aug. 1.—This city was treated to another sensation of a novel and extraordinary sort on Sunday morning, when the packed ten o'clock service in St. Patrick's Cathedral, at a solemn moment when all were kneeling and Father Patrick O'Connor was preaching, was thrown into disorder and hysterics by the sudden outbreak of a madman, who had first hin concealed under the pews in sleeveless undershirt and trousers and now ran up to the priest, his chest bleeding with wounds and his right hand brandishing a carving knife covered with blood.

The congregation was so taken by surprise as to be, at first, incapable of preventive action; and the maniac reached the side of the priest to whom he muttered something in broken English and gesticulated wildly pointing to the gashes across his chest in the form of a cross, and then to the chalice.

"Yes, I understand," said Father Daly, in a sympathetic voice, not suffered in the least, and proceeding with his ministrations, "kneel down and wait a minute."

This seemed to pacify the man slightly, though he continued to point in an earnest and desperate manner to his chest and then the chalice; but the congregation had ta keen alarm, and shriek upon shriek filled the air and sent many women into a faint and others into a panic, nearly producing a stampede. But in this trying situation there were a few cool heads, the coolest being that of the priest; while several men of the congregation saw it was time to act. Passing signs to each other they passed quickly but quietly up to the altar; one grabbed the maniac's arms and pinning them behind his back while another secured the knife from his grasp and a third assisted in conveying him into an ante room close to await the police and an ambulance.

No Further Resistance.

The man did not resist for long; but cast an agonized look at the priest and chalice as if in heart-felt grief at the failure and miscarriage of what he seemed to regard as a sacred mission entrusted to his charge by divine will—that of filling the chalice with his own blood.

The arrival of the police had a soothing effect upon the man and also quieted the congregation, many of whom had run out into the street in a near panic and now returned to their places.

The man was, too weak to resist and was taken quietly into an ambulance and brought to the Bellevue Hospital and the psychopathic ward where he will be placed under observation and an effort made to learn his purpose.

He gave his name as Frank Johannes Gabrielle. Father Daly associates him with the anonymous author of a series of passionate letters sent to the cathedral, written with blood instead of ink, sometimes in English and sometimes in German, often covering many pages. In these the writer had often spoken of giving his life's blood for Jesus Christ; and when questioned by the police as to his purposes he said he was offering his blood to the Lamb of God.

PILGRIMS ARE KILLED

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

The pilgrims were all from the region of Moulins in the department of Allier.

LEADER'S CALL TO END STRIKE

Joint Meeting of Operators and Diggers to be Held in Philadelphia

BRITAIN TO RESCUE

One Million Tons of Welsh and English Coal Coming Within 30 Days

Washington, August 1.—Considerable interest was manifested in Washington to-day as the result of an announcement by Ellis Searles, editor of the Mine Workers' Journal, that John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, would probably issue a call within the next two days for a joint meeting of operators and miners of the central competitive field, to be held in Cleveland at the earliest moment possible. The call, he said, would go out from Philadelphia.

Searles added that President Lewis would not send out such a call unless he knew the meeting would be attended by operators. His own opinion is that, although all the representative operators of the central competitive states might not be present, enough would be present to execute a contract and thereby wind up the strike.

Searles expressed the belief that a conference would result in an agreement, and that this proposed conference would be held not later than next week.

President's Plans Completed.

"The President's fuel distribution committee," of which Secretary of Commerce Hoover is chairman, today completed plans for the machinery control of the distribution and conservation of fuel during the present emergency, Administration officials declaring the movement will be left to H. B. Spencer, fuel distributor.

The final details of the plans were worked out at a conference of the fuel committee, which, in addition, to Hoover and Spencer, is composed of Attorney-General Daugherty, Secretary of the Interior Fall, and Commissioner Aitchison, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which latter practically all day.

No statement was made after the session, but it was declared the Governmental ratings to secure equitable distribution of the available supply, and that mined during the remainder of the strike would be put-into full effect with 48 hours, through priorities orders to be issued under the emergency powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Secretary Hoover, informally discussing the probable length of time in which it would be necessary to continue the rationing of coal, expressed the opinion that it probably would be anywhere from 30 to 90 days after the settlement of the coal strike before it would be possible or safe to remove the restrictions.

1,000,000 Tons of British Coal.

The committee also has before it today an announcement by J. Barstow Small, vice-president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, that more than 1,000,000 tons of coal will be moving from Wales and the East coast of England to the United States by September 1.

"The Shipping Board," Small announced, "has already chartered 30 of its vessels to import coal from the British Isles and by September 1, 1 million tons will be moving to this country.

"The fifty vessels operated through the Shipping Board will carry approximately 400,000 tons, and with the charters abroad, there will be moving to this country the above quantity within the next 30 days."

It is pointed out that 1,000,000 tons will have comparatively little effect on the general situation, but Secretary Hoover is hopeful that sufficient quantity will be imported to take care of the major portion of the needs of the New England states, which would have a tendency to decidedly alleviate the situation throughout the rest of the country.

Million Tons Coming.

Washington, August 1.—More than 2,000,000 tons of coal will be carried to the United States from Wales and the east coast of England by September 1, according to Vice-President Small of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. Charters have been let for 30 ships, aggregating 400,000 tons, to engage in the import of coal, he said.

FALLS FROM LADDER, DIES ONE HOUR LATER

Kitchener, Aug. 1.—William J. Crawford, aged 50, of 151 East Weber street, yesterday fell from a ladder while whitewashing in the King Edward School.

Half an hour later his fall he died without regaining consciousness, in the Kitchener and Waterloo Hospital, from a fractured skull.

The ladder apparently slipped when he leaned far up toward the ceiling. An inquest will not be held.

AN EVERYDAY BLESSING

In answer to a circular letter recently sent out to thousands of people, including both glasswearers and non-wearers, asking if they believe such troubles as headache, nervousness, stomach-trouble, or general fatigue, might if correctly diagnosed, be traced to their eyes; and if they thought glasses might possibly cure or palliate these troubles, seventy per cent. of the NON - WEARERS came out roundly with a "Yes" for answer.

An indication, we'll say, of the greater enlightenment of the present generation.

U.S. POLITICS FACE CRISIS

An Upheaval is Predicted Over the Recent Tariff Situation

Washington, Aug. 1 (By Canadian Press).—The conviction is steadily growing in Washington that the United States is faced by another great political upheaval in consequence of the new tariff measure such as the one that followed the enactment of the Payne-Aldrich law in 1909.

Talk of such an upheaval might be dismissed as ill-considered and inconsequential if it came from Democrats alone, but such is not the case. Hardly has the bill passed recently in the tariff debate in the Senate without some Republican of pronounce sounding warnings that the Republican party by reason of the excessive rates of duty in the Fordney-McCumber bill is steering for the rocks. Republican Senators such as Lenroot, Kellogg, and even Wadsworth—a conservative Republican from New York—as well as others, have given warning of this character to the high tariff leaders.

It will be recalled that it was in 1909, thirteen years ago, that the last high tariff law was passed in the United States. This was the Payne-Aldrich law. Its passage was effected by the high tariff leaders in Congress who drove it through regardless of the protests of many Republicans, such as Bulliver, La Follette, Knute Nelson and others. Its passage was followed by the election of a Democratic House in 1910, and two years later the Democrats capturing the Presidency and virtually gaining control of the government. The Democrats then passed the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill, a moderate tariff measure, which has survived until this time. It is true an emergency tariff has recently been put on agriculture products.

In this connection, it may be said that the collections of revenue by the government from tariff duties in the fiscal year just closed were the highest on record, showing that the existing tariff law is a long way from being a free trade measure. In fact, it is protective and is sufficiently restrictive in the matter of even many Republicans, to say nothing of the Democrats.

Now, while insurgent Republicans in the Senate are protesting against the high rates carried in the Fordney-McCumber bill, and are reducing a few of those rates, it is seemingly certain that the bill as it will finally be passed will contain duties so high in many instances as to be almost prohibitive. The failure of Senators Lenroot and Wadsworth to bring about reductions in the woolen schedule, in spite of the fact the high tariff leaders in the Senate Finance Committee are in the saddle, is significant in that they are putting the rates in the bill in such a way as to meet the wishes of the moderate tariff Republicans.

The bill may not pass before the November elections but it looks now as if it would be enacted into law either this fall or early next winter. Such enactment will come at a time when the public is complaining of high taxes, of the cost of living, and of unemployment. Obviously, the United States public is not in a frame of mind to accept mildly increases in the prices of necessities and if these follow on the enactment of the tariff measure, one may look for political disturbances and the Republican party is likely to be obliged to hurry for a cyclone cellar.

Recent primaries have clearly demonstrated that the voters are not sympathetic toward the Republican leaders of the Old Guard type. Republicans in North Dakota, Iowa, Indiana, Nebraska and elsewhere reveal this. It might be thought the high tariff chieftains who control the Senate and House Republican organizations would take a lesson from those primaries, but they are not doing so, any more than they listened to warnings in 1909.

A factor in the situation is the strong sentiment in the United States for expansion of trade with other countries. A tariff which curtails trade with Canada, with Europe and the rest of the world will be even more unacceptable to the public in this country than in past years.

Alex. Graham Bell Inventor of the Telephone, Dead

Great Wire Wizard Passes at His Laboratories in Nova Scotia—Was Born in Scotland and Invented he Telephone at Brantford, Ontario—Active Until Last—Dies in 75th Year

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Sydney, N.S., August 2.—Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, died at his home in Baddeck last night.

Dr. Bell will be buried on the top of Beinn Breagh Mountain at Baddeck, at a spot chosen by himself. The cause of death was progressive anaemia.

Dr. Alexander Graham Bell was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1847, and came to Canada with his father in 1870, settling at Brantford, Ont., but moved two years later to Boston where he was called to the chair of Vocal Physiology in the University. His there introduced the system of visible speaking invented by his father.

It was while experimenting with a human ear supplied to him by Dr. Blake that Dr. Bell evolved the idea of the telephone. A fine monument to the inventor was erected at Brantford some years ago. The first public exhibition of his telephone was given at Philadelphia in 1876.

Washington, Aug. 2.—President Harding in a message of condolence sent today to Mrs. Alexander Graham Bell, at Baddeck, on the death of her husband, said in part: "In common with all his countrymen, I had learned to revere him as one of the great benefactors of the race and among the foremost Americans of all generations."

Dr. Bell's laboratories have been located since 1909 near Baddeck, Cape Breton. There for many years he conducted research and experiment in aerial locomotion and other scientific subjects and maintained his private museum showing the development of his greatest inventions. He conducted Samuel P. Langley to invent the first flying machine and cheered after witnessing its flight at Quesnelle, B.C., in 1896, than the age of the airplane was at hand, although Langley's machine was destroyed.

Dr. Bell formed in 1907 the Aerial Experiment Association with associates in Canada, Britain and the object is here to fly. It is claimed that it was with this association that the first

YOUTHFUL BANDIT GETS THREE YEARS

Had Record of Five Hold-ups With Revolvers

Montreal, Aug. 1.—Antonio Lagrippo, a twenty year old bandit, who has no clus han five hold-ups in his record, was yesterday sentenced to three years in the penitentiary on pleading guilty to five ambulance to convey to the hospital a young man who had been injured by coming in contact with an automobile. It appears that Mr. James Walmsley, Jr. was driving a Ford coupe up Bridge street east when at the corner of that street and John street, Fred Howard on a bicycle turned on Bridge street with the result that he collided with the car. Howard was thrown upon the road sustaining a scalp wound over his left eye.

Dr. Wallbridge after attending to the young man's injuries had him taken in the hospital. No serious results are anticipated. That Mr. Walmsley was at the time driving his car at a rather slow rate of speed was apparent as the car stopped within three feet of where the accident occurred.

A party who was in close proximity at the time gave it as an opinion that Howard ran into the coupe. The affair was investigated by the police with the above result. Howard is 24 years of age and resides in the city being employed by the Greenleaf Company.

FIRE DAMAGES BARN AND HOUSE

Blaze Confined to Property in Which it Originated

On Tuesday afternoon about 4.40 the fire brigade was called to the corner of Grove and Geddes Street to fight a fire which had broken out in a small barn on the latter's property. In close proximity to the barn is situated a frame house owned by Mr. McPherson of Corbyville and occupied by Mrs. Weeks and this became ignited.

The brigade under the direction of Chief Brown succeeded in preventing the flames from destroying the house but it was damaged to some extent, the roof the kitchen and main part of the house being somewhat burned. How the fire originated in Mr. Slavin's barn is not known as he and his family are at present out of the city. The loss to the premises is covered by insurance. Mrs. Weeks had no insurance upon her household contents which were damaged by smoke and water.

TIPPERARY WAS REBEL FORTRESS

(Canadian Press Despatch)
Dublin, Aug. 2.—The capture of Tipperary by National troops looked upon by the military staff of the provisional Government as a stroke of enormous strategical value in the general campaign against the insurgents.

By the occupation of the town the National have strengthened their line and have placed the insurgents in the Cashel district in a dangerous position. Cashel is regarded as one of the strongest towns held by the rebels, being the last important position protecting Clonmel, where the rebel forces are said to be preparing for a seige.

HOTELS MUST STAND ON THEIR OWN FEET

(Canadian Press Despatch)
Ottawa, August 2.—Varying views on hotel accommodation were expressed by members of the Legislature to a committee appointed by the Provincial Government to investigate hotel conditions.

H. P. Hill, M.L.T.A., declared that the hotel business should stand on its own feet, and he felt that the government made a good move in appointing a committee. He expressed himself as being opposed to the hotel commission controlling hotels.

Sam Clarke, M.L.A., said the present prohibitory legislation in Ontario was too stringent and that two and a half per cent. beer was poison to human nature. He advocated five per cent. beer and a system of beer and wine stores such as operates in British Columbia.

Lived on Duck Eggs and Mint

The Pas, Man., Aug. 2.—After being marooned on an island without food or shelter for twenty-two days, Frank Reynard, a 22-year-old trapper, has been rescued, according to word received here from Mile 22 on the Hudson Bay Railway.

Reynard, who has a shack on Cormorant Lake, went out some three weeks ago in his canoe looking for duck eggs. He landed on a small rocky island and during his search a storm blew up and his canoe was carried away. The trapper was absolutely isolated on a spot seldom visited by travellers. There was no fuel for building a fire and no protection from the elements. The only means of sustaining life was some half dozen duck eggs, water snails, small crab fish, wild mint and the roots of reeds. He was conscious when found by a local trapper very weak. He is, however, recovering rapidly and states it was the heating and strengthening properties of the wild mint that kept him alive.

GAS EXPLOSION SHOOK CHICAGO

Chicago, August 2.—Chicago's industrial district was shaken by an explosion of more than 4,000,000 feet of gas and the collapse of its container.

After the explosion, the tank buckled and collapsed—a mass of glowing, twisted iron. The loss was placed at approximately $50,000.

DELAY DELORME CERTIFICATE

Superintendent of Beauport Asylum Has Not Yet Reported on Mental Condition of Ex-Priest

Montreal, August 2.—The Delorme family council called for hearing in the practice division of the Superior Court yesterday had to be again postponed owing to delay in receiving the certificate regarding Abbe Delorme's mental condition from the Superintendent of Beauport Asylum, where the priest is now incarcerated.

Notary Rene Faribault acting for the immediate relatives of the priest told the court which was presided over by Mr. Justice Bisaillon that he had received no word from Dr. Brochu superintendent of the Beauport asylum, although he had written twice for a certificate. As the proceeding could not go on until such certificate was produced he therefore asked for a further adjournment which was granted and August 30 fixed for the next hearing.

The only relative of Delorme see to court was Mr. L. Delorme, Delorme's sister or half sisters were not present and when Mr. Faribault was asked whether the sisters would also be in court that the women would also be in terdicted was true or not, he was unable to say.

The notary seemed to be irritated at the delay over the certificate, He he written twice, the first time on th 13th of July and the second time o the 21st. He understands that W. Delorme intends to take his time in determining the insanity of the priest

SCIENTIFIC TRIP BY U.S. STEAMERS

Two Former Mine Sweepers Chart Unknown Depths

Washington, August 2.—Two former mine sweepers, the Bushnell and the Eagle, are now engaged in a scientific trip of exploration in the Pacific ocean, the navy department announced today.

They are now steaming through the pursuits of war to those of peace and science, are being remodeled in Brooklyn navy yard, and are nearly ready to weigh anchor to start on an indefinitely long cruise in the Pacific ocean for the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

They are sigamers Pioneer and Discoverer, formerly the Ark and the Orcy, which saw service in the North Sea. Now they are to be equipped with the finest scientific instruments for sounding and surveying.

Some time during the summer they are to pass through the Panama Canal and proceed up the Pacific coast to Alaska to sound and survey uncharted territory.

Contrary to the general belief, it was said, there still remains much uncharted territory in that region, and many places show channels incorrectly marked and sounded. Also some places once correctly surveyed and sounded, have been altered by the constant action of the waves.

Eleven officers and 53 men, has been enlisted to man each vessel, and with the exception of the two commanding officers the crews have been selected.

The Coast and Geodetic Survey has taken over also a third mine sweeper the Flamingo, from the Navy Department, now lying at Portsmouth, N. H., enlisting a crew. Following operations she probably will join her sister ships in Alaskan waters.

POISON PIES

Discharged Baker Accused Of Poisoning Over 100 Persons

(Canadian Press Despatch)
New York, August 2.—Charles Abrahamson, a baker who had been discharged from Sholbourne's restaurant on Broadway and 26th Street, was arrested on a homicide charge yesterday following an investigation of the poisoning of more than 100 persons three of whom are dead—who ate in the restaurant.

Panic resulted in offices in the vicinity of the restaurant yesterday afternoon as young men and women "fell down on their desks and rolled writhing to the floors. Ambulances from all parts of the city were kept busy rushing them to hospitals for treatment. Surgeons working on the cases were mystified until a check-up disclosed that all of the stricken had eaten in the same restaurant and practically all of them had eaten berry pie.

Officials of the medical examiner's office reported that a quantity of berry pies, baked before Abrahamson left the restaurant's employ had been heavily charged with arsenic.

NOTE TO ALLIES IS CRITICISED

London Press Comment Adversely on British Note on War Debts

(Canadian Press Despatch.)
London, Aug. 2.—The bulk of the criticism directed at the British Government's note to the Allies concerning war debts is adverse, though based on varying grounds. It is conceded that the document framed by Earl Balfour is masterly in its lucidness, unrivlyand logic, but there unanimity ends.

Foremost among the causes of digent is the fear that the note will be regarded across the Atlantic as being addressed to the United States rather than to any European country.

The Times, which understands the policy the note embodies was adopted against the view of treasury and financial representatives, fears that the prospect of settlement is not improved by the note.

POLICE SHOULD INFORM AUTOISTS
WHERE LIGHTS OUT

It is the duty of an officer, your Honor, to inform me that my lights are out, and not to be merrily content with taking my number. I might have caused a fatality as a result," said exAld. A. E. Walton, charged in the Police Court with driving without lights.

"We maintain a police force to protect us, and it is their duty to see that protection is carried out."

"Yes," said Magistrate Ellis, "I also had listened.

"It will be $3 in this case."

"Cheap at that," commented exAld.

BATHERS ORDERED TO DRESS PROPERLY

Montreal, July 21.—The Lachine police swooped down upon the lake shore yesterday against persons in immodest bathing garments, and to a result 25 men, women, boys and girls were ordered from the cool water to the blistering wharf and sternly told to dress, and to dress quickly. The bathers, on emerging from the lake, formed a weird parade, in B.V.D.'s, shorts and other attenuated bathing suits. They were warned that a further offence would mean the lock-up.

BRITAIN WOULD CANCEL DEBTS

Broad Hint to the United States to do the Same

POLICY STATED

Write Them Off and Give Up Her Share of German Reparations

London, Aug. 2.—The British Foreign Office last night issued the text of an important note on the question of inter-Allied debts. Though not formally addressed to the Washington Government, having been evidently meant only for some of the Allied and Associated powers, it evidently is intended primarily for consumption in the United States.

The note places on formal record on the eve of the coming conference between Raymond Poincare, French Premier, and David Lloyd George, British Prime Minister, with representatives of Italy and Belgium, in London, the British Government's views on the question of inter-Allied indebtedness and reparations.

Briefly, the policy advocated is that it would be unjust to the British taxpayer to ask him to forgive Allied war debts, while at the same time he was required to discuss the indebtedness to the United States.

The note, which was addressed by the Earl of Balfour, acting Foreign Secretary, to France, Italy, Jugo-Slavia, Roumania, Portugal and Greece, constitutes a strong plea for international settlement of debts and reparations on the basis of a general cancellation of inter-Allied debts and a generous reduction in German reparations, and at the same time, in the Government's opinion, the best persons of the public and the taxpayers who have loyally accepted

Status was willing to cancel the Allied debt.

While recognizing the perfect courtesy and equity of the United States policy and declaring that the Government is fully prepared to meet its obligations, the note contains an expression of the profound reluctance with which Great Britain adopts the policy it would have prescribed of a general cancellation, and incidentally expresses itself as still willing to forego any further German reparations if thereby a general settlement may be brought about.

Not Isolated Transaction.

The British Government cannot, however, look upon the Anglo-American loan as if it were an isolated incident in which only the United States and Great Britain had any concern, says the note.

This transaction, continues the note, is but one of a connected series in which Great Britain appears sometimes as a debtor and sometimes as a creditor. If, it says, Great Britain's undoubted obligations as a debtor are to be settled, they will be undoubted rights as a creditor, cannot be left wholly in abeyance.

Declaring it is regretfully constrained to request the French Government to make arrangements for dealing to the best of its ability with the Anglo-French loans, the British Government says it desires to explain that the amount of interest and repayment for which it asks depends less on what France and the other allies owe Great Britain than what Great Britain has to pay to the United States.

Makes Husband Tell the Truth

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 2.—Senator Dennis Fleming has introduced a bill in the State Senate which would make it unlawful for any married man with the State of Georgia to "slip away" from home without the full consent of his wife and without stating his whereabouts. Further, in the event he engages in the bill, any and all married men who go fishing without the consent of their wives will be guilty of a felony, and their sentence shall not be less than five nor more than twenty years at hard labor.

"Be it further enacted that any married man who shall get the full consent of his wife to go fishing and fails to catch any fish," it says, "his wife shall have the right to cancel all permits in the name of such husband."

Senator Fleming expresses confidence in the adoption overwhelming to the right of franchise now enjoyed by women of the State and fear of politicians to oppose their wives.

Lillian Russell's Much Beloved

Lillian Russell was one of those women who are to be written about only in terms of affection and admiration. except the writer happens to be a hardened dyspeptic cynic. How death has been followed by an outpouring of the part of the players who were at one time or another associated with her that we have never seen equalled in similar circumstances. She seems to have been almost the perfect woman. She was acclaimed as the loveliest woman on the American stage, perhaps the most beautiful in America. She was also a wit. Those two qualities were reflected in made by Aspasia, but when we read tributes to her by Lew Fields and Francis Wilson, it is not upon the loveliness of her face or figure or the wittiness of her mind that they dwell. They might be trying to describe some good-natured cook, some homely spinster, whose noble character distinguished her above others. "Queen Lillian," they call her, and they and others who have written about her agree that there is none other to take her place, and that the position she occupied on the American stage was never held down to an actress and may never be held again.

Her beauty was of that rare type that when one looks at her in the costumes of twenty-five and thirty-five years ago it still dazzles us. She never was submerged by her clothes. In a crinoline, in curling papers, she still appears beautiful and original. Nor did she ever seem conscious of her looks. Much of her value as a theatrical attraction was due to her own artful regularity of her features, the lure of her eyes, and her graceful figure. But these qualities alone she could easily forget. She did not trade on them. She was without small jealousies. It may have been that her charm was so universally acknowledged that she could afford to insist upon her pulchritude. Her good nature was such that the other actresses of the company who might have imagined themselves as her rivals confess as a voice, the hysterics art or beauty were unconscious, were easily disarmed and acquiesced in the title, "Queen Lillian."

Lillian Russell was without temperament. The easiest job of the day was the job of her manager. Lew Fields relates that once the company was sojourning in moonlight stands at a time of year when most of the theatres were closed. They had frequently to use halls, in one city they were billed for a hall that was no dressing rooms. The women members of the troupe were compelled to Lillian alone was cheerful. "I am going to dress in the hall," she said. "If someone will make a tent for me with sheets." What was good enough for the famous star was good enough for the others, and the managers accounted that neither would prove a temperamental obstacle but for her lead.

Fields says that when Miss Russell was a member of his company Pete Daley, a famous comedian, never could be induced to attend a rehearsal. He was so highly valued a piece of bric-a-brac that nobody dared to give him orders. Gentle remonstrances and perspiring urgings were all that could be addressed to him. Finally he promised to attend a rehearsal at 10 a.m. the next day, dropping in "on my way home." At the interval the time of the rehearsal was changed, and those who were on way of notifying Daley, he was informed up the next morning, there was nobody there to worship at the shrine.

"I'll never attend another one of your rehearsals as long as I live," said Pete, who felt that he had "wasted good time" at rehearsals before. "As long afterwards a change was made in the hour, Daley appeared, but to get free to attend the rehearsal so that he might have one for the night. It was solved by Lillian Russell herself, who sent Daley almost the main force.

Pete was an original comedian, of something the same stamp as Wilkie Bard and Harry Lauder, but somewhat disconcerting gift of improvisation, and diligence in rehearsal. It is said that neither Lillian Russell nor other actor so gifted could dispense with it. She was right from the beginning, but with the appropriate come-back. Lillian Russell was the only person to ask that they be put in second place. She was the only one for the stating. Other tributes are from girls who played with her almost daily, and who testify to her strikingly kindly nature, her unaffected simplicity and in their welfare. She settled quarrels, healed the wounds occasioned by jealousies, assisted the management and left a warm welfare "an atmosphere of loveliness" that will not fade from the American stage for many years.

FORESEES DECLINE NAVAL IMPORTANCE

Offensive Policy Only Aerial Defence, Says Barker, V.C.

London, July 22.—When I arrived in London from Canada I was with a natural excitement that I found England discussing the future of her Air Force. Most of the aeroplane assembly, says Wing-Commander Barker, the Canadian V.C., dealing with John Galsworthy's saying of the complete civil and military abandoning of the air.

"Mr. Galsworthy," says Commander Barker, "always deserves respect. But his opinions on the air are not practical. To say 'Stop!' to the conquering of the air is to order the incoming tide to recede.

"It is true that the air is a dreadful menace in war. It is true that the next war will be hideous beyond description; but war is made by men and nations, not by machines. Stop war by all means—but you cannot stop scientific progress.

Offence Only Defence.

"Therefore aeroplane must remain and multiply, and since every civilian aeroplane is a potential bomb-carrier, and since the bomb-carrier not yet born, nor the fires of hatred, we must be prepared for war.

"To my mind there can never be any defence adequate to repel the aeroplane. The only defence is offence.

"Great Britain must assume the role in the air which she has played in the past on the sea—control without tyranny, domination with justice. Great Britain must be, so powerful that war will be impossible.

"I know how England loves her navy and all the glorious traditions of the sea, but without prejudice I am convinced that the navy must dwindle in importance.

Naval Defence Illogical.

"In 1914 an enemy could only destroy our shores after entering our Grand Fleet, but that is not true today. A powerful fleet of commercial aeroplanes, manned by converted crack bombers could cause terrific havoc in the country, and it is a question whether our navy could prevent the raids or even protect our own base.

"The experience of the war proved conclusively to me that aeroplane or land defence was not a success. No number of land guns could prevent a determined low level unescorted airman from attacking his target.

"The finest battleship, escorted by destroyers and destroyers, cannot be protected from an aeroplane. An expert pilot could manoeuvre to an absolutely certain range and torpedo simply blow the ship and the millions it represents to atoms. And if an aeroplane or airship was lost in such an attack, the taxpayer will never notice it.

"No one but a madman wants to see another war, but there is no greater guarantee of war than an air policy of indifference on the part of Great Britain. And there is no greater guarantee of peace than to make the British Air Force the pinnace of the air for Europe.

FOR THE LEISURE HOUR

The Survival Of the Unfit

By VINCENT DE ROS

(Copyright.)

From out the blue cast, streaked suddenly with red, the sun sailed swiftly up, a hot, yellow disc, and it was day again.

Another day, wide, serene, waiting for night. Far to the east, under the yellow star, the forest interlaced sky black band, encircling the ragged lands.

The atmosphere was so clear and still that the whole immense panorama lies stood out with the large distinctness of things seen in the heart of a crystal. From the point of vantage, an abandoned willow but, built by some runner of the Grey Company, every scene purpose of his own in the pothole country, could be seen.

Desolation spread out on all sides, from the hills and hills in the west, just visible across the waste.

Here and there, like pockets clinging to the scarred mountain-sides, waited for an arm at a footstep—hung the last holds left by the Indians, waiting. The whole country seemed possessed of the night of waiting.

Before long, as the day glowed into its fullness of heat and light, the curtain, smudgy-red, which would begin next day, closed down on deep-hung dusk.

Nothing of life moved here. All that had change shunned the activity, save, in the early morning, a crane dropping like a plumb line, or flying a circle of wild leaves, hard, dry, stiff, the fronds of the rank water plant, cured by the sun.

The watcher had crept, in the cool of the night, from the hut of his master, reaching along the edges of the pools to gather them. Often the hand slid into the slimy water and he drew back repelled, shuddering. They were inhabitable for him, for he had to feel out their incessant stirring above the mud, to see that they were there—the little breath would have stopped long ago.

Truly, they were invaluable. There was no other thing in the wilderness so priceless. The coarsest shirt of them was rare gugs. The colorless shirt of him who tended long in strips from his flesh inside the hut, and ached in a vise above his sheets. One scrap of faded red, which had been at one time a hat, was spread on the outside of the hut, and there it hung where the sun burned down like fire.

From time to time the man put down his task and reached for the can. It was half full of water—clear, sweet water, gathered from the rain barrel. He poured a bit on a rag torn from his sooty covering and laid the rag across the fevered face.

Then he picked up the fan and went on with his monotonous task. The sun raced upward, seeming to gain intensity by speed. The dancing smoke of the fire rose straight and thin, and the silence grew heavier.

The fan fell to rest and stood with bind to brow scanning, with eager eyes, the waste of water, the sky and the land. Around and around again, over every lift and fall of the sky line, every tangled thicket, the eyes looked hopelessly. His eyes were sunken and dark, and they burned with the fire of days ago. Famine sat in the holes in his cheeks. He went back again and fanned his face.

Hour after hour went by. Again he laid down the leaf and reached for the can. This time he took care-fully the little crust of moisture. He shook, as he poured out half a dozen—it was so alarmingly low. By his nervous haste he spilled two-thirds of it. He looked up and around the hut with an expression of fright. With infinite care he placed one of the smooth leaves under his hands and poured out a second drop. He rolled it into the hollow of his hand and dropped in a few drops of the water. Then he lifted the red rag head and poured it between the open lips. He let it run down his throat and eyes and looked at the bottle as he put it back.

He felt to his endless task again. At noon of the unbearable day he spread the pelts and then closed the barrier between them and starvation, a pitiful line, a feeble wall of sticks. He wrapped leisurely wrapped in a rag, and a double handful of meat. He poured a little of the last of the water over it, added a scant spoonful of the meal, and put the whole to boil. There was a threat, while his eyes followed every drop as a wife watches the measuring of sugar, looks after a low-flying crane, ravenous and desperate. Then he took the can and went out in the blinding heat. A little distance from the hut—reason of its existence—clear and sweet in the dry land, was a tiny spring. The man got down on his knees with difficulty and drank long from its blessed purity. Then he filled the can and crept back to the hut.

A horrible fear assailed him and he stopped and listened. What if—what if his own hand? He heard an odd sound which rolled out of nothingness and subsided again. It was a growl, all right, but if it was in his head? He hurried, or thought he hurried, back to the hut. In reality he did not quicken his pace. He felt an immense relief when he lay down beside his charge. If he should go crazy what would he do? Never for a moment did the thought cross his mind that his efforts would fail. If only the coal held out! That would give Jim strength. Perhaps he should himself out a drop or two between the lips—his own strength up that he might not go groggy. The idea took hold of him. Then he put it from him. They should be kept for Jim when the meal gave out.

His world try looking for the tin-hot berries again when it grew cooler. Yet the thought recurred and again and throughout the afternoon, beating with a sort of rhythm against his consciousness. For Jim's sake as well as his own he should go. For Jim's sake.

He crouched low and tried to hold the fan with one hand as if the earth would cast him off. He was very tired and crept back to the hut again. It took a deal of time to get it in the night. Jim's face was cool when he felt of it with a thrill of terror and relief for him.

All the hours of the night he sat beside him, holding breath for day that he might feed the truth. There were moments when he thought he slept and woke. At last he opened his eyes. Then he saw that he was looking at him with inquiring eyes.

He smiled and held out his hand. He rose to his feet, but the hut was too.

This time Jim was trying to speak with his eyes. It was water he wanted, of course, and he was grateful he could and presently crept out and found the can, dragging it over the ground, for to put away the beans when he made Jim's gruel, and he was very thankful how quickly he felt better.

Another day of fanning with the big leaf, broken by snatches of sleep and watching, and the end of the week by night Jim was talking a bit, only he couldn't remember all he said. Sometimes he was out of his head, but Jim always was quick to take two words from three and a little thing, how horribly the meal was lessening. Had he wasted it? If there should be not enough now that Jim's appetite was returning!

He began on the beans, and surely some help would come, now that the worst was over. This was going to be a hot day and he had forgotten to get a fresh supply of the dried leaves. He would have to go shoeless at the diminished pile. Jim saw him pitch forward as the fan fell beside him.

Jim tried to think it all over calmly. He was ashamed, but he knew they must. He realized that he had been unconscious for a long time he would never know.

Outside the hut it was still smiling—red, warm light, the brilliant hushed glow of sunset in the ragged landscape. Jim looked at the fan, then at it. He turned on his side and took inventory of everything in sight. The pots, the small case of medicine, the can nearly full of water. He looked long at the man lying on his face beside him had taken that last staggering step to the can, and at his bare knees, and the rag containing the beans. The handful of meal was hidden in the pack.

During the long night Jim thought and rehashed, and the other talked feebly and moved, and Jim's heart was glad and sorry when he saw a horrible fear. He strained his eyes in the darkness at the can and then suddenly at the can with the water in it. After that he thought of nothing but that can.

The day broke and found him still out of the hut. There was still enough of a loose swept over the hut, smiling swiftly down to the holes, and the laughter filled the desolate silence.

If frightened the crawling man and he made a desperate effort.

At the end of another day the party straying from the trail came to the little rise above the spring. Le Marque stood stooping his great height at the opening of the hut.

"Here he lives," he said, wonderingly.

His bearded face expressed pity. He knew these tragedies of the desolate lands, where the fever strikes a man and death stands grinning from the empty void, waiting for the lingering survivors.

He dropped softly to his knees and turned over to the light him who lay on his back. There was still warmth under the ragged strips on his breast and the lips were moving.

Le Marque looked long at him. His keener sight saw the can under the hut. He laid him gently back and turned to the other. There he found a living man with the face to be well, curled like a sleeping beast, and holding in the hollow of his hand a little piece of medicine, a rag containing a handful of dried leaves, a pinch of dirty meal, and a can in which were a few ounces of water.

Le Marque stood up for a moment. Then he went out to the others, but the expression on his face had changed.

Might Be Worse.

Miss Passy—Kate talks so outrageously. She told me I was bathing but a hopeless old maid.

Miss Keen—Whew!

Miss Passy—Now wasn't that unladylike of her?

Miss Keen—It certainly was rude, but, my dear, you've learned that old boy school expression "Better to be thought a fool than to open your mouth and remove all doubt."

BLUFFING UNCLE JAMES

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(c) 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Phillip Merrill threw down the letter in disgust. "What the deuce is it, then—!" He refrained from completing his sentence in deference to his secretary, Miss Cowles, who sat watching him in astonishment.

Not that anybody refuses to lend us that money which would put us on our feet, unless—well, read for yourself his idiotic foolishness!" He thrust the letter under her nose, and, hands in his pockets, began a hasty but nervous limited walk up and down his room, like that of a caged lion in a hungry lion in his cage.

Marjory Cowles read through the letter twice with businesslike precision:

"My Dear Nephew:

"I was interested in your statement of the assets and liabilities of your business of the moment. But I do not forget that you have been enthusiastic over various other enterprises. Have you any evidence of settling down, by getting married, for instance. I shall be more convinced of your seriousness, and be glad to help you. By the way, if you are married, let me know. It might alter the case. Your affectionate uncle, James Lathrop."

"I'm sorry, Mr. Merrill," she said, then added with a sigh, "I wish I could help you. I've seen his way to making the loan, it would have meant such a lot!"

"A lot!" echoed Phillip. "Why, it would mean all the difference between pulling through and going under!"

Marjory Cowles had been associated with the Goodlit Tire company since its beginning, and had been promoted so many of its ups and down that she had acquired sense of the privileges of a partner without its responsibilities. Now she pondered the situation with flattering attention, tapping her firm red lips.

"Then—there isn't anyone you would want to marry on short notice?" She hoped her employer didn't hear the beating of her treacherous heart as she waited for the answer she had to suggest to him—and the sudden discovery that Phillip had the most attractive blue eyes of any man she had ever met.

"Indeed there isn't!" declared Phillip so emphatically that she blushed at her faux pas.

Marjory was about to remark that she was not attempting eccentric, when Phillip gave a positive shout. "I have it! You will accompany me as my special and tightlisted. Please take this letter." She took the letter and he then placed up her pad and pencil.

"Dear Uncle James: You want to know if I am married. Well, am I? Would you could see my wife (that's true enough, Miss Cowles, I wish he could, and tell me what she's like.) If you will reconsider the setting of that loan, I assure you that you will never regret it. Your affectionate nephew,

"P. S.—If the wife knew I was writing this I feel sure she would send her love."

"I am going out for lunch now. Get the letter off as soon as you can please." And Phillip took down his coat and hat and left the office.

A few days, Marjorie sat for a modest idly wondering how the affair would turn out, and then considerably beating one of her pencils with scribbling in a sheet of paper, unconsciously on the desk. Then she rose, straightened things out and took from the drawer the few small articles of an apple which made up her midday lunch, and then she made use a small implement of getting off that letter in time for the mail.

Three weeks later Phillip sat at his desk figuring the extent of his smashup. Everything had gone wrong since he had not heard from his uncle, when he was interrupted by the jangle of the telephone bell.

"You take it, Miss Cowles," he said irritably.

Marjory took down the receiver, then almost dropped it. "His Uncle James!" she said in a whisper.

But there was no need. Phillip had risen and stood as one petrified. His Uncle James come all these miles to investigate the business! That meant almost surely that he would loan the money. Joyfully he took the receiver from Marjory's hand and shouted the strange thoughtfulness of her expression.

"Uncle James! I am pleased!—How long you here for?—Fine! Where you staying?—My wife!—Oh-er-yes, yes, yes, very well, very well; put you up there—all right. Yes, Of course,—we'd ask you to stay with us, but we've only two rooms. Yes, two rooms, but there's an excellent little family hotel near. Well, I'll be seeing you there—all right. I'll come right up."

Phillip turned from the telephone with an expression that Marjorie's heart melted within her.

"My uncle is coming up, will be here any moment, and how the dense can I produce a wife in that time?" Phillip paused with the despair of one whose game is up. Then, "I say, Miss Cowles, you wouldn't—oh, it's a crazy scheme—but you wouldn't consider being my wife—?

Marjory couldn't resist, and with the audacity of one who has nothing to lose she replied, "Why, I don't mind, if it will help you."

Phillip's face.

"Oh, I didn't mean really—that's—oh, just pretend you've—by-the-by, while Uncle James is here this morning, after that I'll undertake him. But if he'd only go over the works first and see what a first-rate proposition it is, he'd forget this affair and never give it another thought."

Marjory debated within herself. Playing the part of a make-believe wife at the man you're in love with might have its tragic moments. But, because she was in love with him—"All right," she said at last, "for the sake of the business I will."

"You're a brick, Miss Cowles!" he grasped her hands gratefully. Then, as the color mounted slowly in his cheeks, "Hark! think I'm a damsel, lucky dog!" he added. It was the first personal note that had ever crept into the conversation.

Half an hour later Uncle James arrived, a tall, spare individual with keen, snapping eyes. He greeted his nephew affectionately, then turned to the girl as Phillip said, a little awkwardly: "My—er—wife. She is putting her shoulder to the wheel, too, for a while."

This difficult moment was past and Uncle James was launched in description of the trip and the new city he had to go after steadily refusing to talk business. Uncle James uttered the faint hope that Phillip had inherited the conspirators' gene of an hour.

"I'm glad you like her, Phillip, because I'd rather made up my mind, if your wife was one of those extraordinary women, Jane, I don't knowhow's earnings, she back, I'd have nothing to do with you. However, that matter now prevailing. But before we discuss that I'd like to see the dividend, New York and the two of you must be my guests."

Before the end of the two young people looked at each other. Then "Nick" Lathrop was a white lie, and Phillip miserably, and Marjory consented.

Followed busy evenings at theaters, automobile rides, and delightful dinners. When they were riding Uncle James commented upon the enterprising the front seat with the chauffeur, "Given old married people like to sit, holding hands, but I'm a bit, and he's delightful."

And Marjory, sitting snugly wrapped in Phillip's side, watching the river, felt almost certain that she had stepped into a dream. While Phillip—well, Phillip grew to long for the night to come out and speak to the man hand resting beneath the robes a few inches away.

For Marjory in the hours of companionship, had shown herself to be a most delightful, unlimited dissemble. In wondering how he could ever have thought her colorless beside, he sometimes forgot his feeling of guilt at the deception he was practicing on his uncle and the anxiety as to the outcome.

Finally, Uncle James was ordered into the office when Phillip was out, and Marjory, left alone, he hesitated, then sat down in his nephew's chair.

"What's my nephew playing that fool for?" he demanded.

"Why, I'm not playing!" she asked, trying to speak calmly.

"Just this—he's no more married than I am, and I'm sure you know it, I know. Reaching into his pocket, he drew out a letter, unfolded it, separated as the one she had addressed. Out of it he took the letter and turned it over. "Here, read it!" he said, handing it to her.

"Dear Uncle James: You want to know if I am married. Well, am I? Would you could see my wife (that's true enough, Miss Cowles, I wish he could, and tell me what she's like.) If you will reconsider the setting of that loan, I assure you that you will never regret it. Your affectionate nephew,

"P. S.—If the wife knew I was writing this I feel sure she would send her love."

"And now that I have come—well, he can have that money on one condition, that you marry him!" his head and marries you right away. You can't refuse to do that on account of a nephew's wife."

Rising, he went slowly out, leaving the girl speechless and indignant. Then the bet tears welled into her eyes and she buried her face in her arms on the desk. Her did she hear Phillip's step, nor feel his hand on her strong arms swept her to her feet and held her close.

"Marjory," he spoke downstairs. He said 'my wife' wanted me very badly. After all, nothing matters, dearest, in the way I want my wife. When can I claim her, sweetheart?"

Marjory lifted her wet eyes, now shining with happiness. "Any time you like, dearest," she said, and Phillip forgot to be mystified in the wonder of the first kiss.

"Pssh."

This merry man is the portrait of a child which was painted without any particular aim as to character. When Thomas Boydell saw it, he said: "Sir Joshua, if you will make this pretty thing into a Puck, for my Shakespeare gallery, I will give you a hundred guineas for it." COAL! COAL! COAL!

Contradictory reports are still coming in regarding the question of securing an adequate supply of coal in Canada for the coming winter. Belleville, along with other cities, is beginning to realize the situation. (We are writing according to statements by dealers) the chief question now is whether they should at once give orders for British coal or wait and see if the miners' strike in the United States will be over within the next two weeks.

But even if there is a settlement of the miners' dispute, it is still problematical whether Canada can secure sufficient coal from the United States to tide her over the winter. The reason for not at once ordering British coal is that it may be dearer than that from the United States, owing to the cost of transportation.

Then there is the question of the suitability of the coal from England and Wales. Most of this is of the soft order, and it is doubtful whether there is really any hard anthracite in Great Britain. The people of the Old Country use nothing but soft coal in their homes, they have open fire-grates and do not heat their homes with furnaces and stoves. This soft coal would, of course, be better than no coal at all, but for furnace use it might be very dirty and would probably burn up very quickly, in which case it would be still more expensive than the anthracite.

Or is the duty of both the Provincial and Dominion Governments to keep in close touch with the United States sources of coal supply, and this is doubtless being done. Canada has great resources of coal in the Maritime Provinces and the output of these should be conserved for Canadian use exclusively if the supply from across the line is to be cut off.

Other possible resources of coal in Canada should be thoroughly investigated, and the Dominion should be ransacked from end to end by mining experts to see if this country could not be made self-supporting so far as fuel is concerned. In our issue of yesterday we published a report from Toronto stating that Mr. Alfred A. Coyne, a consulting geologist, had submitted samples of anthracite coal which he declared were found in the district of Sudbury. In the past, geologists have declared the idea that coal deposits were possible in Ontario, but the text books of science are forever changing and the scientists may have something to learn yet. Here is a matter that should receive immediate attention from the Government. If we have the coal here let us dig it out at once, for there are millions of people who will suffer and perhaps perish next winter if they cannot get fuel.

LAW AND ORDER IN IRELAND

The spirit of law and order seems to be prevailing in Ireland over that of rebellion and anarchy. The Free State Government has discovered the only way of dealing with the chronic rebel, the way of firmness and justice. There is nothing that feeds the spirit of rebellion like hesitancy and suspension. Every rebel is a coward at heart and thrives on fatuiliness and pussyanimot. He claims freedom only for himself, and for the rights and opinions of others he has no respect or toleration. He never fights in the open, unless he is sure there is no one around with firearms, and when he uses a gun it is usually from a window or from behind a bridge at night upon the unsuspecting.

The success of the rebel campaign in Ireland has been due to the temerity or the lack of firmness on the part of the British authorities in Ireland. The Republican forces were never really very strong, they could have been swept into the Atlantic Ocean by a determined drive with a few battalions of British troops across the Island. Such an action would, of course, have been regarded as one of aggression and the rebels would have whined at being treated with their own medicine.

The present clean-up, however, is being carried out by Irishmen themselves, and no one complains. So the policy of throwing the onus of law and order in Ireland upon Irishmen has proved the right one and it has check-mated the chronic rebel element who have gone sniping and unveiling around the world for a hundred years about the "hanging of men and women for the wearing of the green".

THE REVOLVER FIEND AGAIN

Revolvers are still regarded by the Government as playthings that can be purchased over a counter and used indiscriminately at the caprice of every fool. A man or a boy can carry a revolver about with him and no one will regard him as anything but a harmless person. A week ago a dope fiend at Truro, U. S., shot down a popular citizen of that city without the least provocation or pretext. Commenting upon this tragedy the Ottawa Journal says it is useless calling upon the police to enforce the law regarding revolvers, and that there will never be any effective prevention of crime by revolver fiends until both the manufacture and the sale of these weapons are prohibited. We commend the Journal's views on this matter to the immediate consideration of the Government.

"It has been stated a million times in a million places that nine-tenths of all the crimes of violence that are committed in the world of civilization today are committed by the aid of revolvers. These are the only form of weapon deadly at any distance which can be easily concealed by criminals and can be used without danger to the possessor. They are cheap, and easy, and fatal. And they are of no good use for anything except to cope with criminals. Forbid this recommendation would disappear if revolvers disappeared, because if the criminals did not possess them the police would not need them. Civilization should bar the revolver by prohibiting its manufacture, and there is no reason whatever why Canada should not lead the way of this respect if some of our public men would only take the matter up."

The pied rat-poisoner who passed through this city a few days ago just departed in time, and it is fortunate for him that he has not left his address. He had better find a poison that is exclusive to the rodent, and will not tempt the canine species.

SUSPICIOUS OF PROGRESSIVES

A SERIOUS SITUATION
(Peterboro Examiner)

It would be difficult for the people of this section of Ontario to extract much comfort from the statement made by Sir Adam Beck the other day in regard to power conditions in this district. It is satisfactory to know that an agreement has been reached with the Dominion Government for a lease of the water rights at Banney's Falls, but it is not so pleasant to hear that the Hydro Commission proposes to inaugurate an immediate increase in rates. "It is a very serious increase in the rates in all the district," is the way the Hydro chairman breaks the news. And then he goes on to explain the arrangement that the Trent power system can be overlooked and that because of the landslide growth and the increased use of electricity, the whole of the power available from the Trent will be gone. Sir Adam explains that the engineers are now busy drafting the maximum amount that will be asked to meet the needs of the municipalities in the district, world is still solvent and not bound "We are going to tell now what enchelwards over night.

EARL BALFOUR
(Ottawa Journal)

The world has travelled far since 1874. So has Balfour. He is the epitome of half a century of British public life; and his birthday finds him crowned with his years. To-day, as he told an audience in London a few weeks ago, he stands, despite what ill going on in the world, as an invincible optimist. He does not believe with so many others, that the world is getting worse, that the men of to-day are of lesser stature than the statesmen, and less capable of facing great problems. He believes in the House of Commons, believes in political democracy, believes that the present generation is as great as any in the past, that, in a word, we need not fear for the future.

Long live Earl Balfour! Long may we have his experience, the wisdom, his philosophy, and his optimism, to cheer on the faint-hearted, to rout the pessimists, to prove that this old world is still solvent and not bound

WIT AND HUMOR

The man who borrows trouble has to put his peace of mind as security.

We all have our ups and downs, but it is much easier to trace our descent than to climb.

It's a mighty well-trained conscience that can be taught to speak only when it is spoken to.

Fortune may knock at your door, but don't expect her to use a battering ram and break in.

It is quite possible for a man to be of a mechanical turn of mind without having wheels in his head.

Fine Old Hen

Lord Fisher tells of this blunt but amazing compliment paid to his country by an American admiral. How to be Happy Though Sixty

Rev. Dr. George Jackson writes in The Manchester Guardian a "Lay Sermon to the Elderly":

"I wrote in this column some time ago on preaching to the middle-aged," he says, "and I have before me now and I have been waiting some week for the opportunity to call attention to it—a new book, which may be described as a kind of lay sermon to the elderly. The book is called 'Be Useful and Happy from Sixty to Seventy'; the writer is Dr. A. Lapthorn Smith, M.D., and the publisher is Dr. John Lane; and the price five shillings.

"The book, probably more at home with the lancet and the sloth escope than the pen, and this may account for its occasional stupidity and faults, and I hasten to say that Dr. Smith has given us a book which is interesting and also full of sound sense. For men and women who have reached, or are nearing, their sixtieth birthday, it is not at all easy to suggest a more profitable investment than the purchase and study of this little book. There are likely to be after the sixtieth milestone has been passed. And such, he declares, would be the case, at least much more frequently than it is, if only we would live wisely. One of the great dangers of the sixty-to-ninety period, Dr. Smith says, is over-eating. Most of us can never feel on the day than it is able to consume. Three meals a day this is one of his axioms for the man over sixty—are better than four, but two are better than three. This is a subject which few modern prescribers are bold enough to tackle. We keep our pulpit thunder for the sin of drunkenness and are silent about the sin of gluttony.

Drinking and Smoking.

"After this, as might be expected, Dr. Smith has little good to say of alcohol in any form. Never drink it, he says, 'except at meals, nor before 6 p.m., and always well diluted with water.' Not that I need not dwell. The surprise of the book for many readers will be its strong and persistent condemnation of the smoking habit. Dr. Smith does not indeed advise any man to change his lifelong habit at sixty, but he regards an ounce of tobacco a week as the limit of safety for everybody.

"During the war, he says, doctors like himself who knew the danger of the excessive use of cigarettes in the trenches kept silence; he thinks that now it is their duty to speak out. Tobacco, he says, is a poison which kills, not directly but indirectly, by its action on the heart: 'Everybody's heart is not only strong enough to do its ordinary work, but it also has a reserve power of 25 or 50 per cent. Excessive smoking diminishes this reserve power, so that an ordinary severe illness from which a non-smoker would quickly recover completes the heavy smoker who, having no reserve power in his heart, succumbs to heart failure.' As far as Dr. Smith's records go, the great majority of those who live to be 'useful and happy from sixty to ninety' are both non-smokers and total abstainers.

Keep Active.

"Again, great emphasis is laid on the importance of keeping in harness—not necessarily the old harness, either in one's profession or elsewhere. Every man should have some definite task to which to put his hand when he gets up in the morning. One of Dr. Smith's chapters is entitled 'Activity the Keynote to Long Life.' 'Rest,' he says, 'is not a hobby for life—don't stop working.' 'If you have not a business where you are sixty, rather than one or get a hobby that of the best hobbies is to help those who are over sixty, but who are less fortunate than yourself.' Help them to get another job when they are turned out by the cruel "too old at sixty" rule.' Dr. Smith says he has known men who, voluntarily or compulsorily, have 'retired' at sixty strong and well, but who within a year have gone all to pieces, simply through having nothing to do. 'Rust and decay set into their machinery, and the wheels would not go round.'

Religion and Old Age.

"I have left myself only two or three lines in which to refer to Dr. Smith's frank and thoughtful allusions to religion and its relation to a happy old age. 'Between sixty and ninety,' he says, 'religion becomes more precious than ever.' 'Many of my over-a-hundred-years-old correspondents have mentioned this fact as contributing to their reaching an advanced age, that they were brought up by pious parents in the fear and love of God.' Their simple philosophy of life may be summed up thus: 'They lived very simply, went to bed and got up early, went to church every Sunday, and were at peace with God and man.' In fact," says Dr. Smith, 'their lives were just the ideal lives which any doctor would sketch out for anyone who consulted him as to the best way to reach a hundred years of age'."

HERE AND THERE

NEW ENGLAND ELMS.

If trees were people, pines would be Too prim for popularity;
Their ruffled frocks through Summer, Fall,
Weigh and Spring, don't change at all.
And birches in their gowns of white,
Dancing with winds that trail the night,
Would be like maidens, free and glad,
Not caring if the world is sad.
And maples with their love for dress
Would be vain ladies, too, I guess,
While poplars would be all, slim youths,
Their tongues wind-silvered with pale truths.
Gnarled oaks and chestnuts in the glen
Would be calm, sturdy business men,
And fruit trees would be mothers, fair,
Giving their offspring tender care.
But elms would be philosophers,
Accepting whate'er occurs,
Living in contact with the soil
But lifting up their minds to God.
And elms would be nice folk to meet
Along some still New England street.

SINCE SHELLEY.

"One hundred years have passed since the pure flames of that murdered spirit were consumed with their mysterious alchemy the physical body of Shelley—a hundred years, a century whose long, slow-moving decades included the reign of Victoria, the American Civil War, and the agony of the great European Armageddon, and to-day the immortal legacy of his verse is as fresh and inspired as when his song first fell from his lips. His ashes, as everybody knows, lie near the grave of John Keats in the cemetery of Rome, his heart snatched from the flames by Trelawny is buried in England, and his immortal spirit, as long as the English tongue is spoken, will remain in the lofty keeping of the human race."—Llewelyn Powers, in Century Magazine.

THE POET A CREATOR.

"Poetry is his and art's; it is seeking to rediscover the old that art is for ever bringing to birth the new," writes John Bailey in the Quarterly Review, "and the function of creation was to bring order out of chaos: and the order was life. And so it has always been. It is true, not in any rhetorical sense but literally, that the poet and every artist follows the method of the Divine Maker. His spirit which is art breathes upon the chaos of life; and behold there is, first, order: and then again another and higher kind of life.

Woman's Sphere

THE "SLANGY" GIRL

A question that would seem to be of vital importance to the gentle sex was discussed some time ago by women and girls who have minds good in bone as well as those of the more daring field of matrimony.

Men are growing tired of the breezy, slangy girl who has distorted the English language into a thing of horror," one street-wised woman told me. "After all, slang is the language of the streets. There is nothing beautiful, nothing musical in it—it has not a pleasant sound, and the girl who shoots her latest expressions of it with a rapidity of a machine gun, merely passes for lacking the cultivation which is a charming woman's most effective weapon.

"Most men, by nature, are lovers of beauty. They like, to look at a pretty face because it pleases their sense of sight; for the same reason would they rather listen to a soft, modulated voice than one that is harsh and unpleasant. Of course they may be amused at the 'I'll tell the world' variety, but deep down in their hearts the woman they admire and with whom they like to be seen is the one who speaks coherently; who never slurs her words; who pronounces her words as she can out of the English language—the woman, in other words, who gives the impression of culture, refinement and poise."

APRONS.

Nurse wears an apron stiff and starched,
That seems to say, "Now you quiet march!"

Cook wears a big white apron too,
But hers is not so stiff and new.

It's more the soft and cosy kind,
And tied with bits of tape behind.

Old Mr. Dobbs wears one of brown,
When she is busy cleaning down.

My mother when she's sewing things
Wears one with pale blue ribbon strings.

Dear grandmamma who's come to stay,
And knits at socks and shawls all day,

Has one with pockets in the hem.
I wonder what she keeps in them?

I guess she finds them very handy,
For pins and wool and sugar candy.

I want to wear an apron, too,
I hate my pinafore, I do!

SOMETHING ABOUT COLOURS

What is the most unbecoming colour in the world. The question was asked a Frenchman who in an atmosphere of matters of dress and good looks.

"Any color is unbecoming—at certain style. However, the colour which most women can wear is a dark blue. The colour which has the saddest effect on those who should not wear it is brown. "The woman, not of vivid coloring, who wears a tabac brown is painfully like a corpse."

The French authority is to be taken seriously. Dull brown is a color which has a most deadening and "oldening" effect on a person of sallow complexion. The brown eyed, dark-haired, rosy-cheeked girl may wear almost any shade of brown and look the richer in coloring for her garb; but let the woman whose eyes, hair and complexion need glow and warmth attempt to wear any of the dull shades of brown—and the effect is melancholy.

London society, a correspondent informs Canadians, is turning green—not with envy but as a result of the fact that Princess Mary received a emerald necklace as a wedding. It has been coming gradually, and reached its pinnacle last month, when green was widely chosen as the adornment of court gowns.

"Bond Street dressmakers declare there is a demand for entire toilettes in various shades of green, principally for merrymaking frocks. The verdant tropic is apparent in the theatres and fashionable restaurants, well dressed folk carrying large brilliant fans of emerald ostrich or coque feathers. Hair bands also are green and the color of Chinese jade is in great demand. Even gloves have green gauntlets. Green predominates in bathing costumes at the fashionable beaches. The vogue has penetrated even the sanctity of the household, where fashionable housewives have toned the color combative to repose. When Lady Jean Capell, the half American daughter of the Earl of Essex, was married to Osbert Peakes last month, she doffed her furs and had the entire scheme done in green even to the disposition of the bridesmaids."

Green is the color of coolness and the emerald, according to a superstition centuries old is supposed to give clearness of physical and mental vision to the wearer. Green is usually considered an unlucky color—especially for a bride. The story is that green belongs to the fairies. The various shades of green belong to the various months, and are supposed to "stree" colours. Hence, when the fairies see that mortals are wearing green, they become jealous and hasten to punish the daring human beings —"Valerie," in Toronto Saturday Night.

BEFORE BABY COMES

Watchful Care Necessary

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine and should be taken by the expectant mother. It will assist her in keeping well and strong. This is very necessary, not only for her own comfort but for the future as well.

Read the experience of Mrs. Bertha of New Brunswick, and please bear in mind that every letter published recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is genuine and unsolicited. It is the expression of gratitude from women who have been helped.

Cumberland Bay, N. B.—"I was troubled with weak feelings, headache, all the time, a cough, fainting spells and pains in my back and side. I could not do a single bit of work and had to be helped out to the barnyard where I lay in the fresh air from morning until night, and I had to be carried up and down the stairs. After other medicines had failed a friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as she said it was excellent for anyone in the family way, before the first bottle was taken I could walk alone and as I kept on with it I got stronger, until I was able to do all my work. My baby is now six weeks old and is a big fat healthy fellow. I am sure Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done wonders for me and I recommend it."—Mrs. Murray J. Barton, R. R. FASHION FANCIES

FROCKS AT AUTEUIL.

"The Grand Steeplechase" of 1922 will be remembered as a day of capes and cloaks. The weather made them a necessity, for the sunshine was cut short by cold breeze. Most of the summer wraps were long in black silk crepe, with a collar of six pleated ruffles of white material, one of the monkey fur. Under them were worn black and coloured dresses and with them black and coloured hats. Brown in all shades from beige to chestnut, was worn by those of recognized good taste. Brown and black were well put together.

A dress of black charmeuse and worn under a long cloak of black crepe marocain with a hat of chestnut brown timber straw, trimmed with brown velvet; the shoes brown black patent leather, the stockings transparent brown. Beige dresses were worn under black cloaks and with black hats. Black dresses were worn with coloured hats. White dresses gleamed under black cloaks and were sometimes crowned with a hat of vivid colours or with one of white or of black. Where dress, hat, and cloak were black the hat was usually trimmed with steel or silver.

It was noticeable that there were no long coloured capes. Short capes and loose coats were popular, and showed some colour. A deep crepe de Chine-dress had a short round cape which reached almost to the knees, trimmed with cropped mauve bout. Several dark cloth dresses, brilliantly embroidered, had Velasquez capes embroidered to match. The Matalasse coat may be ranked with the short cape, as it is so easy fitting as to serve as a summer wrap. These coats in black or white trimmed with monkey fur are now so popular in Paris that they have almost ceased to be quite the right thing.—London Times.

WALLIE REID MAKES BIG HIT IN "RENT FREE"

Wallie Reid has scored a decided hit in the Paramount picture "Rent Free" at Griffin's where it is being exhibited for the last time to day. He is enough to portray the role of an artist who lives on a roof top to escape paying rent. Every picture depicts in the life of an artist's country. He trapped them in the waste lands by stealing their horses. They trapped him by stealing him a horse thief and putting a posse on his trail. Virginia Valli contributes a charming impersonation to the general effect.

"His Real Ticket" an amusing Fox Sunshine comedy is being exhibited in addition to the two feature offerings.

"THE LITTLE MINISTER" EXCELLENT FARMING VEHICLE FOR DAINTY BETTY COMPSON

Sir James M. Barrie's famous novel has been pictorized by Penthyn Stamfer for Paramount and in which Betty Compson, beautiful star has the leading role, this is the first of that writer's works to reach the screen.

Already the motion picture public has been given through Paramount pictures, "The Admirable Crichton," which was produced by Cecil B. Demille under the title of "Male and Female;" "Half an Hour," with Dorothy Dalton; "Peter Ibbetson," with Wallace Reid; "Rosemary" with Lila Lee; "A Prince There Was," with William DeMille producer; and "Sentimental Tommy," produced by John S. Robertson with May McAvoy and Gareth Hughes as "Grizel" and "Tommy."

The story of "The Little Minister" is not only dramatic, but it has tender appeal. The scenes are laid in Scotland about 1830 and each has a thrill of its own. Miss Compson is a high spirited girl of the nobility who adventures as a gypsy maid and who is involved in a strong love romance. George Hackathorne is the leading man and heads a supporting company of artistic players.

A rural comedy comedy "Teddy's Gone" with "Teddy" the famous screen dog enacting the stellar role. Beautiful Travelogue, and Gertrude Walsh in the historical chapter play, "With Stanley in Africa" are announced for exhibition on the same program.

THEIR STAINED CLASS.

Specimen of Art Treasured in Egypt and Syria.

Egypt and Syria both claim to be the cradle of glass manufacture. Conditions in Egypt were favorable to the glass industry, material being available for the necessary fuel, implements, and the Nile supplied the necessary flux for combining the fused and for the distribution of wares when finished. But no flux, no trace of such an industry, in a rudimentary condition, which are those first suggested the zig-zag lines so often found in the ornamental decoration of glassware.

Flinz assigns the discovery of glass to Syria. Geographically, the country lends itself to this assumption, on account of its forests and sand deposits. Pliny tells of the discovery on the banks of the River Belus, under Mount Carmel, by Phoenician merchants, that material of glass are still being unearthed. Sayce, however, credits the early development of the industry, given over many centuries, to Egypt, and was the birthplace of glass manufacture. Whether or not this is the question as to which of the two countries is entitled to the honor is relatively unimportant, but of considerable interest to students of the early remarks of civilization.

The Romans manufactured glass. They used it in many forms, for pavements, in thin plates as a coating for walls, in blocks for windows, and, relatively, as they also used skins, shell and alabaster. Their glass was the equivalent of all the ordinary methods of manipulation and decoration known to them by the large glassary urns, by jugs with ribbed and pinched-in handles, by basins, by vessels and vases as beautiful in form and light as those of any age since produced. Their methods for pressing glass into molds, by which low vessels were as perfect as those of to-day, and their decorative cutting, of incised lines and shallow wheel or hand-cut hollows, was a more perfect adaptation to the material than that of any primitive culture of modern times.

They also had at their disposal materials for colors, green, yellow, blue, amber, brown and rose, besides opaque white, jet black, green, red, black, orange and white. This assortment permits of every conceivable combination.

Glass was made in India as early as 504 B.C., and in China in 140 B.C., while in the British Museum, there is a vase of greenish glass dated in the 15th century B.C., which is described:

"The design to be reproduced was carefully drawn on a wooden table, over which sheets of glass were laid, and the colored threads disposed in liquid chalk, after which they were laid out with the glass. When these cut-outs were again arranged upon the table and the necessary flux added and shading put in with dark enamel, and then fused in a furnace, the result is all these separate pieces were fastened together by rubber, was the glass was full of impurities, the glass was not homogeneous, and when a sheet, except that it would be full of streaks and bubbles. The thickness varied from 1-16 to 1-4 of an inch in the same piece. Perhaps not more than the thickness of a watch crystal on the other hand, they say: "Pure glass is made pot-metal glass, though chemically imperfect, was artistically, all things should be."

Hence the coloring was due mainly to the chance admixture of metallic oxides, combining these irregular colored sheets according to his ability. But the modern artist must resort to many devices to attempt to imitate their beautiful translucent coloring.

The Printer's Own Imp.

Anyone who has seen a printer's apprentice, grimy, dishevelled, and splotched with ink, might well think that the term "printer's devil arose from the fact that the printing business appear to have the faculty of looking as if they had just emerged from the bottomless pit. But there was once a real printer's "devil."

Aldus Manutius, the celebrated Venetian printer, who lived during the latter part of the fifteenth and the early part of the sixteenth century, had a small black slave upon the superstitious believed to be an evil spirit. To assist the runner and satisfy the curious, the printer published announced in church." Aldus Manutius, printer to the Holy Church, hath a devil who is a public exposure of the printer's devil. All who take a fancy to see and blood are invited to step up and pinch him."

The term "printer's devil" caught the popular fancy of the Venetians, and from Venice spread over a great part of the world.

Two pupils in a primary school in Ohio were encountering difficulties with their "First Reader."

"Tommy," asked one of the other, "how can you tell which is a 'd' and which is a 'b'?"

"Don't you know?" returned Tommy. "Why the 'd' is the letter with its stomach on its back."

RICKARD PLANS FIVE BIG BOUTS

Wants Wilde to Meet Buff and Kilbane to Box Both Lynch and Criqui

New York, Aug. 1.—Five more big championship fights before the boys get footballing is the rather sizeable program now receiving the attention of George Texas Rickard.

Figuring that Johnny Kilbane, the featherweight champion, can do a "Benny Leonard" and battle a couple of times in two months, Rickard wants to match him with Joe Lynch, the bantamweight king and then send him against Eugene Criqui, the reigning champion of the weight in Europe.

Benny Leonard is in line for some more work. Benny needs it, as he has earned only $300,000 in the last six weeks. Rickard wants the lightweight champion to work on the winner of the Charley White-Bobby Barrett bout.

Another international bout is in project between Jimmy Wilde, the world's champion flyweight, and Johnny Buff, the holder of the American title. Wilde is said to be a receptive mood, despite the exaggerated notions about a purse.

Rickard is going to pull off that Dempsey-Willard second edition or bust. He has an idea that the world's series is going to be played in New York again in October, and he likes that data for the second massacre of that series. Willard is talking at early October, but the cash may help him to change his mind.

Rickard had become so convinced that Willard has a good chance in another bout that he may forget himself and bet on the big Kansan.

Benny Leonard is figuring on going to Europe with his whole family in the fall. He figures that he can make some money on the other side as the British folks have been talking about a Ted Lewis-Leonard fight and they would also like him to show them how rotten their champion Ernie Rice is.

Rickard is also looking around for someone to take a fall out of Johnny Wilson. He figures that the middleweight champion slipped a good one over him when he ran out of a fight with Harry Greb and he is not particular whom he gets to knock over the Boston Italian.

The Dundee-Frush fight for the New York featherweight championship and the bout between Harry Wills and "Tut" Jackson for the dark heavyweight title at the next big bouts of the program to be staged at the Polo Grounds.

Rickard has been approached by the United States Golf Association and has a finger in neither one of them.

BRITISH GOLF TEAM SAILS FOR U. S.

New York, Aug. 1.—The official list of players who will make up the British golf team for the international matches for the Walker Cup at Southampton August 30, has been received by the United States Golf Association. It shows no changes in the selection recently announced in cable despatches. The players who will leave England Thursday on the Carmania, are Bernard Darwin, Roger Wethered, Robert Harris, Cyril Tolley, W. H. Torrance, C. V. L. Hooman, Colin Aitmer, John Caven, Willie Mackenzie and Captain Angus Hambro.

FINAL SOCCER GAME AT TORONTO

Toronto, Aug. 1.—There is a great possibility that the finals for the Dominion soccer championship between the western winners and Ulster United of Toronto, the eastern winners, will be played in Toronto on August 10th and 12th.

The games would be played in Winnipeg if the original schedule was adhered to, but the venue may be moved owing to financial reasons. Toronto is a great soccer town, and the fact that Ulster United are in the final would make it sure that there would be a big crowd of spectators at each of the games. The matter of the larger gates which would result if the games were played here is thought to have a direct and influencing bearing on the change of schedule. Two games will be played with the score on the round to count. Should they be played in Toronto the grounds are almost sure to be those of the Toronto Scottish team. Broadview field is out of the question, being Ulster's home-playing enclosure.

PITCHER FOR THE GIANTS

Boston, Aug. 1.—Hugh McQuillan, pitching ace of the Boston Braves, has been sold to the New York Giants, George Washington Grant, owner of the Braves, announced Sunday. The price paid for McQuillan was not stated, but President Grant said that it was "in six figures."

In addition to the money consideration, President Grant said, the deal will bring to the Boston club three pitchers.

NEW SWIMMING RECORD

New York, Aug. 1.—Miss Helen Wainwright, of the Women's Swimming Association New York, shattered the world's 220-yard record for women by eleven and three-fifths seconds Saturday in winning the 220-yard metropolitan championship at Manhattan Beach lagoon. Miss Wainwright's time was 3 minutes and 41 1-5 seconds.

AMERICAN CLUB RETAINS THE DUGAN TROPHY

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 1.—The St. Paul Yacht Club retains the Dugan trophy won from the Royal St. Lawrence Club of Montreal a year ago. In the first two races of a scheduled series of three, the White Bear yachts, Kaws and Canvas Back, piled up a total of thirteen points, making it impossible for the Canadian challengers to win back the cup.

DELORO WON EXHIBITION GAME

Havelock, Aug. 1.—In an exhibition ba ball game played yesterday at Havelock between Deloro and Havelock, the latter won by a score of 10 to 4. The teams lined up as follows:

Deloro—Ada, P; H. Beadman, c; T. McInroy, 1b; Leal, 2b; Reans, 3b; Brown, ss; C. McInroy, rf; Brady, lf; Hughes, cf; Kerr, sub.

Havelock—T. Hooper, p; J. McGill, c; A. Armstrong, 1b; L. Plunkett, 2b; R. Towle, 3b; W. Copp, ss; W. Benkman, cf; L. Hagerman, lf; D. W. Wright, cf; C. Brenna, sub.

Umpire—Campaney and Elliott.

GOLF COMPETITION

Toronto, Aug. 1.—Twenty-four members of the Oak Hill Golf Club of Rochester, N.Y., played the first of a home and home series against a team from the Lakeview Club over the local course, and were defeated by 17 points, the totals by the Rassler system of scoring being 44½ to 27½. The visiting team included Charles McKenna, the western New York state champion. In his game against J. N. Lang, of the Lakeview, McKenna won 3 and 1, a fine score for both times over the local course, the par for which is 73. The return match will be played in Rochester during September.

FOURTEEN GIRLS ON THE U. S. TEAM

New York, Aug. 1.—Fourteen American girls, the first team of its kind organized in the United States, sail to-day for Europe on the Aquitania, where they are to compete in the first international track and field meet for woman at the Pershing Stadium, Paris, starting August 20.

The girl athletes will be in charge of Dr. Harry Stewart, New Haven, Conn., Miss Suzanne Becker, New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph D. Angela and the mothers of several of the team.

The members of the team were selected from all over the nation by a series of elimination contests and sectional meets.

CANADIAN RINK IN THE RUNNING

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 1.—The twelfth tournament opened with showers yesterday, but did not delay the play. Several defeats were registered, which reduced the entry to last year's proportions. Through the liberality of the city of Buffalo the greens now number 24, making three square lawns, which are to-day perfect as wool can make them. The beautiful surroundings are admired by all bowlers. The prizes, as usual are of the finest order, being donated by several prominent Buffalo bowlers.

Several Toronto rinks competed. Sir John Willson of Toronto won two games and is still in the running for the Lalor Trophy. J. R. Cole, of Granitoes won his first game, but was beaten in he second by B. Brereton of Oakwood, who previously won from a Hamilton rink.

BOWLING TOURNAMENT AT OTTAWA

Ottawa, Aug. 1.—The fifteenth annual tournament of the Eastern Lawn Bowling Association will open here August 7, Civic Holiday, on the local greens. This year's tournament is expected to be the biggest in the history of the association of the association, as entries are expected from many outside points, including Kingston, Belleville, Brockville, Winchester, Prescott, Chesterville, Kemptville, etc.

BELYEA AT PHILA. FOR SENIOR EVENT

Must Win the Association Singles to Qualify for Championship

Philadelphia, Aug. 1.—Hilton Belyea, of St. John, N.B., one of the first nine-town entries to arrive for the Golden Jubilee regatta of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen on the Schuylkill River Thursday, Friday and Saturday, planned to take his first workout over the course today.

He arrived last night.

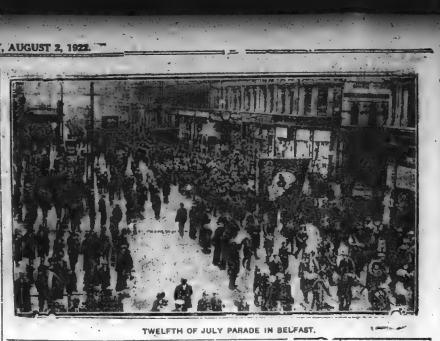

Belyea is assured in the association senior events on Friday and a victory would qualify him for the championship session on Saturday. There are eleven other entries in the qualifying event, Belyea's most formidable opponent being W. Garrett Gilmore, of this city, over whom he already has three victories.

The winner of the Association singles will meet Costello, of the Vesper B.C., Philadelphia; Zoha, New York, Bohgolanza, and possibly Walter Hoover, Duluth, the title holder in the championship event. Hoover is entered, but is no possible that he may not only an exhibition. It was said he does not feel he has had sufficient training since his victory in the English Henley to get in condition.

He was popular among all of a reserved nature. No relatives is assigned for his rash act.

DELAY DELORME CERTIFICATE

before making out a certificate and from the tenor of Mr. Faribault's remarks a court order compelling him to do so shortly may not be improbable.

Before the estate of the insane man can be administered the court must appoint a curator and in the meantime there is nobody to administer the affairs of the priest, now at sixes and sevens. This curator must be appointed by the Judge who need not necessarily take the advice of the family council which is composed of the male members only of the relatives of Delorme living in the district.

The curator when appointed will have to manage the property of the priest and as the latter was the legatee of Rasoul the murdered youth, it will take some time to unravel the tangle that has ensued.

The notary did not know just who would be appointed curator but would not be Mr. Tetreault, the brother-in-law, as he was the petitioner.

ANTI-GLARE MOVE TO BE STARTED

Police to Enforce Law Regarding Headlights

Ottawa, Aug. 2—The provincial highway police stationed on the highways in the vicinity of Ottawa are shortly to commence a campaign against motorists who persist in using the old-fashioned glare headlights. The law prohibiting the use of such lights is now about three years old yet the police claim that many cars are still equipped with the ordinary glare lense and use lights of 18 to 25 candle-power.

The action of the act dealing with headlights says:

"It shall be unlawful to carry on a motor vehicle any lighting device of over four candle-power equipped with a reflector, unless the same shall be so designed, deflected or arranged, so that no portion of the parallel beam of reflected light, when measured 75 feet or more ahead of the lamps, shall rise above 42 inches from the level surface on which the vehicle stands."

The provincial police are already in possession of the names of several car owners who have offended against this section and informations will likely be laid against them shortly. The chief offenders are those living in the country who own cars bought before the new law came into effect. All new cars are equipped with non-glare headlights.

BLEW UP BANK SAFE, ROBBERS GOT ONLY $20

Winnipeg, Aug. 2—Four bank robbers motored into the village of Macgregor, Man., at 2.30 yesterday morning, forced their way into the branch there of the Imperial Bank, brutally attacked the safe with an explosive and finally withdrew with $20 a the sole return for their night's work. They had been unable to break into the inner compartment of the vault where the cash on hand was secured.

The robbers cut all telegraph and telephone wires leading into Macgregor as their first step, and this has made it difficult to secure descriptions of the men or details of their venture.

PALESTINE ARABS MANIFESTO

A Palestine Arab Delegation has been in London for a year watching the interests of the Palestine Arabs. They object to the Balfour Declaration, and after the debate in the Commons are returning home. They have issued a manifesto, which says:—

"The tendency in the present Administration of Palestine is to Zionise the country. To this end Zionists have been given leading posts in the State. Hebrew has been recognized as an official language, when only seven per cent. of the population is Jewish and only two per cent. of these know Hebrew; the Zionist Organisation is officially recognized as a body with which the Administration is to consult on any public works, services and utilities, and on the development of any of the natural resources of the country; lands with owners are, being granted to Jewish immigrants; the importation of arms by Jews is not strictly watched; Jewish colonies have been given British army; and, the worst of all, a Russian Zionist, Mr. Rutenberg, has been granted a concession to utilise all the waterways of Palestine for a period of seventy years, and more if required. This concession has never been put to public tender. By this concession, Mr. Rutenberg, and the Zionist Organisation which backs him, acquire a stranglehold on the economic life of the country, and, according to a well-laid plan, thus attain the political domination they are in reality after.

"The people of Palestine appeal to the British nation to demand that this be stopped."

JUDGE WARD DECIDES CASE

An Interesting Action May Prove Valuable to the Rural Community

Judgment was given in an action on Monday, by His Honour J. A. Ward, Judge of the County Court of Northumberland and Durham which should prove of very wide interest to the rural community. The action was brought by one Roland Percival Hall as plaintiff, against Thomas McArthur as defendant, and we extract the following from the very exhaustive judgment of the learned trial judge

This action was commenced by the usual writ of summons issued by the plaintiff, and was followed in due course by statements of claim and defence, and came on for trial before me at Cobourg, without a jury, on the 20th of March, 1923, and after trial I reserved judgment to enable the parties to furnish arguments in writing, which I have received, and I must compliment counsel for both parties on the able presentation of their respective contentions.

The facts at the trial disclosed that the plaintiff was a retired farmer residing on the farm in the Township of Seymour in the County of North Umberland of which he was owner, and which he had previously worked and on his retirement had rented to one Charles McArthur who was in the time of the happening of the events complained of and at the time of the trial of this action in possession of the main portion of the farm as tenant. The plaintiff was also the owner of an extremely heavy Clydesdale stallion (over 1,900 pounds in weight) which stallion the plaintiff was exploiting for the purpose of gain by having said stallion breed mares in the vicinity. This stallion was one which was very difficult to handle and control, powerful, vicious and headstrong, to the full knowledge of the plaintiff and on occasion the plaintiff when personally attempting to handle and control the stallion when being used had practical experience of these character istics of the stallion and was unable to control him. The plaintiff in the month of April, 1921, looking ahead for a groom to handle the stallion for the season of 1921, centred his desire upon the defendant to become such groom, but before approaching the defendant, made some inquiries about the defendant and then waited on the defendant requesting him to under take the said position of groom, and after considerable hesitation on the part of the defendant to take said office the plaintiff finally induced the defendant to accept the said office of the groom to the stallion for the season of 1921, at the remuneration o' $75 per month. It is customary for the season to last about three months commencing about the first part o the month of May. In a very few days after the engagement, during which the plaintiff was watching the defendant in his handling of the stallion, the plaintiff became satisfied that the stallion was too much of a proposition for the defendant and that the defendant had not the strength or experience or ability to properly handle the stallion. The plaintiff remarked on this inability of the defendant, to the defendant and others, but did not act on the opinion by discharging the defendant for want of such competence, but held the defendant as previously his contract. The plaintiff, after this knowledge and belief in the incompetence of the defendant to properly control and handle the stallion, permitted what is known as the "route bill" for the stallion, in which many things are set out, putting the stallion stating where the stallion would be on certain days and nights to meet and serve mares; terms, ownership, etc., and one of the terms set out was a not unusual one in such cases, that when a mare is being used by the stallion by the owner of the mare, "at accidents at owner's risk", meaning that in the act of action between the stallion and a mare, if an accident occurs such accident shall be at the risk of the owner of the mare, and the owner of the stallion is not to be responsible. On May 30, 1921, McArthur, the tenant of the plaintiff being the owner of a weak and out of condition mare, approached the plaintiff with the statement that the mare was in season and he wished to breed her to the plaintiff's stallion, whereupon them, that is the plaintiff and McArthur, they brought out the mare and for reasons which were explained to me I see no doubt satisfactory to the plaintiff and McArthur, adopted a plan or device known a shackling the mare, which consisted tying a rope in short length to each of the hind legs of the mare, which has the effect, particularly when a man also has the mare by the head with a bridle or halter, of preventing the mare helpless to move away or shoot or do anything by way of resistance. After this arrangement the plaintiff issued orders to the defendant to bring out the stallion and breed the mare. The defendant, in obedience brought out the stallion from his stable to where the mare was so tied up, and was leading him to the mare.

It so happened that an accident occurred but in any event the mare shortly afterwards died and the owner brought this action claiming damages in the sum of $240.00.

I have no hesitation in determining that the plaintiff has no cause of action against the defendant, and the action should be dismissed and the plaintiff ordered to pay the defendant the costs of this action. I think the plaintiff stultified himself in his attempted explanation of the meaning attributable to the words in the "roster referred to, "All accidents at owner's risk" by departing from clear and well understood meaning, and saying that they were simply to apply, as he explained in his evidence, etc.

It must be remembered that the plaintiff had for several years left the defendant to enter his employ to manage this particular horse. The defendant had in this office, for he did not know the horse, its power, its viciousness, or anything about it. The knowledge of these vicious qualities which the horse possessed, but had to urge the defendant to accept the position.

In a very few days the plaintiff knew the defendant was not fit to handle the horse, that he was too much for the defendant; yet although remarking on it held him on. The plaintiff was a mentally strong er man, and he by his acts encouraged the defendant to stay on in charge.

The plaintiff with all his knowledge and experience had received grave positive that he, the plaintiff, could not himself handle this dangerous and vicious horse, still in three or four days after engaging the defendant was incapable, continued to employ him, etc.

I hold very strongly that in my opinion the whole unfortunate circumstances are wholly and absolutely of an accident. To me it would seem lamentable and unfair to hold the defendant culpable.

I find that he did not commit any act of negligence. He did not exercise any part of any judgment, but simply obeyed the orders of his master.

There will be judgment dismissing this action with costs, with a stay of 20 days.

Mr. F. M. Field, K.C., Cobourg, appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. Charles A. Payne, Belleville, for the defendant.

LARGE NUMBERS AT SERVICE

Evangelistic Meeting at Oak Lake—Both Interesting and Profitable

The services at Oak Lake Sunday only proves again beyond doubt that the old gospel has not lost its ring and when the spirit of God speaks the world will listen. The large tabernacle with its seating capacity of 2,000 only proved far too small to accommodate those who assembled from a radius of fifty miles or more, both Deseronto, Campbellford, Wellington, Picton, Trenton, Belleville and other places being represented to hear Evangelist Deetta as he reveals his peculiar gifts in making the fold gospel applicable to the age in which he lives.

Those who filled the great tabernacle for the morning service had no doubt as to the presence of God behind the message as the evangelist drove home many hard blows in rapid succession for fifty minutes punctuating them and especially the last heartedness and lack of sincerity in religion today on his subject entitled, "Lord Teach Us to Pray."

The afternoon service was of special interest. The tabernacle filled to seating capacity while hundreds are able to gain admittance stood without patiently and attentively held in the grip of the Spirit of God while the Evangelist for one hour and thirty minutes discussed the Christian and amusements. Immediately following the message the Evangelist made his appeal by the use of that familiar old hymn "Where He Leads Me I Will Follow," a challenging appeal, to which nearly the entire audience stood to their feet expressing their determined to follow Christ.

The Fenelon Falls band rendered excellent service in providing the musical program for the afternoon and greatly aiding to the effectiveness of the song service.

The evening service was in keeping with those preceding, it being especially given to the subject of "The Holy Ghost," and his earnest appeal mostly with the unsaved, gratifying response and this closed a great day long to be remembered. A great day on account of the presence of God.

Mr. Deetta has the able assistance of his wife with her messages in song and Miss Anderson at the piano.

Sunday next will in all probability be the concluding day of the services at which the Redeerville band will provide the musical programme.

AGED 108 YEARS DIES SUDDENLY

Chatham, Aug. 1.—Mrs. Martha Ann Black, Chatham's oldest citizen aged 108 years, died on Sunday at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Maria Jones. She was the wife of the late Wm. Black, of Raleigh township, and was a well-known colored resident of the city. For the past eight months Mrs. Black has been ailing, and owing to her advanced age death was not wholly unexpected. The late Mrs. Black was born in Paris, Kentucky.

AN EVERYDAY BLESSING

In answer to a circular letter recently sent out to thousands of people, including both glasswearers and non-wearers, asking if they believe such troubles as headache, overcoming, stomach-trouble, or general fatigue, might if correctly diagnosed, be traced to their eyes; and if they thought glasses might possibly cure or palliate these troubles, seventy per cent. of the NON-WEARERS came out roundly with a "Yes" for answer.

An indication, we'll say, of the greater enlightenment of the present generation.

PROGRESS OF ONTARIO CROPS

Fall Wheat Gives a Fully Average Yield Per Acre

Fall wheat harvesting is completed and much of it has been threshed. Some very heavy yields have been reported, but a number of small returns are also spoken of. On the whole a fully average yield per acre is assured and the general quality of the grain is said to be satisfactory.

Halton claims that where grown in that county, the O.A.C. No. 104 fall wheat has been superior this season to either Dawson's Golden Chaff or Imperial.

Barley cutting is now general. Most of the representatives speak favorably of the crop, and the heavy weather generally has been favorable for handling.

While oats have been cut in a few places, harvesting generally will not begin for a week. Considerable rust and some smut have appeared. While several reports indicate a large yield are likely, other representatives speak of some of the crop being cut for green feed owing to lodging.

Halton says: "A number of farmers are leaving the second cutting of alfalfa for seed. Those who left the first crop for seed have been particularly fortunate as the crop was quite heavy with pods." Peel also speaks of the excellent promise of alfalfa seed.

The Peel representative discovered two outfits threshing alsike during the week. Halton also tells of alsike being threshed in the field and says that yields are exceptionally high this year.

The spotted cutworm—not the army worm as recently reported—has appeared in several localities in the province, but so far has been well controlled by poisoned baits and other methods.

Haldimand is of opinion that there will be less fall wheat than usual sown this season, while South Simcoe thinks there will be more.

The Lanark representative has the following caustic words to say: "In driving through the country it is disheartening to notice the large number of inferior animals that some farmers are keeping. Unfortunately they seem quite satisfied, and are convinced that they cannot afford to buy anything better."

Haldimand says: "The run of cattle is somewhat heavier than at this time in previous years, although somewhat lower in quality. This is possibly due to the fact that dairymers are turning out their stock before the usual fall drop in price. Hogs are becoming more plentiful and local growers are paying 13 cents per pound. There is still a good demand for young pigs."

Frontenac reports a more general shipping of live stock with a strengthening of prices.

Victoria says: "Number of hogs being shipped is slightly on the increase. At Lindsay this week there were 40 hogs, whereas, during the last several weeks 15 to 20 have been about the number. The price is down to $13.75 a cwt. f.o.b.

Brant reports little pigs selling at from $14 to $16 a pair.

Bruce says: "Several teams weighing around 2,300 and 2,400 pounds have been sold during the week at from $400 to $425 each, to be used in the bush. Considerable of the grain sample have been shipped during the week but the prices have been somewhat disappointing."

Grey reports having to report that too many farmers are selling lambs undocked, not castrated, and in almost any condition.

Good lambs in Glengarry bring from $9 to $9.75 and medium from $7 to $9.

Lambton says: "The demand for farm labor is not quite so keen as the heavy work is nearly over. To expect a party of eight Swiss farm laborers who will arrive in this country about the middle of August. We are placing them with the farmers on a yearly contract. Two Hollander laborers will arrive this coming week, and we have them placed."

Montreal, August 1.—What's in a name anyhow when the lightfingered gentry want to get next to a wad holding the coin of the realm? Rube and bum have a reputation for the average in the police van.

PROPOSALS TO STOP STRIKES

British Trades Union Congress to Take Control in Disputes

London, Aug. 2.—The agenda for the forthcoming trades union congress, just published, shows how greatly plans for a general staff and general strikes have modernized since last year. The measures now suggested are first all affiliated unions should keep the congress council informed of matters in dispute, second in the event of a stoppage of work the council shall advise affiliated unions as to settlement. If the unions reject the council's advice, the matter will be reported to the next congress. If the unions accept the advice but a stoppage of work is forced by the employers the council will aid the unions according to the merits of the case and will have the power to raise funds by calls on the general trade union movement.

These measures, if adopted, will tend to prevent rather than promote strikes for the advice of the council to individual unions will generally be of a pacific nature. Calls for funds on the labor movement generally will not be lightly made, but will be restricted to occasions when striking unions are sure of general labor sympathy.

The congress will also make a levy on trade union membership in order to finance the Daily Herald, which is to become the official labor organ. The paper in unofficial hands has been a journalistic and financial failure.

Municipalities Must Look After Their Own Coal

The Commission Will Take no Action to Keep People From Freezing Next Winter—Offers to "Aid" Local Bodies

DRURY AND KING CONFER

Ottawa, August 3.—The Dominion Government does not, at the present time at least, intend to enter into the supply or transport of coal. This applies to both the American sources and the sources in Great Britain. The question of using the ships of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine has been considered but such action is considered unlikely unless the ontrolling methods of transportation should prove inadequate.

The Government has appointed a central advisory fuel committee to have general supervision over the supply of coal and other fuel throughout Canada. It consists of Hon. W. C. Kennedy, Minister of Railways; C. A. Magrath and Fred McCourt, of Montreal.

Premier Drury, of the Province of Ontario, was in Ottawa last night and has been in conference with Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Hon. Mr. Kennedy on the fuel situation. The Ontario Premier it is understood, is arranging for co-operation between his Government and the Central Advisory Fuel Committee.

The function of this central committee is regarded in Government circles as being consultative and supervisory. It is desired by the Government that the situation should be dealt with as far as possible through the ordinary channels of trade. If advice or information is desired by any of these other bodies, the federal committee will be ready to step in; but there is no wish to exercise any controlling power or to supplant the ordinary methods of supply.

Hon. Mr. Kennedy has been given the responsibility of the work of this committee, as it is felt that a large part of the problem will be closely related to railways. Mr. Magrath acts as fuel controller during the year, and is regarded as being in close touch with the problem. Mr. McCourt was formerly engaged in the coal business, consequently is believed to have a thorough knowledge of that branch of business.

Committee Meets To-day.

It is expected that there will be a meeting of the Advisory Committee here to-morrow, when Mr. M. Mahoney, Canadian agent at Washington is to be present and take part in the consultation. Mr. Mahoney has been keeping the Government in touch with conditions in the United States, and after the conference will return to the American capitals, where he will continue to keep the Government advised as to developments there. William Philips, European manager of the Canadian National Railways, is looking after arrangements in the United Kingdom, and is advising the Government daily as to developments affecting fuel supplies, price and shipping.

The Central Advisory Fuel Committee, it is understood, will carry on its operations through the Provincial Governments. It is the desire of the Government to throw the responsibility for action on the municipalities and provinces in the first place, and if these authorities meet with obstacles in the work of getting fuel the Central Committee will be ready to lend its aid. The policy of the committee has been defined as "helping those who help themselves." It will collect information as to sources of supply, shipping and other elements in the problem and it will lend it good offices wherever it is deemed desirable.

IRISH REBELS POOR FIGHTERS

General O'Duffy's Opinion of the Rebel Forces

Dublin, Aug. 2—A communication issued by Gen. O'Duffy, commanding the national troops in the southwestern district, records substantial progress for the Free State troops, who, he says, have captured Castle Cornell, Cappamore, Pallas and Knockalong, on the east, and Croom, Bruree and the line along the Maigue river, from the Shannon to Charleville, on the west.

The communication says Kilmallock is now untenable, being covered on three sides by the Free Staters, and its fall is inevitable. It is now expected that a decisive battle will be fought between Mallow and Fermoy.

Gen. O'Duffy says the irregular forces are superior in numbers, but not in fighting quality.

Excommunication Ban.

Dundalk, July 30.—Cardinal Logue, primate of Ireland, in a letter to the Dundalk diocese, complained of the state of affairs of the past two weeks, and said that it should go to Dundalk and put the whole place under excommunication, according to an announcement made by Father McKeon from the pulpit of the Dundalk cathedral today.

Michael Collins visited the military barracks here on Saturday afternoon, but stayed only a few hours. During the night the population was disturbed by heavy firing from the Free State troops quartered in the Ann street barracks. The firing was provoked by an attack of an unknown number of irregulars, who continued the firing intermittently, extending it later over an apparently wider area.

There is much military activity in the district, many arrests being made and searches perpetrated. It is believed that the irregulars' attack has failed. One of the volunteers was admitted to the hospital severely wounded.

AUTO CRASHED INTO FENCE

No Person Seriously Hurt and Car But Slightly Damaged

While returning from the dance at Massassaga Park last evening, an automobile accident occurred just at the curve in the road before entering Rossmore.

A Cherrolet touring car, containing two young men and three young women was being driven towards Belleville, and in taking the curve, the car left the road and crashed into the fence, missing a large tree by inches. A car which had been following them, stopped and offered assistance, but the occupants were not seriously injured.

One girl had received cuts about the face from flying glass and the other members of the party were bruised, shocked and badly shaken up. The car was rather badly smashed in front and the car hit by the fence, the results would certainly have been more disastrous.

BOTTOMLEY IS EXPELLED

London, Aug. 2.—Horatio Bottomley, former editor of John Bull, was to-day expelled from the House of Commons by a vote of the members. After the Speaker had read a long letter from him that he was neither guilty nor conscious of having done anything that had been the "victim of an appalling error of justice," the vote was taken.

FUSE LIBERALS AND FARMERS?

Progressives See the Necessity of Closer Working Arrangement

Toronto, Aug. 3.—Fusion has passed the second phase, says an Ottawa correspondent in The Globe this morning. The electors of Canada, who since the last session of Parliament have been discussing out in the open air ways and means of giving real stability to a Liberal Government now in power, of reaching some sort of working arrangement with the Progressives by which the party in power could be assured of a clear working majority at all times, and so freed from the shackles of compulsory compromise, are now ready to step inside, sit under the table and get down to real business. This highly important political news has come to the Capital within the last six days.

Progressive Approval.

Western Progressives has not the least unofficial idea of any understanding with the Liberals. The followers of Mr. Crerar not only can see no objection now, but the leaders, afraid of the unpent need, the absolute necessity, of an entente cordiale in Parliament. Since this has become known, they have reflected upon the responsibilities and dire difficulties of governing alone. Since this has dawned upon them, they do not want all the seats of the mighty. "They did not come here to seize the reins of power," to use Mr. Crerar's own, words, last session.

HON. T. A. CRERAR
Leader of the Progressives who is reported to have decided to throw in his lot with the Liberals

FIREMEN HAD BUSY TIME

Answered Four Calls With in Twenty-Four Hours

During the past twenty-four hours the Belleville fire brigade have had a busy time, answering no less than four alarms.

At 12.30 p.m. yesterday, the department received a call from the Cherry Press, Front street, and on responding to the call found that a motor which had been left running had become overheated and was afire. The fire was quickly extinguished.

At 2.30 p.m. the Fire Chief Thomlinson received a fire call, but on reaching the destination it was found that the alarm was a false one.

At 2.55 p.m. the fire brigade had to answer a call from the Grand Trunk Railway crossing, a barrel of oil having caught fire. The fire was soon extinguished.

Morning Blaze.

At 2.55 this morning a barrel of oil was sent in for the brigade. This time the fire was at 56 St. Charles street in a house which had been vacated yesterday by a tenant. The house was owned by Mr. John Charlesworth, and was considerably damaged, the roof and upper storey being burned. The origin of the fire is unknown as yet.

TELEPHONE TO BE SILENT IN HONOR OF INVENTOR

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, August 3.—Every telephone in Canada and the United States will be silent for one minute to-morrow while Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, is being buried. Time will be determined later. This was announced to-day by the American Telephone Company.

NOT "DRY" FARMING

Washington, Aug. 2.—In Pennsylvania, Prohibition Director John T. Davis has become "the man with the plough." He and his agents are running furrows over a farm near Logantown, and so far they have turned up 39 barrels and more than 1,000 quarts of moonshine.

Well-digging as well as agriculture has contributed to Mr. Davis' detective methods, for he has been driving out to locate the liquor. He is still using it, so far it is reported there are no hundred or more five gallon jugs of it on the farm.

The proprietor of this underground storehouse is missing, and is one man suspected of being accomplices.

PAPER MILL ESCAPES FIRE

Burning House Sets Fire to Straw Stacks and Baled Paper

Considerable excitement was occasioned in the city yesterday afternoon when a report reached there that a fire had destroyed a frame dwelling on the Canniffon road near the Lake paper mills, about 1 mile north of the city limits, and that the flame had communicated to a large pile of straw and old baled papers adjacent to the mill, which threatened the latter with destruction. Mayor Hanna communicated with Chief Brown of the fire department with the result that an engine, men and hose were despached to the scene. Willing workers also responded from Canniffon and the Belleville viciniy

POOL ROOMS BREED CRIME

"Not Desirable Anywhere" Says Chief of Toronto Police

Toronto, Aug. 3.—Any "clean-up" of pool-rooms in Toronto by the Toronto and Ontario Rifleards Association, and any co-operation of their managers with the police in keeping undesirable customers away will be heartily welcomed by Chief Dickson. But the Chief today expressed himself as doubtful about the co-operation.

"We know two or three managers who want to keep criminals away," he said. "But do you think they want that fact known?"

"Have you ever received much assistance from managers of pool-rooms?"

"Very little," replied the Chief, after a thoughtful pause.

He reiterated the sentiments expressed by him at the recent Police Chiefs' Convention in San Francisco, that pool-rooms are a breeding place for crime, and not a desirable thing in any locality.

"It is not the pool-room, it's the frequenters that I object to," he said. "Pool-rooms are a gathering place for idlers and criminals. All of those bad the criminals themselves admit it. Many of them have said afterwards that they commenced their schemes in a pool-room. They may not have been playing at all."

Fortunately the mill premises was saved, due only to the strenuous efforts of all engaged in fighting the flames. A pile of straw possibly obstaining which was destroyed, also some of the baled paper.

The fire broke out in Mr. L. Stagg's house, a frame structure, and soon fell a prey to the devouring elements. All members of the house hold were away at the time, so we were creditably informed. Virtually all the contents of the home were burned. It is thought an overheated stove caused the fire. The loss to Mr. Stagley is a serious one. The loss sustained by the proprietors of the mill will amount to several hundred dollars. The changing of the wind had some effect of keeping the fire from the mill. A stream of water was kept pouring upon the burning straw and baled paper the greater portion of last night.

NEW INDUSTRY FOR BELLEVILLE

Bassick Manufacturing Company of Bridgeport, Conn., Will Open Branch in City

Belleville's industrial expansion continues. The tenth new line of manufacturing has been added to the list, located here within the past 12½ months. The latest enterprise is the Bassick Manufacturing Company with head office at Bridgeport, Conn.

The Bassick Company is well known in manufacturing circles as the largest maker of casters and fixtures for furniture, and only in the United States, but throughout the world. They have five branches, all of large size, distributed through the United States. The parent plant and head office is at Bridgeport, Conn., another branch at Meriden, Conn., a third at Newark, N. J., a fourth at Cleveland, Ohio, and the fifth at Chicago, Ill.

Mr. E. W. Bassick, President of the company, arrived in the city on Tuesday morning. Mr. Foster, General Manager of the Chicago plant, arrived here later, and they at once opened negotiations for the acquirement by purchase of The H. A. Wood Manufacturing Company's building on Pinnacle street. The negotiations have been successful and the property will be transferred to the new owners as soon as the necessary legal formalities have been complied with.

The Bassick Mfg. Co. of Chicago, has been the promoter of a number of the well known Alemite Products now familiar to all users of motor cars. They established a small branch here at Belleville a little over a year ago to exploit the possibilities of manufacturing in Canada. The business has been a money-making one and most successful, right from the start, and this later enlargement has been the fruit of that favorable experience.

The company expects to establish similar branches in every important town and city in Canada and the Belleville factory will not only be headquarters for Canadian manufacturing, but will probably be the manufacturing centre for exports to all parts of the British Empire.

G. T. R. Picnic At Massassaga

Large Attendance From City and Vicinity—Fine Programme of Sports and Land and Water in Carried Out

LOCAL SHOP TEAM WIN BALL GAME

An event that is looked forward to yearly by many citizens is the G.T.R. picnic, held under the auspices of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. No. 129 of this division. It was held at Massassaga Park on Wednesday and was largely attended. The steamer Brockville and a commodious steam launch from Picton, commenced at 9 o'clock in the morning to make hourly trips to the park and by two o'clock in the afternoon hundreds were under the grounds. Many also from the city and vicinity motored to the park whilst mill boats and motor boats conveyed a number to the plabs.

It was an ideal day for such an event, and being a half holiday many availed themselves of the opportunity for an outing. After dinner an extensive and varied programme of sports was carried out. The committees in charge had their hands full but their whole effair was handled by the capable committee in a manner that was praiseworthy. In addition to many events that took place on the park aquatic events were not overlooked and these were in charge of the veteran "Cap" Rogers who is the right man in the right place.

The park it might be stated has this season been greatly improved by Mr. S. Anderson, proprietor. A fine up-to-date dancing pavilion has been erected and during the day and evening was liberally patronized, as were the booths.

The list of events and the winners of same were as follows:

Girls' race, up to 5 years—1, Teddy Hall; 2, Jack McMaster; 3, Bernard Dunn.

Little girls up to 7 years—1, Minnie Bedford; 2, Vinnie Gray; 3, Josephine Dodd.

Girls' race, 8 years and under—1, Evelyn Bhiter; 2, Reine Taubenon; 3, Mollie Longwell; 4, Mary Gray.

Boys' race, 8 years and under—1, Gordon Brown; 3, Bartie Russell; 3, Clare Carter.

Single Mens's race, (open)—1, H. A. Folwell; 2, Don Ketchenon; 3, W. Miles; 4, John Kerr.

Boys' race, 9 years and under—1, Evrs Branton; 2, Lillis Edwards; 3, Violet Rigby; 4, Lanetta Curry.

Boys' Race, 11 years and under—1, Don. Ketchenon; 2, Clarence Rigby; 3, John Kerr; 4, Jack Boyle.

"WALK TO THE LEFT" MUDDLES LONDONERS

LONDONERS IN MUDDLE

London, Aug. 3.—Considerable confusion has followed the decision of London boroughs as a result of the new rule of the pavement requiring pedestrians to keep to the left. The London Traffic House of Lords appealed to the Government to do something to remedy the existing state of affairs in London buses and other places, but the Government spokesman expressed his inability to take any action until the chief constable had conferred.

The London County Council supports the rule of having pedestrians walk on the left "as a safety measure, but the City of London corporation through its motor transport committee and County Council, is quite independent in the matter, and refuses to commission the pavement authorities, saying that the citizen maintain the ancient rule of walking on the right.

The ministry of transport has been appealed to but is doubtful if it possesses the power to interfere without legislation. Londoners are much amused by what they will or can, bumping one another and uttering maledictions on unknown individuals, many shoulders being reserved for the funny bodies who ever bothered over the matter.

FINDING GOLF BALLS IS STEALING

The Golfing County Magistrate Gives Warning to Pests of Golf Courses

Toronto, Aug. 3.—"Anybody that takes anything they find, if that thing does not belong to them, is stealing," said Magistrate Brunton in the county police court yesterday morning, when he fined George Vaughn a dollar and costs for trespass, and for collecting a bag of lost golf balls on the municipal golf course.

Vaughn acknowledged finding the balls, and said he thought he was entitled to keep them.

"Do you think," asked the bench, "that you are entitled to keep a five-dollar bill if you pick it up on the street?"

Vaughn said he thought he was.

"That is where you make a mistake," replied his worship. "Lost property, be it dollar bills or golf balls, should be handed over to those in authority."

Constable Meyers, who laid the charge against Vaughn, explained that collecting and selling lost golf balls was becoming quite a business around the different courses in the city. The men don't wear a pack, he said, and added yet another trouble to the harassed police.

"Well, it's going to stop," concluded the bench. "I shall be glad to have all such cases brought before me here."

ROBINS RESCUE CHUM FROM PUSSY

Young Robin Rescued From the Jaws of a Belleville Cat This Morning—Turbulent Scene on the Highway

This morning, at an early hour, a passer-by witnessed the defeat of a cat by a number of robins. Puss had succeeded in capturing a young robin when its "sisters and its cousins and its aunts" all came clamoring around and created so much turbulent outcry that puss dropped the captured bird and it escaped.

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

There's Luck in Laisure.

The good and true can say with confidence, "Time is on our side." He who is fighting for freedom, he who is battling for right and justice, he who is warring for the Lord—which is the same thing—can comfort his soul with the assurance, "Time is on our side." He may be beaten often and very much; indeed, he may be taken captive and immured in a dungeon, kept for years; he may be an exile and an outcast, but Time, Old Time, Good Old Time, is on his side. The King David had his faults, but he was a good and shrewd observer. On one occasion he remarked:

"I have seen the wicked in great power and spreading himself like a green bay tree.

"Yet he passed away, and, lo, he was not; yea, I sought him, but he could not be found."

He had probably shipped to the Benighted States, that's where they generally go. I am quite sure that there are more wicked Canadians in Michigan, Buffalo, Chicago and Scotia than in that historic retreat presided over by a gent who makes a mark in the mud like a three-year-old steer.

If you would ask me what the Bible teaches, I would reply that it teaches the stubborn fact that ever and always and without fail Time is on the side of the Right. Had He cared to do so, the Blessed Nazarene could have taunted his tormentors on Calvary by telling them, "Time is on My side," and I am convinced, though it is not so recorded, that he cheered the little group of mourners with the assurance, "Time is on our side."

I have noticed that the Lord is never in a hurry and the Devil always is. The Devil doesn't know where to stop till he falls into the pit. The Lord moves slowly, majestically, because He dwelleth in the midst, in the heart of Time. There is an olden saying that the good die young. The ancients had few books; and they were consequently observers. The evil man is granted plenty of time. There's lots of it. Time is exhaustless. If an old man drops dead suddenly he can't upset. He hath no kick coming. He was given plenty of Time, and what did he do with it? Many a one will sit down on the side of the road this fall and ask him or herself the question, "Where have my summer wages gone?" And next spring they will ask themselves, "Where did my winter wages go to?"

This is only a roundabout and clumsy method of finding out what they did with their Time. An acquaintance of mine was taken off in his prime the other day. The gong saved him. Old Nick had him on the ropes and would have got him sure only the Angel of Death called "Time" and the bout was over. The gong saves us every day. Some of us light two, ten, twenty-others fight a hundred rounds, and the gong saves us every time. The Devil would be in full and undenied possession of this world to-day only for old Time. Time is on our side.

We are dealing with two things constantly, Time and Electricity, and we don't know what either of them is. We are spilling electricity and wasting Time every day, and again I am moved to assert that we are a wasteful and an extravagant people. One would think that there was no such thing as Time as we the hurry folks are in. They lack poise and dignity. To run is hard enough, but they scramble, they jostle, they pull and haul. They think the Lord doesn't move fast enough, and they have converted the Legislature into an auxiliary power plant to help Him along. It would be very absurd if it were not so appalling. A person by the name of Ranev is chief engineer, and it would be amusing were it not so terror-inspiring. There be few folks in this country who are beginning to think that the Legislative buildings were not erected for the purpose and that it does Jeans more harm than good.

When there is so much Time—so much Time that can be had for the taking, I am given to wonder that the people don't take more Time. And Time is money. He who takes plenty of Time is rich.

QUEBEC LIQUOR LAW

Taschereau Says Measure is Still in the Experimental Stage

Quebec, Aug. 2.—speaking at a dinner of the provincial branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada, at Montmorency Falls, Premier Taschereau declared that the Quebec Liquor Law was still in the experimental stage. It had netted the province, during its first year, $4,000,000. Within this period $15,000,000 worth of alcohol was sold to a population of 2,500,000. This averaged $6 per head per annum, which was 90 cents per month, or 1¾ cents per day, but Quebecers, said Mr. Taschereau, were not the only customers of the Liquor Commission. It was the visiting American who brought down the average of alcohol in Quebec for its citizens to a cent a day per head. People were seldom embarrassed with their money, the Premier continued. The $4,000,000 revenue from alcohol would tend to reduce the floating debt of the province. Quebec, he affirmed, was the least taxed province in the Dominion. He concluded by saying that he hoped the good roads planned for the future would attract many visitors from across the line.

MOTHER AND BOY MUST MAKE ROUND TRIP ON ATLANTIC

Arrived at Ellis Island Too Early For Admission in 1923 Quota

Washington, August 2.—Because Mrs. Hirtis Carton, a young Belgian woman, wife of a Chicagoan, who has declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States, and her eight-year-old boy, arrived in New York three and one-half hours ahead of schedule on June 30, a stern government is forcing the mother and boy to make a round trip to Europe before they may gain permanent admission to this country. They will embark from Ellis Island on the Acquitania tomorrow.

Mrs. Carlton, who is 25 years old and the wife of Remi Carton, of 3001 Washington Boulevard, Chicago, had been in this country two years with her husband when she decided six months ago to return to Belgium for their boy.

The first inkling of a barrier came early in June when she purchased transportation on the other side to come back to the United States. She was informed that the Belgian quota was exhausted for the fiscal year ending June 30 and was advised to postpone her trip until the next voyage of the ship, which was expected to reach New York after July 1, when the new quota would begin for the fiscal year 1923.

Mrs. Carton agreed, although protesting that she had been given to understand when leaving America that she could return within six months. She was informed that she would encounter no trouble if she returned alone, but that her boy would be excluded as "excess quota" and that she also would be excluded under section number 18 of the immigration law, as accompanying a minor. She refused to come without.

The Acquitania made a quick crossing on the trip that brought Mrs. Carton and her son over, and the young woman found herself at Ellis Island just within the fiscal year of 1922. Denied of being permitted to join her husband, she was taken before three immigration inspectors at the island. Two of them held that she and the boy maintained they should be allowed to enter as though of the new quota.

An appeal from the decision of the majority inspectors was taken to the board of review at Washington. The board upheld the Ellis Island decision. All of this took several weeks. Mrs. Carton and her son were meanwhile held at Ellis Island. The remaining board here suggested that Mrs. Carton return to Europe on the Acquitania which, under the law, must take her and the boy back, remain on the ship, return here and make another application for admission under the new quota.

WAS KIDNAPPED TWO YEARS AGO

Held Prisoner First on Farm Then in Apartment, She Asserts After Escape

New York, Aug. 2.—Accused of kidnapping a 13-year-old girl two years ago, Frank Di Marinas, 56 years old, was held in $7,000 bail by Magistrate James Silberman in Harlem Court yesterday. He faces an additional charge of carrying a revolver. A hearing will be held on Thursday.

Di Marinas was arrested at 234 East 104th Street, Saturday night by Detective John J. Dunleavy and William Caputo, Kate Vignali,' the girl, lived in the same tenement house with her parents. She disappeared on June 21, 1920. She returned a few days ago and told of having been kidnapped by a man on her way to school.

She said he bought her clothes, made her put her hair up instead of wearing it in a braid, and took her to a farm near New Brunswick, N. J.

After remaining at the farm several months, the girl told the police, her captor became jealous of other men there and took her to an apartment in the basement of a New Brunswick house where he kept her a virtual prisoner until she found a few days ago chance to escape. She is now under the care of the Children's Society.

RICH CREAM THAT WILL KEEP SWEET ALL SUMMER

Summer Resorts!

Is your milk and cream supply uncertain at your summer home? Perhaps you are not sure of its purity? Then for convenience and safety's sake, take a supply of Keepsweet Cream with you. We can also supply you with Keepsweet Milk, the sister-product of Keepsweet Cream. It is also absolutely pure, rich and sweet, and is a splendid food for babies and children.

Think of it! Your summer's supply of milk and cream in a small packing case!

Managers of summer hotels! Now, at last, you can serve pure, rich, natural cream! If you are anxious to please your guests, and wish to cut complaints down to a minimum, serve both Keepsweet Cream and Keepsweet Milk on your tables. Your guests will be delighted. Place your order at once. The better retail and wholesale grocers handle all Keepsweet products.

Picnickers: Rich, natural cream for your berries, for your pie and for your coffee! It will not be a real picnic now, without Keepsweet.

YOU'LL be simply amazed when you try Keepsweet. It's cream! Rich, pure, sweet, natural cow's cream! Not milk, mind you, but the finest cow's cream and it's put up in sanitary cans. In fact, it is the first and only product in a sanitary can that the Dominion Government permits to be labelled "Cream." It is the sensation of the year.

It is not Condensed
It is not Evaporated
It is not Medicated

Keepsweet is whole, natural, liquid cream, just as it comes from the cow, only it's purified to the last degree. The remarkable thing about it is that it will keep sweet all summer long. Without ice, without special care, it will keep sweet and pure and wholesome in its sanitary can for an indefinite period,

No preservatives of any kind are put into Keepsweet Cream. Absolutely nothing is put into it and absolutely nothing is taken from it.

Pour from the Can and Use

You simply punch two holes in the top of the can and empty the cream into a cream jug. Then use it as you would raw cream—on porridge or cereals, in coffee, cocoa or tea, on puddings or fruit—in fact, any place where you would use ordinary raw cream. Don't add water. It's all ready to use.

Of course, once you've opened the can, Keepsweet requires the same care as ordinary cream.

The Flavor is Delicious

You will be captivated by the delightfully rich flavor of Keepsweet Cream. It has the tang of Devon! It contains a larger percentage of butterfat than the average table cream and it is safer to use, because it contains no germs. They were all killed when the cream was sterilized.

Inexpensive, Too

Compare the price of Keepsweet with ordinary cream and in most localities you will find the prices almost identical.

But the great thing about this really marvelous product is that it will Keep Sweet for months on end. Violent thunderstorms can't affect it—nor can terrific summer heat.

A Godsend in an Emergency

There comes a time almost every day in every home when all the cream is used up, when the ice man fails to call, when the ice melts away and the cream sours—when a jug of cream is badly needed.

That's the time when Keepsweet comes into its own! Rich, pure, delicious in flavor, it is all ready for the table.

Thrifty, efficient housewives from now on will keep half a dozen cans of Keepsweet always handy. Many have already adopted Keepsweet Cream for permanent table use. They enjoy its delightful flavor and richness, and they like to have pure, sweet cream always handy.

How it is Done

At our creameries away out in the quiet country we receive the milk from rigidly inspected dairies. We at once separate the cream from the milk. We first pasteurize the cream, then homogenize it and after canning, sterilize it, container and all. It is thus made literally pure, as all disease germs are killed.

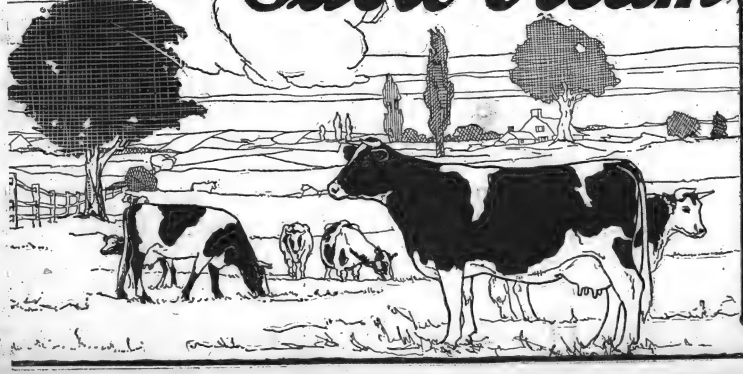

Pasteurizing temporarily prevents fermentation and souring, homogenizing makes the cream more readily digestible, and the final sterilization destroys all germ life. Thus the cream will keep all summer long in all its original freshness and rich flavor.

Order from your grocer. He will supply you. Don't be afraid to order half a dozen tins, because after you've had one sip you'll be glad you ordered a supply.

Grocers—The Dominion Government has ruled that as Keepsweet Cream is "true to its name" and in nowise an evaporated product, being just pure, natural cream, it is exempt from the Sales Tax. Your wholesaler will supply you.

THE PASSING OF A WIZARD

One of the greatest men of all time passed out of this world on Tuesday night in the person of Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone. There has been no more wonderful instrument produced in the last two thousand years than the simple and universally-used contrivance which enables human beings, separated by miles, to speak to one another as if they were standing face to face. We have become so used to this common means of communication that the wonder of it has ceased to exist—as it there were nothing extraordinary about it. Even that supreme miracle, the radiophone, is rapidly becoming a commonplace and is being accepted as merely an instrument, of convenience.

Mankind in these days is really "moving about in worlds not realized." We are positively surrounded by marvels such as even the author of the Arabian Nights would have balked at. Whether we are a superior type as compared with those who have gone before us, and who never thought of inventing all these mechanical contrivances, it is difficult to decide. The truth is, perhaps, that we are not superior, but we have inherited an accumulation of valuable knowledge and experience, and all these marvels have evolved naturally out of the toil and travail of our ancestors. Galileo, Newton, Darwin, were men of mighty intellect, and the things to which the people of their day were blind. It is to such great men, who in the dark ages looked far into distant time and initiated the pursuit of science, that we owe the marvels that surround us to-day. Those men had no facilities for investigation such as we have to-day, and made not-the possibly the inconveniences with which they had to contend in their daily lives and the suffering that these entailed, were the urge toward improvement. But the real incentive was wonder—a state of mind and soul that the average man to-day does his best to avoid.

How many people in these days will give more than a passing glance at a sunset, or stand for one moment beneath the glowing stars at night and ponder at the infinite with which his little life is surrounded? We live purposely in the midst of marvels and mysteries, and not the least of these is this small piece of mechanism which carries our voice over the void and brings an answer in return from absent friends.

It is to the great but lovable-minded man who has just passed "beyond the veil" (to Alexander Graham Bell, the boy from Scotland, that we owe this modern marvel, and we would do well to hang on our telephones a wreath of flowers to his memory. Let his name and fame be known to the children of our day, so that in the years to come they will be able to say we lived in the world at the same time as the inventor of the telephone", so shall they have respect and reverence for the past and for the noble men to whom the world owes so much.

FLYING OVER THE POLE

Amundsen has changed his mind about flying over the North Pole, "owing to adverse weather conditions." That is exactly the reason why we ourselves have not made a personal trip to the Arctic. Travellers remember up there has been very adverse for some years—not that atmosphere conditions have been changeable, on the contrary, they have been too settled.

Indeed, Polar weather never did appeal to us because of this rigidity—not to speak of the frigidity—of weather conditions. Otherwise, the Pole would be a very desirable place to visit. Since childhood we have been deeply concerned about the axis upon which we were informed that the globe revolved—we do not refer to the newspaper of that month, for we doubt if it has any axis at all, it has been wobbling so much of late years.

But to return to the Pole, or rather to the consideration of that region, there is no doubt that it is impossible as a summer resort; and for flying it is a little risky. If the actual pole is of the nature that appeared to our schoolboy imagination, Mr. Amundsen was well advised in abandoning his projected attempt to fly over it. The possibilities are that he might not fly high enough and consequently collide with the earth's shafting—so to speak. This idea that there are projecting poles at the north and south centres of the earth still continues, and doubtless it has been in the clear up that question that so many grown-up school boys have made repeated attempts to discover the world axis.

Personally, we are sorry that Mr. Amundsen has not seen fit to carry out his flight over the pole, as it would have gone a long way to dispel this illusion of a projecting axis. As it is we shall still hold to our boyish beliefs and will be as incredulous of the possibility of a flight over the Pole as we always have been of the story about the cow jumping over the moon.

Alderman Greenleaf has a new idea for the baths on Island Park. It may be an excellent idea, but the drawback in that is as far as it is likely to go. When are we to see an actual start on these Corby Baths?

We are informed that the City Council intends proceeding with the laying of the pavement on Station street at once. This is very good news for Belleville.

Mr. Hoover is a very taciturn sort of chap, but we will forgive him for not saying much if he will only let us have about nine tons of coal before say November.

HERE AND THERE

IN PRAISE OF DREAMERS.

A practical and matter-of-fact age is not likely to give them due appreciation, and yet what would any age be without them? Even the great inventions of a day like this are the products, not of the "practical" people, but of the dreamers. Would we have any literature at all worthy of the name if it were not for the people who think long thoughts, who see vision and dream dreams? Aside not the great benefactors of our race the people who have commerce in thoughts and ideas and ideals rather than in mere things? Has not the man who has created a great poem done more for human progress and happiness than the man who has built a great city or founded an empire? These creations of the mind—we speak slightingly of them sometimes—but are they not after all the things that endure, the things that are vital and creative and all-persuading? In all ages men have slighted and despised and killed the dreamers, but at a later day have worshipped at their shrine and rejoiced in the vision which they chertished. Can we say too much in praise of the people who insist that there is more in life than appears upon the surface and that the things that can be seen and handled are not the great things; who will persist in shutting their eyes and looking far away to distant days and deep into the heart of things! What each age does with the dreamers will decide its destiny—Christian Guardian.

IMPRESSIONS OF THE ENGLISH RACE.

We are so well accustomed to attacks, often very perfidious and silly, made against England by Englishmen, that it is quite refreshing to read the impressions of a Spanish philosopher, trained in America, who has a much higher opinion of us than we are apt to have of ourselves. Mr. Santayana is prompt to protest that nothing would make him wish to become an Englishman. His birthright was settled at his birth, and we feel that there is that kind of patriotism about him which if he had been born a Mongolian would not allow him to waver in his loyalty to Mongolia.

ENGLISH CHARACTER THE BEST.

"But he has been a sort of Ulysses, and the result of his wanderings is to make him prefer the Englishman to any other human variety. This is decidedly gratifying, and it will amuse the dentistry reader to claim Mr. Santayana's pages in search of his impressions of our race. They are not given in dogmatic form, but they are found to be consistent, and, as I say, they are gratifying in the mouth of so shrewd and so disinterested an observer.

"After traversing many lands he concludes that the English character is the best; it is as strong as the American, and softer, and better observed. He finds the neutral parallel to that old Greek temperament, which he adores, in the English capacity for determination. It seems to rest his spirit to see that we are self-suffering. Not that he is blind to our national defects, for he thinks that an enquisite or nible Englishman, although such exist, is a bore nature"—Edmund Gosse in The Sunday Times.

POETRY AND HARD FACTS.

"The Prime Minister has changed, like Mr. Silas Wegg, into poetry," says the Star. "He has written a poem in Welsh for an eisteddfod. The chorus:

"Children of Cambria, light is near at hand,
More brecks at last, and dawn is o'er the land, sounds very like saying a thing three times over and so making it true. The ballad of Dr. Watts is the same, and that and the chorus together suggest the thought that Ireland is another. There, certainly, light is near at hand, if the Irish people will see it.

"If Ireland would recognise that the bills are now coming home to herself, that the damage and destruction in Dublin and the cost of the campaign in the remoter parts of Ireland will all have to be borne by Ireland, it might help her to realise that the sooner she is, like the Prime Minister's native land, One, the better it will be for everybody, and particularly for herself."

NINETY YEARS AGO.

"On Monday the bellman of the village of Hampstead announced that the Rev. Mr. Irving would preach on Hampstead Heath at half-past six o'clock. The rev. gentleman arrived, and before seven o'clock there were from 700 to 800 persons assembled together, with many carriages filled with ladies."

HILL HUNGER.

I want to stride the hills! My feet cry out
For hills! Oh, I am sick to death of streets:
The nausea of pavements and people always about!
The savagery of mortar and steel that beats
Me under, bedges me in; the iron shove
Of traffic!—I want to stride the hills, I want
Hide toned frantic silver as a quiver
Of scarlet; hills that hunger and grow gaunt!
I am tired of steps and eaves, and a thousand flights
Of stairs resounding, shuffling, quarrelling
With shoes. I want a hill on windy nights,
When April pauses with me, clambering
Over the purple side to the top, amid
We pull ourselves up by a star—the hill! the hill!

PRESS OPINIONS

SHOWING DISRESPECT FOR THE JAILS

(Toronto Telegram)

Campaign of education evidently is needed in Ontario to teach people to respect the county jails. A lady serving six months who quietly walked out of Sudbury jail showed serious contempt for that grand old institution.

Jails are useless unless people think them terrible. Sudbury jail has made a profit of $350,000 last year, and is devoting it to the construction of a new jail and the advancement of natural science.

Canadians have shown little interest even in the way of spending film theatres under public ownership. Although most of our movie productions come from the United States, some of the scenes have had difficulty keeping down plays which foster American national sentiment, no serious effort has been made by public bodies to have genuine Canadian plays produced for the screen.

FAME'S FIERCE FLAME

By BYRON STAUFFER.

Strictly between ourselves, I stand on the very verge of fame as an undiscovered genius. For I have made a find which makes the discovery of Pompeii and Karnak shrivel into comparative insignificance.

Of course I must share the honors consequent to the greatest of all archeological achievements with my learned friend and fellow-camper, Professor Salem Scoops Casaubon. But even that is a great deal to share to shed its imperishable lustre upon both our heads, though, speaking strictly, I feel that, by right, my colleague has the advantage, his erudition being entirely held and there is action as a perfect reflector for fame's fierce flame.

But it will appear be told to the scientific that it was I who had Salem Scoops Casaubon to the spot. So my laurels are safe as a church.

Well, the long and short of it is that I informed Casaubon of what has turned out to be the crumbling ruins of an ancient city within my shorts of Bear lake, thereby solving what has been the age-long puzzle of Indian history. It was I who had tion of Aztlan, the northern country from which those highly cultured aborigines who erected forties on the arrival in Mexico had come. Our discovery settles the matter beyond dispute; the ruins were originally Canadians, gradually trekked southward and finally founded the luxurious empire on the tableland of the country of Huerta and Villa.

The ruins lie on a picturesque arm of land stretching out from the base of the towering cliff to the east of Bear lake, which, as everybody must now know, is a suburb of Hollow lake. It must always have been just such a spot as the esthetic Aztecs would have selected for their temples. A group of dismantled buildings ranges about the former court. "Here was their temple," said Professor Casaubon confidently, "the sacrificial altar on which were offered the Aztecs regarded the lakes as semidivine and, whenever they could not get the water during their devotions."

A pile of bleached bones lay behind what had evidently been the principal building. On seeing these, the professor shook with agitation. "They are undoubtedly parts of skeletons of victims of their hideous human sacrifices, for it is well known that the Aztecs put their allies, the Toltecs, maintained the practice of human offerings to their gods on a scale never elsewhere equalled."

On the right of the court was a roofless enclosure which was doubtless the community hall of the community. Indeed the professor was sure that the room was used for all public purposes, for the stone with crosses been afforded ample accommodation for fully a hundred people were still in wonderful preservation, about the room, at the far corner of which was a wide opening into what had evidently been the tribal kitchen. "Through this aperture, the cooks' helpers passed their viands to the waiters of the day," explained Dr. Casaubon. "The Aztecs were evidently socialists, and the duties of the unskilled were assigned by lot. If we look about us, we will likely find the instrument wherewith they cast lots to determine who should wash the dishes, for instance. And still further ahead if the professor didn't pick up a dice that very instant.

Then we came on a series of rows of

The similarities of our day grow ally speaking, are both worthy of the admiration of the youth of Canada. Too many of the plays are unwholesome as well as vapid. This country has picturesque and romantic settings and history that would lend themselves to movie productions.

PESSIMISM WITH A PURPOSE

(New York Times)

Mr. Lloyd George has been making some more alarmist speeches. He sees the possibility of another war more terrible than the last. Fearful machines and devices for killing men and women wholesale are being forgotten. National ambassities are being artfully sublitizered, and the general outlook is dark enough, to the Prime Minister's present way of looking at it, to replace the heart of even the Gloomy Dean.

English opinion, however, bears up well under this new attempt to make us lose the possibility of another war. The fresh example of Mr. Lloyd George's rhetorical methods. When about to assert himself to bring in an era of settled peace he begins by picturing armies ready to fly at each other, and the general, all civilization—go to the verge of the pit. He did this before Genoa. He did it before the Hague conference. Now he is doing it before sitting down with M. Poincare in Downing Street. It is pessimism. It is pessimism with a purpose. Let Mr. Lloyd George address that, and he will instantly become the rosiest optimist going.

CLOSING ST. PAUL'S?

"We have received from Sir Thomas Jackson a highly important communication the impending danger of St. Paul's Cathedral," says the Times. "As the master-builder of Winchester Cathedral, Bath Abbey, Christchurch Priory, and many other ancient churches and buildings, he speaks with authority. A man of his position and experience would not feel impelled to urge—as he does in the temperate language of the Cathedral unless he were convinced that the step is urgently required.

"The reasons which he gives for his proposal are clear and cogent. While the work is being done bit by bit, he says, the mischief is steadily going on. Every piece of stone, however small, which flakes off the shattered face facing of the piers supporting the dome, shows movement and subsidence above, and threatens the dislocation and ruin of the structure. If the building were entirely given over to the workmen, not only would the loss caused by their enforced idleness during the services be avoided, but the Cathedral architect would be able to work on a larger scale, and, by making secure more than one point at a time, to bring the laborious work of repair and preservation to a more speedy conclusion, at a smaller cost."

CHILDREN ENJOY PICNIC

One of the most happy picnics at the Sand Banks on Wednesday was the seventh annual Picnic of the Children's Shelter. Aznie Miss Corby generously donated $25.00 towards the outing and several lovers of children provided the eats, ice cream, etc. The party arrived home at 8 p.m. tired but happy after a day full of enjoyment. Two of the boys are now in residence at the Marchmont Home was invited to join the party and they had a glorious time.

A BYGONE POSE

"What's your line of a statesman?" "I haven't one now," said Mr. Cobbles. "A chap wants a golf suit to just as apt to be a statesman as not, times have changed so. When I was a young man a feller could put on a long-tailed coat or a silk hat, thrust one hand into his bosom an' be elected to almost any job he set his heart on."

TROUBLE AT THE OUTDOT

Two old settlers sat smoking in a cabin far away in the backwoods. No fashion pressure ever graced that settlement and, domestic arrangements were primitive and rude.

The conversation drifted from politics to cooking and one of the confirmed bachelors said: "I got one o' them there cookery books once, but I never could do nothin' with it."

"To much fancy work about it?" asked the other.

"You've 'it it. Every one o' them recipes begun in the same way: Take a clean dish—and that settled me at once."

ABSENT-MINDED HUBBY

A good dinner, a newspaper, and a pipe of tobacco. He was about to strike a match to light the latter when his attention was attracted.

"Here you are, dear. See how economical I have been. I've brought some wax tapers to save you buying so many matches."

"Now, that is thoughtful of you," he replied, taking hold of the taper. At the same time he absent-mindedly proceeded to light the taper by striking one of the precious matches.

LUCKY THEY WERE HIP BOOTS

A well-known writer, says Everybody's, was trying to illustrate the conversation of the Maine backwoodsman. Two of them, he said, were walking through the woods one day when they came upon the body of a man lying on the bank of a stream. They looked at it carefully and decided that it was the body of their friend, Ed. Simpson. They went to his house and knocked at the door. Simpson himself opened it.

"Hello, Ed," said one. "Say, we come on the dead body of a man over there we kind of thought was you."

"That so?" said Ed. "What'd he look like?"

"Well, he was about your build—"

"Have on a grey flannel shirt?"

"Yep."

"Boots?"

"Yep."

"Was they knee boots or hip boots?"

"Let's see. Which was they, Charley, knee boots or hip boots? Oh, yes! They was hip boots."

"Nope," said Ed. "wasn't me."

Woman's Sphere

THE CHOICE

When skies are blue and days are bright,
A kitchen garden's my delight,
Set round with rows of decent bee
And showy girls of hollyhocks,

Before the bark his Lords bath done
And see the Comrades's mouth warm gone;
Before the thrush good-night hath sung
And the young Summer's put to bed

The currant hember spicy smell,
Homely and honest, like me well.
The while on strawberries I feast,
And raspberries the sun hath kissed,

Beans all a-blowing by a row
Of vines that greet with homey go,
With mignonette and heaths to yield
The plundering bee his honey-field,

Sweet herbs in plenty, blue borage,
And the delicious mint and sage,
Rosemary, marjoram, and rue,
And fennel to scent the winter through.

Here are small apples growing round,
And apricots all golden-gowned,
And plums that joyously will flush
And show their bush a Burning Bush.

Cherries in nets against the wall,
Where Master Thrush his madrigal flings, and where a chart to be
Who gridges cherries for a fee.

Lavender, sweet-brier, orris. Here
Shall Beauty make her pomander,
Her sweet balls for to lay in clothes
That wrap her as the leaves the rose.
Take roses red and lilies white,
A kitchen garden's my delight;
Its gillyflowers and phlox and clovea,
And its tall cote of tried downa.

PLAPPER STYLES WILL CHANGE

A Grecian tunic with classically bound hair, long draping and flowing robes and sandal-like footwear, such will be the stylish girl, who will replace the present "flapper" in the opinion of some of the delegates who are attending the three-day convention of the National Dressers' Association, which opened yesterday. The hair from saturnity would have to fit the flowing sleeves of the straight-line frocks, declared one of the delegates, and in accordance with it that stick, bobbed hair eventually will have to go.

The return of the wig, though not so conspicuous as it was centuries ago, is seen by some hair dressers as probable when the "curly bob" finds her days counted.

LADY ASTOR'S EPIGRAMS

Lady Astor's recent tour in the United States, which was a brilliant success, was practically unreported in the English newspapers. The current number of the National Review, in an attempt to tide over this error, prints two of her speeches verbatim.

Lady Astor is one of the smartest epigram-makers of today; and below are a few taken from these speeches.

Never trust the people of a country by the people who wrote diaries during the war.

We have tried materialism, and it has very nearly wrecked civilisation.

The only thing worth loving is unselfishness. The only thing which mars life is selfishness.

Women are young at politics, but they are old at wirepulling.

Those who bark the loudest in America are those who least understand the best and most real people in America, and very often are not Americans at all.

All nations can have great futures, but all greatness can only be found on what is truly great.

Education is a dangerous thing unless it is strsed on the right lines.

The more I see of life, the more I see that the only way is the narrow way and the broad view.

We know that neither the law nor the State can make a man.

It seems that all countries must go through periods of political corruption.

Between spirituality, who see what the dead think, and the psychic analysis who see what we don't think one has to be up and doing.

Freedom never let loose a better angel than when she let loose the angel of hope.

A mind that hates is a mind which is sick, and a mind which boasts of itself is as a frog which puffeth itself up.

Just now the human race needs human things and not bom politicians.—Montreal Herald.

The Daily Recipe

A LUNCHEON DISH.

Eggs combined with a vegetable often makes a very good and much more satisfying dish than eggs or vegetables alone.

The following recipe calls for tomatoes, but egg plant or peppers are good served in the same way.

Allow one tomato and one egg to a person. This recipe is sufficient for six servings:

6 tomatoes
6 eggs
½ cup milk
3 tablespoons butter
½ teaspoon pepper.
6 pieces bacon.

Wash, and cut tomatoes in halves. Roll each half in salted flour, mixed with a teaspoon of sugar. Fry the bacon until crisp. Remove pieces and keep hot.

In the bacon fat remaining in pan cook the tomatoes until soft and nicely browned.

Mix the eggs, milk and seasonings. Melt the butter in a saucer pan and in it scramble the eggs. Remove from the fire when still quite soft as they will cook sufficiently hard after being placed on tomatoes.

On a platter place the pieces of tomato, pour over the scrambled eggs and garnish with the crisp pieces of bacon. Serve at once.

To remove hair, make a stiff paste with a little powdered delatone and water. Spread this on the hairy surface and in about two minutes rub off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. RAN BACKWARDS OVER 20 FOOT EMBANKMENT

Stellarton, N.S., Aug. 1.—Mrs. Clarence Grant, aged 28, of Stellarton, was killed and four children were injured here last night when the car in which they were driving stalled on the track and, with the brakes refusing, ran backwards over a 20-foot embankment to the edge of the East River. Donald McMillan, brother of Mrs. Grant, had several ribs fractured and a leg injured, and Mrs. McMillan, his wife, sustained a bad cut on the head, dislocation of a hand, and bruises. Angus McNeil, father of Mrs. Grant, received a scalp wound. The four-year-old child of Trueman and Mrs. McNeil escaped without injury, but the car, in which the mother threw the child from the car before

FIGHTING AND BIBLE READING

New York, Aug. 2.—War and politics around Peking do not interfere with the work of the Bible societies.

The American Bible Society has announced that it recently shipped 5,000 Bibles to Peking and that 187,000 bibles to the sub-agency in Peking. This was the largest single shipment ever sent out in the history of the Society's work in China.

A year ago a record-breaking consignment of 334 packages was sent by mail, through the efficient Chinese post offices, to Szechwan. Although there was a mail order field, with threats of robbers along the Yangtze River, the books were ultimately all delivered.

MOTORISTS IN AFRICA NEVER TRAVEL WITHOUT HORNS

Nairobi, Kenya Colony, East Africa, Aug. 2.—The loot of a single motor horn has been found sufficient, in Africa, to quiet stamped oxen and cause a trio of flesh-hunting lions to leave their prey into the bushes.

Two native drivers were recently conducting a wagon drawn by 12 oxen on the railroad ramp. In the wilds near Nakuru, the silo of the new Uasin Gishu railroad, when the speed was accelerated by three lions. The drivers fled to nearby trees. The oxen became panic stricken and dashed down the rough road, dragging along the body of one ox, killed by the lions, with the swaying wagon behind them. The lions followed their prey.

This was the mad procession that greeted a lone motorist at a curve of the road. He had no rifle, and it was only his quick, unconcerned movement that took his hand to the horn button. At the first sound the lions seemed confounded. Their ferocity then blew pleased. The motorist then blew loud and long, as the uncanny and sustained shriek rose above the clamour of the frightened animals, the lions slunk away among the rocks headed for the safety of the bush, and the oxen swung clear of the dust-covered automobile and came to a stop at the side of the road.

SCENES OF "THE LITTLE MINISTER" LAID IN SCOTLAND AND ARE MOST MASSIVE

For rare beauty of background few pictures that have been screened this season can equal the big screen version of Sir J. M. Barrie's, "The Little Minister," which Pearyhn Stanlaw, the artist-director of Famous Players, moment with Betty Compson in the role of "Laddy Baike, made famous on the stage by Maude Adams.

The picture, which will be shown at Griffin's tonight to Saturday, with a matinee Saturday, gives many views of the picturesque village of "Thrums," (Kirriemuir, Scotland,) Barrie's birthplace, in contrast with the famous Rintoul Castle, built after the style of the old Norman Castles, with high ceilings, stone mullioned and leaded glass windows, high arches and huge stone fireplaces. In the village home of the poor weavers are shown as well as the town hall and kirk. The hoskens scenes, taken on top of Mount Hollywood, also present delightful silhouette studies.

The story is a fine blending one and deals with the daughter of a Scottish Lord Rintoul, who plays the part of a gypsy girl and whose romance is revealed only after a series of thrilling events take place. George Harkhorse and Nigel Barrie have a splendid and capable supporting company.

"Teddy's Goat" is a original Century comedy with Teddy, the famous dog, in a clever role, a beautiful Travelogue, and George Walsh and Lovey Lorraine in a very clever two reel special play "With Stanley in Africa" will be exhibited on the same program.

Lord Morris Says Newfoundland May Take This Step

Charlottetown, August 2.—Lord Morris of Hampstead, England, former Premier Sir Edward Morris of Newfoundland, was here on route from St. Johns, Nfld., for Montreal, where he will take passage for England.

Lord Morris expressed much interest in recent developments concerning the British embargo on Canadian cattle. He said that during his regime as Premier of Newfoundland large shipments of cattle had been imported into the colony from the Dominion, but diseased cattle had never been discovered.

Lord Morris predicted that within a few years Newfoundland would enter the Canadian Federation. He is in accordance with thirty by his son, Hon. Michael Morris.

A FATHER'S PROBLEM

Baron Staefler in The Toronto Star

A man writes me from one of the province's finest towns for counsel in what he declares to be the crisis of his life as it seems.

"We are trying our best for our four children, but this community seems bent on ruining them." Late hours, wild auto tours at midnight, promiscuous dances, undue familiarities, quick friendships and hasty marriages are beginning to characterize the best circles of young people in town. So all our training seems neutralized by what our children learn abroad."

I know the writer; he is no extremist; just a sensible, earnest father; faithful to his religious duties, cheerful at home and sympathetic towards youth. And the mother is all that children love to boast about in celebrating the qualities of their deceased parents. And I know the eldest son of twenty-one, his sister of nineteen and the lads of seventeen and sixteen. A sturdy, healthy cheery group they are; well-behaved, at far as a visitor can detect; intelligent, too.

And lastly, I know the town. It has had a good reputation as a community of fine homes and filled churches. One policeman used to suffice thirty years ago, where now already had six thousand population, and its police court was a very occasional affair.

I think I can visualize the conditions to which this father refers, for an illustration came to me only a few suitable Muskoka resort where staying a quartet of young women and their escorts. At home, the morning there arrived three young fellows; at noon they introduced themselves to the girls in the lounge room; by three, the seven were out bathing and the youths were busy flirting the scantily-attired young ladies in the sand.

A contemplation of the moral effects of such antics deserves more than a silly grin—and I am not so easy that that is not the reception which this paragraph would receive in many circles of young people who think themselves quite all right.

And I will not pose as an oracle as to their decency; I will only remark with confidence that those seven bathers would receive the surprise of rashness with the moral standards of city of years.

their ancestors, standards which for centuries have been regarded as absolutely essential to the sexual safeguarding of society.

And I will say that such recklessness as my correspondent describes cannot last and in moral breakdown. Being incurably an optimist I do not believe that such will be the case among mankind generally; I believe that normal conditions will gradually re-appear, our social ills being a transient result of the crisis through which we have passed, a crisis which by no means had its rise in the great war itself.

But our recovery depends on our own efforts, and it is the earnest spirit which my correspondent reveals which will go far to bring us back to the moral power of the mid-Victorian period.

We must see to it that, with the greater liberties and indulgences we have, a more rigid self-discipline be imposed. And parents and teachers must now put their minds earnestly to the question of giving youth the best counsel in the best way.

To the father whose pluint cannot fail to awaken her sympathy, I would say that there are many methods he can adopt for the safeguarding of his house. Let him take counsel with other fathers and and mothers who are undergoing the same vexatious experience. By speaking together they can accomplish more. If young folks find that their own parents are not the only ones with strict views, they will the sooner become convinced of the dangers surrounding them.

It is possible to make progress too by awakening a certain family pride in the matter. Appeal to their desire to be esteemed as a family, to keep untarnished the good name of the family.

Bring noble men and women to the house to help kindle the flame of high ambition. Quietly put a whole some books of biography on the library table.

Above all, cannot stealthily divert the social life of your children into better channels by hearty entertaining? Plan parties and outings, making them so much more attractive than their own that they will soon realize the superior

"MARGOT" IS WITNESS AT PROBE INTO DEATH OF PEERESS

London, August 3.—A verdict of death from natural causes was returned by a coroner's jury who enquired into the sudden death of the Dowager Countess of Essex, daughter of the late Beach Grant, of New York. Mrs. Ashquith, wife of Premier Asquith, drove home from a dinner party at the house of the Hon. Mrs. Rupert Beckett, and was the last person to see the Countess before her death, was the principal witness.

"I thought she was looking extremely well," Mrs. Asquith said. "In fact I had not seen her for a time and I did not think she had ever looked better. Lord Essex and she drove her home in the car. We discussed plans and she was very cheerful."

In answer to a question, Mrs. Asquith said that the Countess was free from worries, and "Mr. Asquith said to me next morning" he had never seen the Countess looking so well."

Mrs. Asquith said that they arranged to meet again on Monday at lunch. The Countess was going to Paris and Venice and then she was coming to Mrs. Asquith's house in London.

"As I left her on her doorstep, she turned round and waved her hand to me," Mrs. Asquith said, "and that was the last I saw of her."

The Coroner: "I suppose you were playing for ordinary points?"

Mrs. Asquith: "At bridge, you mean? Yes; at low points."

The Coroner: "You never heard her say anything about sucicide?"

Mrs. Asquith: "No, never. She was the last woman in the world to talk of suicide."

Lady Essex's French maid named Mirmonne broke down as she told the coroner how on Friday morning when she went to call the Countess she found her in her bath, her body dimly visible under the water. She could give no details concerning the height of the water or as to whether the electric lights were on. As she took the body out in Mrs. Asquith on completing her evidence she collapsed and Mrs. Asquith led her sobbing from the court room.

Dr. Lawrence, Lady Essex's doctor, described a nerve affection and heart weakness from which the dead was treating her. He had prescribed for sleeplessness, but saw her on Monday when he called to Mrs. Asquith on completing her evidence she collapsed and Mrs. Asquith led her sobbing from the court room.

Dr. Lawrence, Lady Essex's doctor, described a nerve affection and heart weakness from which the dead was treating her. He had prescribed for sleeplessness, but saw her on Monday when he called to Mrs. Asquith on doing well and no longer needed the drugs he had ordered. The doctor said he called to Mrs. Asquith and found lady Essex on her right side in the bath. The elbows were resting on the bread and touching the bottom of the bath. The bath was empty of water, but had evidently been completely filled.

THE BANDBOX

By Louis Joseph Vance

"Conscientious," commented the playwright privately. "Wonder if he's really on the track of anything?"

Idle speculation, however, was suddenly drowned in delight when, his sleep-numb faculties clearing, he realized that the Autocratic was resting without way, and a glance out of the stateroom port showed him the stony green slopes of Fort Tompkins glistening in new sunlight.

Home! He chorused back a yell or joy, and leaped to his bath. Within twenty minutes, bathed, clothed and sane, he was on deck.

By now, having taken on the health officers, the great vessel was in motion again, standing majestically up through the Narrows. To starboard, Bay Ridge basked in golden light. Forward, over the starboard bow, beyond leagues of stained water quick with the life of two score types of harbour and seagoing craft, New York reared its ragged battlements against a sky whose blue had been faded by summer heat. Soft airs and warm breathed down the Bay, bearing to his nostrils that well-known, unforgettable odour, like none other on earth, of the sun-scorched city.

Staff filled his lungs and was glad. It is good to be an American able to go roaming for to admire and for to see; but it is best of all to be an American coming home.

Joy in his heart, Staff dodged below, made his customs declaration, bolted his breakfast (with the greater expedition since he had for company only Mr. Talaber, a plump, pale envelope for a soul of pink pasing for sympathy) and hurried back to the deck.

Governor's Island lay abeam. Beyond it the East River was opening upexpanded by its gossamer webs of steel. Ahead, and near at hand, New York bulked magnificently, purple canyons yawning between its toasted-cheese cliffs of steel and glass and stone: the heat blue, damaging all, lent soft enchantment.

Ranks of staring passengers hid the rail, each a bundle of unexpected hopes and fears, tenuous and precarious. Room for the hour of landing that would bring confirmation, denial, disappointment, fulfilment.

Amidships Staff descried Mrs. Ilkington's head and shoulders next to Miss Ilkington's graceful, tall figure.

GREYBIRDS WIN FROM TRUNKS

Locals Lose Another Hard Luck Game by 6-5 Score

BAD WEATHER

Play Four Innings in Rain and Finish on Heavy Diamond

That the Grand Trunks are still being followed by the "hoodoo" was very evident on Wednesday (yesterday) afternoon when they went down to defeat at the hands of Tony Baker-George's fast Greybirds, by the close score of 6-5, in Lindsay.

After almost two weeks of ideal summer weather, the weatherman changed the climatic menu Wednesday, quite abruptly, with the result that it rained in Lindsay more or less from 2.30 p.m. until 4.30 or later. The diamond was heavy, and it was a difficult matter to decide whether or not to proceed with the game. Umpires Kay and Barnes were on hand when Ia arriving, owing to some trouble with their train, and when they arrived, about 4 p.m., it was still raining.

The game was started in the rain, the idea being to play 3 or 4 innings, and then call it. The rain was over, however, by the time the fourth inning was over, and of course play was resumed and the full regulation nine innings played.

After the first three innings, which were rather listless, both teams put up a remarkably good battle despite the fact that the diamond was wet, they were wet, and the horsehide was also soaked. Neither team appeared to be worrying, apparently having taken it for granted that the game would be called at the end of the fourth. The result was that the Birds got one run too many and too easy, right in the first frame, and the hard-working Trunks could not overcome the lead, although they certainly did make a courageous attempt.

The Birds' lineup was unchanged. Jack Oulette pitched the whole game, "Chuck" Allan playing right garden, and ready for emergencies. Jack ("Lefty") Williams hurled the nine innings for the Trunks and Stan. Hegarman did the receiving for him in the absence of "Pernie" Mills, who is ill and has now been absent from two games. Alex. Weir made his debut in Central Ontario League company yesterday, when he played left field for the whole game.

Hagerman caught a lovely game, having no passed balls, and only two men pilfered bases on him.

It was a day of for pitchers, however, as the old pill was too slippery to control with any degree of certainty. Williams used a very slow ball quite effectively, the anxious Birds trying to murder them. Oulette struck out 8, and Williams sent 6 to the dugout via the strikeout route. Oulette passed 3 and hit one man with a pitched ball, and Williams passed 3 and also hit one batter.

The railroaders had only 2 errors, one when Vern. Wele's throw was beaten at first, and the other on J. H. Williams' bad throw. The latter was the only costly error, however.

Lindsay scored 3 runs in the first inning, and the Trunks 3. Each got 1 in the third, and the Birds got 1 in the fifth and 1 in the eighth innings. The Trunks made 2 in the last inning.

In the first inning, Meagher drew a walk and Weir sizzled, advancing him. Both scored on Casey's single to right garden. In the third, V. Weir tripled to deep left field and scored on Casey's sacrifice fly. Then in the ninth inning, Weir was passed, and scored when Jack ("Lefty") Williams hammered out a three banger to right centre. Williams also scored when the throw to third went under Cummings.

The Birds got the first of their three tallies in the first inning, after two men had been passed and the third batsman singled.

The other two runs went over when with one down, a batsman grounded to J. H. Williams. Jack had the man trapped between third base and home, but threw the slippery pill wild to Hagerman. Other tallies registered by the Greybirds were earned on hits in each case.

Weir and Pitcher Williams of the Trunks each pounded out three baggers, and Art. Carew for the Birds did likewise.

The railroaders had a long day of it yesterday. Arising at 4 a.m. in order to catch the 5.30 a.m. train for Lindsay, and arriving back home after the midnight hour the same day, takes the joy out of playing ball, not mentioning the fact that they played for one hour in an actual rainstorm.

It's little wonder that the advisability of securing the services of a swimming instructor was discussed, and one of the "things we would like to know" seemed to be whether or not Spaldings made light and flexible raincoats for baseball games on rainy Wednesdays.

However, it was as wet for the Birds as for the locals, and it must also be remembered that hungry lions killed Romans in the early days for the amusement of the fans on the Wednesday half holidays, so "when in Rome it is necessary to do as the romans do."

Seriously speaking, though, the Trunks are certainly having their run of tough luck. They lost out to Jake Solomon & Co. in the eleventh inning by one run, and again yesterday they lose by one run in another hard battle. "Pernie" Mills will be back in the game by Saturday, it is expected, when they will meet Bert Boak's squad in Oshawa, and if ever a courageous attempt will be made to defeat Oshawa on their own lot, it will be Saturday.

The boys are not downhearted yet, and have no reason to be. Any team making only two errors in a game, and Jack Williams going strong, should pull out a victory without a doubt, and they know it, too. Belleville is still in there for the honors of part II., and hence they have yet to meet should beware where possible.

The lineup:

Birds—M. Cummings, c.; Oulette, p.; Combe, 1b.; Ashton, 2b.; Brancombe s.s.; B. Cummings 3b.; A. Carew, l.f.; McMahon, c.f.; Allan, r.f.

Belleville—Meagher, c. Wele, V. Weir, s.s.; Casey, r.f.; H. Mills, 1b.; J. K. Williams, 3b.; Hagerman, c.; W. Ross, c.f.; Alex. Weir, l.f.; J. Williams, p.

Umpire at plate—Alex. Kay of Peterboro.

Base umpire—Barnes of Cobourg.

Score by innings:

	R	H	E
Lindsay	3	0 1 0 1 0 0 1 - 6	8	2
G. Trunks	3	0 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 - 5	7	2

The annual garden party held under the auspices of Downeyville Catholic Church (east of Lindsay) was held last evening and Father Galvin very kindly issued complimentary tickets for the players of both the Lindsay and Belleville teams. The locals returned on the early train, however, and were unable to attend, although they appreciated the very kind invitation.

BASEBALLICALLY SPEAKING

The back fence buster gets the cheers when he sends the old pill sailing.

Out far above the fielders' heads and over the bleachers' topmost railing.

They cop the prizes large and rich, the swatsmith with the four-ply thighies,

But he's a handy gesser, too, who regularly pokes out singles

The game of life is much the same, some men get all the world's acclaiming,

The common tasks are not for them, the spotlight's always round them flaming,

They cop the prizes large and rich, The golden plunks their pockets burden,

The common man is useful, too, although he gets the smaller guerdon.

Each has his place, the great, the wise and he of lowlier position. Who fills his niche as best he knows and strives to better man's condition

Upon the world's big diamond, the four-ply swat is still the candy Hit home runs if you can, my boy, Mere hand-hits, tho', oft come in handy.

GOYER SPOILS GALT'S CHANCES

Guelph, Aug. 3.—Nicking Wilbur Kress for 13 safe hits, and assisted by four errors behind him, the Maple Leafs won from the Galt Terriers in Intercounty League fixture here this afternoon between showers, 9 to 5. Tinny, the Leafs' star right-hander was driven from the mound at the end of the fourth after the Terriers had collected four hiners for as many runs off his delivery. He was replaced by "Lefty" Goyer, who held the opposition helpless after doing eight and allowing only three hits. Kress was batted freely in nearly every frame.

Despite the inclement weather, another huge crowd was on hand to see the two teams take to the double umpiring system worked to advantage. The features of the game were a home-run drive from Kress' bat, and a spectacular one-handed catch by Lindsay, the Leafs' third baseman, of a wicked drive from Kress' bat.

Umpires—Murray of Toronto and McAvoy of Waterloo.

WON SWIMMING RACE

New York, August 2.—Gertrude Edster, of the New York Women's Swimming Association, won the 3 1-3 mile International swimming race for women off Long Island yesterday, finishing in 61 minutes 34 3-5 seconds.

Helen Walswright, of the same club, was second, and Hilda James, the youthful British star, third.

RANDOM NOTES ON SPORT

American newspaper men reporting the White Bear Lake-Royal St. Lawrence series of "skimming dish" sloop races for the Duggan Trophy at White Bear Lake Minnesota, contingently say that the Canadian boats were "skippered" by so and so. Maybe that is their polite way of saying that the Canadian boats were a couple of hunks of cheese.

Belleville has the yacht racing fever again in real earnest. The George Cup series which was recently completed there started the ball rolling and now some of the members of the Bay of Quinte Yacht Club are talking of buying a class "R" boat down on Long Island Sound and starting out after the George Cup.—Toronto Star.

Jack Dunn asks .45,000 for the Newark club franchise in the International League. Some Newark citizens including Mayor Charles P. Gillen, and City Clerk William A. Dunn are planning to buy the franchise but they consider Dunn's figure too high. Judge Landis recently notified Dunn that he had to get rid of either the Newark or the Baltimore franchise.

The announcement of the O.J.C., stakes for the autumn meeting at Woodbine to be held in September, shows that the club will distribute $127,000 in purses during the seven-day meeting, a record amount. As is customary during the fall racing at Woodbine, long-distance flat racing and steeplechasing will be featured with rich purses for the various events. The Toronto Autumn Cup at a mile and a quarter will have $15,000 added making it the most valuable stake ever run in Canada.

The Giants and St. Louis are on even terms in the matter of games won and lost, but the Giants lead in the percentage figures.

Toronto is back to the .500 mark again. It seems hard to realize that the Leafs were once leading the league.

Rochester used fourteen men in her almost successful attempt to defeat Toronto on Tuesday.

Ken. Williams hit his twenty-seventh homer yesterday and is now tied with Roger Hornsby for the lead. Babe Ruth is still far in the rear though he is gaining.

JITNEYS CAUSE LEGAL DISPUTE

Buffalo Council to Take a Hand in Struggle

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 3.—The city of Buffalo is going to take a hand in the legal war between the International Railway company, whose regular employes have been on strike more than a month, and the jitneys who are carrying most of the traveling public.

Preparations for the city's defense in the action brought by the traction company to compel a discontinuance of the jitney service was begun here at the request of Mayor Schwab. An order to show cause granted by Justice Penley, and served on the mayor yesterday, is returnable Saturday.

It is believed that the corporation counsel's staff which spent the greater part of yesterday looking up laws relating to the operation of jitneys will endeavor to establish the fact that an emergency exists and that until it passes the jitneys should be allowed to operate even though they have not taken all the steps necessary to legalize their operation.

Little violence was reported during the past 24 hours. Twelve sticks of dynamite were found on the Lancaster line near Depew and promptly removed.

Three passengers on a Kenmore car were spattered with antique eggs thrown by alleged sympathizers at Main and Northrup streets last night, while reports of stoning at Jefferson avenue and Florida street drew police to that point, but no one was found. Pop bottles and bricks were hurled through car windows at some points. Motorman James McGuire was cut on the chin, when he was struck by a brick thrown through the front car window at Kensington avenue and Federal street.

IMPROMPTU COURT ON OCEAN LINER

Supreme Court Judge Signs Divorce Decree Before Departure

New York, August 3.—Holding impromptu court in a stateroom on an ocean liner, Supreme Court Justice Tompkins granted a divorce just in time for Mrs. Helen Morse to trip down the gangplank minus a husband and plus $250 a month alimony today. A few minutes later the jurist was out at sea on the Frederick VIII., bound for England.

Ralph Folks, Mrs. Morse's attorney, learned of his intended departure, the signing of the decree was set for today, so Mr. Folks got in touch with Miss N. F. Conch, the justice's secretary, in White Plains, and she hurried to the Pier in Hoboken with the necessary documents.

Justice Tompkins was found in his stateroom. He took off his hat opened court and signed the decree. It freed Mrs. Morse from Edward F. Morse, and in addition to her own alimony provided $1,000 a year for the support of her infant son.

"Superb Quality"

THE GUMPS—MAKE ME A CHILD AGAIN JUST FOR TONIGHT

"SIX MONTHS AGO"

"It's hard to realize that six month ago I couldn't walk across the floor and now I am so well."

"I have never been very strong but the last last summer was too much for me. Then and the fact that my husband was out of work and I had to work day and night to keep from starving, left me a physical wreck. Luckily my husband was able to get a good job just when I had to go to bed. I took everything I could think of to get strong, but each day I seemed to be getting weaker and weaker. I was reduced to a skeleton, I couldn't eat or sleep, I told my husband I felt and finally I was so weak that in despair he got me Dodd's Kidney Pills. And then I heard about that marvellous preparation Carnoll. A friend of mine had used it with wonderful results and as if I had done so much for her, I decided to try it. The results were nothing less than miraculous. In two weeks I was able to get up and walk about the house. My appetite had returned. I was actually hungry. I could sleep when I wanted to bed, something I had not been able to do for months. I have already taken six bottles of Carnoll and I am still taking it. I weigh more today than I ever weighed before in my life. I sleep like a child. I am never tired and my skin is as clear and as soft as cream as rosy as a girl's. I bless the day I heard about Carnoll." Mrs. K., Toronto.

Carnoll is sold by your druggist and if you are conscientiously say, after you have tried it, that it hasn't done you very good, return the empty bottle and he will refund your money. 5-23

TRENTON MAN STANDS TRIAL

P. C. Arthur Booth told of having seen the man carrying young Boston in his arms after the accident. The constable questioned the occupants of the car, and noticed the black marks made on the concrete roadway by the tires of the car when they began to skid, but had nothing to do with the subsequent arrest of the driver, and the taking in charge of he car. John Shaw, the next witness, stated that while sitting on a neighbor's verandah, talking to the neighbor, he heard the noise of the brakes going on, a sort of grinding noise. They rushed out to see what had happened and discovered the accident. Witness did not believe that the car was travelling at the rate of 25 or 30 miles per hour.

William Day, who was in company with Chief Kidd when the accident occurred, stated that he drew the chief's attention to the car, and swore that it would be travelling at 25 or 30 miles per hour. Mr. Butler produced records of the police court investigation, when witnesses estimated the speed of the car at between 20 and 25 miles per hour. Mr. Day did not see the car swerving as it was being driven up Bridge street.

W. H. Hart, who was driving a motor car west on Bridge street at the time, told of the car having passed him, and he next thing he saw was the boy and the car sliding each other on in the street. The boy was going across the street from the south side at the time of the accident.

Court continued.

Baseball Match

The baseball match between the York Nationals of Toronto and a team of the G.T.R. Shops here attracted the attention of many of the picnickers and it proved to be an interesting event. The visitor team took a decided lead in the early part of the game, the score at the fourth inning being 8 to 5 in their favor. When the 9th innings was reached there had been no change in the score and it was thought that our boys had no show to win but they did. In the ninth inning they secured 4 runs with only two out. The final score was 9 to 8 in favor of the shop boys. Considering the condition of the ground very good ball was played, Brown and Gerow did the twirling for the shops whilst Gordon pitched the nine innings for Nationals. The latter team arrived here with seven members short and were supplied with players from the city. Robt. Colling was umpire on strikes and balls whilst Mr. Wm. Smith looked after the bases.

The line-up of the teams was as follows:—

GUARD RAIL GONE, WALKS OFF ROOF TO HER DEATH

The woman lived on the top floor of the building with her sister and the latter's husband, Thomas J. Harrison. After washing her hair yesterday morning she went up on the roof to let it dry. Accustomed and removed by the familiar guard rail without telling her.

EASTERN NATIONS GROWING POWERFUL

Rider Haggard Says That Western Civilization is Not Secure

DIED

London, August 3.—Sir Rider Haggard is of the opinion that eastern civilization is by no means so secure as many Westerners believe.

"We have an idea that the West is going on forever," he said, lecturing before the Norwich Rotary Club "but can we be quite sure of that? Those who have studied and know the East are conscious of a power of reproduction; its simple habits of life on the land; and its system of morality that make every woman think it her duty to have children, know that it contains an enormous potential power which must one day break out.

"Whether it can be united I do not know, but I have grave doubts. I shall never forget my friend, Theodore Roosevelt, saying when talking to Japan, 'look out for your Australia; it will be the first place to go.

"If once Japan secures the control of China the outlook for the Western World will be very cloudy."

The speaker said he thought our only existing civilizations in the end probably would go the way of other civilizations that had preceded it.

"Who would have thought a dozen years ago," he asked, "that there would be such horrors in the world as we have recently seen in Russia. Even in Ireland it has been revealed that the savage is uncommonly near the skin of civilized men, and so always it will be."

In America was made.

Then, I used one box of "Fruit-a-tives" and two boxes of "Fruit-a-tives" and my hands are now clear. The pimples are gone and there has been no return.

Count Von Hertling was Chancellor of the German Empire at a critical moment of the war, and no one has written the story of his years of office.

Here is his description of an historic moment:—

"The separate surrender of Germany's Allies and his failure to make peace before they did brought Hertling to his fall, and on September 29 the Supreme Command 'demanded a change of Government.' We have the final scene of Ludendorff kicking unannounced, into the Kaiser's room, where the War Lord and Hertling were conducting a successful—

"In excited tones, he asks,'Is the new Government formed yet?' to which the Kaiser replied somewhat sharply, 'I am not a conjurer!' Thereupon Ludendorff: 'The Government must, however, be formed at once, and the peace offer must go out today.' The Kaiser: 'You should have said that a fortnight ago.'"

LABOR PARTY CALLS UPON NATIONS TO CANCEL WAR DEBTS

British Labor Backs Balfour On War Debts Cancellation

Arthur Henderson Welcomes Earl Balfour's Note Calling For All Round Cancellation

LABOR PARTY'S BENEDICTION

British Chancellor Says Britain Is Ready to Give Pound of Flesh to Americans, But Declares Remission of .... Debts Would Bring World Revival .....

BRITAIN'S COLOSSAL BURDEN

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, August 4.—The Labor Party has given its official benediction to the Earl of Balfour's note on war debts cancellation. This was done last night through Arthur Henderson, Secretary of the Labor Party, who in a speech at Heywood said:

"The only satisfactory method for relieving Europe from an intolerable burden and removing and sterilizing the uncertainty due to financial embarrassments is to arrange an all round cancellation of mutual indebtedness. We welcome, therefore, the note of Lord Balfour. It is a great step forward in the right direction, and indicates, I believe, a sane re effort by the government to solve the difficulties in which Europe finds herself."

London, August 4.—Speaking with all his old-time animation in the House of Commons, Lloyd George this afternoon not only defended the British Government in its attitude toward German reparations, but emphasized the necessity of its taking care to stand up for Britain interests, says a special cable to the New York Times. He made his direct pronouncement on the British debt to the United States. That had been done by Mr. Bonar Law, Horse, Chancellor of the Exchequer, who had explained Britain's intention to pay, declaring emphatically that Great Britain recognized its obligations to the United States to the fullest extent was awaiting a delegation to America this autumn to discuss arrangements for funding the whole debt, as also the debts of the allies to Great Britain. The Government held strongly the view that remission of these indebtedness would be the first thing that would bring about a revival in the world.

Britain's Heavy Burden.

But, added the Chancellor, we could not forget the condition of our own people, the distress and agony they were enduring, and the great financial burden they had been under. How much heavier that burden was in comparison with that borne by the allies he showed by the following set of figures: £16S per head in France, £47 per head in the United States, and £193 per head in Great Britain.

Impediment to Recovery.

The foundation of the Earl of Balfour's note was the payment of the debt to the United States, declared the Chancellor. "But, while this is so we are not blind to the enormous financial burden imposed on the nations of the world at the present time by the indebtedness of one nation to another," he said, "and we hold very strongly the view that there is no greater impediment to the recovery of the world from the ravages of war than the extent of that debt."

"If only the nations which fought side by side in the war had been willing to regard their obligations to the war as contributions to the common success," he continued, "we might have been able to rid the world of many causes of irritation, and plant in the heart of humanity a new and inspiring hope."

FIRST WELSH COAL ARRIVES AT THOROLD

St. Catharines, Ont., August 2.—The first cargo of British coal for the Niagara district was in the Welland canal yesterday bound for the Ontario paper mills at Thorold. It is of the steam company's steamer, Glenogle Trimmer, a full-sized Welland canal freighter direct from Newcastle-on-Tyne, where she was built, Captain J. J. Morris is in charge. It is probably the heaviest up-bound coal cargo that ever entered the Welland canal.

BROKE TOE KICKING WIFE; MAY SUE HER FOR DAMAGES?

Hillside, N.J., August 4.—Charles Petrowsky of White street is to be arraigned in Police Court here, charged with kicking his wife so hard that he broke his big toe. Petrowsky claims his wife broke the member by hitting it with a bottle. Anyway, Dr. Alvin T. Lippbard says the toe is broken and the police are determined to find out why they were called to the Petrowsky home several times on Sunday in an effort to keep the peace.

REGRETS LEAVING WESTERN CANADA

Mennonite in Alabama Asks Ottawa to Aid His Return

Toronto, Aug. 4—Discovering to their sorrow that it is often better to bear the ills, or imaginary ills, they have than to flee to others that they know not of, several of the Mennonites who emigrated to the United States from Western Canada some time ago have addressed a number of letters to the Canadian Department of Immigration, asking for assistance to enable them to return to Saskatchewan.

A letter from one of these settlers, after pointing out that conditions in Alabama have not been such as he and his fellow countrymen expected to find, goes on, part:

"We would like to hear from you if it possible for your Government to help us out here—I mean if it would be possible to loan us money to get back to our farms again. We cannot stay here, as we are in such bad shape now that we don't know what will become of us; so I pray you to help us out. My intentions never were to leave Canada, but I was talked into doing so, and I am very sorry that I did."

CATTLE EMBARGO AGAIN COMES UP

British Minister of Agriculture Answers Queries in the House

London Aug. 4—When asked in the House of Commons whether, when the cattle embargo has been raised, through special marking or designation, against meat from imported stock being represented as home-bred, Sir A. Griffith Boscawen, Minister of Agriculture, said he was unable to make any statement at the present time.

Replying to a suggestion that cattle should be admitted without quarantine because store cattle would be urgently required this Autumn to consume the heavy crop of roots, and also in view of the uncertainty of the Irish supply, owing to disease, the Minister said he could not admit that there was likely to be a shortage of store cattle in Great Britain, or that Irish cattle were diseased.

FRANCE MAY SEIZE FACTORIES IN GERMAN RUHR DISTRICT

Poincare's Intentions Should Germany Default Outlined in Paris Paper—Set Up a Barrier—Separation of the Rhineland From Germany Iss Also Contemplated

Paris, Aug. 4.—France plans to invade Germany and seize and operate the coal and iron mines in the Ruhr basin if the Berlin government refuses to pay war debts and private claims.

Industries now in the hands of Britons, Thyssen and Krupp, all multi-millionaires, will be operated by France until all obligations are met, the French press, outlining Premier Poincare's plan of coercion, announced to-day.

According to the plan, a Rhineland customs barrier against Germany will be set up and German officials replaced by Rhinelanders. The Rhineland commission, in event the plan is carried out, would call for an election, which would give the Petit Parisiens more than they France is willing to reduce Germany's debt to $11,000,000 on condition that Germany accepts definitely and the inter-allied debts are cancelled.

The note of Lord Balfour, which informed European allies that they must pay enough of their debts so that England may settle her war obligation with the United States, has played directly into the hands of France, it was believed here. England has told France that she must pay because the United States wants her money from Great Britain. Now France is in a position to demand that Germany pay because England is demanding money from her.

PUNTING THE FOOTBALL AT QUEEN'S CAMPUS

Kingston, Ont., Aug. 3.—Rugby fans were delighted to see "Imvie" Harding out on Queen's campus yesterday afternoon, punting 12" football. Harding was exchanging a few with "Reg" Sawyer, of the Royal Military College. The local college supporters look to Harding this year to do even better than last year, and at this time he is in attendance at the summer school taking work in the subjects on which he could not write because of injuries received in an encounter with a burglar.

Before the students left last spring preparations were made for the early arrival of some of the men in order to get in shape for the rugby season and is about a month's time the campus will be alive with rugbyists again.

PELTING HAIL ICE FISH CAUGHT IN DELAWARE BAY

Cape May, N.J., Aug. 4.—More than a score of fishing parties returned last evening with their day's catch already iced by severe hail storms through which the fleet passed, according to word received here to-day from Norbury Landing. The storm was encountered in the upper bay.

On the farm of Elmer Hamingway, at the upper end of Fishing Creek, it was reported, the hail stones cut watermelons open. At Green Creek hardly a window pane survived, and some tin roofs were penetrated.

HASTY TRANSFER OF MILLIONS FROM U. S. TO DUTCH AND SWISS BANKS BY THE GERMANS

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Paris, Aug. 4.—German banks within the last 48 hours have hurriedly transferred to Holland and Switzerland between sixty and seventy million French francs, which had been on deposit in the United States and other countries, it is asserted in financial circles here.

The withdrawal is believed to be in anticipation that the French government would seize the money as penalty for Germany not paying instalment due for private debts contracted before the war with French men.

NEW AREAS INVADED BY THE CORN-BORER

St. Thomas, Ont., Aug. 3.—W. N. Keenan, in charge of the quarantine work for the Dominion Government, at Port Stanley, regarding the corn borer, stated yesterday that two new areas were discovered to be infected with the European corn borer. One is in Essex County, and one additional township in Wentworth County. These districts were to be at once placed under quarantine.

L. S. McLean, chief of the division of foreign pest suppression department, Ottawa, is at the entomologist headquarters at Port Stanley this week. Mr. McLean has just returned from an international conference held at Sacramento, Cal., where extensive plans were made to prevent the spread of the pest. Maps have been made for picturing the pest in action, also the different stages of its development. These films are to be used for educational purposes.

STUNNED BY LIGHTNING BOLT

Resident of Tweed Narrowly Escaped Being Hit by Bolt

The village of Tweed and vicinity was on Wednesday afternoon visited by a rather severe electric storm. Lightning was vivid, thunder deafening whilst the downfall of rain was heavy. During the progress of the storm lightning struck a post in front of Mr. Robert Elliott's home plowing a furrow in the ground to the house, where it did some damage. Mr. Elliott at the time was sitting in a chair near where the bolt entered the house and was shocked. Fortunately the injuries he sustained were not of a serious nature and he soon revived. His escape from securing the full force of the bolt was a narrow one. No other damage was reported in the village.

St. Catharines, Ont., August 4.—Chief Engineer Alex. Grant reported here to-day that construction on the various sections of the new Welland ship canal was now well under way, and should continue until late in the autumn. On sections 3 and 4, recently taken over by the Lyall Construction Company, there were 530 men employed, with the prospect of this number being increased. It is planned to lay 2,000 cubic yards of concrete daily at lock six, while three steel towers will be put in operation on the concrete work. Delivery of sand is being made at Port Welley, and brought up to Thorold on the construction rail way.

The Canadian Dredging Company has four dredges at work on section five, where 250 men are employed. Porter Bros. have 1000 men at work and have just completed four concrete cribs, one of which will be sunk this week. Considerable concrete work is under way.

Local Dealers Will Be Asked to Supply Citizens With Fuel

There is no change to note in regard to the coal situation in Belleville. His Worship however, with other members of the City Council met the coal dealers of he city handling the situation. It is the intention of the mayor to ask the coal dealers of the city to meet in conference and discuss the matter and by so doing ascertain what is the best course to pursue in regard to getting a supply of coal.

DAUGHTER'S ELOPEMENT

Miss Baker's daughter, the girl herself says she knew she was doing wrong in going away with Beando, but says she could not resist him. Ethel's mother discovered shortly after 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon that her daughter had left home in company with Beando, when she found a young girl and a boarder in the house. Beando, had said he was going to Toronto and took good-by to Miss. Smith in the kitchen of the house, but neighbors informed her that Ethel had gone out the back door with a suit case in hand, and that she and Beando walked up the street together. The Pressie mother at once telephoned the police, and the pair were found at Pottersburg station, waiting for a train.

BUYS A GRAVE AND PROCEEDS TO FILL IT

Man Tired of Life Went About in Methodical Way to End It

Montreal, Aug. 4.—A man who is believed to be Charles Hans Hansen, of Cartilier street, Hochelaga, fought a pilot in a local cemetery and ended his life by shooting himself through the head. He committed the deed on the wharf opposite the Canada Cement Company's Longue Pointe plant, standing in such a position that his body was almost certain of falling in the water. Before he fired the fatal shot he took out his false teeth, removed his shoes and stockings and wrapped them all in his coat which he deposited neatly on the wharf. But fate decreed that the body should escape a watery grave. It was found at 9.05 o'clock this morning and will occupy the grave which Hansen thoughtfully purchased. Coroner MacMahon opened an inquest this morning, but adjourned until next Tuesday. Detectives will investigate the case. In the pocket of the coat there was found a receipt for the payment of a plot in a cemetery. This bore the name of Hansen and his address. The grave had cost the man $37.50.

HOW TO AVOID PARALYSIS

Lots of Pure Air, Pure Milk and Isolation Directions of Montreal M.O.H.

Consult Doctor at Once When Children Take Ill

Montreal, August 3.—News of the epidemic of infantile paralysis in Hamilton has brought a flood of inquiries from anxious parents to Dr. Boucher, Medical Officer of Health of the City of Montreal. Dr. Boucher was very reassuring, declaring that there is nothing to fear in Montreal in the way of epidemic spreading, for since the new year there have been only two cases of infantile paralysis and one death in the city.

Often Attacks the Robust.

The medical health officer informed your correspondent that infantile paralysis is most frequent to children of from one to two years and very often attacks the most robust. It is due to a germ which has not yet been discovered and is transmitted by direct contact from person to person and by the intermediary of different objects.

How To Avoid It.

In order to avoid contamination, Dr. Boucher added, it is necessary to keep children isolated as much as possible and not let them run in the public streets where there are crowds. They must not be allowed in families where there are invalids.

Pure Air and Milk.

Give them pure air and pure milk. Do not give fruits to children under three years of age except orange juice and do not give cooked fruits or jam to them except in small quantities.

Make war on flies and prevent them invading the dwellings and ornamenting the victuals.

It is absolutely necessary to consult a doctor when a child is sick, and especially if it has fever or vomits, has diarrohea, convulsions and headache.

"If one of your children has taken ill, remember," concluded Dr. Boucher, "that infantile paralysis is contagious. The secretions of the nose and mouth are particularly dangerous in propagating the disease. It is necessary then to isolate the patient and not allow them to be approached by other children, and it is well to follow the advice of a doctor concerning the disinfection of objects which might be contemplated.

POISON PIES CLAIM MORE VICTIMS

Police Are on the Track of the Poisoner—Baker's Helper Disappears

New York, August3.—The death list of victims of arsenic pie served to hundreds of customers in Shelburne's restaurant in the Broadway district, mounted to six to-day, while health within a few hours. According to chemists, poison found in pie served at the restaurant does not show its full force until within 48 to 60 hours after being administered.

While doctors were working frantically to save the lives of a score or more of other victims, police scoured the city for "Lewie, the baker's helper," last name unknown, who is reported to have prepared the dough for the arsenic pie. The police say the baker's helper has disappeared. Charles Abrahamson, cook at the restaurant, was being held by the police under a $500 bond to appear to-day as a material witness to an investigation.

Abrahamson has been absolved from responsibility for the poisoning as the police say he had worked but a short time at a restaurant, and the pie dough left for him to bake had been prepared for him by another baker.

"Arsenic was maliciously put into the dough," declared Ole Salthe, chief of the bureau of foods and drugs, who analyzed pieces of pie crust taken from the restaurant. Salthe declared the analysis showed large quantities of poison.

Hundreds of office workers had lunch at the restaurant on Monday when the poison pie was served, according to the proprietors, who are unable to tell the police how many of these patrons actually ate the dessert.

Doctors and hospitals in the immediate vicinity of the restaurant have amounted for 100 persons who have been treated for poisoning, all of them declaring they had lunch at Shelburne's. With but few exception they claimed to have eaten huckleberry or cherry pie.

BEES DISLIKE CERTAIN ODORS

Bee Census Taken in Goshen, N.Y.; Interesting Facts Disclosed

New York, Aug. 4.—Ever since a bee census was ordered in Goshen, N.Y., metropolis of the bunzing honey makers, tender hearted persons have been shuddering at the thought of the danger assessors might undergo in plucking each bee from its workroom or den and counting it. But they might as well stop worrying. For, for Wj E. Thornsley, who knows bees from stem to dreaded stern, said today that all the census takers have to do is count the hives.

"Even if they did have to number each bee, it wouldn't be so bad," he said. "Some men could count them one by one and never have to use a mask. Of course, a lot would depend on whether the bees were aristocratic bluebloods, or hybrids. The hybrids are usually the fierce ones. Still, when it comes to getting intimate with bees, discretion is the better part of valor."

Girls with perfume and men who use hair oil, "smelly pomades or scented talcum to get out of the way whenever they see a bee coming, Mr. Thornsley says. He has a theory that the little honey-makers just naturally dislike certain odors When a bee bumps an odor it nosses right in to gather raw material for its manufacturing plant, but it turns its back on disagreeable smells. And when a bee turns its back, somebody is liable to experience discomfiture.

Bees have domestic troubles, too, and these often put them in a bad humor. It is to ascertain how many of the baby bees at Goshen are suffering from "loaf brood", and causing worry to their queen and Mother papa bees that the census was ordered.

Foul brood is something like summer complaint among human infants, but more devastating. It comes from impure food given during the period of incubation.

The adult bees are not bothered by the disease as they they flee because the larder contains good food or bad. But when the queen bee gets sick, then the physical strain of sexlessness ultimately affects the whole hive.

Kingston, August 3.—According to the story his son told at Sharbot Lake yesterday afternoon, Thomas Hollowood, who resides at St. George's Lake, was held up at the point of a revolver at nine o'clock this evening by a unknown man, knocked down and robbed of over $2.00. The dog belonging to the Hollowood farm was shot by the hold-up man, who threatened the lives of the others in the home if they did not turn over their cash. County Constable William Gellasson and Provincial Detective Marshall left this afternoon to investigate the case.

DON'T PUT BLAME ON THE MOVIES

Parents of Boys Accused of Vandalism Cannot Explain Escapade

Toronto, August 4.—Why would five boys all under ten, brought up in good homes, suddenly go on the rampage, enter a neighboring house and do damage to the premises and contents? This question is of great interest to all parents, who sometimes fear that their hopefuls may do similar things, as well as to educationalists and psychologists.

To-day The Star visited the homes of the boys who are held responsible for invading the Parkway ave. home and asked the parents if they had any explanation.

"We can't say what put it in their heads to do such a thing," said the parents. In every case the boys have good school records and this is said to be the first time they have ever been in any trouble. The parents all agreed on one thing, that lately their children had been going off for the afternoon to Sunnyside to swim and had not come back as regularly as they ought. "They all go down there in a gang," said one mother, "and when they hear the music and watch the shows and the merry-go-round they forget all about coming home. It was just last week that my boy stayed down there and was late for supper. I think that it is the attraction of the water and the amusements and they hang around there most of the time."

Not The Movies.

In every case the boys were not accustomed to going to the movies and the parents denied that any shows put ideas of vandalism into their heads. In one home, the boy had not been to a movie for months. The last picture he saw was "Peck's Bad Boy." "But," said the father, that was so long ago for him to remember it, and there was no harm done by it."

In other homes the boys were taken to the shows by their parents who were sure that they would see no "blood and thunder" pictures.

One mother was emphatic in her statement that movies did no harm to children. "A friend of mine said to me that perhaps the movies had something to do with it," she said, the "and I told her that it was all bunk. There isn't a movie that hurts a child. My boy goes now and then on Saturday afternoon, but he never cuts up afterwards and never imitates anything he sees. I don't know how he ever could do such things as were done in that house. It must have been that one boy dared another to break something and of course he did it."

The parents of the boys laughed at the suggestion that their children might have read dime novels or such sensational literature. Only one boy did any reading at all and his favorite book was a most modest one, "The Boy Allies at Liege." This drama was the only story he liked. In his younger days he had occasionally read an Alger book, but he never attempted to emulate the hero's masculine rise from a bootblack to a bank manager. In fact he never had an adventure.

Liked the Comics.

The other children were fond of the comic section in the papers.

"Do you think it was anything in these 'funnies' that put thoughts of breaking things into their heads?" the parents were asked. "Of course not," was the reply. "They were just amused by them but never studied them."

One mother believed that a factor in the escapade was the fact that the boys had their holidays from school. "They had nothing much to do all day," she said, "and they got into the habit of looking for one another and going around in groups more than any other time."

MEDICAL AND LEGAL INSANITY

The conflict between medical experts and lawyers which has been aroused by the Home Secretary's refusal of Ronald True on the report of a special committee of doctors continues. It is clear that it is impossible in the interests of society to countenance the logical extreme of the alienists' attitude. In the opinion of many of them to err is insane, or is, at all events, such a failure of judgment as to indicate a weakness of mind, with a consequent loss of will power. Lawyers, who seem to receive the popular support, dread an expansion of the principles which have hitherto guided the Courts. They have succeeded in resisting an invasion of sound working rules so far as the trial of prisoners is concerned, but there is no control over subsequent procedure of the Home Office under the authority of the Criminal Lunatics Act of 1884. By that statute a committee of medical experts on certain representatives must be appointed, by the Home Secretary, who in fact, either to adopt or reject their report. If it a report, be it noted, on the state of mind of a prisoner under sentence—a prisoner who has been found to be sane after a trial at which his responsibility for his acts had been questioned and finally decided. The men who investigate the convict's mental condition approach their task with a knowledge that a crime has been committed, and they are inclined to assume that there is a history of the case which demands examination. Yet the antecedents of an accused person are invariably presented fully to the Courts by competent counsel at the trial, and are present to the minds of the jury. In these circumstances, the public is inclined to distrust the secret inquiries of alienists after the verdict of a jury and after sentence has been passed and confirmed by a patient and painstaking Court of Criminal Appeal.—The London Times.

ANOTHER NOBLEMAN FEELS THE PINCH OF HARD TIMES

London, August 4.—The Duke of Northumberland is hard up, as are many other members of the old nobility in these days of excessive taxation, and is compelled to retrench like many untitled folk in order to make both ends meet.

He has sold many of his northern properties, including several large hotels. To a wealthy Paris art dealer he recently rented his magnificent mansion on the Thames, near Kew. It is one of the biggest residences in the country.

And still the Duke feels the necessity of cutting down expenses. He has decided to close Alnwick Castle, which has been the Northumberland home of the Percy's since early in the 14th century. He will retain only a few rooms in the castle for use when he and the Duchess are in the north. The rest of the place will be shut up. The shooting on the estate is to be let.

SOLDIERS WITHOUT A COUNTRY

Canadians Who Went to England After Discharge Are in Difficult Position

London, Aug. 3.—The repatriation of Canadian ex-soldiers in England is to be continued. The sum of $150,000 has been appropriated for this purpose and will be available until next April. Uncertainty as to whether it is to be administered by the London office of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment or by the branch of the Canadian High Commissioner's Office which has hitherto carried on the work, has held up the whole scheme. It is now too late to return these Canadians in time for the harvesting, they will arrive only in time for the Canadian winter. It is understood that the full ocean steamship fare is to be paid for these returned men, which means that only 500 to 600 men with their dependents can be repatriated with the sum available. Only ex-service men who took their discharge in England, unless they are Canadian born are eligible. Others who returned here after taking their discharge in Canada are in a difficult position. As they have been twelve months or more absent from the Dominion, the Canadian Government claims that they are no longer Canadians. On the other hand, the British Government claims that they are still Canadians. They have thus become twilight citizens—men without a country.

RAILWAY WORKERS BEATEN TO DEATH

Chicago, Aug. 3.—Robert Johnson, 42, an employee of the Illinois Central Shops at Burnside was beaten to death this morning by four unidentified men who made their escape. They attacked Johnson when he refused to leave off work.

WOMAN MUST NOW GO TO JAIL

When Mrs. Margaret Hannah, of Mayo Township, was found guilty of breaking from custody while being held on a criminal charge, that of stealing a quantity of lay and a logging chain, she was given suspended sentence of one year by His Honor Judge Deyeche, on condition that she would not return to the north country during that time.

She has returned to the country, however, and having broken the condition of the suspended sentence was sentenced to a term not to exceed two years, less one day, and not less than three months at the Reformatory of Ontario.

The offence was committed last October, and the accused broke from custody on May 13th last.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 3, 1922.

EIGHT YEARS AGO.

Eight years ago to-day there broke upon the world the greatest war that ever befell mankind. The story of the invasion of Belgium by the German Army and all the horror that followed that act of aggression is all familiar to everyone and let millions it is more than a story, it is actual experience imprinted not only on the memory but upon the body. Millions who might to-day have been living and happy were cut off at the threshold of life. Young men with the light of love and hope in their eyes left their home and country never to return.

Very little is said of the war to-day, and most people are too busy to even think much about it. But we must not allow ourselves to forget it, for if we there is nothing more certain than that the war will come again and the world in the next generation. To forget the great war is the same as forgetting an accident and failing to avoid a similar one. Tennyson tells us that

"All experience is an arch where through
Gleams that untravelled world whose margin fades
Forever and forever as we move."

It is through this arch of experience that we are looking into the future, and unless we are blind and dumb fatalists we will have something to learn from that untravelled world that is to be inherited by our children.

THE IRISH GRUDGE.

A local Irishman, who wields a facile pen and has the Hibernian gift of rhetoric, writes a very long letter in reply to a very short editorial in Irish Rebellion. He takes us to task—but for the first time—for what he regards as slandering the rebel leaders. We ventured to express the opinion that the success of the rebel movement in Ireland of late years was due to the leniency, or the lack of firmness with which the British Government had handled the situation. We were not discussing the past, although we believe that England has been more slandered over her actions in Ireland than her rebels ever were. It is the special privilege of a certain type of Irishmen to hold a grudge, and they have tenacious memories for anything in the nature of an injury. They never forget and they never forgive.

Notwithstanding our correspondent's patriotic outburst—and we admire his loyalty and love for his native land—we believe he is misguided and unreasonable in adopting such an attitude of hatred toward Great Britain. Ireland is in no worse state than Scotland or Wales—or England for that matter—as far as freedom and government is concerned. The truth is the land laws of Ireland are the fairest in the Empire. The first does not enlist about the wearing of the thistle, although he might have stronger reason to complain of his treatment at the hands of Englishmen than the Irish ever did. The Scot is a hefty fighter, but he is always a good sport. He hits hard and can stand a hard hit without whining and he will not go off brooding over his injury and plot treacherously against his opponent. The Scot is level headed, reasonable and human—many if you will—and he believes in the scriptural injunction: "Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art in the way with him."

If Irishmen would take a lesson from Scotsmen they might have ere all they want, even England itself. As it is, the Scot runs the whole of the British Empire and a good portion of the rest of the world.

LEGAL AND MEDICAL VIEWS OF CRIME.

The case of Elijah True, who after being tried for murder and convicted, was sent by the Home Secretary to an asylum for the insane, is still arousing considerable interest in England, especially in legal circles. Lord Coleridge, charging the jury at Flintshire Assizes recently, said:

"There is at the moment much discussion as to the difference between the legal and medical view of responsibility for crime where insanity is alleged to exist. I hope that the day is approaching when the difference between right and wrong is the test of such responsibility will never be displaced by any medical theories, nor should we tamper with the finality of the verdicts of juries, except upon well-known legal grounds."

In the case of True the prisoner was tried in the ordinary way and found guilty. The Home Secretary has been subject to criticism on the ground that he favored True because of his family connections. It certainly looks like that—but what right have we to criticise when we allowed a few quacks to acquit a priest of the charge of murder and cannot all the moral laws of the country?

The question has been raised in the British House of Commons as to whether a condemned man who recovers his sanity can be executed. In reply to the question the Home Secretary said: "I have no power to prevent it, but whether it would be done was another thing. Of one thing we may be sure, neither True nor Delorme will ever recover their sanity.

HERE AND THERE

EXPLAINING THE MOSQUITO.

New Jersey scientists are hot on the trail of the mosquito. For the past few months Dr. Rudolfs of that State's Agricultural Experiment Station has conducted exhaustive experiments to discover the general causes which excite the insect to attack man. His report, with the formidable title "Chemoreception of Mosquitos," has just come out.

The findings, with cold scientific accuracy, limit man's attractiveness to the possession of two chemicals and a certain degree of warmth. The chemicals found most attractive and "secretion" were carbon dioxide, ammonia and temperature, and a combination of all three. Placed in containers and subjected to tests in which the insect had to find its way breathing and through the pores, the mosquitos evinced decided "pleasure." Like the little hills of the Psalmist, the report shows that the mosquitos clapped, jumped and sang for joy.

The report seems to point to the breath as having an important role in attracting mosquitos, which goes to explain why motionless sleepers are subject to attack. The observation that mosquitos always alighted upon the observers against the light also indicates that warmth, not color of blood, on the contrary, does not attract, though the report maintains the theory that "nutrition" forms the insects' "ultimate goal."

From Dr. Rudolfs's report the layman gets considerable information but small comfort. He needs no elaborate experiments to prove that "the blood lust" of mosquitos induces them to follow and bite even under great difficulties. As he owns confusingly, he looks forward eagerly for the promised report on "repellents." He finds it unnecessary to spend long weeks in discovering "how they get that way." He has known that secret for many a year.

"I am no ascetic, but any doctor in England will tell you that the average Englishman eats and drinks a great deal more than is good for him. It is outwardly to think how many professing Christians have the edge and keenness of their intellectual and spiritual life blunted by the luxurious and sensuous table-abundance in which they habitually indulge. I sometimes think that water from the spring and barley-bread would be a great deal better for their souls and for their bodies, too, in the case of many people that call themselves Christians. Sparta, after all, is the best place for a man to live in, next to Jerusalem.—Dr. Alexis McLaren.

IF HIS AIM WAS GOOD.

"Are you superstitious?" asked Smythe of his neighbor.

"Well, I don't know," replied Windley. "Give me a case to deal with."

"Suppose a dog stood bowling on your doorstep at midnight," explained Smythe "would you regard it as a sure sign of death?"

A grim look shone in the other man's eyes.

"Yes, I should—if the dog stayed long enough."—Pearson's Weekly.

KNOTTY FINGER JOINTS.

Large and knotty finger joints, 'tis said, denote a love of arguing. In future, ladies must get be too hopeful when eligible young men ask to be allowed to try a ring on their fingers. They may be merely testing the joints.

"Plain as a pikestaff this must be
That lumpy finger joints
Belong to persons who can see
The knotty points;
Beware the man enamoured men,
Whose finger's knots do crown;
These are the girls who know not when
To keep down."

Up-to-date young men will carry with them a ring and test the knuckles of ladies before proposing. Courtship will be a thing of the past, and will favorably compare with the prince who went wife-hunting with a glass slipper.—Montreal Gazette.

NEWTON

(Alfred Noyes, in "Watchers of the Sky")

He saw and listened.
The sunbeam striking through that bullet-hole
In his closed shutter—a round white spot of light
Upon the splendid dark screen.
He interposed—
A prism of glass. He saw the sunbeam break
And spread upon the screen its rainbow band
Of disentangled colors, all in scale
Like notes in music; first, the violet ray,
Then indigo, trembling softly into blue;
Then green and yellow, quivering side by side;
Then orange, mellowing richly into red.
Then, in the screen, he made a small round hole
Like to the first; and through it passed once more
Each separate colored ray. He let it strike
Another prism of glass, and saw each ban
Bent at a different angle from its path,
The red the least, the violet ray the most;
But all in scale and order, all precise
As notes in music. Last, he took a lens,
And, passing through it all those colored rays,
Drew them together again, removing all
On that dark screen, as one white spot of light.

So, watching, testing, proving, he resolved
The seeming random glories of our day
Into a constant harmony, and found
How in the heart of noon is the sunlight sleep.
Compounded, all the colors of the world,
He saw how rainbows in the clouds of heaven
Breaking the light, revealed that sevenfold arch
Though now they spanned the mountains and wild seas,

Then, where that old-world order had gone down
Of colors, ranged as on his own dark screen,
Beneath a darker design, he beheld
Gleams of the great new order and recalled
—Fraught with new meaning and a deeper hope—
That Covenant which God made with all mankind
Throughout all generations: I will set
My bow in the clouds, that henceforth ye may know
How deeper than the wreckage of your dreams
Abides My Law, in beauty and in power.

A MODERN WIZARD

The Life Work of Dr. Alex. Graham Bell, the Inventor of the Telephone.

No invention with which the names of Canada was ever associated has been of so much importance as that of the telephone, even though the inventor, Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, was born in Scotland and received there much of the training that led him into the series of experiments that culminated in the telephone. Dr. Bell was as modest as he was successful, and always disclaimed the honor of being the developer of the modern telephone. That, he said, was the work of a hundred brains, but there is no doubt that the first real greatness on the list was the brain of Bell. He was the first human being to talk over a wire by means of electricity. Had there been no telephone Bell would have been no telephone. Bell had been for the discovery of the electric telegraph before his own experiments were possible, but he did not attack the problem from the point of view of the electrician, the expert, but rather as a specialist in voice production. His final was comparable to that of a singer investing the phonograph.

A Distinguished Father.

Alexander Graham Bell was born in Edinburgh, where his father, Prof. Melville Bell, was regarded as one of the leading vocal physiologists of his time. The son followed the inventor of the system of visible speaking by which the deaf and dumb are taught to converse and which is said to them. He was a delicate lad and the fact that his two brothers had died consumption led his father to give up his important work in Scotland and come to America. His first intention was to settle in the United States, which he had formerly visited but finally he hit on Brantford as a suitable place for residence and made his few home at Tutela Heights, near that city. Young Bell remained there in his twenty-fourth year, a tall thoughtful youth who impressed those who came in contact with him as a man of unusual intellectual force. He was even then a serious student with a range of information on many subjects. His first hobby was music, and he remarked on one occasion that he had practised the piano for some time before he could not play. He was also an authority on flowers and plants.

A Human Experiment.

As a boy Bell was fond of information not possessed by many of twice his years, but his grandfather Smith's efforts to educate him in London, pointed out to him that he was also grossly ignorant of many things known to even the average school boy, and that it was his duty to study hard. It was probably as a result of his father's painstaking line of research that Alexander turned his thoughts to the development of an apparatus that would enable deaf pupils to see and recognize the forms of vibration characteristic of the various elements of speech. He had not been long at Brantford when he was called to Boston to take the chair of vocal physiology at Harvard University and there to introduce the system invented by his father. For some years thereafter he spent his time between Brantford and Boston. His final discovery was made in Brantford, and seems to have been precipitated by his studies with a human ear which had been presented to him by a friend in Boston as he was leaving for his vacation in Canada.

The First Words.

He had, of course, many obstacles to overcome. There was the primary fact that he had to invent several instruments, each of them being the result of protracted study, though to-day they would appear crude. The telephone among him stringing stove-pipe wire along the fences, supposed him to be demented. But he was encouraged as the result of small demonstrations and never wavered in the conviction that he was on the right track, and would eventually produce an instrument which would transmit the human voice. The first test of any importance was made on August 5, 1876 in the home on Tutela Heights, and those or more persons present were present. The distance between receiver and transmitter was only a few hundred feet, across the river bank, but the sounds travelled over five miles of coiled wire, and none of those present doubted that he was witnessing one of the great discoveries of the age. Five or three other tests were undertaken in the course of the next few days, the final and conclusive one being between Paris and Brantford, conducted by means of a battery in Toronto. It is said that the first words ever transmitted over a telephone were "To be or not to be."

A Student All His Life.

The telephone was shown at the Philadelphia centennial in 1876, by which time Bell had fitted his means by his wife, the daughter of a prosperous Boston lawyer named Gardiner Hubbard, afterward the founder of the National Geographic Society. He had gone to the Hubbard home to be the young woman who had lost her hearing and power of speech as a result of scarlet fever, and in the process of instruction they fell in love. Mrs. Bell had financial resources and it was partly on this account that her husband did not suffer the fate of so many inventors who are deprived of the fruits of their discoveries. His claim to be the inventor of the telephone was never challenged and he lived to receive the honors and riches of a rich man. His interest in scientific pursuits never waned, however, and to the end his mind was as receptive as that of a child to new discoveries and fresh impression. He gave much time to the development of the airplane and many valuable experiments were carried on by him at Baddeck in Cape Breton. He also drew plans for the artificial cooling of houses, and to the hottest days in Summer his Washington home was always kept at a pleasant temperature. Dr. Bell has left notebooks filled with records of tests and improvements, a great number of notebooks in which he jotted down his thoughts and experiments. Their publication should be a great value and interest.—Mail and Empire.

PUBLIC OPINION

IN DEFENCE OF REBELS.

To The Intelligencer.

Dear Sir,—Your editorial on the 22nd instant, under the heading of "Law and Order in Ireland," statements of a one-sided and grotesquely untrue have been advanced.

That rebels exist in Ireland no one can deny. But the treatment and even treatment are ever the cry for making rebels, and the Irish people have had more than their share of both. That rebels thrive in kindliness and persuasion I am not in a position to verify, but that cruelty has been meted out to the Irish rebel, I emphatically deny. History will readily verify the assertion. Lord Edward Fitzgerald, Emmett, Wolfsone, Allen, Larkin, O'Brien and others are but a few names that stand out from the very dulcetree of such kindliness and persuasion by the past history of Ireland. Parnell, Clarke, Redmond, Lean MacDiarmid and Plunkett were placed amidst a wall and shot as an extra recognition of such kindliness and persuasion in 1916. Jim Colbury, who had but a few hours to live, was strapped to a chair and shot as a result of an over-indulgence of such kindliness and persuasion. The prisons, gaols, thousands of Irish rebels enjoying the pleasure of his majesty as the result of an extraordinary generosity in such kindliness and persuasion.

Carson was allowed to defy the British Government by establishing the Ulster Volunteers in 1912. He was permitted to establish conversing at the River Larne and in the same year a specially chartered boat brought him to-dine with the Kaiser ing them into the Atlantic entails more than the mind can compute. Earliest that rebel gang down the Emerald Isle would mean the annihilation of that same "Little bright spot in the horizon" and the Power that is values its mastership of the seas too much to allow, or even dream of, such a valued geographical "dot" go under.

It is no part of the universe have the Irish people or their representatives gone "sighing or snivelling for a hundred years about the hanging of men and women for the wearing of the green."

That famous Cromwellian scandals, "To hell or Connought" has been enacted often enough to implant in the heart of every son of Ireland a cherished love and heroic memory for the suffering and martyred-dead of his native land. Each has been too personally connected with Erin's tragic history and so shame unto him for his lack of love for the rich treasures and patriotic spirit of his forefathers. The history is one of which Erin's sons may well be proud and there is no need for "sighing and swivelling."

It is the noblest spirit of all to love and idealise one's place of birth for, as the poet says,

"He's a man with soul so dead
That never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land."

THE ART OF FLYING.

(London Spectator.)

When man, after many failures, learns to fly, his new art developed with such astonishing speed as to leave the public somewhat bewildered and confused. It is hard to believe that the first flight in a controlled, power-driven aeroplane was made by Wilbur Wrieht so recently as December 17th, 1903, and that the first free flight made in Europe was that of Santos Dame, Eilehsammer, who in September, 1906, flew 42 metres at a height of about five feet above the ground. Eight years later the war made us all regard the aeroplane as a necessary weapon, and now flying has become a commonplace. We know of no better survey of the new and fascinating subject than Sir. F. F. Eyles has given us in his brief but most interesting and authoritative book.

He describes the formation of the first Aeroplane Company of Royal Engineers in 1911, when he was the only officer in the War Office who had learned to fly and who had made a serious study of the progress of military aviation abroad. The Royal Flying Corps was established in 1912, and the author, as head of the Military Wing, had just two years to organize and train the airmen who were sent to France with the Expeditionary Force. The Navy, meanwhile, paid great attention to experimental work on engines, scouting, reconnoitring and so forth, while the soldiers were primarily concerned to create an organization designed for reconnaissance rather than for fighting. The author then proceeds to outline the course of the war in the air, during which our little Air Force expanded rapidly from a total of 1,864 officers and men with 190 machines to a total of 300,000 officers and men with 22,000 machines, and showed almost from the first its superiority over the enemy.

Sir F. H. Sykes attributes the failure of the German air service at the outset, when it was relatively large and well equipped, to "the initial disadvantage of units and flights being controlled by the higher command," whereas the four British squadrons that were possessed—each of sixty aeroplanes—and were used systematically to procure information. British airmen's eye can grasp and the advised sweeps reports enabled Lord French to evade Bran's a mighty good thing!

Kellogg's Bran is delicious as a cereal or sprinkled over other hot or cold cereal. It makes the most delightful muffins, bread, scones, etc. Serves as every package. Buy Kellogg's Bran at all grocers. It is the "MASTER" cipe is easily made:

2 cups cut up fruit
1 cup cream, beaten until stiff
1 cup mayonnaise or salad dressing
2 teaspoons gelatine
2 tablespoons cold water
1 head lettuce
French dressing (oil vinegar, salt and pepper)

The fruit may be any seasonal combination. For instance, two oranges, two slices pineapple (canned), one banana, one pear or apple, and a few raspberries, strawberries or cherries. Stir marshmallows are a good substitute, especially very soft ones cut in small pieces.

Soak the gelatine in the cold water and dissolve by placing the cup in hot water. Add the gelatine to cream and mayonnaise, pour over fruit and lightly mix together.

Turn into an ice cream freezer or a watertight mold and pack in two parts ice to one part salt for two hours.

Turn up a serving dish and serve with lettuce dressed with the French dressing.

The dish can be placed in a mold in the ice box and served verycold, but it does not cut into attractive slices as it does when frozen.

FORECAST OF FURS

The leading furriers prophesy that raccoon and natural muskrat will be the two "big" furs for the coming winter. Sports coats (muskrat) have raglan sleeves, with a new square shoulder effect made by a dart, and upstanding collars of single thickness of the fur. A long coat of natural muskrat has the new Jenny collar, which is lined, doubled on itself and tacked. The tendency is to make wraps entirely of one fur, and there will probably be fewer combinations this winter than for some time past.

As ever, the mode in furs lags a year or more behind its sponsor in cloth and silk, and capes give promise of being popularly launched in fur time this season. All the new capes and wraps feature most gorgeous linings—brocades, many of them metallic, rich moleskins, chiffons pressed in velvet, brilliant velvets, and fascinating combinations of chiffon and metal brocades. Hudson seal will continue a leading fur for matrons. A new trimming note is to border a Hudson seal wrap, by inserting diagonally at regular intervals strips of fur running in opposite direction to that of wrap. Mink will be the smartest of smart furs, but of course expensive; a beautiful mink cape has the Jenny collar. Squirrel will be good. There will be a marked return of Alaska seal, and Persian lamb is attracting interest. For neck pieces for is excellent—the entire animal—unless one has a short neck or is very heavy; in that case mink, ermine, squirrel or Hudson seal should be chosen.—Ladies' Home Journal.

WEDDING PRESENTS OF THE RICHEST GIRL IN EUROPE

The marriage of Miss Edwina Ashley to Lord Mountbatten must have caused considerable agitation among some of the invited guests. For what can you give as a wedding present to the richest girl in England? And just one imagines the nobility of England striking its brow and saying wor'dedly, "Now what on earth can we give Edwina? The girl has simply everything she wants."

The King and Queen and the Queen Mother solved the problem by "clubbing together" and presenting the groom with sheer links with the bride's cipher in diamonds and the bride a diamond pendant to correspond. The Prince of Wales showed a touch of originality by presenting the happy pair with a silver globe of the world, with tracks of Australasia and Indiaione inked thereon. Princess Victoria, after what worried cogitations one can only imagine, finally hit upon the "Times Atlas" as a suitable wedding gift.

The groom's gifts to the bride were eastern in their prodigality. He presented her with a diamond and pearl tiara, a diamond and turquoise bracelet and earrings, a diamond bracelet, and a diamond brooch. As for the bride she contented herself simply with giving him a Rolls Royce touring car.

Most of the duplication received by the bride were diamond jewels, and it is to be hoped that the donors bore this in mind and kept the bills. Therewere, however, humbler gifts—a pair of shooting stockings, a telephone directory cover, a paper knife, a boot mark, a leather blotter, a photograph frame, an umbrella, a beaded bag, and so that in a domestic emergency Lord and Lady Mountbatten might not be altogether dependent on the help—an egg cooker. And there was the same inevitable list of gifts that persons of a rigid habit of mind in the lower strata of society are accustomed to order mechanically on receipt of a wedding invitation—clocks, vases water bottles, silver cream jugs, salt and pepper shakers, and the works of George Eliot.

The Honorable Herbert Asquith struck one in a new line and gave the noble bride, "Occasional Addresses," by himself. It is worthy of note that Mrs. Asquith did not make a similar presentation of her "Memoirs." With an unaccountable lapse from electricity, she presented the pair with a leather writing case. And the gallant gift of the Viceroy of India was a spectacle case.

The list of gifts run well into two columns. And after the bride and groom return from their wedding trip, the bride will have a busy morning adding to the Agn Khan, and the Maharajah of Bikaner, and the Rajah of Pudukota, after the manner of the rapturous fashion of brides: "How did you ever guess that a fire-pointed diamond and platinum tiara was the very thing I needed most?"

THE WATER LILY

"So lovely are the flowers that grow Where waters lightly flow,
With upturned chalice in the skies The water lily lies.
Serene and innocent of all Save beauty magical,
Since how white hues bond ne'er can how, Where waters lightly flow."

Her golden heart in the petaled snow—
Where waters lightly flow."

MEN AS CURIOUS AS WOMEN

A woman tourist from Albany said something when she pointed out that curiosity was not a monopoly of the female kind and drew attention to a flagrant form of it in the male. "The same uneasy impulse which prompts the woman and kills the cat is very highly developed in that portion of the male reading public, in the trams which date its reading over the shoulders of a fellow passenger," she said. "Nothing so arouses the curiosity of such men as the sight of a passenger making a memorandum or clipping an item from a newspaper. A man reading a newspaper may inveluntarily share it with his neighbor on the seat, but let him start to clip the paper and the object of those men's curiosity is aroused at once. They crane their necks to see what it was that caught the eye of the man with the pen-knife and those with copies of the same newspaper turn to the page to see what it was."

A WOMAN'S WORK IS NEVER DONE

It Seems So in Many Cases and Good Health Is Always a Necessary

Viscount Saskatchewan.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for weakness of the female organs. I had pains in the back and bearing-down pains in the abdomen and was in a general run-down condition. I could not sleep, rest or eat and was quite ugly in disposition, slight household tasks. A friend told me about your Vegetable Compound and I in my turn truly recommend it, as my severe symptoms vanished and I am better in every way. I do my own work, look after my children and see to chickens, cow and my garden. I also recommend it for young girls who are weak and run down." Mrs. J. Trench of Saskatchewan has taken it and is quite her own gay self again."—Mrs. Fam. Wurz, Viscount, Saskatchewan.

woman who would keep a morbad cotton dress from her wedding trip, for during the winter months, or who would "caretake" a town house during the late summer months, or who would lure must-be "wired"; and the professional caretaker of the working classes is not always satisfactory.

How She Started.

One woman, who is the possessor of a most delightful home, has put the scheme into practical and satisfactory manner. The first thing she did was to have printed a set of cards bearing the "references" from people of her own standing in life, clergy, etc. Armed with these cards she went to one of the best daily papers and received a number of replies. From these she made out a list of those whom she thought would suit the cottage she returned to London and kept the Kensington address open during the week, her household, having the services of a daily maid.

Books and a Dog.

By this means a woman who found the limitations of life on a very small income irksome was enabled to enjoy the sort of spacious atmosphere otherwise unobtainable. Books, for company, a piano on which she could play, pretty furniture, pictures, and the

NEW OCCUPATION FOR WOMEN

London Women Adopt Novel Plan of Becoming Professional Caretakers

London, August 1.—For the woman who owns a tiny income, combined with a love of solitude and a spacious life, there can be no more original or delightful occupation than that of the professional caretaker! Many people who are the fortunate possessors of two or three homes would willingly avail themselves of the services of a gentle-thousand and one little refinements of life from which her small income would have debarred her had it been passed in lodgings or some dreary boarding house, and an "out of doors" which was beautiful.

And there is no reason why two women should not join forces and so caretakers together if the idea of solitude presents a bugy face.

It is an original idea worthy of development in these days when half of the world lives by taking in each other's washings!

LIMERICK IS IN RUINS

Many Wish for Return of the British Forces

Belfast, July 20. (By Mail).—It is understood that desperate fighting is going on in the West of Ireland. Some of the Republicans who deserted were drastically dealt with.

Limerick is in ruins. Many made their way into the Six Counties from the south and west report that food is very scarce and suffering already great. The unfortunate neutrals are longing for the British to come back but dare not say so.

Limerick is almost in ruins through the fighting of the two rival factions, both of which occupies a portion of the city.

The latest news to hand is to the effect that the Republicans in the barracks have been isolated, that one of the barracks was in flames yesterday, and that another of the sides are heavy, 16 being killed and many wounded. It is not possible to say what the end of the campaign is to be seen in all this. Still, a suggestion of one may be hazarded, based on the fact that Republican forces are drawing in their forces to the southwest to hold what they can of Munster, with Cork as their base. It appears that Cork city is in military occupation of the Republicans, all the hotels have been seized for the troop quarters, all buildings of strategic position occupied and fortified for garrisoning purposes, roads and railways blocked, and the whole of the surrounding country put under forced levy for labor and provisions.

A Talk on Poultry

A month of special bare and hand-picked work wonders with "the youngsters "that have been selected as likely candidates for display at the Canadian National Exhibition. Handling beyond all the other birds is the necessary in order to fit a fowl for the show coop and no time should be lost in undertaking the training of the fowl.

The fowl which attract the attention of the judges in a show room are the fowls that have been schooled to parade their perfections when under observation. Without preliminary training there is always danger that the bird that looks its best on the home grounds will be subject to stage fright and appear at its worst when put into a show coop and subjected to the cagle eye of a judge.

Training for the show room starts with the cooping of the bird in a wall coop in the home apartment for short periods at first in order that it may become accustomed to the enclosure. Little and often is the rule of the method employed in this part of the training and the fowl should be made thoroughly accustomed to the change before further training is undertaken.

The next thing is to teach the bird that handling within the coop is not going to hurt it and to do so train it that the approach of strangers will not startle it. By careful handling while within the coop the bird may be taught to pose naturally and even to improve on its natural pose. If the one who has undertaken the training exercises patience and goes about the work with an intelligent knowledge of just what he is aiming at.

The standard of perfection is there guide which should be followed. With a thorough knowledge of what the standard calls for in the breed that is being handled it is quite possible to so train a fowl that it will leave to pose so that its perfections will be displayed to the utmost and its defects of carriage minimized.

For instance, the fowl that erases its neck and thereby flattens its breast will be taught to lower its chest forward. Likewise that bird which holds its tail at too high or too low an angle may be taught to correct its defect if patience is employed. Knock-kneed fowl have been taught to straighten their legs and stand with them well apart by simply placing the open palm between the inside of the thighs until they are in proper position. When this is done daily the fowl learns to expect the lesson on the approach of even a stranger.

Striking under the "chin" will force a fowl's head back to the proper position and when this is frequently done the fowl will learn to do it itself. It is the same with the angle of the tail and even the curve of the back may be improved by proper handling. The fowl that droops its wings will learn to tighten them up if care is exercised to understand what is required of it. In fact wonders may be worked if the trainer has the requisite quantity of schooling so the successful trainer is one that has learned to control himself. If he has done this he can do many things with a fowl that would be impossible for an ill-tempered man to accomplish.

Go to school with your fowl and while you are teaching them you will learn many things yourself, one of which will be that a fowl is not the senseless creature that too many believe it to be and that will appreciate kindness and the thoughtfulness that perceives a toothsome reward when it has done its part well.

Louis Joseph Vance

"But he can't have left the ship!"

"Doesn't seem so, does it?" said the Pinkerton man thoroughly. "All the waiters we made a pretty thorough search, and he can't be found."

"God sent," roared Manvers, "when the captain got word yesterday afternoon that Ilf or Jimmy wasn't what he seemed to be, he was simply overwhelmed back for a detective, and didn't mean Ilf, because—he said—he couldn't get away. I told him he was wrong—and he was!"

VIII

THE WRONG MAN.

When the janitor and the taxicab operator between them had warmed all his luggage upagain, Staff paid and dispaid them and thankfully saw the hall-door close on their backs. He was tired, over-heated and glad to be alone.

Shaking off his coat, he made a round of his rooms, opening windows. These in the back of the apartment looked out on the second-storey elevation upon East Thirtieth Street, between Fourth and Lexington Avenues. Even in the rear (he discovered to his consummate disgust) commanded an excellent view of a very deep hole in the ground swarming with Italian laborers and dotted with steam drills, mounds of broken rock and carters with their teams; she a section of East Twenty-ninth Street was visible through the space that had been occupied not long ago than last spring by a dignified row of brownstone houses with well-kended backyards.

Staff cursed soulfully the noise and dirt caused by the work of excavation, and the back windows to keep out the dust and returned to the front room—his study, library and reception-room in one. With the addition of the hall, all the bedroom in the rear, and a large hall-closet opening from the study, these two rooms comprised his home. The hall was public, giving access to two upper floors, which, like that beneath Mr. Staff, were given up to bachelor apartments. The house was in reality an old- fashioned residence, remodelled and let out by the floor to young men mainly of Staff's ilk: there was an an artist on the upper storey a writer of ephemeral fiction on the third, an architect on the first. The janitor infested the basement, chiefly when bored by the monotony of holding up an imitation mahogany bar over on Third Avenue. His wife cooked abominably and served the results under the name of breakfast to the tenants, who forsaook where they would for their other meals. Otherwise she was chiefly distinguished by a well-exasperating passon for keeping the rooms immediately above and in order.

Staff noted approvingly that although Mrs. Shults had not been warned of his coming, there was no trace of dust in the rooms, not a single sign of furniture but a book out of place.

There was, accordingly and reason why he should stick in such un-modern and inconveniently situated lodgings, that is, aside from his ingrained inclination to make as little trouble for himself as possible. To hunt a new place to live he would be quite as much of a nuisance as to move to it, when found. And he was comfortable enough where he was. He had taken the place some eight years previously, at a time when it rented for a 'song' his means; to-day when he could well afford to live where he would in

LEAGUE LEADERS PLAY TO-DAY

Bowmanville and Cobourg Will Fight it Out at Former Town

Bowmanville, Aug. 4.—President H. Pasmore and Secretary J. G. Nott, of the Central Ontario Baseball League, were on hand Wednesday afternoon to witness the game between Bowmanville and Cobourg, who are tied for first place in the league. Shortly before play commenced a heavy rainstorm set in, necessitating the cancelling of the game. Cancellation was immediately held with league officials and Manager Geo. Paterson and A. C. Kinsey, when it was agreed to play here to-morrow at 4.45 o'clock. Owing to the keen rivalry between the league teams every man occupying the grand-stand when the game was called off.

PETES DEFEAT PORT HOPE

Port Hope, Aug. 3.—Port Hope's bad start in their game against Peterboro today gave the visitors another victory. Peterboro scored five runs in the first inning, and the final score was 8-2. Batteries: Peterboro, Heckman and Swanson; Port Hope, Deer and Chalk.

TWEED WINS CHAMPIONSHIP

Tweed, Aug. 1.—In a Trent Valley League baseball game played here today between the two leading teams of the league, Tweed and Belleville, Belleville were defeated by Tweed by a score of 3 to 1. This practically makes Tweed winners of the league, with five wins and one loss and one protested game to be decided, and one game yet to be played with Frankford.

DEATH REMOVES PROMINENT SPORT

The death of Henry J. Crawford headmaster of University of Toronto Schools, removes one of the prominent figures in Canadian sport. Prof. Crawford was an enthusiastic curler and bowler, and in his student days one of the best soccer players in the province. He encouraged the boys to participate in sports, especially team games, and in hockey and rugby his school had marked success and was known from coast to coast for its activities in athletics, as well as for its scholarship.

TORONTO POLICE HOLDS ANNUAL SPORTS

Toronto, Aug. 3.—Toronto athletes carried home the honors at the annual police games held this week in the land Stadium yesterday afternoon. The local "cops" obtained more than twice the number of points secured by their closest challengers, Montreal. The event was started under the most ideal conditions, but midway in the afternoon a light rain began to fall, but it had no other effect than to chase the officials and municipal celebrities who had crossed the Bay without umbrellas to the protecting grand stand. It did not diminish the ardor of the competitors, and it was the general opinion that yesterday's games were the best held in many years.

Toronto secured 59 points, Montreal 54, Ottawa 9 and Hamilton 4. The splendid exhibitions of Stewart, Dodds and Smith were the main factors in the local team's victory, while Captain Marando of Montreal equal was high-man for the Easterners, and Ed. McLaughlin obtained all of Ottawa's points.

Montrealer on Top

Captain Marando, the lithe, dynamic leader of the Montreal squad, won the individual honors by capturing four straight firsts in the jumps. He won the standing and running broad jumps, the hop, step and jump, and hurdles, for a total of 13 points. Marando has long been ranked in police athletic circles, and is considered one of the best all round men in Eastern Canada. He is the leading spirit of the formidable Montreal aggregation that h. vades Toronto annually for the T.P.A.A. games and his showing of yesterday is only a repetition of his performances in past years.

OSHAWA PEEVED ABOUT STATEMENT

Newspaper.. That.. Calls Heckman "Hired" Flinger Is Criticized

A case where the executive of the C. O. R. L. should act immediately is regarding the head line The Belleville Ontario, a daily newspaper, puts on the article which The Peterboro Examiner recently compiled regarding the work of the Petes' pitcher, Al. Heckman. The Reformer republished this article last week and the story in question is well known to Oshawa fans. The Ontario places the following head on the story: "Heckman a Star Twirler: Belleville gets most hits against Peterboro's hired Ace." If Al. Heckman is a hired flinger, then the league executive should demand a retraction of the statement from The Ontario or else compel them to show grounds for their assertion. — Oshawa Reformer. And if the Oshawa Reformer expects the Executive Committee to follow up every story in this district, then we rise to move that the salary of the executive officers be increased.—Guide.

MUST SELL LIQUOR ONLY TO VENDORS

British Columbia to Take Extreme Measures to Enforce Law

Vancouver, Aug. 4.—In an effort to prevent the operation of any independent liquor dealers, the Provincial Attorney-General has placed the Government men in every liquor warehouse in Vancouver with instructions to seize every consignment of liquor sold out of such warehouses, and to hold them until their destination can be inquired into.

Attorney-General Manson takes the position that the Provincial Liquor Act of 1921 makes illegal the sale of liquor by any but Government vendors, even when liquor thus sold is intended for export.

The order affects more than a score of liquor trading companies operating under legal incorporation and dealing in bonded liquor stocks worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. Most of the liquor sold by them was sold for export to Mexico, and was said to be purchased for ultimate smuggling into the United States.

Rifle Matches Will Be Held in Toronto and Ottawa from August 7th to 18th

The Ontario Rifle Association now officially gives notice regarding rifle matches.

These matches will be held at Long Branch ranges, Toronto, from August 7th to August 11th, and at the new Connaught Ranges, Ottawa, from August 14th to August 18th.

All regularly enrolled Cadets who attend the Toronto meeting on August 7th and make a good score, may be selected by the O.R.A. to go to the Dominion Rifle Association at Ottawa and return there, at their expense. Four cadets will be selected at this meeting and given free transportation. The railways will issue return transportation to cadets at fare and one half rate.

Cadets are given free entry to practically all matches on the Association's programme. The programme of the O.R.A. and the D.R.A. contain some very attractive prizes in connection with the various matches, and particularly the Cadet Challenge which have been arranged especially for cadets.

This is going to be a wonderful opportunity for cadets, especially in connection with the D.R.A. meeting, to see the finest rifle rarely in Canada and on a par with the best rifle rangers in the world, delightfully situated and within a few miles of Ottawa.

They will meet cadets from Vancouver to Halifax in one large cadet camp. In this way friendships will be formed which may continue for a lifetime.

They may bring home some of the coveted trophies and cash prizes offered by the above mentioned Associations. In this connection it will be interesting to know that one cadet from Vancouver returned after last year's matches with $350.00 in cash and two fair more valuable trophies.

The commandant of this camp will be Lieut.-Colonel G. H. Gillespie, of Kingston, who will ensure that cadets are given every comfort and will look after the medical needs, whom all dealings with the D.R.A. will be carried on.

Full information regarding the camp and meetings can be secured from the D.R.A. at Kingston.

A MODERN SOCRATES MAKES NOTES WHEN DYING

Took Fatal Dose of Morphin and Awaited Results—Wrote Down Sensations

Milwaukee, August 3.—Dr. Albert Herschman, former consular agent for Austria here, ended his life by taking twelve one-half grain tablets of morphin and then, as the lethal poison began stealthily to take effect, sat down at his desk in his downtown office and wrote the story of his approaching death.

He set down on paper at intervals just how he felt as the fatal grip of the poison brought him nearer and nearer to what he termed "the great adventure."

"Life is nothing but a street car ride, when you come to the end you got off," he wrote pausing twice while penning his death letter to his wife to inform her that he was "almost finished."

Continuing he wrote:

"The morphine has put me in a condition of absolute mental painlessness. I am not attempting to review my past life and do not care to look into the future, as I believe that death is the end and that there is no hereafter. I deeply regret the mental grief my voluntary parting must bring to those on my beloved ones. My wife is left with an ample fortune, ill-health, however, and that alone will make my step desirable.

"It is now 7.47 p.m., and if I did not know that I have taken sufficient poison to warrant results, I could almost think it from my condition. Aside from fluttering heart action and contracted eye pupils and moderate drowsiness, I feel no results. Still, I cannot make up my mind to swallow the cyanide and have fit a cigar, await my further increase of drowsiness and hope to be soon able to coax me into the inevitable.

"7.52 p.m.—I am here yet, hesitating to take this cyanide. My thoughts become blurred from the morphine and a sensation of supreme quietude reigns in me. If it were not for my beloved wife, who just phoned, I would go on waiting, but I am afraid of too long a delay because a lapsing into unconsciousness might result in being saved by medical assistance. Ten more minutes and then the end by cyanide."

"I am in no manner kept in suspense, just pleasantly and curiously watching developments. Queer enough, my only wish is I had an additional handkerchief so that I could dispose of the surplus perspiration, it being close and my skin clammy from the morphine effects."

The record was signed "Dr. A. J. H."

The former Austrian consul was found unconscious by the janitor, and was rushed to the Emergency Hospital dying in the ambulance on the way.

Dr. Herschman arrived in America from Austria in 1892 and came to Milwaukee twenty years ago. Shortly before the war he was made Austrian consular agent with offices here. It was said that he gave freely on his time and money to aid fellow-countrymen in difficulties. He studied medicine in Vienna and was graduated there.

Dr. Herschman was a classmate at the University of Vienna of Dr. Adolph Lorenz, the famous blood test surgeon, and entertained him on the occasion of the latter's visit in 1922, after he had operated on Lolita Armour in Chicago.

IN "THE LITTLE MINISTER"

Charming Betty Compson gave an admirable portrayal of the role of Lady Babbie in her new Paramount picture, "The Little Minister," at Griffin's last night. The photoplay production is praiseworthy in every particular and enthused all who saw the presentation. Delightfully innocent, Miss Compson was favor by her witchery and sparkle. George Hackathorne is fine as Gavin, "The Little Minister."

There is much thrill in the attack on Thrums and in the weavers battle with the constabulary. Capt. Halliwell, the villian of the piece, is finely played by Nigel Barrie, while Edwin Stevens is a convincing Lord Rintoul. There isn't a dull scene in the picture.

"Peddy" the future screen dog appears to advantage in an original comedy titled "Teddy's Goat," a Travelogue and glimpses of important points in Quebec, and a new chapter of the adventure play "With Stanley in Africa," were also exhibited during the evening.

SPEED REGULATOR TO LIMIT RATE

Rome Is Faced With Difficulty of Curbing Speed Fiends

Rome, August 4.—Confronted with the difficulty of controlling automobiles within the city limits, Rome is considering a device which will prevent the car to which it is attached from travelling over ten miles an hour. The more the driver "steps on it", the slower the car will run.

This automatic speed regulator is the invention of Ernesto Fragnani and Ettore Villa. An indicator is set at the number of miles an hour desired as the maximum speed. Any application of centrifugal force interrupts the working of the motors and the driver attempts to go beyond the limit.

In Rome the narrow streets in the older quarters of the city; the numerous hills, and the inequalities in the pavements of many streets make fast driving particularly dangerous. Drivers are prone to disregard existing speed regulations, so the city authorities are giving thought to making obligatory the use of this automatic speed regulator.

TRUNKS PLAY IN OSHAWA

Walt Grow & Co. leave to-morrow morning for Oshawa where they will do battle with Ben Booth's Boys for 9 innings 'or more if necessary.

The Trunks are getting set for a battle royal in the Industrial town, as 'tis truly said that Oshawa is the hardest team to beat in their own town, in the circuit. They went down before the Trunks here however, andif the locals play the brand of baseball they have been playing, they can beat the proverbial can outshaws right in their own yard.

The Trunks threw an awful scare into the Lindsay Greylands on Wednesday so much the better if he can do both.

last, and nothing in theworld kept them from winning the game. but their gingerless andlistless playing in the 1st three innings.

"Pernic" Millo, who has been ill with rheumatism, and out of the last two games, will in all probabilitybe on deck tomorrow. No one in this city can receive any better than "Pernic", and those who have beenshivering (and mighty capably too) can be used in their former positions, to which they are welcomed, threateningcheering the team.

The schedule says that Gloucester, of Toronto and Boundry, of Cobourg, are the umpires there to-morrow, Remembering the last visit to Oshawa, when Mr. Gloucster was behind the bat, it seems timely that Mills be taken as the Trunk's solicitor even if he cannot play: the Lindsay Greylands on Wednesday so much the better if he can do both.

OIL TANK EXPLODES

Toronto Workman Dies of Burns

Toronto, August 3.—With a terrific roar a huge oil refining tank, on the premises of the British American Oil Company, at the foot of Cherry street, exploded at 10-10 yesterday morning.

Elvin McKee, 36, of 12 Greenwood ave., an employee, who was near the tank at the time, was badly burned and died at St. Michaels' Hospital soon after noon Thursday.

The boiler is the end one of a series of refining boilers located at the approach to the Cherry street bridge, and is elevated about 26 feet over brick foundations, under which an enormous heat is maintained.

At full capacity the boiler holds 1,000 barrels of oil. At the time of the explosion, it is estimated not more than 75 barrels were in the tank.

A huge rent along one side of the boiler had allowed the force of the explosion to discharge several tons of brick, the boiler dropping a few feet into the hits. Fire apparatus responding to the call was of little use in the case of oil, and the fire was allowed to burn itself out under the supervision of waiting firemen in case of emergency. Workmen continued as usual quite close to the burning boiler. Intense heat and steam roaring out from the wrecked boiler was almost deafening to one standing within a few hundred yards of the scene for some time after. At first sight the wreck had every appearance of a huge locomotive in head-on collision. Other boilers alongside were not affected by the force of the explosion and operations were proceeding as usual shortly after.

HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR WASHINGTON

(Montreal Gazette)

The better plan would seem to be the establishment of a Canadian High Commissioner in Washington with powers similar to those exercised by the Commissioners in London and Paris. This would be more in keeping with the true constitutional status of the Dominion and would be no less productive in practical advantages. Some such system as this would meet all requirements of this country, would not lead to unpleasant complications and would impose no strain upon the relation now subsisting between Canada and the rest of the Empire. We are getting along fairly well as things are, the duty of representing an ambassador has worked no hardship and has prejudiced no interest, and the King Government will not be ill-advised if it drops, or, at any rate, modifies, the plan which its predecessors failed to put into effect.

RALPH BONTER IS NOT GUILTY

Trenton Man Is Acquitted on Criminal Negligence Charge

Ralph Bonter, of Trenton, charged with criminal negligence, as a result of his motor car having struck and injured George Seams, aged 11, on Sunday, June 18 last, was found not guilty by His Honor Judge Deroche yesterday afternoon, and acquitted of the charge.

The trial, which commenced at 10.30 a.m., concluded at 3 o'clock after many witnesses had been examined and cross-examined.

Mr. E. J. Butler, counsel for the accused, in addressing His Honor Judge Deroche, pointed out that the car had been guided and driven in a careful manner, but that the hesitation of the boy after he had left the curb to cross the street, caused the accident.

"Two crown witnesses have stated that every effort was put forth by accused to avoid an accident, and also after the accident he rendered all the help that he could," said Mr. Butler, who also explained that Bonter was a sober, industrious man of good reputation, having driven an automobile for four years.

Mr. W. Carnew, who conducted the prosecution, pointed out that young Seams was practically as a result of the accident, and emphasized the fact that extra care should be displayed by motorists on a highway intersected by streets, as in this case. "The evidence of Corbett Hall and Gordon Seams point out that their attention was attracted by this car," said Mr. Carnew, "and there is no evidence of brakes having been applied until the boy was struck." "Bonter drove too fast, and after seeing the boy he was again careless."

Judge Deroche: "This case is very near the border line." Children running out behind cars is a bad practice, yes children and pedestrian must be protected. Motorists should be constantly on the watch driving in a city. Then again the child should not have been left on the street alone at that hour of the evening, at his age, when the traffic is heavy."

The boy had crossed the street diagonally, which was the wrong thing to do.

Bonter was either driving so fast that he could not control the car or else he was so careless he did not know what to do when he saw the child. I believe Bonter was driving faster than he thinks he was.

Had the child stepped out from the curb and were he not obscured from Bonter's view by the other car, then Bonter would be liable, but as the accident happened, I believed accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt and I find him not guilty.

Mrs. J. V. Doyle and Mrs. B. L. Hyman have returned from Alexandra Bay.

BOOTLEGGERS AT POLICE GAMES

The police of Toronto pulled a mean one on the bootleggers' union at Wednesday's games. The bootleggers were not over their stands to get a line on the plainclothesmen who hunt down their hides and stills, but the chief fooled them. He had some of them disguised in tartans, kilts and bagpipes and marching behind Pipe-Sergeant Ross.

BAD BIRCH BEER

Mr. Gordon McCordell, butler baker at the Belleville Creameries, who suffered very severe effects supposedly through partaking of some birch beer, necessitating his treatment in the Hotel Dieu, has sufficiently recovered to enable him to leave with his parents for Ottawa in order to take a few days' rest after his unfortunate experience.

The authorities at the University in borstory were unable to pass any opinion, or carry out an analysis on the tiny quantity of liquid which was submitted to them in this connection. It cannot, therefore, be definitely ascertained whether the liquid which Mr. McCordell drank was as it should have been, or contained some poisonous substance.—Kingston Standard.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM LIGHTNING PRANK

Port Hope Man Injured by Lightning Bolt While Eating Dinner

Howard Lingard, son of Mr. Thomas Lingard, had a thrilling experience yesterday while partaking of his midday meal. Howard is employed on the Provincial Highway and was working near Dale. Shortly after twelve o'clock he was eating his dinner while sitting under a large elm tree, with his back resting against a wire fence. Just as he was in the act of taking a drink of tea, a bolt of lightning struck the tree and passed across to Lingard's right arm as he was holding the cup. His arm became absolutely powerless and the cup was twisted up like a knot and the other half was across the road. Fortunately Mr. Lingard escaped further injury, but he is still suffering from the shock and has no use of his arm.—Guide.

WILL ENCOURAGE FOOD PRODUCTION

Chamberlain Says Britain Will Not Interfere in Farming

London, Aug. 4.—Rt. Hon. Austen Chamberlain, replying to a question in the House of Commons, said the Government had definitely abandoned any policy which involved interference by the state in the farming business. Their present policy, he said, was to encourage home production of food by extending the provisions of agricultural research and education for which an additional sum of £1,000,000 was voted by Parliament last year. It was also hoped to aid agriculture by all-round measures of relief such as were granted this year in connection with the income tax assessment.

Mr. Chamberlain said he hoped this policy would be continued by all parties as the best means of assisting agriculture.

SUDBURY HAS GOOD COAL BUT IT WILL NOT BURN

Story of Coal in North Said to be an Old One—The Natives Have Their "Doots".

Ottawa, August 3.—Revivals of stories of rich coal deposits in the neighborhood of Sudbury have aroused more than passing interest of late in view of the present coal situation, and the repeated statements of Geologist Coyne that the Sudbury area is a potential coal field of no small importance are being taken more seriously now than they were three months ago.

The alleged coal field is not at Sudbury, to be exact. It is in the neighborhood of Larchwood and Chelmsford, small farming villages some thirty-seven miles northwest of the great nickel town, but for commercial purposes the field might just as well be on the outskirts of Sudbury, as that town will reap the benefits of any exploitation of the area. Neither is the coal-field story a new one. Sudburians have heard of it for the past twelve years or more, and they have entertained their own opinions. Privately, most of them consider the "Larchwood coal," as they call it, a worthless commodity. "It is very good coal," they will tell you, "but unfortunately it won't burn."

Sudbury interests have invested considerable capital in the supposed coal area, with no returns to date, while the land gamblers have not been asleep. The underlying reason for the successive revivals of the coal story is supposed to be the plight of a coterie of speculators who bought up large tracts of the land in the Larchwood section in the hope that a coal boom would make their fortunes. The speculators almost to a man have small hopes of realizing millions from any developments of the area.

METHODIST PARLIAMENT MEETS IN SEPTEMBER

Total Membership Shows 450,000 for the Dominion of Canada

Toronto, Ont., Aug. 5.—Total membership of upwards of 450,000 will be reported to the quadrennial General Conference of the Methodist Church in Canada to be held for two weeks in Toronto commencing September 5th next.

The membership of the Church in 1918, the beginning of the present quadrennium was 388,048. Reports received by the conference officers indicate that the gains of the four years after deducting deaths, removals, etc., will be an increase of more than ten per cent.

The Methodist Church Conference next September will receive a most interesting record of notable evangelistic activity, and successful movements along every avenue of Social Service. Methodism, born in a revival, has always been an active evangelistic force in the nations of the world. It is realized that the great central task of the Church is an aggressive campaign whose objective shall be to lead individuals to give their lives into the service of God, and to influence the community and all the nation to accept the principles of the Gospel of Christ in her laws, in her industries, her commerce, her amusements, and every relation of life. The Department of Evangelism and Social Service has throughout the quadrennium now closed emphasized the promotion of the evangelistic spirit throughout the Church urging every minister to be his own evangelist, co-operating with the efficient and members in their evangelistic responsibility to the community, and emphasizing the importance of every Church member being a personal worker. A number of evangelists have also been employed who have rendered most successful help in any congregations. The General Secretary and Field Secretaries have conducted Institutes of Spiritual Conference, and arranged for Summer Schools of Evangelism. The results of much thought and continuity of activity with the object of the accept-ance of Christ by individuals, as well as bettering the community condi-

COULD COUNCIL RUN HOSPITAL?

Women's Christian Association Is Willing To Let Them Try

The following resolution was passed at the regular monthly meeting of the W.C.A. Tuesday afternoon, moved by Mrs. Moyson, seconded by Mrs. Bell:

Resolved by the Women's Christian Association of Belleville in regular monthly meeting assembled, as follows:

1. That the thanks of the Association be extended to the city council for the annual grant of one mill on the dollar for the hospital purposes for this year, and while it will not enable all the necessary work at the hospital to be proceeded with, it will be carefully applied where most needed.

2. That the association at all times welcomes both hospital and inspection from the city council and from the citizens generally as the financial affairs of the hospital and calls attention to the fact that the regular monthly meeting on the first Tuesday of each month and the annual meeting of the association on the second Tuesday in October, are open to the public.

3. That the members of the association individually pay a large portion of the taxes of the city in respect of their real estate and income and are therefore financially as well as personally interested in the utmost economical administration of the affairs of the hospital.

4. That if the members of the city council decide that the hospital can be more efficiently and economically administered by the city council than by the association, the feeling at present among the members of the association is that the Association would be willing to hand over the hospital to the city council to administer.

The ladies had only a few bills to present this month.

NO HIDING STOLEN GOODS IN THESE DAYS OF RAYS

X-Rays Reveal Ring in Prisoner's Body—Iceman Accused of Theft Developed Pains in Stomach While Being Examined

South Orange, N.J., Aug. 5.—Two policemen forced a man before the X-ray in the Orange Memorial Hospital and compelled him to be still while the rays were turned on.

"Yes, gentlemen," said the surgeon, operating the machine, "your prisoner has a round metal object in his stomach. It is bollow. Quite evidently it is a ring."

The prisoner was James Sellito, 23 years old, an iceman, who had been arrested on the charge of Mrs. Donald M. Dugal, 20 Maplewood Avenue. She had taken off her wedding ring while doing housework. She missed it immediately after the visit of the iceman.

When Sellito was first arrested he said he was innocent. On further questioning he admitted that he had stolen the ring, but nothing could induce him to tell what he had done with it. Under cross-examination he developed severe pains in the stomach. He was then rushed to the hospital for some scientific detective work.

THEFT CHARGE IS DISMISSED

Harness and Whip Taken From Stable Through Misunderstanding

Harry Goodman, second hand dealer, here at this morning's Police Court was charged with the theft of one set of double harness, and one whip valued at $8.50. The articles are supposed to be the property of Mr. Campbell Hodgens, and the alleged theft occurred on August first.

Hodgens, who is a licensed carter, testified on the stand that he had rented stalls in Mr. Brason's stable here he had his stable prior to [illegible] ness in question was left in this stable on July 31st at noon, and it is alleged that Goodman took the harness and a whip on August 1st.

Elmer Haines, a teamster in the employ of Hodgens recognized the harness and told of having left them in the stable on July 31st, at noon.

Thomas McAvay, also recognized the harness.

James Babcock who wished to buy the set of harness, saw the harness in the barn and told Goodman that he would like to buy them. Goodman, thinking they were his property, the having harness stored in the barn where he had his stable prior to renting it to Brayson on August 1st.

Joseph Brason, who now has the stable testified the accused took the harness while he was in the barn. The barn had been leased to witness on August first from the accused.

Harry Goodman testified that he thought that the harness belonged to him when Babcock said so and also stated that before taking the harness and whip, he asked Mr. Brason if it belonged to him so as to make sure.

The case was dismissed, Hodgens gets possession of the harness, and other articles.

WILL COAL STRIKE BE SETTLED?

Prospect of Settlement More a Certainty Than a Prediction

Philadelphia, Aug. 4.—The nation-wide coal strike will be settled Monday, it was predicted here today.

The prediction was made by an independent operator who declined to permit his name to be used for publication. He has a full knowledge of the coal industry, and has experience of several strikes.

One leading Ohio operator said the prospect of a settlement was more of a certainty than a prediction. He said the miners and a substantial proportion of the operators were nearer a mutual understanding than at any time since the strike became effective.

Operators and miners of the central competitive district will meet in Cleveland. A majority of the central tonnage will be represented.

Operators speaking for at least 65 per cent. have accepted President John L. Lewis' invitation to a peace parley. This was said at district headquarters to be a conservative estimate. The big vein operators association have accepted, it was announced, additions considerably to the high hopes for settlement.

Lewis will go to Cleveland the Cleveland meeting from any angle. He admitted, however, that the Pittsburg vein operators have accepted his invitation. It is known that during the last few days he has received several telegrams of acceptance from operators in the central competitive field. He refused to give the names of these operators or to indicate what part of the field they represent. "I may discuss the situation late today or tomorrow," he said.

DISASTROUS FIRE AT SUTTON

Stores and Houses Burned Entailing a Loss of $50,000

Sutton, Ont., Aug. 4.—A serious fire broke out this morning about 2 o'clock in the new bake shop of Burkholder and Lovell, completely demolishing the store. The flames spread with exceptional rapidity, catching in the store and residence of G. Holder, tinsmith, also two stores and residences attached of D. Firnick, burning all to the ground. The fire gained to such extent, help was called from Beaverton and Newmarket, the latter arriving in quick time, but too late to render assistance in checking the spread of the flames. It was only with hard and brave fighting by bucket brigades and new fire pump very recently purchased by the town, which saved the building occupied by the Bank of Nova Scotia, located at one side of the fire and Brust's garage on the other. The damage is estimated at between $50,000 and $60,000.

PRICE OF GAS DROPS

Over-Production the Cause

Toronto, August 4. — Gasoline throughout the Dominion was reduced six cents per gallon to-day in Canada, and is now selling at 31 cents wholesale and 36 cents retail. Retined oil was lowered one cent, the new wholesale price being 20 cents a gallon.

The cuts are the natural result of recent declines in the price of crude oil. A prominent Toronto oil man said last night that crude oil prices had dropped because of over-production in the mid-continent field, and that there production until consumption kept pace with it.

IRELAND MAY SOME DAY GIVE ENGLAND A LICKING

But Mercifully Postponed the Event for a While—Says Lloyd George Running a Three Commandments—All Framed to Keep L.-G. in Power—Peer to Speak Tonight In Auditorium

Montreal, Aug. 4.—Two prominent members of the Irish republican movement are now in Montreal. They are Rev. Father Flannigan and Captain O'Connor. Interviewed this morning, Father Flannigan expressed pleasure at seeing its representative, and stated that he was willing to speak but did not know how free a country Canada was, and how much of his interview would go to print.

"He is a tall, strongly built man with a keen sense of humor. "People never fight without counting the cost," he began reflectively, "except under one condition only—that is to defend themselves against an aggressor, even though they be weaker. Then they will fight with infuriated bitterness. So it is in Ireland to-day. Ireland is fighting against an aggressor. She will continue fighting to the last man to gain her freedom.

"The situation is simply this. England, United States, are also guerrilla at the same time using a disguise of freedom. It is bad enough to be ruled by an outsider, but to have to defend themselves against a country that is [illegible] between the North and South of Ireland, had it not been instigated by soldiers. The present unrest really began before the war with Sir Edward Carson's military campaign, when he started drilling Ulster men to fight against Home Rule.

Reference to Lloyd George.

When the latter timidly mentioned Lloyd George, expecting a volley of indignation, a quiet, ironical smile was forthcoming.

"Lloyd George is running a whited sepulchre—fair on the outside, but the inside is rotten, concealing dead men's bones. The Liberals are the white-wash and the Tories, who are the power in England,—are the dead men's bones. Lloyd George is a very clever man, but he's an opportunist. He has three commandments, thus they are:

"1. Thou shalt keep Lloyd George Premier of England.

"2. Thou shalt do everything to keep him there.

"3. Thou shalt do nothing that will tend to remove him."

"He has kept those commandments diligently?" was asked.

"As well, of course, as he can. It is not so easy to keep commandments," humorously.

"Especially the ten," Captain O'Connor put in, and Father Flannigan admitted "they were a bit hard to remember."

"Strategic Unity."

"Another of England's excuses for not setting freland free is that England and Ireland are strategic units, that, Ireland freed, might form an alliance with some other country, say the United States, and also prove a threatening menace to England."

"Which would not be improbable?" was asked.

"Which would be most probable," emphatically. "England would have to keep on the best behaviour. What could she do with her five millions of people as against twenty-five millions? Some day she said, "we may be b'g enough to whip England ourselves, but for a little while, I'm afraid, I'll have to postpone that ambition," he laughed.

Praises De Valera.

Father Flannigan spoke of De Valera as a big serious, sincere, far-seeing man; of strict character, very cool and deliberate in his statements. When it was suggested that the big Republican might have adopted Lloyd George's own commandments, Captain O'Connor and Father Flannigan were very emphatic in their denial.

Conditions in Ireland are pitiful they said. The slums in Belfast are the worst in Europe. Every one of the Republican men driven out of work in Belfast to-day, according to Captain O'Connor.

FRANCE DEMANDS PAY IN FULL

German Quibbling Will Not Be Tolerated by French Citizens

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Aug. 5.—The French Government today ordered into effect the penalties against Germany for failure to pay in full the instalments on the pre-war debts to French citizens.

Paris, Aug. 5.—Germany's reply to the latest French note demanding payment in full of the instalments on pre-war debts owing to French citizens, was delivered to the Foreign Office at noon this morning by Poincare, after a quick perusal of the document, gave an order, the purport of which was not announced.

Paris, Aug. 5.—The penalties concern German properties sequestered in France. Certain payments and indemnities under the arbitration agreements reached between France and Germany in August and September, 1921. No military action is involved.

Berlin, Aug. 5.—The German Chancellor Wirth will not yield to Poincare's demands despite repeated threats that France will enforce further sanctions should Germany fail to keep its promise to pay by August 15. The Cabinet is determined to maintain the position that Germany is unable to pay more than one-fourth—that is, 10,000,000 gold marks per month.

The spokesman of the coalition and of the opposition parties are unanimous in the exception of the Communists—are all supporting the Government in this attitude.

It is now note to Poincare, however, Wirth will point out that Germany is willing to consider any other proposition that the allied powers may have. It appears that Wirth is trying to keep France from committing herself to a definite decision before Poincare goes to London to confer with Lloyd George. He hopes that the conference with Lloyd George may help to bring about a practical solution of the whole question of reparations payments.

In the meantime the German Government has ordered the Reichsbank to stop buying foreign securities to be used as reparations credits. This buying has already helped to send the mark down to 1-2 cent. In order to stop is explained as an attempt to stop further decline. The purchasing of bankers here, however, is that the depreciation of the mark will continue unless the London conference actually results in a real moratorium for Germany next week.

NEVER AGAIN.

There is more than one kind of uplifter. Indeed they are of all breeds, kinds, varieties, shapes and sizes. They are part of our religion, our civilization, our ego. The uplifter is much like a grass or plant. Now take the genus Bepteirium. This includes the hopelessly good for nothing Jos Pewweed, the nasty and disagreeable White Snake root and Boltonet. They all mean well and they do try to make a hit, and there is only one of them that ever gets anywhere, and that is Boltonet. It is not at all well known in this generation as it ought to be. It is familiar to only grandfathers who, living close to nature, were natural physicians. If anyone in the community is sick and it was obvious that a sweat was the proper caper, grandma would pour some boneset tea down his throat, and it was a caution to snakes if he didn't sweat before the sun went down. Malignant people sometimes use the expression, "I will make you sweat for this!" They have simply brutalised this kindly expression of our grandmothers, "I will make you sweat with this." They are the bashful old singers and sayings of our ancestors being corrupted and debased in an irreverent age!

There is one kind of uplifter who means real well and his efforts are to be commended, but every now and then and once in a while he falls down. The uplifter in the great city goes out—the slums—so called—and dog catches a bunch of slum children and peddles them out to the farms in the country for a couple of weeks. There he young ones in the crowded sections of the city who don't want to go to Mimico or out to the country. Each of them is a place ill discomfort, restraint. They must have used a net to get Skinnay, who first saw the light about ten years ago on the lower end of Simcoe street. I never had the pleasure of visiting him in his house, but you have got to go up or down or thru a lane—I forget which—to reach it. Skinnay an ex-dog catcher who had turned uplifter captured Skinnay and towed him out to Gumbo, for he never came willingly. The Tomrus Teeples had volunteered to take one waif in for a summer vacation, but they never got to do it again. "If they had accommodated a young Bengal tiger or half-grown calf they would have been better off. Not that Skinnay was dangerous, or mischievous or anything like that. He felt that he was expected to be grateful for the unpardonable outrage which was being implicated on him, and he did his best, but he was out of his element altogether. In the first place mosquitoes pretty nearly et him up the first night. He felt much like one of the early Christians who had been thrown to the lions. The terrifying silence that reigned around the Teeples place filled his soul with misgiving and dread. Then silences were punctured every now and then by the noises. Every now and then the soundless silence would be shattered by a hideous uproar which nearly stiffed him with fear. It was only a cat that Mister Teeples had took off the cow the day before with the view to weed it, and every time the calf woke up he put up a holler that would make the siren of a tugboat sound like a blue bird fledgling cheeping in its nest. About two o'clock in the morning a horse stuck his head over the orchard fence and emitted a noise like to the noises some families try to do Andelavian world. Just about then ole Mis' Teeples passed the word that she was sure there was a pig in the garden. An ole Mister Teeples and Mister Teeples and young Mister Teeples and the hired man all skinnied downstairs and proceeded to extract the pig, and of all the hollerin' an' goodin' an' spankin' an' grunttin'—and Skinnay crawled under the bed! In a bunch of lilacs just under his window were a select party of young roosters who were just learning to crow 'long about half-past two a.m. Young rooster No 1 essayed to spoil the radiant morn, but he only emitted a soul-distrubing croak which sounded like nothing in the heavens above or the earth beneath of the waters under the earth, for be it known not a rooster can crow properly only after long and careful practice. All the other young roosters woke up and started in and produced a chorus that would curdle the blood of a man-eating tiger.

As soon as he found out which direction Toronto was in, Skinnay quit the premises the next day. He got home to his sheepway this afternoon, fly-bitten and foot sore, but happy. He sat on his grandmother's doorstep and saw the parted wagon dash up and raid the bootlegrers opposite. The dead wagon took something out of the house next door and went off to the Morgue with it.

Skinnay went inside and took a big drink of cold tea.

"Gee! but this is the life!"

OFFICERS NET MAN AND STILL

Indian, When Surprised, Leaves House, Taking Still With Him

A brisk chase between License Inspector William Nugent of this city and William Beaver, a Mudoc Township Indian, before breakfast this morning decided the 500 yard championship foot race for that Township. Inspector Nugent won out, and arrived back in the city early this morning with the trophy (a complete still) and his rival, who will not be given the freedom of this city, but who is now in the tells here.

Inspector Nugent Provincial Constables F. Hughes and R. Davis, A. C. Mason and W. J. Cox of the Inland Revenue Department, motored out to a house about 1½ miles this side of Mudoc village. In search of a "distiller."

Thinking that the man had sought refuge in this house, Nugent jumped from the car, while in motion and made a descent upon the house. One of the nine children announced the arrest as follows, "Mother, Mr. Nugent fit here." Mother appeared at the door and informed the officer that the man in question was not there. Then lo and behold you, enter the "cause of the hour. (left upper entrance); but not the man wanted, carrying a complete still, nice and hot just off the stove. Such, looked at the other and then the villian evidently having forgotten his cue, went off the stage, but it was not time to ring the curtain down. The villian left via the stage door and the Inspector took chase. The next scene was to be an out door scene on the hills. The man with the still had to heavy a handicap, however, so he spilled the liquid as he galloped along, but the grass did not take fire. Finally as the distance between the contestants grew less, the still was heaved into the bushes, and the race continued. Finally Beaver was overtaken and captured after a battle, but it was necessary to give him a love tap on the "sky piece" before he submitted to arrest.

The party motored back to Belleville, and a number of spectators are inspecting the contraption in the police station this morning. The mash can resembles a huge oil can with a metal pipe, and worm, and savoured strongly of molasses. Now we know why the Bootlegger's Union have as their arms, an oil can painted on their chest.

Beaver was remanded for one week.

AN ANGLER'S PARADISE

Two hundred miles north of Toronto and one hundred and seventy miles west of Ottawa, is situated Algonquin Park, where the fishing this year is better than it has been for some time. Great catches are being made—black bass running three and four pounds, speckled trout three pounds, and salmon trout up to twenty-five pounds. The park is ideal for the camper and canoe cruiser, and good hotel accommodation makes it the popular spot for the summer vacationist, who does not like to rough it. Ask any Canadian National-Grand Trunk Agent for illustrated publication telling you all about it, or write to C. E. Horning, D. P. A., G.T.R., Toronto, Ont.

HARY MILES MINTER, HERBERT RAWLINSON AND HAROLD LLOYD AT GRIFFIN'S

MONDAY

"Moonlight and Honeysuckle"—what more could one ask of Dan Cupid? Add Mary Miles Minter and you have an irresistable combination. Which goes to show that Realart certainly knew what they were doing when they secured this wonderful stage success for the latest vehicle to bring this inimitable star before the public. On the big double feature program at Griffin's this Monday to Wednesday, this enticing comedy-drama will be shown. The unusual complications that arise from Mary's two trial engagements offer unlimited opportunities for real humor.

Monte Blue and Gee Oliver, who have not appeared with Miss Minter since the release of "A Cumberland Romance," hoary a year ago are again seen in support of the star. Needless to add, Monte Blue is again the victorious lover of the little heroine.

"The Scrapper"—what a snappy sound has the title of Herbert Rawlinson's latest Universal dramatic vehicle, which is the second five reel feature offering on the same program. And the story's just as snappy as the title—a smashing yarn of a young Irishman right out of college who doesn't feel there's any need for worrying about anything so long as he has brains and his two fists.

Harold Lloyd is appearing on the same program in "I Do," considered by many the funniest 2 reel comedy he has ever produced, and which has been booked for a second exhibition at Griffin's by popular request.

"THE LITTLE MINISTER" GREAT

Betty Compson's new Paramount starring vehicle, "The Little Minister" which has delighted large audiences on Thursday and Friday evenings at Griffin's is a great production.

This capable young star is charming as Lady Babbie and she brought to the role the gypsy-like character which it demands. All who have read the novel by Sir James Barrie, or seen the play in which Maude Adams scored so decisively several years ago will be delighted with this picture. Miss Chatterson is ably supported by George Hackathorne as Gavin, the little Minister and Noel Barrie as the baleful Egyptian Halliwell. The entire cast indeed is beyond criticism and the settings Kirk and so on, were admirably executed.

A Century comedy with "Teddy" the famous screen dog in the stellar role, a beautiful Travelogue, and the fifth and last chapter of "With Stanley in Africa" featuring George Walsh is being exhibited on the same program. The entire program is being exhibited a Griffin's tonight for the last time.

AIRPLANE CRASHES INTO AIR BARN

Passenger Hurt When Machine Crashes Into Boissevain Barn

Boissevain, Man., Aug. 3.—Milton Smith, of this town, was severely injured, and Hunter Smith, pilot, escaped unhurt when the latter's aeroplane crashed into the horse barn at the fair here today. Milton Smith, who was a passenger, was pinned under the machine, and was unconscious when rescued. His head was badly smashed and his nose split open from end to end. Before the machine struck the barn several peasants in the path had narrow escapes from being hit by the wings.

CYCLONE SWEEPS COUNTRYSIDE, SHEAVES LIFTED INTO THE AIR

Trees Uprooted and Fences Blown Down—Crop Is Destroyed—Hail Fell to Great Depth at Malton—Could Be Shovelled

Brompton, Ont., Aug. 4.—The east side of the county suffered from a cyclone on Wednesday afternoon that caused heavy damage to property, but fortunately not to life or limb.

Two white funnel-shaped clouds moved along the earth line east, struck off towards the northeast, and passing into the township of Toronto Gore, their fury being fairly well spent by the time they left Chinguacousy.

Sheaves of oats on Nelson Nixon's farm were raised 100 feet in the air and whirled to the next farm, while his fences were blown down and trees uprooted, the entire roof, rafters and all, were taken off William Maltby's barn and a huge hole scooped in the haymow, while fences were blown down and apple trees rooted out from the ground. At Arthur Kitt's farm the ridgeboard was blown off the house and the sweet clover scattered.

On Al. Baldock's farm the entire oat crop is destroyed, being carried high in the air, and then thrown with force against a fence where it was threshed out. His binder was smashed and huge elm trees torn into splinters. At this point one of the clouds appeared to meet a peculiar cloud formation, and poured out dust smoke and bright sparks.

Edgar Morrison had his hay stack blown down and sheaves of barley scattered, but no actual harm was done. Malton had a terrific thunderstorm, hail falling until it could be shovelled. The home of Mrs. Gregory was struck by lightning, the chimney being shattered. Heavy rain also fell during the storm. In the Gore, when the wind struck the line, a man in a truck was seen to have a severe struggle to keep the road. A strange part of the occurrence was that people working in the fields just outside the edge of the storm felt nothing of it, and watched the mad doings of the wind as through a window.

LIFE ON BOARD STRANDED SHIP

N. T. Bowman Tells of Clever Removal of Passengers —Many Trips Without Accident

Toronto, Aug. 4.—Amongst passengers on board the steamer "Rapids Prince" which recently went aground on a rocky ledge in the Lachine Rapids, was N. T. Bowman, of Toronto, well-known advertising manager of The Evening Telegram, who on a business trip had boarded the vessel at Prescott. His story is:

"Just as we were about to enter the only channel of the last eddy of the rapids, which is about 40 feet wide, owing to the steering chain breaking the river pilot was unable to turn the ship to the right and enter the channel, and the current carried the boat through the upper reach of the rapids. The boat swerved to the left and finally lodged on a comparatively flat surface in the bed of the river, with the bow pointing toward Heron Island, which is a half mile from where the vessel was stuck.

No Panic on Board.

"Owing to the fact that the majority of passengers of the steamer were tourists and not, of course, familiar with the St. Lawrence and rapids, they at first thought that the ship was taking its regular course, and therefore no panic ensued. The captain and pilot were very prompt in announcing to the passengers that their boat was firmly lodged on the rock and that they were perfectly safe.

Sea Tradition Upheld.

"During the night the staterooms were given over to the women and children and the food conserved, the women and children were given dinner, and it was announced that the men would be given breakfast the following morning. The men had makeshift quarters on the floor of the saloon.

"Mr. Norcross, vice-president of the Canada Steamship Lines, arranged that night to have Monsieur Hilaire, a clever talisman, superintend the taking off the boat next day of the some 450 passengers. This was accomplished by lifting over the side twelve persons into each lifeboat, which was lowered, a rope attached to the capstan and by pulling the boat out of the swift current into quieter waters.

46 Trips by Lifeboat.

"During that day over 46 trips were made by lifeboat, from 8 a.m., Monday morning, till six o'clock at night, great credit being due Monsieur Hilaire, Cardinal and helpers, who worked unceasingly until every passenger was safely landed.

"The assistant steward, Charles Ross, was returning to the "Rapids Prince" when the lifeboat swerved suddenly, and he fell out and vanished in the swift current."

ENGLISH LIGHTWEIGHTS AFTER BENNY LEONARD

Hope never dies in the breast of the optimistic Charles Harvey, and he rises to declare that he will import the whole British empire. Next year the S.S. Cedric brings the boy that Charley firmly asserts will surely beat Benny Leonard for the lightweight title. Teddy Marchant is the latest acquisition in Charley's monopoly of champions, and the British boxing experts not only say he is the best boy in Great Britain, but the best developed since the days of Matt Wells and Freddie Welsh. Marchant should have no trouble in getting a match with Leonard after he has proven his worth, as Benny seems to have used up all the native contenders, and this may save the champion his long-promised journey across the big pond.

DRINKS BIRCH BEER.

IS SERIOUSLY ILL

Kingston, Aug. 3—Following the drinking of a portion of a bottle of birch-beer at a local store, Gordon McCaskell, a young man whose home is in Ottawa, and who was home in Otat in Ottawa, and who was employed at the Belleville Creamery here, was taken violently ill and removed to the Hotel Dieu. He was delirious for several hours but is now gradually recovering. The doctors stated that the symptoms were similar to ptomaine poisoning. The bottles were secured and arrangements were made for an analysis at Queen's University, but the analysis could not be carried out, owing to the fact that there was not sufficient beer left in the bottle.

VISIONS OF POWER.

Sir Adam Beck is an indomitable visionary. With the Chippawa power canal not yet completed he has begun to dream dreams of a still greater project across the Province. Peninsula is the shape of it canal twice the size of the Chippawa-Queenston. Starting at Galt the other day, Sir Adam said:

"We are quite ready to finance a new 50-foot canal from Niagara to Queenston. That would be double the Chippawa canal. It would make available two and a half million horse-power to the province of Ontario. We have most of the property bought. Then we have a million and three-quarters horse-power. The next canal would cost a hundred million. Don't let that figure frighten you. We have 235 millions liabilities now and we have no defaults, but there is always propaganda against us and misrepresentations."

This is a bold dream, and there will be those who will be ready with the old jibe, "Behold the dreamer!" It might be well to be quite sure of the success of the Chippawa before starting another canal of the same type. In the meantime the people of Eastern Ontario would be greatly obliged to Sir Adam if he would come down their way and do a little dreaming along the smaller rivers which are running to waste, and which might be harnessed up for supplying the needs of the less populated districts. We will all stand at the back of the big schemes where they are proved to be necessary, but let not the big things blind us to the smaller ones that might be done with a comparatively minute expenditure and provide immediate relief for our industries. Sir Adam could attend to these in his spare time while the big Niagara scheme is being worked out.

HALTING ZIONISM.

If the return of the Jews to Palestine is necessary for the fulfilment of Prophecy, the way of fulfilment seems to be very difficult. The Jews are not the only people who lay claim to the Promised Land. The Arab, who has stayed on the ground for thousands of years and has never wandered like the earth like the Jew, is putting in a strong claim, and he intends to fight against the handing over of Palestine to the ing wage.

HERE AND THERE

CONSTANTINOPLE.

The present threatened attack on Constantinople by the Greeks brings again into the limelight that ancient capital of the Modern world. It is interesting to recall at this moment a speech made in the Senate of Canada by Senator C. P. B. Casgrain, of Montreal, on the occasion of the installation of the treaty of peace. He quoted Article 246 of the treaty, as follows:

"Within six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, Germany will restore His Majesty the King of the Hedjaz, the hereditary Koran of the Caliph Othman, which was removed from Medina by the Turkish authorities, and is stated to have been presented to the ex-Emperor William II.."

Within the same period Germany will hand over to His Britannic Majesty's Government the skull of the Sultan Mkwawa, which was removed from the Protectorate of German East Africa and taken to Germany."

The Greatest Moslem Ruler.

The importance of and reason for this singular article was shown to be that the King of the Hedjaz, who is the Caliph, has in his territory the two sacred cities of Medina and Mecca, the goal of the pilgrimages of the Sons of the Prophet. The Kingdom of the Hedjaz is to the east of the Gulf of Suez and the Red Sea, and Aden is on one side of it and Perim on the other. As most people are aware, King George is the greatest ruler of Moslems that there is in the world or probably the greatest there ever was. There are under his shadow every over 100,000,000 of Mahometans or Moslems. There are 62,000,000 of them in India alone.

Strength of 70,000,000 Mahometans of India in the rich.

By proclaiming those people the tranquility of India is set and the most powerful—the employers of labor, etc., and if Great Britain has the Mahometans of India in sympathy with her, she need never fear any trouble in India. The Afghans are also concerned, because Afghanistan is largely peopled by Moslems.

Senator Casgrain's Prediction.

"Let me," Senator Casgrain went on, "make a prediction." The old city of Constantinople has been in the possession of the Turks ever since 1453, under the name of Stamboul, and all that time it has been the seat of the Father of the Faithful; although it is not a sacred city. I predict that the Moslems will never allow the Turks to be driven from Constantinople. The Sultan will remain in Constantinople, and those who will keep him there are people whom we know very well. I do not blame them for doing so, because, after all, the British Empire must look after its own interests just as any other empires must do.

"Consequently the Sultan will be. I think, allowed to remain in Constantinople. To a Catholic you might as well try to drive the Pope from Rome as to a Moslem to drive the Father of the Faithful from Constantinople."

THE SONG OF THE SEA.

William Watson.

Even as one voice the great sea sang. From out
The great heart of the waters round about,
Swell'd as a bubbling fountain silverly
The overflowing song of the great sea;
Until the Prince by dint of hearsing long,
Divined the purport of that mystic song;
(For so do all things breathe articulate breath
Into his ears who rightly hearkeneth);
And, of indeed he heard the harmony
Aright, in this wise came the song of the sea.

"Behold all ye that stricken of love do lie,
Wherefore in manacles of a maiden's eye
Lead ye the life of bondsmen and of slaves?
Lo, in the caverns and the depths of Me
A thousand mermaids dwell beneath the waves;
A thousand maidens meet for their have I,
Ev'n I, the virgin-hearted cold chaste sea.

"Behold all ye that weary of life do lie,
There is no rest at all beneath the sky
Save in the nethermost deepness of the deep;
Only the silence and the midst of Me
Can still the sleepless soul that fain would sleep;
For such, a cool death and a sweet have I,
Ev'n I the crystal-hearted cool sweet sea.

"Behold all ye that in my day do lie,
To love is sweet and sweetest still to die,
And woe to him that laugheth me to scorn!
Lo, in a little while the anger of Me
Shall make him wonder the day that he was born;
For in my hour of wrath no ruth have I,
Ev'n I the tempest-hearted, pitiless sea."

THINGS TO REMEMBER.

"What seems to grow fairer to me as life goes by is the love and grace and kindly room of it; and the wit and merry jest and grandeur of knowledge—grand as knowledge is—but just the laughter of little children, and the friendship of friends, and the cozy talk by the fireside and the sight of flowers and the sound of music."—John Richard Green.

PRESS OPINIONS

CANADA'S TOURIST TRADE

(Ottawa Journal.)

The other day something was said in these columns of the vast revenue avail able to Canada in the development of our tourist industry. Switzerland has equipped us for the pleasant business of entertaining tourists and holiday-makers from less favored lands; we have only to make our attractions more widely known and to solicit foreign pleasure-seekers and natur-lovers of our desire and ability to care for them when they come to us.

Something worth while in the way of spreading information about our attractions has been done by the National Parks Branch of the Department of the Interior in the publication of a little booklet called "Through the Heart of the Canadian Rockies." It is now being circulated. It is a very fine description of the beauties and wonders of the mountain ranges of Canada and the great National Parks.

It is to be hoped that through some of the periodicals agencies of the Government—perhaps that of the Department of Trade and Commerce could do it—the booklet may be given wide circulation in the United States and Great Britain. It is a splendid advertisement of its kind for the country. Typographically it is a credit to the Department, the printing and illustrating being fine examples of skilful workmanship.

FUEL EMERGENCY

(Ottawa Journal.)

The principal function of the Dominion Government in the coal situation must be that of creating a good effect on the United States or Great Britain to secure to this country as large allowances of coal as possible. The Government, in emergency, should be able to command such influence as could not otherwise be brought to bear, either in having reasonable allotments of American coal made to this country, or in providing facilities for the shipment of coal from the Old Country.

The Government has been slow to act. It was generally made sure that a serious situation was in prospect, and something useful might have been done before this. However, the Government has created an advisory fuel committee and it is to be assumed that it will now make up as much as possible for lost time.

As the Government holds responsibility for safeguarding the public in the situation rests more directly on the municipal and provincial administrations. The municipal councils and provincial governments must see to it that their communities are supplied with fuel in one way or another. And through their assistance and the help of the Dominion Government, the people of Canada should be protected against undue hardship during the coming winter

AGNES MacPHAIL CHANGES HER MIND

Fifteen Hundred U.F.O. Picnickers Disappointed By Her Absence

Niagara Falls, Ont., Aug. 3.—Fifteen hundred people were disappointed at Queen Victoria Park yesterday afternoon at the non-appearance of Miss Agnes Macphail, M.P., at the U.F.O. picnic. Miss Macphail's substitute Mrs. Harold Currie, Middlesex, President of the U.F. W.O. The principal speaker was H. H. Halbert, M.P., North Ontario, who gave a rousing speech in defence of the farmer in power. Much of his speech was devoted to caustic criticism of the leading newspapers of Ontario. He did not mention them by name, although claiming that the Drury Government is being consistently misrepresented.

Mr. Halbert gave an outline of the history of the Farmers' movement from the formation of the Drury Government to the Federal election, and the recent election in Manitoba. He spoke strongly against protection.

The speaker claimed that the Farmers were responsible for the recent trimming of the C. P. R. at Ottawa. It was the free ride that the C. P. R. ever gave to Ottawa seeking privilege, he said, and went away without them. The army of emancipation is on the march, said the speaker. It now numbers 65 in Ottawa, and it will say to all, "We have come to upset the tables of the money changers."

Mr. C. F. Sawyer, M. P. P., Niagara Falls, also spoke, and gave the newspapers some hard knocks for alleged misrepresentation of the Drury Government.

His Mystery

"It's queer," remarked Jinks.

"What is?" asked Brinks.

"That with all the people looking for and borrowing trouble I can't get rid of mine," replied Jinks.—Detroit Free Press.

McLAUGHLIN ANNOUNCES 15 NEW MODELS FOR 1923

New Series More Beautiful and More Complete Than Ever And Represent Greater Value For The Motor Buyer's Dollar

Unusual interest is attached to the McLaughlin-Buick announcement for 1923 because it reveals the prevailing tendency of Canadian automobile manufacturers. Two new closed models have been added to the line,—Master Six Five Passenger Touring Sedan and Master Four Five Passenger Touring Sedan. These two new models together with the Master Six Sport Touring and the Master Six Sport Roadster which were put on the market recently make the McLaughlin-Buick line a most complete line of Canadian-built motor cars.

Six new models 'constitute the Master Six line, viz: Five Passenger Touring Cars, Coupes, Sedans, and Touring Sedan; while the Master Six Series comprises nine new models, in Roadster, Sport Roadster, Five and Seven Passenger Touring, Sport Touring, Coupe, Sedan and Touring Sedans. In grace of line and finish, in completeness of equipment in mechanical excellence, the 1923 Models of Canada's Standard Car surpass all previous products turned out by the McLaughlin Motor Car Ltd., and set a new high standard for Canadian-built cars of quality.

Notwithstanding the fact that many writers on automobile topics have been predicting an increase in prices, McLaughlin-Buick Cars for 1923 "in spite of many improvements and added equipment will sell for considerably less than corresponding 1922 models. The new prices just announced have been made possible due to the export business taken on in recent months and anticipated heavier domestic production, enabling the manufacturer to spread his overhead expense over a much greater production, effecting savings in the cost of the product.

A glance at the Beautiful Master Six Models reveals some desirable features which will enhance the value to the owner. The cars are lower. The symmetry of line. One piece crown fenders of very handsome design are used. A double bar nickel-plated bumper, together with the drum type head lamps, the attractive diagonal radiator filler cap, and the nickel beading on the radiator core, on all Sixes, except 54 and 55, present a most attractive front view of the new series. There is also a nickel beading on the cowl at the rear end of the hood. The open models here are attractive with instrument board, and a new walnut steering wheel, and walnut finishing door trims. The remaining boards have attractive aluminum scuff plates and foot scraper. These with many other improvements make the 1923 Series far in advance of accepted standards.

The Six Master Four models are also most attractive, single bar nickel-plated bumper is standard. The bodies and tops have been entirely redesigned. The longitudinal top and the crown fenders add greatly to the appearance of the Master Four. Drum type head lamps and parking lights on cowl are a new feature. There are many improvements and mechanical changes which will place the McLaughlin-Buick Master Four even higher in the estimation of motorists who want an efficient beautiful car at an economical price.

McLaughlin-Buick Master Six Model 23-4—The New Five Passenger Touring Sedan

This new model is a stately and substantial touring vehicle de luxe for it was designed primarily for cross country touring and every detail of its construction inclines to the demand for such service. The fitted trunk at the rear takes care of the baggage so that the inside of the car is left free for the use of passengers. There would be in Canada a wide demand for so unique a model as this new Touring Sedan.

To play an accompaniment to the human voice is surely a test of a mechanical instrument.

Make this the test of your player piano.

Accompany a singer with the Williams, and as the voice rises and falls note the unbelievable ease of augmenting and softening the tone.

And also note this important exclusive feature of the Williams. The key can be transposed readily to suit the voice of the singer.

Until you actually play a Williams Player you are missing one of the greatest of all musical pleasures.

CARE OF UMBRELLAS

A good umbrella is a somewhat costly investment, yet how few people take any trouble to preserve this useful article from premature decay.

A wet umbrella, even if only a little damp, should be opened wide and left in a room to get thoroughly dry. The wires should be oiled at the hinges occasionally with some light machine oil to prevent rust. To avoid soiling the cover only a tiny drop of oil must be applied to each joint at one time. Little and often will give the best results. The lid should be applied with a feather, or a narrow strip of wool sharpened to a fine point. The tip of a penholder is useful for the purpose.

An umbrella that has not been used for a day or two, unless it is carefully put away, will certainly be dusty, and should always be dusted before use or the least bit of moisture will stick the dust to the material, which will soon look shabby.

AN OLD WOMAN OF THE ROADS

O, to have a little house!
To own the hearth and stool and all!
The heaped-up pods from the fire,
The pile of fagots against the wall!

To have a clock with weights and chains
And pondering swinging up and down!
A dresser filled with shiny delph,
Speckled and white and blue and brown!

I could be busy all the day
Clearing and sweeping hearth and floor,
And tying on their shelf again,
My white and blue and speckled store!

I could be quiet there at night
Beside the fire and by myself,
Sure of a bed and loth to leave,
The ticking clock and the shining delph!

Och! but I'm weary of mist and dark,
And roads where there's never a house or bush,
And tired I am of bog and road
And the crying wind and the lonesome hush!

And I am praying to God on high
And I am praying Him night and day,
For a little house—a house of my own—
Out of the wind's and the rain's way.

THE BANDBOX

By Louis Joseph Vance

Several of the papers "ran" unusually long stories descriptive of the scenes on the pier. Staff checked over them. The necklace had, in fact, made no end of trouble for several hitherto putative innocents and gaileon passengers. The customs examination had been thorough beyond parallel. Not even the stenography and second-class passengers had escaped; everybody's belongings had been combed fine by a corps of inspectors whom detailed curiosity had been abnormally stimulated by the prospect of a ten-thousand-dollar reward. Not a few passengers had been delayed to submit to the indignity of personal search —Staff and Alison in their number; the latter for no reason that Staff could imagine; the former presumably because he had rowned with the elusive Mr. Iff on the way over. He had also homemulcted a neat little sum as duty on that miserable hat, which he had been obliged to declare as a present for a friend.

In memory of this he now rose, marched erect to the benches, innocently reposing in the middle of the floor, a not dispassionately lifted it the kick he had been promising for ever since the first day of their acquaintance.

It sailed up prettily, banged the wall with a bolder note and dropped to the floor with a grievous dent in one side.

There—out of his way—Staff left it, and, crossing to the door, found it open as still his house in order. By the time this was done to his satisfaction and Shultz had dumped the empty trunks in the hall, to be carried downstairs and stored in the cellar, it was evening and time to dress. So Staff ran a bath and, after as much water and beautiful with cold steel and resplendent with evening clothes, and tucked the manuscript of A Jonquil Woman into the pocket of a light topcoat and sallied forth to dine with Jules Mat and the Countess.

It was late, something after midnight, when he returned, driving up to his door in a hansom and feeling a decidedly gratified frame of mind. Ahead had been especially trying with regard to the play and Mat, while professing letting the author see that he thought him in the right in refusing to make changes and Staff had demonstrated his own advisability, and in spite of his voluble appreciation of the play's merits, had left the theatre in a decidedly dubious mood. The inference was plain: the star was to be humoured even at the cost of a crippled play. Between fear for the success and respect for his work, desire to please her and determination not to misrepresent him to the public, Staff saw his way and that, felt that he had at length learned the true meaning of "the irreconcilable conflict of duty." But reflection availed nothing to soothe his temper.

When he got out of the cab a short but sharp encounter ensued with the operator; it seemed that "the clock" was out of order and not registering—he had unfortunately chosen to be the unhonoured custom of the midnight tarmeter union. But the driver's habitual demand for two and one-half times the proper fare by distance proved in this instance quite fruitless. Staff calmly reunted out the fourteen-cent, put it in the man's hand, listened with critical appreciation to the resultant flow of language and, when it verged upon personality, then deliberately dragged the man by the scruff of his neck, choking and cursing, from his seat to the sidewalk.

"Now, listen," said he in a level tone: "you've got either to put up or shut up. If you're willing to call the fare it's out of oneself you hulkwaymen for some time, and I feel just ripe for it tonight. You either get off your face or crawl—another yap out of you and I won't wait for you to do either."

The man bristled and then, analysing the gleam in Staff's eyes, crawled: that is to say, he climbed back into his seat and swung the machine to the far side of the street before again resorting to vituperation.

To this Staff paid no more attention. He was opening the front door. The passage had comforted him considerably, but he was presently to regret it. But for that delay he might have been spared a deal of trouble.

As he let himself into the house, a man in evening dress came running down the stairs, brushed past rudely and without apology, and slammed the door behind him. Staff pondered and frowned slightly. Presumably the fellow had been calling on one of the tenants of the upper floors. There had been something familiar in his manner—something remunant, but too indefinite for recognition. And certainly he'd been in the devil of a hurry!

In the meantime he had mounted the first flight of stairs and turned through the hall to his study door. To his surprise it wasn't locked. He seemed distinctly to remember locking it when he had left for dinner. Still, memory does play us odd tricks.

He pushed the door open and entered the room. At the same moment he heard the tinkling of the telephone bell. The instrument stood upon his desk between the two front windows. Without pausing to switch on any of the lights in the combination gas- and electric chandelier in the centre of the room, he groped his way through blinding darkness to the desk and, finding the telephone instrument with the certainty of old acquaintance, lifted the receiver to his ear.

"Hello!" he called.

A thin and buzzsaw-like voice detailed his answer.

"Yes," he said. "What is it?"

"Just a moment," came out of the night. "Hold the wire."

Your Starved Nerves

The Cause of Neuralgia—Must Be Treated Through the Blood

Neuralgia is the cry of the nerves for more and better blood. It means that the nerves are being starved. Like every other part of the body the nerves receive their nourishment through the blood. There is therefore no doubt that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will prove beneficial even in extreme cases of neuralgia. Then pills increase and enrich the blood supply, carrying to the nerves the elements they need, thus driving away the sharp, torturing pains which nearly drive the sufferer wild. The benefit given by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in cases of this kind is shown by the case of Miss Carrie V. Fletcher, Ravenscliffe, Ont., who says:—"As the result of a severe wet tiny I got while out in a rain storm I was attacked with neuralgia, from which I suffered greatly, and which kept me awake night after night. All through the pain diminished somewhat, I began to suffer in other ways. My appetite was poor, I got thin and had no energy. Indeed, I was becoming a wreck of my former self. I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I am more than glad that I followed the advice, for they have restored me to my old time strength. I cannot recommend the pills too highly and hope other persons in poor health will give them a fair trial."

You can get these pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail postpaid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SUNFLOWERS AS A SILO CROP

Some Types Give Promise of Becoming Desirable Commercial Varieties

Although sunflowers have been known and used for a great many years, it is only in recent years that the wide agricultural possibilities of the crop have been recognized.

With the advent of mixed farming in the former strictly grain growing areas of the country and the increased recognition of the value of the silo has come the demand for silage crops in areas unsuited for corn growing—It is in this connection that sunflowers offer the greatest possibility.

As yet there has not been sufficient breeding work or testing of varieties to warrant any definite statement regarding the different so called commercial varieties. As the sunflower is an open fertilized plant each commercial seed is a mixture of types. This fact however, affords us a good change of eventually securing uniform varieties of the most desirable habit of growth—At the present time the Forage Crop Division has isolated a large number of types of sunflowers, these range in height from three feet to seventeen feet and in habit of growth from unbranched types having a single head to types having branches each primary leaf axle, and numerous heads. There is also a wide variation in habit of branching, from branches growing straight out to those that grow almost parallel with the main stem. Some of these types give considerable promise of becoming very desirable commercial varieties.—

The commercial varieties tested so far at the Central Experimental Farm have shown a variation in yield from as low as ten tons per acre to as high as twenty-three tons. The most satisfactory of these varieties available to the farmer is the Mammoth Russian. The published results of other sunflower experiments in Canada and the United States are fairly well in accord in recommending this variety as the safest proposition at the present time for the man who desires to grow sunflowers for silage.

HIT WITH MALLET; DID NOT KNOW IT

Hamilton, Aug. 4.—In an attempt to drunken brawl which occurred last night in a house occupied by a negro named Deity, at McNab and Wilkberry streets, Samuel Flynn, 196 Carolina street north, sustained serious brain wounds.

Police officials found him semi-conscious and bleeding profusely. When questioned he said: "I was hit with something. I don't know what it was, but it sure was a success."

The weapon was subsequently found to be a stout oaken mallet. Flynn was removed to his home.

A special despatch to The Star today from Philadelphia says that the University of Toronto eight-oared crew, the Canadian champions, are regarded as having an excellent chance to win the honors at the National regatta. There are eight crews entered and Duluth, the western champions, are also said to be dangerous. It is expected that Johnny Dunan, the Argonaut sculler, will qualify for the association finals.

After engaging in possibly one more contest, Benny Leonard, world's lightweight champion, plans to sail for England in quest of new opponents and to give the molder and sister an European trip that he has planned on since he took the championship from Eddie Walsh. Leonard is a ten-round bout at Michigan City, Ind., this afternoon. He has been offered $50,000 for a 20-round bout with Ernie Rice, British title holder, and also is negotiating for a contest with a German lightweight in Berlin. Before sailing, however, Benny may engage Pinkie Mitchell, brother of Richie Mitchell, in a ten-round contest in Milwaukee, August 24th.

CRICKET NOTES

By E. S. Jackson.

With seven wickets to fall, and several good men, some of whom were unsuccessful in the first innings, to bat Norman Seagram's team stood a very good chance of winning their game at Wimbledon, Surrey, against a powerful Incognito XI. The game was played on Tuesday and Wednesday, and when the stumps were drawn on the second day, and the game declared a draw, the Canadians had lost three wickets for 61 runs, and Hughie Reed of the Northern Club, looked like repeating his fine innings of 52 not out when Seagram's team were compiling their first venture total of 139.

H. H. Humphries, the erstwhile Rosedale Club player rendered good service in both first and second innings. He was caught and bowled in the former for 32, and in the unfinished innings was out l.b.w. after he had scored 26.

C. V. Mustard, of Montreal, possibly the best "bat" on the team, was unfortunate in both innings, being out for very low scores on each occasion.

The disposal of nine of the Englishmen's wickets in their second innings for 110 runs was splendid work by the Canadians, whose fielding was very smart and was frequently applauded.

L. M. Rathbun, the old Toronto Club man, was the most successful with the ball while the Incognito were batting the second time, the four wickets which he obtained only costing 34 runs, and it is reasonable to expect that both he and Wookey will be heard of to advantage during the series of games in which Mr. Seagram's eleven will engage.

MIDDLEWEIGHT WRESTLERS

Los Angeles, Calif., Aug. 4.—Johnny Meyers, of Chicago, to-day appealed to have the most valid claim to the title of middleweight wrestling champion of the world. He defeated Walter Miller, of Los Angeles, in a one-fall match, gaining the local claimant of the title last night with a double wrist lock and body scissors. Meyers' favorite hold, in one hour and forty minutes.

The men continued another 20 minutes without a fall.

Of numerous claims to the middleweight championship those of Meyers and Miller had stood out as the best substantiated, according to sports writers.

Between them they had accounted for victories over all other contenders.

CANADA MUST WAIT 40 YEARS FOR PAYMENT OF THIS DEBT

Roumania Agrees to Pay 4 Per Cent. Interest on the Twenty-odd Million—Export Taxes Ear-marked as Security for Principal and Interest

London, Aug. 4.—A satisfactory arrangement has been made with Roumania by the Canadian Government the correspondent is given to understand which will enable Roumania to pay off the principal and interest of the twenty odd millions of dollars which she owes to Canada. The Roumanian Government has for a long time been unable to meet even the interest due on the bonds which covered the trade credit that Canada granted to the kingdom in 1919. The new arrangement will extend the time for the payment of principal of debt, which would have terminated in 1931, for forty years, with interest at 4 per cent. for the period of extension. Instead of five and one-half per cent. as under the original agreement.

The satisfactory feature of the new arrangement from the viewpoint of Canada is that the Roumanian Government has ear-marked its export as security for both the principal and the interest of the debt. The bonds will be exchanged for forty-year bonds, one thirty-fifth part of which will be retired annually after the first five years of extended time. The interest overdue on present bonds will be added at five and one-half per cent. and compounded at six per cent.

There has never been much doubt of Roumania's ultimate ability to meet its obligations to the Dominion, as it is one of the finest agricultural countries in the world, but its recovery from the effects of the war, which was over run by enemy forces and huge quantities of equipment and natural produce destroyed or carried off, has been hampered by lack of rolling stock for its railways. The Roumanian Government, however, announces that by the end of the present year it will have almost doubled the number of locomotives and cars in use.

Guard Baby's Health In The Summer

The summer months are the most dangerous to children. The complaints of that season, which are choleraic infantum, colic, diarrhoea and dysentery, come on so quickly that often a little one is beyond aid before the mother realizes he is ill. The better must be on her guard to prevent those troubles, or if they do come on suddenly to banish them. No other medicine is of such aid to mothers during hot weather as is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the stomach and bowels and are absolutely safe. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

AUTO IS PLUNGED INTO RIVER BED

Two Killed When Car Leaves Highway Near Quebec

Quebec, Aug. 3.—The crushing of an automobile through the railing of a bridge on the Quebec-Montreal highway, at Beauport, this morning about noon, resulted in the death of A. G. Atkinson, barrist, of Buckfield, Maine, and Herbert Hall, single, 302 Broadway, Malden, Mass.

According to witnesses of the accident, the car, containing four persons, was travelling toward Montreal at a high rate of speed, when their car, a runabout, struck the bridge at the point where it crosses a small stream, tearing the guard away and plunging down on the rocks in the bed of the river, 50 feet below. The car was smashed completely, and the two occupants were pinned under it.

Atkinson was instantly killed, but when the villagers moved the damaged car sufficiently to take out the two men they found that Herbert Hall was still alive. He was carried up on the bridge and given first-aid treatment, but he lived nearly for about 45 minutes after the accident.

He will return to Ottawa on Saturday, and leave for Kingston on Monday night, and will speak at Port Hastings Tuesday. He will then leave for British Columbia, but will make a stop-over at Portage la Prairie, his old county, where he was defeated at his last election, but which returned Major Taylor, a Conservative, in the last Manitoba elections. He will address a series of meetings in British Columbia.

CHARGED WITH PEDDLING DOPE

One of the Parties May Be Sent to Belleville For Breaking Parole

Peterborough, Ont., Aug. 4.—Reginalds of a week were granted by Justice of Peace Harry Rush in police court, today in the cases of Mrs. Hughes, an alleged dope user and peddler, and Frank Taylor, a go-between, both on charges of vagrancy. While the week the pair will likely be separated. Hughes going to Ottawa, where he is said to be wanted for breaking parole, and Taylor to Belleville, where the peddling operations first put the police on their trail. The local police made the arrest here before the men had time to get away. The Criminal Investigation Department was unable to show a record against Taylor, but the Chief said he had learned from 'pals' that he was acquainted with the interior of prisons.

Hughes from his record, is no amateur operator. On September 30th, 1919, he was sentenced in Ottawa to four charges of theft, receiving on one account 18 months and on the others three months, the sentences to run concurrently. He went to the Ontario Reformatory, but on July 30, 1920, broke jail at Sudbury. He again fell into the toils of the police and received two years in Kingston penitentiary. On December 22 he was released on parole and he will probably be re-committed. Ottawa authorities have asked that he be detained and the police are awaiting further word.

"Olympic" In Hospital.

New York, Aug. 5.—(By Canadian Press)—Cable advices received by the White Star line state this repairs to the Olympic, in whose stern-post a fracture found when the ship was docked last week at Southampton for her summer overhaul, have been modified as to take less time than was at first anticipated, and that the ship will be ready to return to service with her regular scheduled sailing from Southampton for New York on August 23.

The Olympic will therefore make only four eastward voyages instead of two, as had been stated.

IMPRESSIVE DECORATION SERVICES HELD BY VETERANS

Duty of Soldiers and Citizens Eloquently Outlined By Major Rev. J. Bruce Hunter.

Under the auspices of the G. W. V.-A. and Argyll Light Infantry decoration services were held on Sunday afternoon and were of a most impressive nature. Many of those who participated in the Great War were in attendance, clad in their uniforms and bedecked with medals they were worthy of. A goodly number of citizens were also present. The services were held upon the armouries lawn, a most appropriate spot for such an occasion. A cenotaph had been erected upon a platform, the lattice covered with flags. The cenotaph bore the inscription, "In honor of our fallen heroes." In response to a request, citizens generally brought beautiful bouquets of flowers which were placed upon the platform and after the services were taken to St. James and Belleville cemeteries and placed upon the graves of departed comrades.

Rev. George Marshall, rector of Emmanuel Church presided over the services and associated with him about the dias were Rev. D. C. Ramsay, Rev. Rural Dean Swayne, Col. Wilson, president of the G. W. V. A., Col. R. Vandervoort, of the A. L. I., Col. Ponton and Major the Rev. J. Bruce Hunter, B.D. of Toronto, ex-chaplain of the Canadian forces, who was invested. The latter gave the address of the afternoon and it was a brilliant effort and in keeping with the occasion. The Salvation Army Band was present and assisted materially in the services furnishing music for the hymns sung. The proceedings opened by the singing of Kipling's memorial hymn, "Land of Our Fathers," followed by an appropriate prayer by Rev. D. C. Ramsay. After the singing of another hymn, "O God Our Help In Ages Past," the address by the occupied the attention of Major Rev. Bruce Hunter in his opening remarks expressed his sincere appreciation of the honor

PREMIER AND ASQUITH EACH WRITING BOOK

London, Aug. 6.—Premier Lloyd George and former Premier Asquith are racing to see which can publish his memoirs first. It was learned yesterday that the Premier was to publish his memoirs, and to-day it was announced Mr. Asquith is also working on a book. Publication of these volumes is expected to enliven the political feud between these two leaders considerably, as well as throw light on much shadowed political past. As one paper, commenting on the Lloyd George book, says ironically, it should be peerless if he really tells the truth.

AGED MAN STRUCK BY G.T.R. ENGINE

Was Hurled Some Twenty Feet But Was Unhurt

Hugh Johnston, aged 92, who resides with his daughter, Mrs. Russell, Cobourg, had a miraculous escape from death on Saturday between 12 and 1 noon. The old gentleman, who is slightly deaf, was walking on the Grand Trunk tracks, just north of the Dominion Wheel & Foundry building, when he was struck behind the shoulder by the head of a freight engine that was coming into the yard at about 15 miles an hour. He was thrown about 20 feet, but picked himself up and started to walk away, at the same time shaking his fist at the engineer for his unprovoked assault.

TWO ACCIDENTS AT DEVIL'S ELBOW

Heavy Cars Skid Into Ditch And Turn Over On Side

Greenleaf Garage mechanics had a busy time last night, assisting stranded motorists on the Prince Edward County road near the Devil's Elbow. At the point where the road course is being changed, the new roadway crosses the old roadway at an angle and is composed of loose gravel, while the old road is of fine material.

Last night's heavy rainfalls made this loose gravel slippery, and while driving his automobile over the road, Harry Hungerford skidded into the ditch, and the heavy car turned over on its side. Although the passengers were naturally badly scared, no one was injured, although it is a mystery how they escaped.

Shortly after this accident another car capsized and driven by the manager of the Dominion Bank at Napanee, followed the tracks evidently, and also went into the ditch. The second car did not get in so deep, however, and was soon towed on to the road. The radius rods were broken.

The condition of this road is described as being very bad, and it is thought that the attention of the department will be called to its condition.

STRIKERS ASKED TO GO TO WORK

President Harding May Also Requests Railways to Assign Work to Men

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Aug. 7.—President Harding today walked upon the striking railroad shopmen to return to work and asked both workmen and carriers to submit the disputed question of seniority to the Railroad Labor Board. President sent telegrams to R. M. Jewell, shopmen's leader, and T. DeWitt Cuyler, chairman of the Association of Railway Executives, outlining the plan which he hoped would result in a speedy termination of the strike.

Simultaneously with announcement here, since today's move plan which, he hopes will lead to the termination of the railroad shopmen's strike, it was announced at noon by William H. Johnston, head of the Machinists' Union, after he and other union leaders had conferred with the President. Mr. Johnston with R. M. Jewell, general leader of the striking shopmen, and J. P. WAR REPARATIONS NOT YET SETTLED

13th Conference Within Three Years Is Held Today

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

London, Aug. 7.—The leading representatives of the Allied nations began today a second the conference table once more to discuss the questions of war reparations, Germany's financial condition and related issues. The meeting, the thirteenth within less than 3 years, was greeted by the usual morning's newspaper editorial enthusiasm and in some cases with almost despairing skepticism. The Times recalls that numerous past conferences have never produced solution of problems burdening Europe".

Prior to the meeting which adjourned at one o'clock to meet a few hours later M. Poincare and his Finance Minister conferred with Premier Theunys, of Belgium, and they are reported to have reached an understanding as to the necessary measure respecting Germany.

Both the sailors were saved, while the second officer was drowned in full sight of the ship.

CITY COUNCIL WILL NOT GO INTO THE COAL BUSINESS

Offer to Procure Fuel at $10.00 F.O.B. at Montreal Is Not Considered Advisable.

The procuring of coal for the use of citizens is at the present time a rather complicated matter. On Saturday Mayor Hanna was informed that a quantity of Welsh coal could be secured at $10 a ton f.o.b. Montreal. This would mean that to supply it to citizens here would cost in the vicinity of $18 a ton. His Worship not wishing to handle the matter alone, called the members of the City Council together on Saturday evening when the matter was discussed pro and con. The unanimous opinion was that the Council should not take any action but rather see what the coal dealers can do in the matter. The concensus of opinion was that the price quoted above would be rather excessive.

From Mr. George W. Yates, Assistant Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, Mayor Hanna today received the following communication which speaks for itself:

Ottawa, Aug. 5th.

Sir,—On behalf of the Federal Advisory Fuel Committee, I beg to acknowledge your letter of August 4th with respect to the emergency which seems to be developing. The committee is rapidly getting in touch with the situation and hopes to be in a position in the course of a few days to make a public announcement both as regards shortage and the possible supply from American, British and Canadian sources. The functions of the committee will be largely supervisory and the efforts will be directed to facilitate importation and transportation. Actual distribution and any necessary control will, it is expected, rest with the Province. I would suggest therefore that you keep in touch with your Provincial Government regarding the situation.

38 KILLED IN WRECK, SIGNAL NOT HEEDED

Rear-end Collision on Missouri Pacific Railway Takes Big Toll of Lives—Many Others Injured.

Sulphur Springs, Mo., Aug. 6.—As failure of an engineer to heed a block signal caused a rear-end collision on the Missouri Pacific here last night in which thirty-eight persons were killed and 137 injured, 36 seriously, according to John Cannon, Assistant General Manager of the road. Train No. 4, a fast passenger vestibuled road train, ran into the rear end of a standing train of a local composed of five wooden day coaches, a baggage and an express car, as the engine was taking on water with the coaches on a siding to let a fast crack over Glass Creek.

The impact hurled two of the local coaches down a 30-foot embankment edging the Mississippi and telescoped four other coaches, crushing a number of passengers to death in their seats. Both trains were behind time, the fast passenger running from Fort Worth, Texas, to St. Louis, carrying 180 passengers and the local 100 persons.

Ignored Block Signal.

According to Mr. Channon, Matt Glenn of St. Louis, engineer of the fast passenger, failed to heed a block signal warning him the track was not clear. Glenn, 57 years old, was an engineer for 36 years without a black mark against his record, was killed when he jumped from the cab just before the crash. Edward Tinsley, also of St. Louis, fireman of No. 4, remained at his post, and was killed in the wreck.

Engineer Glenn shortly before arriving in Sulphur Springs received orders "on the run" to pull over on a siding at Cliff Cave, ten miles east of here, to allow "Sunshine Special No. 1," eastbound from St. Louis to Texas points, to pass, and, Mr. Channon explained, the engineer failed to heed the signal because he apparently was reading these orders when he passed the block. The orders were found near the body.

ROTARIANS HEAR ABOUT TELEPHONE

Local Manager Gives Address on the Telephone And Its Inventor

Mr. J. A. Cokers, local manager of the Bell Telephone Company, was the speaker at the regular weekly Rotary luncheon held to-day.

Mr. Cokers gave a most interesting address on the growth and use of the telephone since the invention of Bell to the present time. A portion of the address dealt with the fine old Scottish inventor of the telephone, who was buried last week the late Dr. Alexander Graham Bell. The address proved most interesting to the large number of Rotarians present including Major Dr. Bruce Hunter, of Toronto, was a guest of the local Rotary Club to-day, and also Mr. Chance, who was a guest also of the luncheon. Mr. A. E. Lewis, or Toronto, was also a guest of the club to-day.

ROBBING GRAVE IS CHARGE MADE

Two Year Old Mystery Believed to Be Nearly Solved

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Aug. 6.—Whispers Cooper, a half-breed Indian last night believed they were about to tear away the veil of mystery surrounding, since the Fall of 1913, the Drummond Lake grave robbery. The body of Mrs. Anna Fairchild, an aged woman, suffering at her death from a peculiar paralysis, was exhumed at that time and hacked bits of her body were found on a near by beach next morning.

Attorney General Merith Wiley in the city and is taking a personal interest in the investigation, renewed since the finding, the latter part of the week, of new evidence.

Deputy Attorney-General Conners and two State troopers concentrated their attention on the mystery recently and two suspects have been arrested—Clifford Harrison, 18 years old, and Mrs. Ruth Knutson. Both are charged with digging up the body of the woman.

Authorities of the entire district and citizens, incensed by the robbery, at the time did all possible to bring about arrests. They were unsuccessful, and for nearly two years solution of the mysterious crime has apparently been at a standstill.

Then State officers arrived, and search was renewed. The first tangible evidence was found last Thursday, although what it was the authorities refused to say. A number of citizens, possibly prominent in the life of this district, are believed implicated. Arrests are expected at any time.

Citizens are wrought up over new evidence, bits of which have seeped out and have grown with the passing from mouth to mouth. In certain quarters, threats against the two held have been heard, and the authorities are making an effort to

Greeks Occupy Constantinople

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Athens, August —Responding to the notes of the Allied powers sent on July 31, the Greek Government says it decided to occupy Constantinople in order to bring about peace by means of a decisive military action against the Turkish capital. Complaint is made that the Allied decision against Greece is taken at variance with the proper exercise of Greece's right as belligerent to put an end to Turkish resistance by moral and military actions of incontestable importance.

Music and Drama

MARY MILES MINTER PRESENTS NEW ANGLE TO MATRIMONIAL TANGLE

The so-called triangle is not new when concerned with the plot of a motion picture (or real life either for that matter), but Realart's latest picture, "Moonlight and Honeysuckle" being shown on the double feature program at Griffin's today, tomorrow and Wednesday, offers something different.

According to the best authorities the triangle usually develops after the wedding, but in this picture it comes before. As a matter of fact, there are two triangles, the point of one being three suitors, and the other being Sekle Mary and two of her suitors to whom she has secretly engaged herself.

You can imagine the pickle she's in when her eccentric friend his him with an honest-to-goodness engagement ring —and a perfectly good shooting iron talking for a target!

Get a fine athlete and a dainty girl together and it's a mighty pleasing combination. Herbert Rawlinson, star of "The Scrapper", the 5 reel Universal drama, being exhibited on the same program is known as one of the really good athletes in filmdom, a "he-man" from way down yonder. His leading woman, Gertrude Olmstead, won a beauty contest in Chicago as the most beautiful girl among thousands. The cast could hardly be led by a more perfectly matched pair, and the story is just as snappy as its title—a smashing yarn of a young Irishman right out of college, who doesn't feel there's any need for worrying about anything so long as he has his brains and his two fists.

Harold Lloyd is appearing on the same program in one of the funniest two reel comedies he has so far appeared in.

BIRDS SUFFER MUCH FROM WET WEATHER

Boston, Aug. 7.—(By Canadian Press).—The long and heavy rains in New England this year have resulted in great loss of bird life, according to Rhode Island and Connecticut sportsmen. He says that in places in Maine at least a third of the bird boxes and chimney swallows have been taken from single long chimneys.

This is due to the rains which drove to the ground insects on which these birds feed, causing the birds to starve to death. These have struck hard, also on the wing and cannot subsist otherwise.

Most of the loss of life was among the birds which nest on the ground or make their nests in low bushes or on the banks of streams. Either the nests have been washed away by the torrents and floods or the young birds have been drowned in their nests.

In Eastern Maine, Massachusetts, and blackbirds, wrens, swamp sparrows, has been great destruction of red wing ed blackbirds, wrens swamp sparrow, and song sparrows. Some birds which never raise more than one brood a year are already flocking for their return trip to the South, though this is unusually early.

ANIMALS GET HABIT

Joliet, Ill., August 4.—Lulu, a pet mule, has been getting 100-proof fodder from a silo. Then she wandered down the Dixie highway, near Joliet, Ill., where her eyes and singing the bovine version of "Ain't We Got Fun?"

Then she encountered James Beaver in a flivver and planted herself in the middle of the road.

"Hoo!" challenged Lulu, meaning "Got anything to drink?"

"Biss-s-s-s-k," said the Ford, meaning, "Get out of the way! whatdoin'? Lookin' for an argument?"

Lulu was insulted. She shook her horns, pawed the ground and believed defiance. Then she warily advanced—and wheeled and let drive with both hoofs.

"Bang! Put-put-put! Biss-s-s-s," moaned the Ford, while Lulu staggered off down the road looking for new worlds to conquer—and another silo.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COSTLY TO GREAT BRITAIN

London, Aug. 7.—Great Britain has paid out £85,000,000 under the Unemployment Insurance Acts since November 1920.

This statement was made recently by Sir Montague Barlow, Parliamentary Secretary of the Ministry of Labor, who said also that the Government intended to press the question of insurance by industry, and had appointed a committee to investigate the matter.

A possible solution of the problem would be a compulsory state scheme with individual industries could build special schemes accord ing to their own requirements.

which had been conferred upon him by asking him to speak upon each on occasion. He congratulated the officers and members of the G. W. V. A. for the precedent they had established in holding a decoration day to commemorate the memory of those who had laid down their lives for their country and freedom. Our minds upon occasions like this go back to those who are sleeping the last sleep in Flanders Fields and other cemeteries where their bodies had been deposited. The Major depicted in a most drastic manner the many battle fields in which the Canadian soldiers encountered, such as Passchendaele, Hill 70, Amiens, Mons, Cambrai, etc. We who have been privileged to return home safe to those who were not so privileged. John McCrea who wrote "In Flanders Fields" had in his mind something most significant when he referred in those lines to the torch: What is the torch we might ask. It is the symbol of freedom and liberty. His idea was that the spirit of Christian brotherhood might encircle the earth. Despite the prophecies of learned men and business men engaged in great commercial enterprises that a war would not break out, it did break out. Canadians assisted to win the war and help build up this spirit of brotherhood and it is up to us to see that it is kept up. There were three important factors in connection with the soldiers, namely, "Obedience to Duty," "Submission to Discipline," and "Manifestation of Devotion." So in the days of the great conflict there is today an appeal to duty. It was a sense of duty that held the men in line to fight for their homes and country. By the perseverance of duty the Canadians held the line when were the days of discipline, all looking alike in their uniform and all being treated alike. Those were the days when the men in the ranks often raged at the officers on account of what was considered too much discipline. If discipline was needed in the army then it is needed today, discipline in action, conduct and speech. What is the manifestation of devotion? It is the man who confesses and professes and practices that profession in the presence of his fellowman. If you want to see the real man you have to see him get below the exterior fudging by the language used by some of the soldiers sometimes, and the Major, one might have thought he had little religion but he sometimes preceding his going over the parapet were filled with the spirit of Christianity, when his thoughts turned to loved ones at home and in his personal relation to God. If you want to see a real soldier see him on the battle field. None were unwilling, or denied a comfort to a comrade. These were the true virtues of a soldier. In concluding the address Major Hunter stated that all must carry the torch until life's warfare is over and so help us in putting God's plan over the top.

At the conclusion of the address Rev. Mr. Marshall spoke a few words of appreciation of the Rev. Major's address and hoped all would profit by it.

After Rev. Rural Dean Swayne had pronounced the benediction the Last Post was sounded by Bugler Gordon Hay, and the band played the National Anthem.

The officers who were beautiful in effect were entbroad up and the members of the G.W.V.A. proceeded to St. James and Bellefille cemeteries to decorate the same upon the graves of their departed comrades. The graves decorated were as follows:

MEDICAL TREATMENT HIGH IN GERMANY

A Critical Situation Is Reported in Germany's Social Insurance

Berlin, Aug. 7.—Medical treatment costs 20 times more in Germany today than it did before the war, declares Dr. Heinrich Brauns, German Minister of Labor, writing in the current number of Reconstruction. Dr. Brauns calls attention to this increase in connection with the critical situation which, he says, prevails in Germany's social insurance.

Although as far the directors of the sick funds have been successful in maintaining the payment of the benefits, the funds are "approaching their day of fate."

Medicines cost on an average, 25 times the pre-war figure, while in 1914 a charge of three marks was made for a day's hospital treatment, which now costs 100 marks.

According to the minister's statistics, 16,000,000 employes are insured under the German Invalidity Insurance system and 1,000,000 under the Private Employes Insurance.

The Sickness Insurance grants to workmen, domestic servants, and clerks, whose annual earnings do not exceed a certain limit, cash payments and benefits in kind. The funds responsible for the payment of these benefits are kept up by the contributions of the insured persons and of the employers.

BATTLE OF THE SOMME TURNING POINT OF WAR

(Written for the Canadian Press)

"The eighth of August (1918) is the black day of the German Army in the history of the war," writes Ludendorff. "The English, Colonials and the French broke deep into our line between the Somme and the Luce. Six or seven German Divisions which could be described as first class by fit for battle, had been defeated. In another place in his memoirs he says: "The eighth of August marked the downfall of our fighting strength and destroyed our hopes of strategic counterstroke. To continue the war was to start a gamble. The war had to be ended."

Turning Point of War

This battle was the turning point of the war. For the Canadian Corps it was the jumping-off point to the Drocourt-Queant line on Sept. 2, the capture of Cambrai, to battle its way and during October, through Denain and Valenciennes—until Armistice Day found it in possession of Mons.

Allied Fortunes Low

In mid July the fortunes of the allies on the West Front appeared at the lowest ebb. The great enemy offensive of March and April, designed to drive in a wedge between the British and French armies on the Somme, been back the former against the Channel ports and crowd back the latter to Paris, had nearly succeeded. In June the enemy attack from the Aisne had driven all before it to the valley of the Marne. On July 15 a great and final blow was launched which carried the invaders across the Marne. But on July 18 Foch struck back, and the French armies, assisted by British and American troops, drove the enemy on to the Aisne.

German Offensive

The great German offensives of 1918, designed to forestall the arrival of the American armies, had thus definitely failed. At the end of July it appeared that the West Front would remain static until next spring, when the reinforced German armies must make their last stand against the growing power of the allies. It was the battle of August 8 officially known as the Second Battle of Amiens, and to the Canadian soldier as the "Aug. 8 Show", that broke the deadlock and made victory possible in 1918.

During the onslaughter of March the Canadian Corps held its front on Vimy Ridge prepared to beat back the attack that never developed. Canadian cavalry and machine-gunners were helping stem the tide on the Somme, but the Corps as a unit stood fast, in the previous November at Passchendaele it had suffered heavily—but it had achieved its objective where others had failed. The winter was devoted to reorganization and the Fifth Canadian Infantry Division then forming in England was broken up to fill the depleted ranks. Tanks, artillery, however, going over intact and taking part as a unit in the fighting of the final months.

Master of War

Waste of war had cut down effectives in all units, both enemy and allied, but with sufficient reinforcements in sight the Canadian Corps Commander, Sir Arthur Currie, steadfastly held to his policy of keeping his four Divisions up to full strength each maintaining its four brigades and each brigade its four infantry battalions, with full complement of machine-gunners and auxiliary services.

Behind the escarpment of Vimy Ridge intensive training was carried on all through the winter, and during the following Spring and early summer, when the Canadian Corps was withdrawn from the line and placed in Army Reserve, routine of training for trench fighting was abandoned and the troops were exercised in the offensive war of movement. The 2nd. Canadian Division, however, remained in the line in front of Arras until July 1, then being relieved by the 3rd. Division, and getting a brief period of rest, devoted to similar training tactics.

As a consequence when the Corps kicked off on Aug. 8 it was embodied by the strongest veteran Corps in France, with behind it sufficient trained reserves to ensure that it would be kept up to strength through some weeks of stiff fighting. The attack took place on ground of the terrible mud of Flanders, were forgotten, and the troops in the highest fighting spirit after their long adventure. For the first time in years they whistled and sang as they marched up to the attack.

Kept Broke on the Move

The battle of Aug. 8 was originally designed by Foch and Haig keep the Boche on the move. He was still in difficulties on the Aisne and it was Foch's object to give him time to consolidate a new line by the transfer of divisions from the Flanders front. The idea was that the attack should be made on the grand scale, with the concentration of artillery and tanks, that it should be pushed as far as possible, and that then the attack should be followed up by other blows further north. The method of attack was that first developed by Lord Byng with his 3rd Army in the First Battle of Cambrai of November, 1917. There was to be no artillery preparation, but after an intensive positions to be broken down by a rolling barrage seconded by the tanks, this clearing the way for the infantry. The essence of success in such an operation was surprise. The enemy must not know the point where the enemy March offensive had been finally stayed, was held by the Fourth Army of Sir Henry Rawlinson, British, with the Australian Corps and the 111 British Corps. Fresh troops added for the attack included the Canadian Corps, two fresh British Divisions, and the Australian Fifth in reserve.

Elaborate precautions were taken to preserve secrecy, particularly regarding the arrival of the Canadian Corps, and in the result these were entirely successful, the enemy being completely deceived and few even of our own Battalion commanders knowing where they were going. Five Canadian battalions made their presence felt in Flanders and the enemy Intelligence Department was overjoyed to find Canadian Corps was once again to be thrown in at the Salient. Troops were marched by night to entraining points or marched under cover of night, laying up by day in woods. Not a single movement was made in daylight and the attacking Canadian troops at zero hour, 4.30 a.m., Thursday, Aug. 8 were entirely unknown to the German in the line. Organization was perfect. On the dark but starlit night before the battle troops converged to their appointed jumping-off places from every available route, and the noise of their approach was drowned by the artillery and of the lumbering tanks, was drowned by low-flying battle squadrons of the Royal Air Force.

Overwhelming Surprise

The surprise was complete and overwhelming. The first day's penetration was 14,000 yards, a record for the West Front to that date. The enemy's resistance was smothered by our counter-battery work, and our own barrage overwhelmed his infantry, while the tanks proved of great value in breaking down machine-gun resistance. "At the close of the day's operation," says Lord Haig in his official report, "our troops had completed an advance of between six or seven miles . . . East of the line of our advance the enemy at nightfall was blowing up dumps in all directions, while his transport and limbers were streaming across country on the Somme, offering excellent targets to our guns. Over 12,000 prisoners, between 300 and 400 guns, and vast quantities of ammunition and stores of all kinds remained in our possession. The brilliant and predominating part taken by the Canadian and Australian Corps in this battle is worthy of the highest commendation. The skill and determination of these troops proved irresistible and at all points met with rapid and complete success."

Position of Armies

The accompanying sketch of the line, the brunt of the attack fell to the Canadian Corps. The front of attack extended from Norsell on the south to Ville-sur-Ancre on the north, approximately 20,000 yards, this cross-ing the Somme. On the right was the First French Army under orders of Haig, from Morenil to Chemin-in the centre from Thenaes to the Amiens-Chaulnes railway the Canadian Corps; on their left to the Somme, the Australian Corps; and the latter's left flank was covered by the 132 British Corps attacking in the direction of Morlancourt. The French First Army was ordered not to attack until the Canadian attack had well developed, when it was then successfully carried out. From the start the Australians were hampered by the failure of the 111 Corps, which, had had hard fighting the two previous days, to make any effective progress, and this resulted in the Australian left having to build up a defensive flank along the South bank of the Somme.

A Canadian Battle

In reviewing this operation some later the Military Correspondent of the London Times wrote as follows:—"In the first scene of our offensive, which began Aug. 8, the actors were chiefly overseas. Men from the British Isles took only a small part of the attack north of the Somme to protect the flank of the Australians. South of the river, which here is the main battlefront, the honor of the first advance was shared by the Australian and Canadians, the structure it was chiefly a Canadian battle. It was their advance on the Luce that was the most vital event of the operation, and on their progress depended the advance of the Australians on their left and that of the successive French armies on their right, each of which was thrown in only as the attack reached a point to support it. The Canadians, I think, are right in claiming that the fighting of these three days was the most decisive thing Canada has done in the war, not excepting the recapture of Vimy Ridge, though nothing could have been better."

Memorable Victory

It was indeed a memorable victory. It opened the eyes of the German commanders, and thereafter one by one the floodgates of the offensive were closed on the shaken enemy. Aug. 8 was an experiment. Had it been but partially successful, we should have sat down to another winter in the trenches, and awaited 1919 and the Americans to bring us victory. By its success the war was brought a year sooner to a close and hundreds of thousands of lives were saved.

ARE COMBINES ENTRENCHING?

Oil Interests and Woollen Manufacturers Are Still Suspected

Washington, Aug. 5—Are the great trusts in the United States becoming by the process of natural growth? This question has arisen in a number of ways in recent months, as, for instance, in connection with the rise in price of gasoline. It is shown in a recent report of the Federal Trade Commission that the oil trust still succeeds, though it has really supposed were "unscrambled" by a Supreme Court decision some years ago, in maintaining a virtual monopoly to control the oil and gasoline industry.

The pending tariff bill, too, has served to bring to the surface charges of formation and argument on the Senate on this subject of growth of trusts and combinations which are alleged to be exclusive, in a series of powerful speeches assailing the high rates of the tariff schedule. Also attention of the wool manufacturing industry in the United States is steadily becoming threatened. He is convinced that the high rates of the pending bill, once they are in operation, will accelerate this tendency.

"There is not a woolen manufacturer in this country who announces prices on these goods or woolen cloth until the great combination, the American Woolen Company, first makes the announcement," said Senator Walsh. "That concern leads the way and dictates the price, and that trust is steadily and constantly gathering full control of the large and competitive woolen manufacturers of this country. In the last report of the American Woolen Manufacturing Company, I found that last year three great mills had been added to the company, and I make the prediction now that before many years have passed the entire manufacture of dress goods and woolen goods will have passed into the hands of this one organization. It is one of the significant things in the economic history of our country, in the last 20 years, that side by side with the removal of high protective duties have come combines.

"That is easily explained. Those men first met for propaganda purposes. Every woolen mill of this country is part of an association. They send their representatives here to ask for high protective tariff duties. They become friendly; they become co-operative; and they can understand and see that by eliminating domestic competition they can make these duties more effective in raising prices, by the larger plant absorbing the smaller plant.

"The prices are controlled; nobody disputes that. The American Woolen Company produces in its mills 26 per cent of the wool any particular grade produced in this country, and, of course, it is rapidly expanding. So that it has such a volume of production that it is the dictator and leader in price announcements."

He brought out by Senator Simmons in debate on this question that in numerous instances the existing Underwood law is not practically prohibitive of importations. In such instances the high tariff senators argue that if the rates are made still higher, then they are no harm can be done. But the view taken by Senator Simmons and supported by Senator Walsh is that much harm could be done, because the extremely high rates tended to bring about monopolies that could not be overcome in any given industry, if it operates behind a high wall of protection and can stop its finger at the thought of competition, it can levy tribute on the public as it pleases.

SWORDFISHING IS GREAT INDUSTRY

Record Shipments to Boston from Cape Breton This Year

Halifax, N. S., Aug. 5.—Swordfishing out of Cape Breton ports bids fair to become a profitable as well as an industry of the steel manufacture in Australia, according to the Sydney Post in an article concerning the remarkable shipments of swordfishing to Boston during season now commencing. Last season the steamer Lloyd Mulholland brought over 1,000 pounds and this volume will likely be far exceeded this year. It is understood that if the expectations of fish buyers, in Cape Breton from new England, are fulfilled. In the meantime the people who engage in the swordfisheries in Cape Breton outnumber those employed by the steel plants. The fish are carefully cleaned, iced, boxed and shipped in a special fleet of refrigerator cars by the quickest route to Boston. Louisburg is the starting point of the Nova Scotia fleet of one hundred and which will go to the swordfishing grounds, but there will be many other crafts engaged in the fishery including a few from American ports.

Nova Scotia fisherman have, during the past few years made Cape Breton their chief headquarters, as they have found that the fish strike that coast in larger quantities than in any other localities. IS BROOKLYN BRIDGE FALLING DOWN?

New York, Aug. 7 (By Canadian Press)—The recent report of a city engineer that one of the cables which support the famous Brooklyn Bridge has slipped, does not appear to be a warning to New Yorkers, who have feared here to the effect that the old structure is unsafe supposingly cause of the immense throngs crowds which jam the bridge. The elevated trains rumble in just as frequently and are just as crowded as usual and the trolley cars, also jammed with people, roll over it by the hundred. The walks for pedestrians are still well patronized. Even the benches out in the middle of the bridge—which might be used to take an awful drop if anything happened—are still occupied on fine days.

MANY PEOPLE ARE WITHOUT COUNTRY

Waifs and Strays Principally from Russia Claim No Citizenship

Geneva, Aug. 7.—One of the countless post- war problems which the League of Nations has been attempting to solve is what to do with the World's waifs and strays, more particularly those of Europe. There are hundreds of thousands of human beings at the present time on the continent of Europe who cannot claim citizenship in any country. They are scattered all over the continent, and are registered with the police as being on the tolerance list, but in reality they are in certain extent prisoners. They cannot move about from one country to another with the freedom of an ordinary person whose passport is altogether in order.

Another, and not the least trying, consequence of their lack of citizenship is that these unfortunates cannot claim the protecting of any Consul, Minister or Ambassador. In Berlin alone there are about half million Russians who have no passports, and who refuse either to be registered at the Soldiers' Consulate there as Russian citizens, or to return to Russia. Similarly in Turkey, Jugoslavia, Bulgaria and Roumania there are thousands of Russian refugees whose nationality is equally ambiguous.

At Dr. Nansen's suggestion a conference of representatives of 17 governments was called by the League of Nations recently to discuss the best way of dealing with the problem. It was suggested that the League of Nations be empowered to register all such people, and issue to them a sort of international passport which would be recognized as such, so that they would be citizens of the League of Nations rather than of any country, and be, so to speak, under its protection. At the conference, however, it was pointed out that if one third of the grant such people passports, and quite another to induce the various countries to visa these passports.

Not all of these "countryless" people are in the position of Russians who desire to return to their native

SALVATION BY BOOZE.

Social unrest is attributed by J. R. Clynes, the English labor leader, to the high cost of beer. That is a rather odd statement coming from a man who is supposed to represent the worker. We have always been given to understand that alcohol was a stimulant. This is the new gospel of labor:—"Come unto beer and it will give you rest."

It is rather surprising that a man who is supposed to represent the workers can make such complaint about his restlessness and want to drug him into a state of docility, in which case Mr. Clynes' job would be gone.

The fact of the matter is, most of the unrest among the working men of England is due to the poverty that came from allowing the old habit of drinking beer, which was always an expensive luxury and one that brought demoralization and misery upon the family. It does seem strange that a labor leader should bolster up a business that has done more than anything else to rob the worker of his hard-earned wages.

A REPORTER OF THE FLOOD.

The New York Evening Mail has been studying some ancient inscription in clay, written about the time of Moses by an Amorite named Asag-Aya, in which he gives an account of the Great Flood. The Mail informs us that there were no printing offices or pen and paper in those days, and that writing was done with a sharp piece of metal on clay, which was then burned into brick.

The account of the Flood is said to be substantially the same as that in the Old Testament which was written later. According to this Amorite report the flood rose thousands of feet high until it covered the highest mountain tops. There were mighty winds. The fountains of the great deep broke loose and the queens rose.

It strikes us that this Asag-Aya, if he wrote that account of the Great Flood from personal experience, as an eyewitness correspondent, so to speak, was the most remarkable reporter of all time! Phillip Gibbs fades into insignificance by comparison. Just imagine Asag-Aya arriving at the office—or, to be more correct, at the bright kiln—on that morning long ago and being assigned to do the Great Flood! He would defy forth with a few soft bricks in his pocket and a cance on his shoulder and thus he would be fully equipped for the job. He would of course need an umbrella—but there is some doubt cast upon this point. The Evening Mail is seriously skeptical of the rain theory of the Flood,' it says.

"No scientist, including those who assert that it is millions of years from the beginning of life on the earth until the present day, will state that all the rain in all the skies could be sufficient to raise the water level of the earth to the top of the Mountains in Asia Minor. As to rain, the water would tend to flow through the streams back into the ocean. Evidently besides 'the rain and the storm and the wind, there was an upheaval of the ocean and great waves from the ocean, thereby causing a change of configuration both of the ocean and of the dry land. Adhering to all these accounts this process did not take thousands of years or one year, but only a few days or weeks."

This is rather an unkind reflection upon the veracity of Asag-Aya, and I think that some with good grace from a fellow newspaperman. If the editor of the Evening Mail had lived in the days of Asag-Aya and had called the Flood reporter a prevaricator he would have received a piece of clay at his head in the form of a brick.

The Mail is a very interesting journalist is very lucky, working as he does in paper. We, personally, are very grateful for the change, for we are positive that the editor of our contemporary would be heaving copies of his newsbrick at our devoted head.

IT'S WORRY THAT KILLS.

Mrs. Lloyd George is an ideal wife—she doesn't worry. She holds that hard work never killed anybody, and points to her husband as an example. Writes she: "Everybody is well take a lesson from the lives of this happy Welsh couple. Speaking at Bristol the other day, Mrs. Lloyd George said:

"I have my husband in good health. Some time ago he was not in very good health, and his doctor said he must take three months' holiday. A friend met me and said to me: 'Whatever you do, do not let the doctor prescribe three months' holiday, or he will be a dead man.'

"Then before he went to Genoa he was not at all well, and his doctor said, 'Take three months' holiday.' He went three weeks, and at the end of the three weeks the doctor said:'

remarked to him, 'You are not better, but not quite yourwork there. When afterwards the doctor saw him he said, "Then he went to Genoa, and had six weeks' very hard work." Mrs. Lloyd George, 'you are in perfect health.' Hard work," proceeded Mrs. Lloyd George, "does not kill. It's worry that kills men and women. My husband does not worry. He does his best, and leaves the rest to Providence."

HERE AND THERE

TREES FOUR THOUSAND YEARS OLD.

Human beings cannot compete with trees in the matter of longevity, but human brains are more fecund than trees, up to certain ages in the mortality tables. A forest of maturity contains about 5 per cent. of all the trees that have started life there. The percentage of persons living from 10 to 50 is much greater than that, or five times. About 95 per cent. of our trees die before they are 80 years old, while only 67 per cent. of persons will die before reaching that age.

But when it comes to trees 100 years of age and over we have to go back into Biblical history to find their number who compare with them in length of years. Methuselah and Noah were far ahead of the majority of our common trees as centenarians; but no man and no nation but has ever failed to have the sequoia trees. The sequoia attains an age of about 4,000 years.

In some natural pine forests where the trees grow very close together statistics show that more than 4,000 trees per acre die between the ages of 10 and 80 and that only 300 out of the remainder die between the ages of 80 and 100. Not even some this natural preventive factor than with others. With pine, birch, aspen and all species which demand a great deal of light, the death rate is enormous. The spruce, beech, fir and, generally speaking, all species which are satisfied with less light are not affected so seriously.

A spruce tree in a forest at 30 years requires about four square feet of space; at 40 years, thirty-four square feet; at 80 years seventy, and at 100 years 150 square feet. Pine trees demand at least 50 per cent. more light space than spruce and nearly 40 per cent. more than fir trees, according to tables prepared by the New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse University.—New York Times.

A PARIS LETTER.

It has been said that Paris does not show the after effects of war, that Paris is gay and that its sidewalk cafes are full all the time. But if one stays more than a few days there it becomes apparent that Paris is no longer the beautiful clean city of old days—Paris is petrol mad. The taxi driversmany of them returned soldiers—have become the scum of the all, go tearing about, without law or order. If you can recall how water bugs start about in a pan of oil, you get the idea. To the human life is of little value. They come tooting around the corners, yelling, too, they often. They stand up and their coats flap in the wind.

The Indifferent Police.

The police stand about to gather up the pieces. They do not help the pedestrian at all in his efforts to dodge the traffic. The taxi is often very ramshackle and drips the petrol and lets forth much black smoke—so that the beautiful clement trees of the Bois are covered and black.

The palace of Versailles, too, shows the change. It is no longer beautiful, for staid floors are very dirty, its paint is shabby, its mirrors are mottled.

The prices in the shops are mountain high, the philosophy manner of the French shopkeeper is no more. The rue de Rivoli, with its glittering shops, reminds one of Atlantic City; each shop in charge of a fat reader who rises to him a shopper in and then won't let him out until he buys something.

The Grand Opera.

cut out much of the ballet and had an Irishman named The Grand Opera gave no Romeo and Juliet, but has Harkett assume the leading role. After the opera two taxi drivers could not find a single taxi driver who would take them home (a matter of five streets) for less than ten francs.

Yvette Gilbert had a troupe of American girls, who were dressed in gold twine and gold crowns to represent medieval saints, and who gathered about her and chanted for two hours, and then the lady herself appeared and, dressed as a queen of the Middle Ages, sang "La Pauvre Innocente." It seemed to be a programme of aunts and annexes all mixed up in the Theatre King Edward.

A Fine Salon Year.

The Paris salon of 1922 was in its last week, and that was a delight. Some very beautiful statuary, some charming paintings, nothing too violent in cubist method, and the whole place most charmingly arranged with much green background and soft lights. There was a tea room, where one could rest and get a beautiful view of the whole exhibition. There is nothing of the morgue atmosphere that one sometimes gets in an art gallery.

Both crossings of the channel were restless, but not too awful. The chalk cliffs of Dover, however, were a grateful sight. As we neared London the sky was a sweet blue and on that Background the Daily Mail plane was writing high over heaven's dome the word Vim—in a long trail of white smoke.

THE DESERT OPTIMIST.

"The straw-cropped rice-fields quiver
Through the sweltering sunlight haze,
And a jingling down by the river
Tells where the buffaloes graze;
They must feel the monsoon and there by belle,
But to me with gold they're blent,
For the sound in the sound of the sheep-bells
Somewhere down in Kent.

"There's an old brick-red pagoda
That has lost its gilt and lust,
And a ton of soap and soda
Would never clean the grime;
'Tis a beautiful shrine, a ghost-house
Which nobody dares frequent,
Save one who dreams of an east-house
Somewhere down in Kent.

CANADA AND WOLFE

(The Daily-Telegraph, London.)

It was a wise decision which assigned the colors of some of the Canadian regiments that fought for the Empire in France and Flanders to Westminster Abbey and the monument of Wolfe. The simple ceremony recently, when Wolfe's last Commissioner for Canada committed these flags to the custody of the Abbey, links the achievements of the Canadian troops of the twentieth century with the spirit of Wolfe, of Chatham, and the men who in the Eighteenth century established the foundations of the great Dominion. In the church at Greenwich, where Wolfe lies buried, there is already a Canadian flag to honor his memory. The monument in the Abbey, though it is only too typical an example of the taste of his time, must needs be a place of pilgrimage for Canadians and for English people who honor the great men of our history. The Abbey makes us one. Though the Canadian colors which now hang by that eighteenth-century memorial have never been borne under fire, no regiment has prouder battle honors than the troops which stood firm in the first wave of poison-gas at Ypres, who carried Vimy Ridge, and who broke through the German lines in the first sweep of the great British offensive of 1918. Wolfe and James Wolfe himself would have delighted to honor. His voice was always for the "fighting line" of war." Wolfe's own career is one of swiftest in history. He had a commission as lieutenant-colonel before he was twenty-three. By the time he was thirty he was quartermaster-general of Pitt's expedition against Rochefort. He came home complaining "We blundered most egregiously on all sides." He found no order, no zeal, 'no care and concern for the good and honor of the country.' When he went to De Pandore, encore de l'adace, et toujours de l'audace,' and he protested that it would have been better to fall and lose a thousand men than come home with nothing attempted. Naturally, his superior officers were that he was mad. 'Mad, is he?' said the little King George II. 'Then I hope he will bite some others of my generals.' Put in charge of the young man as a soldier that he needed for his plans, appointing him none the less, we may believe, for that 'strain of guscouade and bravado' which was in Wolfe not much less strong than in Nelson. He was given brigade in the Louisbourg Expedition, which, though it captured that town, seemed to him to have blundered from beginning to end. 'If nothing further is to be done' and he was sent in command of the force designed to take Quebec. He contracted fever. 'I know perfectly well,' he said in the doctor 'you cannot cure my complaint, but pray make me up so that I may be able to do my duty. That is all I want.' Everyone knows the story of how he did his bit—of that night in the boat on the St. Lawrence, when the Commander-in-Chief repeating the Elegy in a Country Churchyard, of the climb of the light infantry up the cliffs in the dark, and the morning battle; of the third bullet which struck him down at the moment of victory. He was only thirty-two. He had decided the destiny of the Canadian people. The flags of the soldiers of Canada who fought for the Empire well become his monument.

PRESS OPINIONS

HOTEL PROBLEM
(Peterboro Examiner)

During the visit of the Hotel Committee to Peterborough last week Mr. D. O'Grady's attention to some features in connection with the hotel problem that may possibly perhaps have fallen to notice. We regard the hotel as a convenience to the travelling public, but forgotten that it also is a convenience to citizens generally, and that a large amount of service is rendered by them which no revenue is derived. People who never contribute a five-cent piece to the treasury of a hotel are privileged in availing themselves of the lavatory accommodation offered by such institutions, and there they happen inclined to loafing about in the rotunda on a stormy day. Motorists come and go and call duty, use the hotel wash-room to remove the grime of their journey, and then proceed to the next town unmarked by a fee. The hotel provides the service, but when the paying end of the episode is reached the guest is forgotten. The hotel and the hotel man does not even receive thanks. Such incidents are not isolated cases, but they happen every day, and the conveniences offered by the hotel are abused and the proprietor has no redress. Imposed upon. Undoubtedly the hotel men, in calling attention to these things, are entitled to sympathetic consideration. The hotel is of more community value than the man on the street perhaps realizes.

WIT AND HUMOR

Fair For Him as Dad

"Daddy," said his six-year-old youngster, "I want to marry grandma."

"Do you, indeed. And do you think I would let you marry my mother, sir?"

"Well, why shouldn't you?" retorted the young logician. "You married mine, didn't you?"

Fearfully and Wonderfully Made.

A fellow with hair was showing a visitor the family portraits in the picture gallery.

"That chap there in the uniform," she said, "was my great-great-grandfather. He was as brave as a lion, but one of the most unfortunate of men; he never fought in a battle in which he did not have an arm or a leg carried away."

Then she added proudly: "He took part in twenty four engagements."

Figuratively Speaking

Thinner were slick at the office and the chief clerk being left alone with the stenographer asked her for a kiss.

"Certainly not!" she replied coldly "I'd sooner kiss a snake than you."

"Very well, then," he said, "kiss me in that capacity—I'm an adder, you know."

Yukon Rush Is Recalled

The Klondike stamp of twenty-five years ago is vividly recalled by the death the other day in Vancouver of Gogee Carmack, pioneer, miner and prospector, whose pick uncovered the first big nugget and started the rush for the Yukon. His name will remind us of the hardships they suffered hitting over the Chilkat Pass and battling up the mighty Yukon in hand-made flat boats. It' brings back terrible weeks in the trenches, northern wilds when some rash man with pack horses, made the journey overland via the Stikine on trail. In his other gold rush a man surmounted such barriers of distance, climate, and lack of food. Many fell by the wayside. And of those who went through, only a small proportion grasped the prize. But it was always thus in gold rushes.

The limits of the Klondike region lying in the Yukon Territory are rather indefinite, but the district includes the country at the south of the Klondike river which comes into the Yukon from the south and has several tributaries, as well as Indian river, a second branch of the Klondike river, and the creeks above the Klondike. The richer gold-bearing gravels were found on the creeks above the Klondike, but other deposits of gold have been since discovered in many parts of the district. The Klondike is the highest point in the Dome, attains a height of some 4,250 feet above sea level. All the gold-bearing creeks are said to run from the Dome, radiating in various directions towards the Big river.

Bonanza Creek with its tributary, Eldorado, Hunker, Dominion and Gold Run, were the most productive streams. Of these Eldorado, for the two or three miles it runs above the gold-bearing, was much the richest, and for its length was probably the richest any other known placer deposit. The gravel was discovered on Bonanza Creek in 1896, and the rush to the Klondike in 1897-98. Of the world like placer gold mining for richness of sudden and fabulous thing that would float was put into commission. Of the thousands of fortunes and American ports, and loaded to the water's edge with gold dust, with passengers and freight. Vessels steamed northward to Skagway, there to be jumped-off upon by the new gold fields. In three or four years this amount of gold must have made the journey, and Dawson from a mere collection of log huts became a bustling city.

Everyone seemed to have money in early Dawson. Men dug their hard cash right out of the ground. Every miner had his "poke" or little buckskin bag filled with gold dust, and paid for drinks or food with a pinch of bullion. Gambling houses and storekeeper made sure was a generous pinch. Even after the Bank of Dawson opened its doors the gold dust was the common medium of exchange, and it was paid in large quantities. It was quite usual for a miner to pay for a meal with a pouch full of dust. Neither Porcupine nor Cobalt in their palmiest days ever saw the easy money that circulated in the Klondike, which was the richest gold fields, a poor man's camp, with the cash well divided. Scores of millionaires were worked by individuals or by two or three men on their own account. Miners content to work for other men got $15 a day. But claims were soon bought up and gradually the individual miner with his pan or 'grizzly' gave place to syndicates with gangs of men and more economical methods.

In 1900 the Klondike reached its peak of $22,275,000 in gold output for that year. Since then the output steadily declined until in 1904 it fell to 15,500,000 and in 1918 to $1,- 116,424, which is probably about the rate of production to-day. A few of the early douglas still work their hills and do a little mining on their own account, but for years past the industry has been largely controlled by the hands of big companies which by dealing with dredges and hydraulic monitors can handle enormous quantities of dirt in a day and wash out from ground whose gold content is too low to be hand worked.

The Yukon is a very different country to-day from the days when Robert Service, who, when through mining in gold dust in the bottom box of the Commerce, wrote his stirring poems about the queer characters who rambled into town from the claims. Then, when the census of Dawson of over 20,000 souls is to-day a prosaic place of about 4,000. The dance halls are gone; vanished are the gay gambling joints; departed the picturesque population of other days. Mining has become a hum-drum mechanical affair. Easily get-at-able and

A ROYAL WEDDING

Within one hour from the receipt of the command for a Royal wedding cake operations are in full swing for the "fairy bride" or "necessary" tests, writes "A Confectioner" in the London Daily Mail.

The analytical chemist is at first consulted about the blend of flours to be used. This is most important, as the limited time between the date of order and the ceremony does not allow for the natural ripening of the wedding cake. Therefore a blend of soft English flour, made from wheats grown on light ground, is the first consideration.

In the meantime instructions have been given for a certain make of Devonshire butter; selected fruit is being cleansed and washed and carefully looked over by smart girls in snow-white costumes, only to be further examined by the forewoman before it is finally passed.

New laid eggs are now submitted to powerful electric lights to test their age. Those with more than the day-old space are put aside. When the desired weight has been reached the eggs are broken separately, at least 12 hours before using, so as to improve the air cells in the whites, as it must be remembered that the eggs are the only aerating agent used in wedding cakes.

Citron, orange, and lemon peels next claim the attention of the store chief, while the spices and flavors are already weighed and blended in the laboratory. The whole of the ingredients now go to the head-baker's foreman for the making process. Butter and sugar have placed in a cake beating machine, the wheels of which are in motion, and a creaming operation is carried on for about 10 minutes until the mixture shows signs of creaminess. Now the eggs are gradually added while the machine is in motion, until all the eggs have been absorbed into a milky, cream-like texture. The machine is then put on low speed, the flour is added with the spices, and, lastly, the mixed peel and fruit. The mixture is weighed into carefully prepared metal hoops and placed in the baking chamber for from 4 to 10 hours, according to size. After baking, the cakes are iced, and then comes the decorative work.

HERE'S RECIPE FOR BEST BREAD IN ARKANSAS

The champion bread baker of Arkansas is Agnes McKibben, 18 and unmarried, Murfreesboro.

In a state-wide contest in which 7 counties each entered 14 contestants she made the loaf that won the unanimous choice:

This is the recipe she used:

1 tablespoon sugar
1 tablespoon shortening
1½ teaspoons salt
1 cup boiling water
1 cup scalding milk
1 yeast cake
6 cups flour

Put sugar, shortening and salt in bowl and pour over them the hot liquid. Mix yeast cake in one-quarter cup of lukewarm water and stir in the yeast.

Add sifted flour and stir until smooth. Turn dough on a floured board and knead until elastic. Return to bowl, cover, and let stand for two and one-half hours in a warm place.

Turn out and knead again. Shape loaf and place in greased pan. After about one hour, or when dough is double its bulk, bake in a hot oven for 50 to 60 minutes.

Just before taking from oven rub crust with melted butter. Cool where air can circulate freely.

RUTH

She stood breast-high amid the corn,
Clasp'd by the golden light of morn,
Like the sweetheart of the sun,
Who many a glowing kiss had won.

On her cheek an autumn flush,
Deeply spread—such a blush
In the midst of brown was born.
Like red poppies grown with corn.

Round her eyes her tresses fell,
Which were blackest none could tell,
But long lashes veil'd a light,
That had else been all too bright.

And her hat, with shady brim,
Made her tawny forehead dim;
Thus she stood amid the stooks,
Praising God with sweetest looks:

Sure, I said, Heaven did not mean,
Where I reap thou should'st glean,
Lay thy sheaf adown and come,
Share my harvest home.

COIFFURES NEW AND OLD

Deeply stirred by the folly of womankind in spending much thought and treasure on the adornment of the hair, now many grave reformers have now mocked and measured roundly for more than 2,000 years! But, on the other hand, many poets, careless of the ethics of the question, have had gracious things to say, not only of the inherent beauty of the bewitchy locks, but also of, the manner in which she was pleased to wear them; while the novelists of later days have found in the fashioning coiffure elements of comedy and romance, and subtle manifestations of the sub-conscious self.

It would seem, from the indignant protests of the prophet Isaiah, that while the Fathers of Zion were startled by resisting Assyrian and Canaanite influences, the Daughters of Zion asked nothing better than to be 'one with Nineveh and Tyre' in the wearing of jewelled hair-nets, moon-shaped ornaments for the brows, "headbands, wimples, and crisping-pins"; and some severe comments from St. Paul prove that the Christian matrons of Thessaly delighted in braiding their hair with pearls. What perturbed the great Hebrew reformers enchanted the mediaeval poets, who were great poets and great lovers too. The bejewelled ripples of Laura's radiant tresses, the "cagnoli crauple biondi" of Beatrice, charmed Petrarch and Dante in the same degree that they would have annoyed Isaiah and Paul.

Something besides beautiful hair, beautifully adorned, may be needed, if the coiffure is not to fall of its effect. Not least desirable is the low and broad brow admired by Shakespeare; that same brow which was one of the chief glories of Nelson's Emma. Women, in the opinion of some men-poets at least, are peculiarly susceptible to flattery on this point. When Falstaff wooed Mrs. Ford, he was careful to assure her that she had 'the right arched beauty of the brow that becomes the ventail of the ship-tire, or any other fire of Venetian admittance'; and we can imagine with what a depreciatory simper the Merry Wife made answer. A plain kerchief, Sir John; my brows become nothing else, nor that well, neither.'

By the time that the 'tangles of Neara's hair' had crept into Milton's solemn line' Venetian fashion had ceased to reign in England. Herrick's lads, though she had her.

Into an oval, square or round,
And knit in knots far more than I Can tell by recipe . . .

those a style of coiffure that was natural and comely compared with the monstrous 'fires' of the preceding generation. A century and a half elapsed before the wheel came full circle and the high-bred, hair-torturing mode returned. Dust and decay could never obliterate Belinda's profile as traced by Pope in 'The Rape of the Lock.'

This Nymph, for the destruction of mankind
Nourished two locks, which graceful hung behind
In equal curls, and well conspired to deck
With shining ringlets the smooth ivory neck.

And now the coiffure, as distinct from the chevelure, begins to appear more frequently in literature, until, marching from Richardson and Miss Burney to Scott and the Victorian novelists, the pageant of wigs and curls and plumes widens into a bewildering multitude.

Curiously enough, both Scott and Thackeray seem to have been more interested in the coiffure fantastic, as illustrated by Miss Griselda Old-buck and the Dowager Lady Castlewood, than in the coiffure decorative, as represented by Fair Ellen and Amelia Sedley. It will be remembered that Miss Oldbuck 'bore on her head a superb piece of architecture, not much less than a modern Gothic castle, of which the curls might represent the turrets and the lappets the banners.'

Dickens, with his almost excessively keen eye for detail, gives us a rare gallery of coiffures, charming and otherwise. There we may see Dora, showing David how her pretty hair will curl upon the pillow yet, and how she tries to have it loosely gathered in that net also worn,' Mrs. Wititterly 'tying up her head in a pocket-handkerchief knotted under the chin . . . as a kind of armour against rheumatism,' and the Two Ladies advancing to greet Elijah Pogram, one wearing 'a brown wig of uncommon size,' while the other bore on her forehead a massive cameo 'representing on its face the Capitol at Washington.' Much more attractive was Theodora in Disraeli's 'Lothair,' whose 'profusion of dark chestnut hair, was bound by a Grecian fillet, and on her brow a star.'

In the curve of a woman's coiffure much may be expressed. The close-trimmed tawny wig above Elizabeth's high, hairless brows is not more characteristic of her time and type than are Marie Antoinette's mountainous powdered coils of pre-Revolutionary France, or Queen Victoria's smoothly looped locks of the dignified and plain days which bore her name.—The Daily Telegraph, London.

THE BANDBOX

By
Louis Joseph Vance

There was a pause in which it occurred to him that a little light would be a grateful thing. He groped for his desk-lamp, found it and scorched his fingers slightly on its metal reflector. He had switched on the light and said "Damn!" mechanically before he reflected that the said metal reflector had no right to be hot unless the light had been burning very recently.

As this thought penetrated his consciousness, the telephone waxed eloquent.

"Hello!" called a voice. "Is that you, Staff?"

"Why?" he exclaimed in surprise—"yes, Alec—it's——"

"Are you alone?"

"Yes," he said. "What is it?"

"I just wanted to know," returned the girl at the other end of the wire. "I'm coming to see you.

"What—now?"

"Of course, silly."

"But why—this time of night—it doesn't seem——"

"Oh, I've got something most important to say to you—very important indeed. It won't keep. I'll be there in five minutes. Listen for the taxi—will you, like a dear boy?—and come down and open the door for me. Good-bye."

"Good-bye," he returned automatically, and hung up the receiver.

What on earth could she be wanting, that could have turned up so unexpectedly in the half-hour he had left late and that wouldn't keep till morning?

Abruptly he became aware that the air in the room was strangely close. And he had left the windows open, when he went out; he knew that he wasn't mistaken about that; and now they were closed, the shades drawn, light!

This considered in connection with the open door that had been locked, and the heated desk-lamp that should have been cold, he couldn't avoid the conclusion that somebody had been in his rooms, an unlawful trespasser, just a few minutes before he came in—possibly the very man who had rushed past him in such violent haste at the front door.

He jumped up and turned on all the lights in the room. A first, hasty glance about showed him nothing as it had not been when he had left six hours or so ago—aside from the first wonders, of course. Mechanically, thinking' hard and fast, he went to these latter and opened them wide.

The possibility that the intruder might still be in the rooms—in his bedroom, for instance—popped into his head, and he went hurriedly to investigate. But there wasn't anybody in the back-room or the bath-room.

Perplexed, he examined the rear windows. They were closed and locked, as when he had left. Opening them, he peered out and down the fire-escape; he had always had a notion that anybody bold enough to want to burgle his rooms would find in easy to effect an entrance via the fire-escape without bothering. He was only right four or so above the level of the backyard. And now, since the Twenty-ninth Street house had been torn down, leading across every vis the excavation; such an attempt would be doubly easy.

But he had every evidence that his rooms hadn't been broken into by any such route; although—of course!—an astute burglar might have thought to cover up his tracks by relocking the windows after he had entered. On the other hand, the really wise marauder would have almost certainly left them open to provide a way of escape in emergency.

Baffled and wondering, Staff returned to his study. An examination of the hall-closet yielded nothing illuminating. Everything was undisturbed, and there wasn't room enough therein for anybody to hide.

He shut the closet door and reviewed the study more carefully. Not a thing out of place; even that wrecked bandbox lay where he had kicked it, with a helpless, abused look, the dented side turned pitiful to the light—much like a street beggar exposing a maimed limb to excite public sympathy.

He retreated to think: what did he possess worth stealing? Nothing of any great value: a modest collection of masculine jewelry—stick-pins and the like; a quantity of clothing; a few fairly good pictures; a few rare books; and the merest agency examination showed that these were intact, one and all. What cash he had was all upon his person. His desk, where the lamp had been lighted, held nothing valuable to anybody other than himself—memorandum books, some personal papers strictly non-negotiable. And there the record undisturbed.

Swinging round from the desk, he rested his elbows on his knees, clasped his hands, and leaned into the mood-promoting of meditations; through which he arrived at the most amazing discovery of all.

Very gradually his eyes, at last seeing not what they saw, focussed upon an object on the floor. Quite commonplace it was reluctant to believe their evidence. Eventually, however, he bent forward and picked up the thing.

It lay in his hand, eloquently absorbed in his study—a bow of violet-coloured velvet ribbon, cunningly knotted, pendent in itself, and, on the reverse, a few broken threads of silk hung, suggesting that it had been originally sewn upon a dress or some other article of dress, from which it had been violently torn away.

The thing was so impossible—preposterous—that he sat on it stunned, eyes a-stare, jaw dropped, into be-mused; until abruptly, rough of the sharp barking of a taxicab horn as it swung round the corner of Fourth Avenue and the subsequent grumble of its motor in the street below.

GRAND TRUNKS DEFEAT OSHAWA ON SATURDAY

First Defeat for Booth's Colts since 1920 When Peterboro Once Beat Them

A BATTLE ROYAL

"Ted" Gallagher Looked Like Procession When Trunks Got Four Home Runs

For the first time since the summer of 1920, the Oshawa baseball team met defeat in their own town at the hands of the nifty Grand Trunk baseballi-aggregation, on Saturday afternoon last, to the tune of 10 to 4.

Oshawa are reputed as being the most difficult team to defeat on their own diamond, on the Central Ontario circuit, Peterboro having the honor of being the one and only aggregation to defeat them on their own lot, and that was two years ago.

To say the Oshawa squad took the defeat very gamely and fairly, as ordinary sportsmen would, is an example of "carelessness with the truth," for they were the sorest losers that the Trunks have trimmed this season.

In the dying stages of the game with his team beaten, his pitching ace already hammered unmercifully, and a lovely load piled up against him, Manager Bert Booth pulled the small town stuff de luxe. Running into the field from coacher's box, he repeatedly requested umpire Tom Gloucester to make Williams, the Trunk hurler, cease spitting on the ball or his glove. Maybe everybody didn't know that he was trying to work the old staff of misrepresentation something to the umpire, in the hopes that if he did not cause the banishment of the pitcher, he would at least "get his animal." If Booth is wise, however, the next time he rushes out on the field to put on his burlesque act, he'll sit on the players' bench, because he didn't get him a thing but the rep. of being a "bum" (excuse the adjective) sport.

The funny part of the episode was that Gloucester was beginning to believe the "boy," and always gave him a courteous audience, although when mpire Bondy examined Williams' mitt and the baseball, they were perfectly dry. When this little idea failed miserably, the fans migrated from the grand stand and would possibly have swarmed on the diamond in an effort to terrorize the railroaders, had the police force not ordered them back to their stables. Finally, however, they had to subsult to defeat, and they got it right too.

The game proper was a unique exhibition in many ways, as you never knew what was due to happen next. Gallagher opened the game by passing the first two batsmen, then struck two out, after two runs had been chalked up. Then in the 2nd and 4th innings he struck the three men out as quickly as they stepped up. The Trunks made another run in the third. After the 4th inning, Gallagher was no mystery, and were bombarded at will, by the heavy hitting railroaders.

Jack Williams pitched a nice steady game for the Trunks and with the exception of the 5th inning, struck out at least one man in ever inniegs. Both pitchers burled the whole game respectively, and each had their opponents. Williams fanned 3 complimentaries, Gallagher 3, and Williams hit Legg with a pitched ball. Williams struck out hits off Gallagher, and Oshawa got 6 off Williams. Trunks had 4 errors as over against 6 for the opposition.

A feature of the game was the heavy batting of the Trunks. Mesher after pounding out 2 home runs and Hagerman and J. K. Williams each pounding out home runs, Meagher hit another long one which was probably good for 2 bags but so slow were the outfielders getting after the ball, that he made the complete circuit again.

In each case of the home run clouts, there was one man on base, so that runs soon piled up. Fellow, the Oshawa first sacker, clouted out a lovely home run, first time up, in the second inning also.

The Trunks played a lovely game in the field Saturday. The infielders gobbled everything, making put outs that dazed the opposition as well as the fans. Their throws were perfect. The outfielders worked especially "Wickie" Rose in centre field who pulled down three or four hard drives that would have been very serious to have missed. Meagher was the "Babe" Ruth of the day, with 2 clean home runs and a third hit which he made into a home run. J. K. Williams, Hagerman, Weir and J. H. Williams contributed materially to the slaughter.

For Oshawa, Pellow and Rowden were the best hitters, but Evans, Saunders, Fair and Patton each got a hit. "Pinn" Thompson, the jovial mile member of the team, had an off day all around, and was replaced at right field by Palmer in the seventh inning. The outfielders contributed largely to Oshawa's bad beatings, being every appearance of being dizzy out in their lots. After they missed a ball, they would go after it very listlessly, allowing the base runner much more time than he ordinarily should have off such a hit.

Williams busted the ball horsehide to deep centre field for a clean cut home run, and Harry Mills also rolled one out to Rowden, got safely on, when he fumbled the ball.

Hagerman lifted one to deep centre field for a home run, scoring Mills. Mallen struck out. 3 hits, 5 runs, 3 errors.

LINDSAY BALL CLUB HELD MEETING

Will Sell Book Tickets To Stimulate Attendance at Home Games

The Lindsay Baseball Club Executive held a meeting recently and among other things it was decided to issue a book of 6em tickets, for the remaining five games which books will be disposed of to fans and fanettes at $2.00 instead of the regular price of $2.50. Fans will thus save half a dollar on the purchase. These tickets will be transferable, and can be used by any person. They will be on sale immediately and it is hoped that citizens generally will take opportunity of assisting the team. The boys are playing great ball and deserve the crowds. Fans who attend games regularly will welcome the opportunity of the reduced purchase price.

The matter of stock in the Association was also discussed and it was decided that an effort should be made to dispose of the stock still subscribed some time ago, but has not been collected. This amounts to a large sum. To save time, and expense in the matter of collection it was decided to issue a draft on subscribers of stock, and it is hoped that subscribers to stock in the Association will recognize the matter as purely and simply one of business and respond promptly.

Lindsay certainly does not support the Birds as they should be supported, the situation being very aptly described by one of the Grand Trunk "wags," who states that there is one good thing about Lindsay; the crowd never rides the visitors, because there never is a crowd.

DIAMOND DUST

Famous Words by Famous Men.
"Has anybody seen Gloucester around?"—Stan. Hagerman.

There was a good crowd at the game, and they made a big noise too.

Grand Trunks, 10, Oshawa 4, and the game was played right in Oshawa. Do you get the joke?

And judging from Booth's unsportsmanlike behaviour on Saturday, as a baseball king he'd be some despot.

It was a fair day for baseball. A northwest wind was blowing the sand across the diamond, bothering the fielders somewhat, but it was bright and dry.

A corner should be reserved in the Revised Canadian History pages for a mention of this important day in history. A great little world be, "The Disruption of Bertram Booth's Empire."

The Oshawa players pay themselves however, proved to be At sports, Ted Gallagher and the rest of them saying nothing but sawing wood, but they were evidently using the wrong side of the saw.

Speaking of umpires, Tom Gloucester is improving, but he never gives Belleville anything. Gloucester once lived in Belleville and evidently did not like the city, although the ball team can't help that.

To Allan Meacher much credit is due for the winning of Saturday's game. Truly he made an error or two but his hitting smoothened the edge of existence. Two honest to goodness home runs and a third healthy wallop on which he made a circuit also, was his record. Out of five times at bat he got a hit each and got on when Legg fumbled a hit to left field.

Things We Would Like To Know

Who was the portly, Oshawa gentleman in the grey suit and straw hat, who sat on the officials' bench and imagined he was an artificially bare umpire? Is he an official of the Central Ontario League (we don't care whether he is or not) and does he not consider himself rather lucky or something that he was not escorted off the ball park?

By the way Stan. Hagerman did the receiving for the railroaders Saturday, in the absence of "Bernie" Mills who is yet quite ill with rheumatism, and he caught a very nice game too, but he'd rather play in the outfield when Tom Gloucester is behind the bat, for Tom and he are certainly do not, "smoke the same breath."

Stan. alleges that Mr Umpe informed him that he acted like a bush league receiver when he tried to catch curbier balls but failed on the main, it's like that word "bush" and he experienced much difficulty in keeping the lid on until after the game.

Later,—He told Gloucester just what he thought of him in front of the Commercial Hotel on the Main street. Gloucester listened.

EDDIE ONSLOW HITS ROTH EATON HARD

Hits "Picture" With Batted Ball; Wins Two Suits of Clothes

Captain Eddie Onslow, of the Toronto ball team, parked Roth Eaton right in the eye yesterday and made Roth's week-end as dismal as a foggy day in London. It happened at the Island Stadium in the fourth inning of the game with Buffalo. Onslow picked the old pill on the trademark, and it landed "Keramack" in Roth Eaton's eye—the painted one on the sign on the right field fence. Hitting the sign gets one a suit of clothes, but smacking the peeper calls for two outfits of glad rags. Eddie galloped around the sacks holding up two fingers and crossing his bloomers. Eaton got even at the fights last night. He had a century down on Onnie Tall, so the smile still sticks on the Eaton map.

Sandy Explains Defeat

If we could just play that first inning over again, we might beat Mr. Hodgson and the Peterboro squad. But something always happens to that ball team to, sure, if not in the first part of the game, then mid-way or at the end. It is bound to come some time and fortunately for the spectators it came early in the yesterday's struggle and then the agony was over. There were numerous excuses and several of the players would have to answer guilty, if asked to plead. In this opening stanza Peterboro scored five runs, sufficient under ordinary circumstances to win any game. After that it was a hard fought contest, Port Hope scoring two runs and Peterboro 3.

Games and umpires for Wednesday:—Cobourg at Port Hope, Macdonald and Kay; Peterboro at Lindsay, Glover and Boundy; Leaside at Belleville, Rowcroft and Wilson; Oshawa at Bowmanville, Butler and Barnes.

Cobourg made it four straight wins in the second section of the Central Ontario Baseball League when they won from Lindsay Greybirds at the Horse Show Park on Saturday afternoon by a to 7 in ten innings. Cobourg's lead-off and tail-end men were responsible for winning the game, as Tynes, the first man up in the first innings, lined the first ball pitched by the Lindsay heaver over into the outfield for a home run, and with the score 7 to7 in the tenth Markey, who was on the tail end of the batting order, beat out a hit down the first base line. Tynes advanced him to second, and while Lindsay were arguing amongst themselves he stole third and scored the winning run when Tupper hit safely over second. It was a game full of thrills. Cobourg led at the end of the fourth by 5 to 0, but Lindsay scored in the fifth, sixth and seventh, getting home one in the fifth, at the end of the sixth it was even up 7 to 7, when the local boys made the Garrison finish and won out by one run with two out.

Score:— R.H.E.

PETERBORO 9, BOWMANVILLE 0.

Peterboro, Aug. 6.—Peterboro, winners of the first half of Central Ontario League are now in second place in the second half as a result of a shutout in Bowmanville by a score of 9 to 0 here Saturday afternoon. Five runs were put down in the first inning, and the victory was a hollow one. The nearest the visitors came to scoring was in the seventh frame when Gordon was safe on third. Heckman was saved after five innings, and the locals used Kern. Heckman struck out 4 and Kern 3. Somerville opened to the box for Bowmanville, and was relieved in the fifth by Blaber. Line-up:—

LEASIDE WIN

Port Hope and Leaside played their scheduled game here this afternoon before a large crowd. Leaside keeping pace with the other clubs in the league by winning easily by the score of 6 to 1.

The score is no indication of the play, as Port Hope were never danger ous. McGuire, pitching for Leaside, kept the hits well scattered and was effective when Port Hope were in a scoring position. He struck out eleven batters and allowed only five hits.

For the Leaside, Tracy Shaw was the individual star, making two sensational catches in centre field and rapping out a double and three hits, one of them being for two bases. Title boy has found his batting eye at last, and should help Leaside materially in their dash for the last half pennant. Dillon and House also had two hits apiece.

Port Hope scored their only run in the seventh inning on a wild throw on Deer, who was caught between second and third and should have been an easy out. House blocked the runner between second and third, and h was awarded the run for this infraction of the rules. Score:—

Port Hope .. 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 1 0—1 6 2

Batteries—McGuire and Bingham; Deer and Schalk. Umpires—Kay of Peterboro at the plate, and McDonald of Toronto on the bases.

SEVERE ELECTRIC STORM

During the terrific electrical storm which passed over the city this morning, the residence of Mr. J. B. Boyce, 294 Albert street was struck by lightning. The lightning did the chimney and knocked the fuses of the lighting system all over the floor. Luckily no one was injured and the damages were not as heavy as might be expected.

Suitable music for same will be provided.

AN ABLE DISCOURSE

Venerable Archdeacon Beamish who returned from a month's holiday on Friday, occupied his pulpit at St. Thomas' Church on Sunday. At night he preached an excellent sermon from the subject of Solomon's request. Taking his text from the story of the visit of the Queen of Sheba to Solomon's Court he pointed out how that in spite of the wisdom, wealth and splendor with which Solomon was surrounded his request of God had been for wisdom to govern rightly, and knowledge to judge between good and evil—all the other things had been added unto him. He drew the reflection that our sin and prayer also should be for wisdom to shape our lives rightly and for knowledge to judge between right and wrong.

Railway News

Vancouver. — When here recently Mr. Grant Hall, Vice-President C. P. R., said he knew of no crop, simply the nature of an ordinary inspection tour, and that the company had no undertakings in mind connected with it. The new pier work will proceed as soon as possible.

As far as he could judge from his trip through the prairies and from reports received, there would be a big crop this year, and the company was making its usual preparations to handle its share of the business expeditiously.

Asked if the big harvest and readjustment of freight rates would mean that this company would carry larger quantities of grain here this fall, Mr. Hall replied that it was a matter over which the Canadian Pacific had no control.

"It all rests with the owner of the grain," he said. "We are prepared to haul it either East or West, just as he directs."

Rumor periodically revives the story that the Canadian Pacific is about to electrify its mountain lines in British Columbia. In regard to the Mr. Hall stated, as he had on former visits here, that the company is still awaiting experiments with a view at some later date of formulating a policy in regard to the proposed electrification. The impression he gave was that if the plan is pronounced feasible by the experts and the company is ready, it will proceed with the work. In any event this is liable to be a considerable time distant.

The vice-president was accompanied through the British Columbia division by Mr. F. W. Peters, general superintendent. He was met on arrival here by leading officials of the company and several personal friends.

Assiniboia, Alberta. — A further programme of improvement of lines in the Canadian Pacific in the west was announced by D. C. Coleman, vice-president in charge of Western lines, who is on his way west.

The largest item on the list was the relaying with one hundred pound steel of the double track between Ignace and Kenora.

In addition a number of bridges will be replaced with more permanent structures.

With respect to work on new branch lines it was announced that the existing plans on the Weyburn-Lethbridge will be closed; the line from Russell south will be completed; the first fifty miles of the Langdon-northerly line will be fully equipped for traffic; and the grading will be continued on the branch lines from Consul east. In this connection, Mr. Coleman said, they had hoped to announce a larger programme of branch line construction but until the effect of the freight rate reductions just announced on the revenues of the railway companies can be accurately determined, it is impossible to put ambitious policy "out of the question."

Port Hope. — The C. P. R. Port Hope bridge is fifteen hundred feet long. It is an interesting question how long it will require to paint it and how much paint will be used on the job. Fifty men are present eleven men swinging the brushes; they will be busy for at least eight days and three hundred gallons of paint will spread over the bridge. The men are scraping the girders in a big job and a tedious one. Men are over the water in canvas with small picks and hammers removing all the rust spots after which it is brushed down with steel brushes. A graphite paint is used and it comes all ready prepared for the work. The wages of the men for this job will exceed two thousand dollars. Mr. Purvis, who knows some idea what the painting account for the C. P. R. would amount to each year. There are two cars which provide eating and sleeping quarters for them. It is just seven years ago that this big structure was given a liberal coat of paint.

Montreal.—Mr. Alfred Price, General Manager, Atlantic Steamships, Canadian Pacific Railway, for over forty years, who has relinquished his duties with the railway for an indefinite period, left Montreal on the R. M. S. "Montrose" recently, bound for England.

Mr. Price, who is accompanied by his daughters Misses Laura and Grace Price, will spend some time at Torquay, Devonshire, England, where it is hoped Mr. Price's health will be restored.

Several of Mr. Price's friends went aboard the "Montrose" to see him off. Amongst the Canadian Pacific officials present were: A. D. Mackay, Vice-President; Jame Mason, Assistant to Vice-President; John J. Scully, General Manager Eastern Lines; W. G. Annable; W. Ballantyne; Arthur Allan; George H. Sanz; John Leslie; C. P. R. Company's trailer, who was accompanied by Mrs. Leslie and Miss Leslie. There were several other friends and well-wishers present. The souvenirs presented to Mr. Price included a jade and Monogram Pendant.

Mr. Price's cabin was lavishly decorated with flowers by his friends.

King's Chancellor Falls . . .

On Evil Days and Finds . . .
This Age Unsympathetic

THIS is a degenerate age, sure enough. If you contest that statement, consider the deplorable case of the King's Champion and Standard Bearer of England. He is Frank Seaman Dymoke, D.L., J.P., of Scrivelsby Court, the King's Champion and also Lord of King's Champion, which he holds by heredity right, is one that dates back at present to the first year of William the Conqueror. In those latter times, when the right of kingship was not "handed upon the people's will," but had to be obtained and held at the point of the sword, the King's Champion was the knight whose duty it was to attend the coronation of every king and queen, and to challenge to mortal combat any who dared contest the monarch's right to the throne.

The challenge was staged as they knew how to stage such acts in the days when kingship was in its flower. The scene of it was the coronation banquet which, up to the time of King George IV., was held at Westminster hall immediately after the impressive religious ceremony of a king's crowning in the historic abbey. The champion astride of a goodly white charger, richly caparisoned, used to ride into the banqueting hall, arriving "before the second course" in appearance, no doubt, at a time timed in order that all concerned would be cognizant of what was going on. The champion was arrayed in a complete suit of bright armor, accompanied by esquires and pages, and also by the Lord High Constable and the Earl Marshal—all in their very best. Trumpets sounded and then the herald proclaimed the champion's challenge as follows:

"If any person of what degree soever, high or low, shall deny or refuse to perform his duty to the King to be the rightful heir to the imperial crown of the United Kingdom, or that he ought not to enjoy the same, or that he is not entitled to all the rights that man lieth, and is a false traitor, I am ready to accept to combat with him, and in this quarrel will adventure my life against him, and what day sooner shall be appointed." The challenge was proclaimed at the door of the hall, again half way up the floor, again at the third time at the foot of the steps of the throne, and each time the champion threw down his gauntlet. It is conceivable that he perspired with anxiety when waiting to see if anyone accepted the challenge. So far as history records this never happened, and all having held their peace, the champion was likewise to have a drink with the King, and what was of more importance, carried off the gold wine cup (not forgetting the cover) as a really royal gift.

No doubt he heaved another profound sigh of relief when he managed to get his steed out of the hall, since, in order not to violate royal etiquette by turning his back upon the sovereign, he had to back the charger the whole way out. In these times the King's champion was a great personage and conducted himself with a dignity befitting his lofty state. But times have changed, and not for the better. For what happened to Frank Seaman Dymoke, D.L., J.P., the present King's champion and royal standard-bearer of England, the other day? Himself a magistrate, as his title of Justice of the Peace indicates, he was fined $150 at Horncastle Police Court (where he usually presides over Petty Sessions) "for being found on the licensed premises of the Red Lion Hotel, Horncastle, during prohibited hours" one day in January, in other words for indulging in a glass and gossip with several glasses of beer at a time when the law of the land declares that none of His Majesty's liege shall be served with intoxicating beverages in any hotel or "public house" throughout the land.

A nice thing to happen to a personage of such illustrious degree as a magistrate to boot! We are not told if the champion appeared in person to be fined, but Edward S. Ashton, "licensed victualler" and proprietor of the Red Lion Hotel, did, and was likewise "mulcted" $100 for allowing beer to be consumed in his hostelry during prohibited hours. Mr. Dymoke never has appeared in his function as King's champion, this part of the ceremony having been done away with at the enthronement of William IV., Victoria, Edward VII. and the present sovereign. After the reign of George IV. the champion's functions at coronations was shorn of that of Royal Standard-Bearer, and the present King's Champion and Standard-Bearer has been relegated to court owing to an infraction of the law on his part. He was fined 40 years ago for assaulting his cook, so evidently the aggressive spirit of his ancestors persists.

Plants That Follow the Sun.

At this time of the year runner beans and many other climbing plants can be studied in their way up the poles that support them. If you examine them you will find that those which climb by twining always do it in the same direction.

The hop and the honeysuckle turn from left to right. The reason for this is that the sun moves in the same direction and the plants follow him. The side of the shoot which is turned towards the sun grows faster than that which is in the shadow, and the result is that the stalk is forced into a "clockwise" curve.

The runner bean, however, and many other plants, twist in the opposite direction. At first sight you might think that this disproved the explanation given above; but in reality it does not. Plants of this kind are affected differently by strong light and the heat of the sun. In their case, the side of the shoot which faces the sun shrinks a little under the heat, and so gives the whole stalk into an "anti-clockwise" curve.

H. C. OF L. IN PORTUGAL

Food Prices Very Low and Exchange Rate Is High

Lisbon, Aug. 7—A rate of exchange alarmingly low in terms of foodstuffs exorbitantly high have conspired to make the cost of living in Portugal a serious problem, and profiteering as an additional factor cannot be overlooked.

Several highly placed state functionaries have been arrested and jailed, charged with conspiracy and the holding of secret meetings, which is an infraction of an underlying political unrest. It is felt in some quarters that a military movement is in preparation, as in case of a fresh outburst of the turbulent elements which brought about the political assassinations of last October.

The press is clamoring against the reckless conduct of state money, and Senhor Velho vehemently exhorts the government to put an end to the speculation which is chiefly attributed to the increasing fall in exchange. The Minister of Finance is trying to raise an internal loan and has had conferences with several of the most prominent Portuguese bankers to this end. His efforts have been met with unsuccessful.

One of the factors and to contribute to the situation is that, although exportation amounts to 40 per cent. per month, all this money is deposited in foreign banks instead of being paid out in the country. At the same time the general exchange is being carried on in a barefaced manner. In London banks alone there is said to be over 25,000,000 Portuguese pounds which would greatly improve the rate of exchange if left here. The consensus of opinion is to condemn and the fault of the troops having to keep within barracks to be ready in a moment's notice, aside to the general unrest.

Figures directs attention to the statement of the British Premier, Lloyd George calling upon the nations which owe England money to pay interest charges in October. The debt amounts to over £900,000, and in the paper sale if the interest is to be paid when due.

HARDING FAILS IN HIS EFFORTS TO END RAIL STRIKE

Railway Shopmen Quickly Refuse His Latest Proposition to Submit Seniority Problem to the Railroad Labor Board.

Cleveland, Aug. 7.—Settlement of the bituminous coal strike by the end of the week, and the starting of the 650,000 miners back to the pits by next Monday, seems to be confidently expected by officials of the United Mine Workers, following today's initial parley with a group of producers, representing between 75 and 80 per cent. of the tonnage mined in the four States of the central competitive field.

John L. Lewis, national head of the miners, said tonight upon adjournment of the conference until Wednesday:

"I am hopeful and thoroughly confident that the suspension will end this week."

The conference recessed until Wednesday in the belief that other substantial interests would announce their participation in the meeting.

Brings Pressure to Bear.

The influence is that pressure is being brought to bear upon Illinois and Indiana operators to come in. Their Scales Committees are due to meet today. The mines have been busy all-day, urging them in. At the conference producers of between 325,000 and 60,000 tons in the central field sat in. Indiana and Illinois operators were absent, as were Southern Ohio and the main Pittsburg field.

Indications, it was reported, were that the Western Pennsylvania group, which led in refusing to go into a four-State conference last winter, is dividing. Both sides have look for agreement between Illinois and Indiana. Alfred M. Ogle of the Vandalia Coal Company is expected tomorrow.

The proposal of the union is:

(1) Continuance of the old rates and working conditions that prevailed under the old contracts that ended April 1, pending the negotiation of a new agreement.

(2) The letting of the question of wages be settled by the one to a factfinding agency and to map out a reorganization scheme that will put mining on a sound, modern basis. This body is either to be appointed by Mr. Harding or selected subject to his approval.

What terms the operators will advance against this have not been determined. They may suggest a cut of 10 to 20 per cent. in wages, but the central belief appears to be that the settlement will be on the basis of the old 1920 scale, with the "check off" and all the other old conditions prevailing up to last April 1 intact. The expectation of the union men is that it may take a few days to reach an agreement with the tonnage representatives.

SEVERE STORM IN THIS DISTRICT

House and Drive Shed Damaged in Surrounding Country

The storm which passed through this district on Monday was the most severe storm experienced this season. Thurlow and Ameliasburg townships were hard hit, the rain falling in torrents and the lightning being fierce. Out Tweed way, however, there was not a very heavy storm. The switchboard at the Healey Falls plant of the Hydro was deranged and power lines are put temporarily out of commission. At eleven o'clock Monday the supply to Peterborough ebbed to a minimum, and the services of the Utilities Commission had to be curtailed. The seriousness of the situation, however, passed away after noon, and the normal load is now being carried.

The house on the farm owned by Mr. T. W. Davis, Second Concession Thurlow Township, was struck by lightning, the chimney shattered and other damages to the extent of about $400 or $40 also to the residence.

The drive shed on the farm owned by Mr. W. C. Dempsey, Ameliasburg Township, was also struck by lightning and very badly damaged.

NEGRO CONVICT MAKES ESCAPE

One of the Convicts En Route to Prince Albert Gains Freedom

The first sensational incident in connection with the removal of convicts from the penitentiary at Kingston to the new penitentiary at Prince Albert, occurred at 9 a.m. on Sunday morning, when according to a telegram received from Inspector Gilbert Smith by Warden Pontefract a negro named Griffith broke from his shackles and handcuffs, forced a window bar, and jumped from the moving train near St. Cloud, north of Burwash. Guard Leo Sullivan, of the local institution, was left at St. Cloud and all police authorities have been notified.

Departure of Convicts.

The arrangements for the removal of the convicts from the penitentiary were very quietly and efficiently carried out. The convicts were taken from under the Chief Keeper of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary arrived in the city on Sunday to assist in the arrangements, and at three o'clock on Saturday afternoon motor lorries carrying the convicts passed from the penitentiary gates ready to convey them to the waiting cars at the city limits. Journey. Every available guard from the local institution was on hand, duly armed, reinforced by the detachment from Quebec, in order to take the necessary precautions against attempted escape, or like action. During the trip from the penitentiary until they were safely on board the train the convicts were securely handcuffed, and after embarkation light leg shackles were placed on the prisoners. How Griffith managed to shake off these shackles and handcuffs is beyond explanation, for they were most securely fastened.

SEIZE LIQUOR AT ALEXANDRIA BAY

American Officers Seize $7,000 Cargo and Arrest One Man

A power boat containing 100 cases of American whiskey was seized by U.S. federal officers at Alexandria Bay Saturday morning about 3 o'clock. A man who gave his name as Jack Goldman, residing at the East Ontario Hotel in Syracuse, N.Y., who is said to have been in charge of the craft, was placed under arrest. Two other men made their escape by jumping into the river and swimming to safety. The motor boat, which bore the name Ida, was towed ashore by the Jewel 4th., with its load of liquor was towed to Ogdensburg by the U. S. Chittenden, which figured in the capture. The liquor was transferred to the vaults in the main customs house and the power boat was tied up alongside the Chillicothe at her berth at the foot of State street, in Ogdensburg. In addition to the liquor the officers took possession of a Martin repeating rifle and a heavy calibre pistol which were found on board the power boat.'

The liquor seized consists principally of high grade American rye, port wine and a few cases of Duncan Scotch whiskey. The federal officers placed a valuation of $60 a case on the liquor, or a total of $714. The value of the power boat wasnot ascertained.

MAN DROWNED AT PETERBORO

Fell From Punt in Otonabee River It is Believed

The body of a man floating in the water near his boathouse, at McDonald's point, Peterboro, on the Otonabee River, attracted the attention of Charles Rootes, a blacksmith, 457 Chamberlain street, about noon o'clock, Sunday morning.

The police were at once notified, and Sergt. Arthur Thompson and Constable Gordon Puffer were on the scene in the police car within a few minutes. The body was lying in the water and in only about two feet of water and was at the stern end of a punt pulled up on the shore.

The officers turned over the body and Mr. Rootes at once identified the man as Simon Murphy, a resident of the southern part of the city for many years, whom he had often observed about the water, where the family state he was in the habit of going for a walk.

From the position of the body the officers concluded that Mr. Murphy had collapsed from the stern of the punt, and had drowned. His boots were partly filled with water, it was stated.

Coroner Dr. D. C. King was called and decided that an inquest was unnecessary. The body was removed to Lane and Rann's undertaking parlours.

The police notified W. N. Graham, his son-in-law, 211 Rink street, with whom he made his home, at 9:30 a.m.

C.P.R. STEAMER LANDS AT QUEBEC

Large Number of Prominent Passengers Amongst Those on Board

Special to The Intelligencer from J. Harry Smith.

Quebec, Aug. 8.—The Canadian Pacific 18,000 tons Empress of France, in command of Capt. E. These girls, who did not know a word of English when they went to England one year ago, are now quite equally English, which charmed all the passengers in the saloon.

DOPE PEDDLERS ARE HELD IN CUSTODY

Were Tracked by Local Police and Located at Peterboro

Thomas Hughes, an alleged dope peddler and Arthur Leslie Taylor, a go-between, held at Peterboro on charges of vvagrancy, have been remanded to jail until next Friday. Within the week the pair will likely be separated, Hughes going to Ottawa where he will be wanted for breaking parole, and Taylor to Belleville, where the police got on their trail. Taylor will be wanted for the arrest before the men had time to get busy. The Criminal Investigation Department is unable to show a record against Taylor, but the Peterboro chief said he had been informed that he was acquainted with the interior of prisons.

Hughes, from his record, is no amateur operator. On September 29th, 1919, he was sentenced in Ottawa on four charges of theft, receiving on one account 18 months and on the other three months, the sentences to run concurrently. He went to the Ontario Reformatory, but on July 20, 1910, broke jail at Sudbury. He again fell into the hands of the police and received two years in Portsmouth penitentiary. On December 22 he was released on parole, but since then has violated the parole, and he will probably be re-sentenced. Ottawa authorities have asked that he be detained and the police are awaiting further word.

WELSH COAL AT LOW PRICE

Montreal, Aug. 7.—This city has received a large consignment of Llewellyn, Merrit, Price and Colapsay, coal merchants of Cardiff, Wales, who have dispatched from Cardiff the ship a cargo of coal to Montreal at a figure considerably below present market rates. Should this be satisfactory the matter will be taken under consideration by the City Council in the near future.

AGREEMENT PROBABLE IN ANTHRACITE FIELDS

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 7.—Immediately after the conclusion of the general meeting of bituminous coal miners and operators to be held in this city on Wednesday, a joint meeting of anthracite miners and operators will be called, probably for Philadelphia, where it is believed an agreement similar to that affecting the bituminous fields, will result in the immediate resumption of work in the hard coal fields, will be made.

ALLEGED TO HAVE SET FIRE TO HOUSE

Kingston, Aug. 7.—Charged with arson, alleged to have been committed at Ardendale, Frontenac County, on Ardendale, appeared before Justice of the Peace S. Gordon, at Sharbot Lake on Friday.

It was alleged, on information presented by R. D. Gordon of the Fire Marshal's office, Toronto, that Newton had set fire, during the night to the house in which he resided, and which he have had an interest, and which was occupied by Mrs. Scott and her 10 young children. The fire started on the outside of the building, and it was fortunate that the smoke awakened Mrs. Scott. The children were then forced to run scantily clad to her nearest neighbor's house which was a quarter of a mile away. Information was secured from Morris Newton, cousin of the accused, and with whom he roomed, during the night they had retired together. Later Morris Newton found accused fully dressed and upon inquiry learned from him that he had set fire to the house having gone there on horseback. Justice of the Peace Gordon enlarged the case for five days to consider the evidence.

BIG DANCE ON FRONT STREET

Pleasant Function Will Usher in Real Day of Fun on Holiday

To-morrow is Civic Holiday in Belleville, but the holiday will really be launched this evening when a big street dance will be staged on Front street. From Campbell street to Church street Front street will be roped off and closed to traffic to-night and the excursers are to choose their own partners and will be temporarily converted into a dancing floor. The Belleville City Band will be present and be of course quite informal, as that a real jolly time is anticipated. At 8 o'clock the Belleville band will be out in full force and will not only supply the dance music but will render selections between dances.

The members of the enterprising committee in charge of the Civic Holiday Celebration have left no stone unturned in completing the details for a real day's sport, and to-night will see the opening of the big fun festival. Let's all go.

At 2 o'clock this afternoon a parade will be held which will be the commencement of the day's programme. In connection with the parade prizes will be given to the two best decorated vehicles and the two best decorated bicycles in the parade. Prizes will also be given to the best dressed man and lady and the most ridiculously dressed man. Upon arrival at the agricultural park an interesting program of sports will be carried out. The baseball game between the G.T.R. team and the Bell Telephone team and the Three Tins team of the city will no doubt be a fine exhibition of ball playing. Considerable interest has been so arranged that boys and girls in addition to men will be able to participate in certain events. The tug of war between teams representing the Rotary and Lions Club will determine which team has the greater pull. The polar race between members of the police force, firemen and postmen will also be an interesting event. The programme is such that a large crowd should be in attendance.

FRENCH PREMIER DEFINES TERMS FOR A MORATORIUM TO GERMANY

Poincare's Demands Include Stabilization of Mark, More Rigid Control of Customs, Immediate Capital Levy, and Tax on Ruhr Coal.

London, Aug. 7.—M. Poincare's terms for a moratorium, which he wanted to be as short as possible, are reported to contain five main clauses as laid before the Allied conference here.

1. The Committee on Guarantees to be given wider powers to insist on German budgetary reform. The present paper currency amounts to 160,000,000,000 marks, of which the real value is not more than 1,500,000,000. Before the war, Germany needed more than six billions in circulation to meet her needs. Therefore, the first duty of the committee should be to put an end to the present paradox by stabilizing the mark.

2. More rigid control of customs in the occupied zone, the proceeds henceforth to go directly to the committee on guarantees.

3. An immediate capital levy in Germany, pronounced to be based on principles as security that payment will be resumed immediately on termination of the moratorium. This levy would consist of a certain percentage, possibly 25 per cent., on all German industrial securities.

4. A similar tax on coal produced in the Rhur district.

5. State forests and mines in Germany to be controlled under the direction of the Committee on Guarantees and perhaps exploited for the benefit of the reparations account.

TWO DROWNED AT TORONTO

Good Swimmers Overcome by Heart Weakness at Sunnyside Beach

Toronto, Aug. 8.—Lloyd Wiggins, aged 18, 9261 Dufferin Street, and Wilfred Ward, aged 28, 138 Emerson Avenue, lost their lives by drowning yesterday, the former in the Humber River, opposite the Old Mill, and the latter at Sunnyside Bathing Beach.

The fatality at Sunnyside Beach occurred shortly after 1o'clock. Ward had just had his lunch. Accompanied by Mr. Gowyn, he hastened to the bathing the locker pavilion he made a race for the water. Miss Gowyn was in front and was reached out, thinking that Mr. Ward was immediately behind. Reaching a point where the water is deep, the young lady turned to speak to Ward, only to find that he was not near her. Wading about amongst the crowd, Miss Gowyn failed to locate him, and notified the lifeguards that he was missing.

Ward, who was a good swimmer, had apparently gone down without making any outcry. He had not been in the water more than a minute when his heart failed him and he sank.

The fact that he had gone in voluntarily so soon after his lunch was responsible for his untimely end, his death being attributed to acute dilatation of the heart, caused by over-ex ertion.

TO MAKE STUDY OF TIBET

Mission Is Composed of English Scientists, Explorers and Missionaries

London, Aug. 8.—Great Britain intends to make a thorough study of the little known land of Tibet, where devil worship and belief in ghosts still exist. A mission composed of some of England's ablest explorers, scientists, missionaries and ethnologists soon will leave London for the City of Lhasa, which is buried behind the world's rampart of mountains, the Himalayas, between India and China. The mission will proceed under the auspices of the International Buddhist Union, representing all schools of Buddhism, including the Buddhist Society of the United States.

The mission will make a closer investigation of the Tibetan people, their customs, religion and language, than has yet been possible, together with a study of rare books and manuscripts known to exist in the monastic libraries. These are expected to prove of the greatest value, not only to Buddhist scholarship and to the study of comparitive religion, but to fill many gaps that at present exist in the world's knowledge of the early history of a country which to the present day is veiled in mystery.

Tibetans live in mountain strong holds, 15,000 feet above the level of the sea, which is 500 feet higher than Mount Whitney the highest peak in the United States. They have always proved impossible to foreigners and to the introduction of modern ideas. Little is known of the origin of the people. Local tradition has it that the progenitors of the race were "a wild devil of the Himalayas" and an ape from the plains of Hindustan.

The last foreigner in Tibet was an American medical missionary, Dr. A. L. Shelton, San Francisco, who spent 17 years at Batang, near the China-Tibetan border, in its form of government. Tibet is one of the few remaining theocracies in the world. The people lead a nomadic life. Monogamy, polygamy and polyandry flourish. Under the polyandrous system, the eldest son of a family marries a woman and she becomes the common wife of himself and his brothers.

Dr. Shelton found that the Tibetan woman usually marries three or four brothers, and, in one case that came under his observation a woman had six brothers for husbands. The oldest brother is considered the father and the other brothers the uncles of the family. Woman occupies a superior position. She is master of the house and farm. Cross worms, fungi, and the horns of young deer, ground to powder, are considered by the Tibetans infallible medicinal remedies for all ills, and are even held in high favor at table delicacies.

Thousands of years of isolation have paralyzed the progress of the people. There is no public instruction. Paper forms of worship prevail. Only the most elemental forms of government exists. Offenders against the law, which is derived largely from the Kanjur, the Buddhist's Bible, a work of 108 volumes, are punished by having their hands and feet amputated. When a Tibetan dies his body is dismembered and fed to vultures. The people are extremely poor. They dress in sheepskins and the usual rule is one garment to a person.

HOW PULLMAN CARS ARE NAMED

Chicago, Aug. 4.—For the first time the Pullman Company has made public its system of naming cars. The names and the mystery connected with the selections have piqued public curiosity for forty years.

"Sequence is the system. One name suggests another," says the Pullman Bulletin. Thus "Ruth and Naomi, Venus and Adonis, Dewey and Manila."

Next came some one with classical thought:

"Helen and Paris. Also Trojan, Ilion, Achilles, Hector, Ajax, Nestor and Ulysses and Penelope."

Then came selections from Dickens' characters, Kipling and his works, Walter Scott characters, Indian names, Ireland and its counties, Arthur and his round table knights.

To titillate the palates of those who regret the passage of the eighteenth amendment there are the cars: Bourbon, Rye-ate, Gordon, Manhattan, Monette, Burgundy, Tokay, Yvette, Cohase, Scotland and Bacchante. Hope is seen in the Westmore, but, "Oh, my prophetic soul!" there is also Aqua and Temperance.

AN ANGLER'S PARADISE

Two hundred miles north of Toronto and one hundred and seventy miles west of Ottawa is situated Algonquin Park, where the fishing this year is better than it has been for some time. Great catches are being made—Black bass running three and four pounds, speckled trout, three pounds and salmon trout up to twenty-five pounds. This park is ideal for the camper and canoe cruiser, and good hotel accommodation makes it the popular spot for the summer vacationist who does not like to rough it. STARVATION IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Terrible Conditions Among Fishermen Are Described by Dr. Grenfell

St. Johns, Nfld., August 4.—Story of semi-starvation and naked bess among many of the fisher folk of northern Newfoundland was told by Dr. Wilfred Grenfell of Labrador fame, in the log of his hospital ship, Strathcona, recently received here. The log was written while Dr. Grenfell and his party of twelve doctors, nurses and teachers were making the first part of their summer trip along the east coast of Newfoundland from D'willingate north wards. Of the trip as far as West port Dr. Grenfell wrote.

"There was so much sickness and poverty in all this section of the coast that now, after two weeks, we are only at Westport, having treater over three hundred sick people many cases the result of semi-starvation, for dry white flour and molasses will not maintain life even if there were enough of it. Both two who died of beri-beri, another another name for starvation, we found one young man, crawling us from his stage to his home on his hands and knees, because he was to weak to walk.

Flour-de-lys kept us two full days. Here also was much need and many patients. Here we have tried to start a branch of industrial work in the form of building model schooners. A fleet of seven availed us, three of which were perfect beauties. We hope to advertise these boats in the United States and Canada and get good prices for them. Nothing is more urgently needed on this coast than the development of the more lent native talent along remunerative (industrial) lines.

The facts we have observed so fat tally entirely with the letters and interviews we received in America during the winter. Semi-starvation has been the rule rather than the exception, actual starvation has not been absent. Malnutness is the pre dominant note, for when food was unobtainable clothing was not even to be thought of.

"My last patient tonight was a widow, thirty-four years of age. She looked fifty. With two barefooted naked children, she has come five months and gets in the chest. Pale and haggard she sat in my cabin without one word of a complaint that she had to escape for fear of unknown terrors. The woman, whose story was listened to by the Pilgrim was placed under a $500 bail bond for her appearance on the charge of theft from the person.

Through counsel she contended that she was given a ride, lured to the house, drugged, and left in a miserable condition. When she realized her plight she had to look around for means of escape, and at the first opportunity she ran away. On a promise that she would go to her parents she reside on Berri street, Judge Bertieri allowed her out on the $500 bail.

LURED TO HOUSE, VICTIM ESCAPES

Montreal, Aug. 7.—Arrested on a charge of theft of $50 from the person, Mary Gordon, 29 years of age, told Judge Enright a strange story of fortune and ruin in the chest. Which she alleged, was anything but respect able, and from which she claimed that she had to escape for fear of unknown terrors. The woman, whose story was listened to by the Pilgrim was placed under a $500 bail bond for her appearance on the charge of theft from the person.

Through counsel she contended that she was given a ride, lured to the house, drugged, and left in a miserable condition. In the course of an interview, Mr. Rustomjee said: "I spent six months in my country, India, during which time I traversed over the entire area to study the political, economic and labor questions as well as the causes for unrest, which the American and Canadian public as well as the European public has been fed up with for some time past. I have come back with the greatest admiration for the British Empire and the breadth of the magnificent work done by England and England alone for the advancement and general welfare of my country and I have the greatest intention of telling the people of the English people, who are settled in India, and working for my country, especially in preparing three hundred and twenty two millions of my people to enjoy the fruition of India.

The cause of unrest in India originated before the war from a religious point of view on account of the collapse of Turkey with its two hundred and seventy million Mahomedans, among which the religious people of the same sect thought India was in grain,

The convicts appeared far more cheerful when one would expect, no doubt feeling that the incident of their escape would mean a short monotony of their present existence. A few of their number exchanged pleasantries with friends of the outcollection of citizens who witnessed their departure. The majority of them appeared to be quite young men, and except for their prison garb were seemingly ordinary selfrespecting citizens. Among one of number was a small minority of swarthy foreigners who, as is their practice in ordinary life, formed a small clique among themselves and were permitted to sit together in the coach. Rations for the whole journey were placed on board the baggage car of the train and included such articles as chocolate, cigarettes and tobacco. The food is being cooked by the two chefs carried on the train under the supervision of the Assistant Stewart of the local penitentiary. The coaches were touringcolonist cars of the usual construction of the pattern which fold down forming a comfortable bed, blankets were carried, and the convicts were to board the train were far superior to those which were usually made for the transportation of prisoners during the war. Cleaning utensils for use in the coaches on route were also evidence, that the police authorities evidently being that there should be absolutely no cause for complaint on the part of the convicts during the journey.

Great Secrecy Observed.

At 3.30 p.m. (city time) every convict was on board the train, which stood at the Canadian Pacific station at the foot of West street, until the arrival of the engine which is to haul the train of the journey. The arrangements on behalf of the railway company were carried out with the greatest possible secrecy. There was not more than ten officials connected with the entire embarkation and departure and these were practically all people who lived in the immediate vicinity. The secrecy of the arrangements not only offset any possibility of any attempt at escape, but also was of material and great help in keeping the convicts to a contented frame of mind as after all these embarkation parties had no wish to be stared at by a crowd as if they were animals in a menagerie.

LONDON HOSPITAL HAS STRANGE CASE

Man With Broken Spine, But No Paralysis Follows Accident

London, Ont., Aug. 7—Lloyd O'Brien of Zurich, Ont., suffered a broken spine when he slipped off a lookout on which he was working and landed on the ground. He was taken quickly in St. Joseph's Hospital. The injured man, who is 23 years of age, was examined by Dr. Jones, holding up a dainty high-button shoe, and exclaiming, with painted vamp and the extreme of high heel, "Isn't it pretty?" "Well, it's your best bet, and I'll bet it's decidedly uncomfortable."

Doris did not relish this frankness. "I think I've stood all I am going to from you men," she said. "You are taking a very unfair advantage of me to get down and say things about my feet and shoes." She was trying desperately to tack a little silk-covered foot under an abbreviated skirt. "I'll see you my shoe back on and let me go."

The shoe was eventually buttoned up and Doris rose. "Forgive me, Lieutenant," she said, withdrawing up pleadingly from his stool. "I only said it for your own good. I wanted to show you some of the sort of shoes I think a girl with a pair of feet as pretty as yours ought to wear instead of those.

But Doris was obdurate. She was miserable but she was taking a strangely truthful fascination in the conversation. Besides she knew well enough she loved to distraction. If you had happened to be buying shoes on a certain May morning in Dawson's smart shoe shop you might have seen a prepossessing young shoe salesman with his footstool drawn close to a bewitching young customer, and you would have thought their conversation was more heated and more intimate than the purchase of a pair of shoes or so would usually warrant. If you had overheard you would have got this:

"But I think it was extremely unfair of you," from the girl on the right. "You told me you were learning your trade's business in every detail and I knew by was in the shoe business but I never dreamed that you were actually learning to be one, selling women's shoes.

"I shouldn't think you'd want to. And you didn't want me to know, I am sure, or you would have told me right out. If I just hadn't happened to walk right up to you before I even recognized you I never would have found it out. Of course, I didn't know that your father was really at the head of Dawson's."

"I had nothing to be ashamed of," said young Dawson, with considerable asperity—asperity that set very well on his handsome, boyish face. "In my letters I did not go into details because I didn't know you would be interested, but I certainly never thought would be of most interest to you. I had to start at the bottom to be promoted to the post of vice president of the company, and I worked myself in the business. I told you what my income would be within a few months, and I thought you thought it only fair for you to know that the head of the concern was a peer."

"Well, I suppose I might as well get the shoes anyway," she said lamely. "I'll take these, and you may put them on."

"Not if I have anything to say about it," came from Dawson, and he was surprised at his own temerity. Perhaps he had a sort of caveman notion of the subject that a pretty girl to even more embarrassment than she had. "I'll not only put on the shoes, but the opinion she had expressed concerning his present humble calling. I'll do nothing to have anything to say about what you do and don't do, or how interesting it is to you, you shoe like that—I guess I know from the expression on your face—you'd much rather that just rule the shape of women's feet. Oh, perhaps they are right for you, but you're not going to. You want these shoes to walk in, I shouldn't like any ordinary salesman for that way, but I've got to talk to you straight, you've insulted me, and resenter ought to know. That's why I'm glad I am spending these weeks selling shoes."

"But I think I have a right to buy the sort of shoes I like. Besides you don't know how I am answering your letters." A sort of defiance in her letter was on its way containing an answer unsurpassed for its feminine finality. She had planned to get these delectable shoes for a spring house party to be given by a friend, and they were the real evil. High-heeled white boots with a strap and buckle and everything the picture that she contemplated.

"Look at the shoes you've got on now," he said, pointing to her poor Dawson, holding up a dainty high-button shoe, and exclaiming, with painted vamp and the extreme of high heel. "Isn't it pretty?" "Well, it's your best bet, and I'll bet it's decidedly uncomfortable."

Doris did not relish this frankness. "I think I've stood all I am going to from you men," she said. "You are taking a very unfair advantage of me to get down and say things about my feet and shoes." She was trying desperately to tack a little silk-covered foot under an abbreviated skirt. "I'll see you my shoe back on and let me go."

The shoe was eventually buttoned up and Doris rose. "Forgive me, Lieutenant," she said, withdrawing up pleadingly from his stool. "I only said it for your own good. I wanted to show you some of the sort of shoes I think a girl with a pair of feet as pretty as yours ought to wear instead of those. With your little foot they'd look wonderful, and they'd be so much better for you."

But Doris was obdurate. She was miserable but she was taking a strangely truthful fascination in the conversation. Besides she knew well enough she loved to distraction. She knew she would be filled with bitter remorse as soon as she was home and had time to think of it, but now it was here a strange sort of pleasure to torture him. She entered her way on her high heels out of the shop without even turning to bid him good-by and Dawson was left to gather together the array of high-heeled white bedroom pumps he had got out for her inspection.

About a half hour later young Dawson was hurrying along the avenue, bent on getting to his rooms to see whether a letter had yet arrived from the girl who had gone and left him in this shod salesmen at Dawson's, for such, this interview with Doris herself had left him without the slightest specific for that repeat. If she had actually written a letter of acceptance then this little difference might be set right. He could not bear to lose her entirely, send her five or six, tan doesn't necessary, American beauties, tan shoes and the best candy and perfume she might still be his.

Because of his haste he was especially annoyed midway of a busy block. A crowd had gathered that entirely blocked the walk. Abstracted as he was his ears were not deaf to comments he heard.

"Smasher! Somebody hurt?" might be the cause of the spring in every way though for a better view.

"Naw," came the rejoinder from one who was in a more favorable place. "Lady stuck."

Dawson was more, stuck?" came from the first.

"High heel in a iron grating," was the reply. "I thought some more don't get caught that way."

Then came a suppressed chuckle from the crowd. But young Dawson had heard enough. He gave a leap, got up to the crowd, he took time to push up to the crowd and, being of more than average height, he did not have to push very far before he saw that the cause of the excitement was a group of lunch hour pedestrians. It was Doris, the dainty blue-eyed girl who had entertained him but an hour with one high buttoned boot within the toe of her of a handsome shoe, but obliging man was down on hands and knees trying to pry the heel from the iron grating. Another one was suggesting that they had better let him alone for fear he would break it, when it could be twisted about and loosened from the grating, but as this would ruin the shoe for use the question did not meet the favor of the crowd.

"I have a better hook," interrupted Dawson's obliging friend, and he pushed way boldly into the crowd.

"Salesman from a shoe store," whispered some one, and there was a merry bottom hooks in their pockets."

By this time Dawson and the obliging army were moving definitely from side to side with a definite aim to fix the shoe for the crowd. And no interest knew from the expression on his face that he meant business.

"Stand back," he commanded, "the lady will faint if you crowd her like that. Aw, Haven't you men anything better to do than to stand laughing at a lady in a predicament like this?"

"Serves her right for wearing them high heels," muttered one of the last to leave Doris and young Dawson. It was a simple matter underneath the shoe to slip shoe, and when he had stepped out of it Dawson easily worked the heel through the iron grating. But as he did not wait to button it back on. He hailed a passing taxi and had Doris, did the poor, speechless Doris thereto, and, stopping in beside her, ordered the taxi out to the end of the avenue of his married sister.

"I don't want to take you in my own place, obviously, and just as obviously you can't go all the way out to your home in that shoe. And I know you'll want to rest up a bit after that ordeal. I think I'll go and get something to take you to my sister's and we can go your own up there.

"But I don't like to take you time," came weakly from Doris, who was in a very unstrung condition for a fight off the faintness that she felt as a result of her embarrassment in the street crowd. "You ought to take your self to your office. It doesn't you going somewhere important?

"Yes, I was," said Dawson. "I was going down to see if I had got an answer to the letter I sent you, but you don't want to tell me you have written one and what the letter said."

"I said yes, of course," said Doris with a little nervous laugh as she looked up at young Dawson beside her in the taxi. "And, besides, I am not going to wear those silly heels to the street again. I am going to wear my shoes after what you said."

But Dawson wasn't thinking about heels at that moment apparently for what it was revealed to him that this neat little bundle of girls he would had actually accepted his heart and hand.

But He Wen.

I am engaged in a work which gives me a philosophic interest in the tracing of language through more than 20 different dialects has opened a new and beautiful appreciation. The more within two years past made discoveries which, if ever published, must interest all Hierati of all Europe, and render it necessary to revise all the lexicons of Hebrew, Greek and Latin—now used as classical books. But what can I do? I have my resources are almost exhausted, and in a few days I shall sell my watch to get bread for my children.—Noah Webster.

U. S. Senator Gore on the Farmer.

The farmer cannot continue to sell his produce for less than the cost of production any more than he could live in a vacuum. Out of the reduced proceeds of what he sells, the farmer is obliged to pay extraordinary prices for everything that he buys. I believe that our national prosperity and prosperity are bound up with the progress and prosperity of our farmers. Any policy which crucifies the farmer will bear evil fruit, and will dry up the fountains of national prosperity.

OXFORD AND TORONTO.

Stephen Leacock Compares Them Two Universities.

Stephen Leacock has been making a comparison between Oxford and Toronto Universities, especially the manners of living in those places.

"When I was a student at the University of Toronto," he writes in the London Morning Post, "I lived with my father in a semi-detached house. Now as a boarding house. It has a garden, three houses have rats pet, or not yet, been marked with tablets. Now they are all still to be found in the vicinity of McCaul and D'Arcy and St. Patrick streets. Anyone who doubts the truth of what I have to say can go and look for himself.

"I was not alone in the nomadic life that I led. There were hundreds of us drifting about in the fashion from one wretched habitation to another. We lived, as a rule, two or three in a house. We dined in the basement. We always had beer, done up in brown paper. If we were feeling flush there were always soda biscuits on the table.

"They say we have a breed of soda biscuits in the Toronto district that is found in no other soda since. They were better than dog biscuits, but with a less nourishing value. Contemporaries will all remember them. I have met many of the leading barristers and professional men of Toronto who ate them.

"The only interchange of ideas we ever had was by going over to the Czar Howell Hotel on University avenue, where we would sit and talk for hours. And there were always soda biscuits on the table.

As for Oxford, Leacock describes there also the living conditions under which the students work."

The lack of housing accommodation, he says, "compels them to go on working in the same old rooms for years. They are like old fortunes. The buildings at Wadham College, which has been in existence for the year 1400. In Merton and Magdalen the undergraduates live in the very old buildings erected in the fourteenth century.

"At Christ Church I was shown a kitchen which was erected at the expense of Cardinal Wolsey in 1518. It is still in use, and in my days, they still have no other place to cook in than that kitchen. It is probably so to-day.

"On the day when I saw this kitchen the cook was busy roast-ing an ox whole for the undergraduates' dinner. I was told I presumed they were doing from the cardinal's time, but that in may not have been an ox, perhaps it was only a sheep.

"On a huge table, twelve feet by six, and made of slabs of oak five inches thick, two other cooks were busy with pies. I was also entertained at as measuring three feet across.

"The food is not so extraordinary since the time of Henry VIII., the undergraduates still eat in may ways, they still have no other place to cook in than that kitchen. It is probably so to-day.

CURB THE TONGUE.

A campaign against swearing in public has been started by the Roman Catholic Association of Commercial Travellers of Quebec. It would be a good thing if it might be extended to Ontario, and also be extended toward the elimination of that other too prevalent habit of telling nasty stories. There are people who revel in this sort of thing as a hog revels in mire, and they are not particularly the possessor of people who have no higher ideals. For the sake of others and especially for the sake of keeping clean the minds of the young, those addicted to such habits might subject their tongues and their thought to rigid discipline.

The Ottawa Journal dealing with this subject of swearing in public says: "Well, if in public, why not elsewhere? Is it the contention that a man can pick and choose the place by which he shall swear? A man who does not swear in public is not likely to swear at all. Swearing in the last analysis is a symptom of a perverted mind. The oath simply means there is something out of kilter in the mind and heart of the man using it. Any movement that in a public way seeks to discourage it, although only a means of repression rather than a permanent cure, is in the right direction and merits approval."

JOHN BULL.

Every country has a nickname, and is represented in pictures by an animal. The British Lion is the animal which stands for England, and John Bull is its owner and master. The lion is the country; John Bull is the nation.

The name of John Bull (writes a correspondent to the Newcastle Weekly Chronicle) comes from a work written by Dr. Arbuthnot (1667-1735), a writer, and great friend of Swift and Pope. The sketch that he wrote was in connection with the political affairs of Europe at the time, and the countries were made to appear as if they were men and women. England, the nation and country, was made to appear as if they were men and women. England was John Bull, and Queen Anne was Mrs. Bull. The Church was Mr. Bull's mother; Scotland was Mr. Bull's sister Peg. England, the nation and country was made to appear like a man of very good nature, but not without faults. The name of Bull answered very well. John was shown "in the main as an honest, plain-dealing fellow, choleric, bold, and of very inconstant temper. He dreaded not old Lewis (Louis XIV.) either at sword or single stick, or cudgel play. But then he was very apt to quarrel with the best friends, especially if they pretended to govern him. If you flattered him, you might lead him like a child.

"John's temper depended very much upon the air. He frequently fell with the weather glass. He was quiet, and understood business well, but no man alive was more careless into looking into his accounts, nor more cheerfully cheated by partners, appointees, and servants. This was occasioned by his being a keen companion, loving his bottle and his diversion; or, to say truth, no man kept a better house than John, nor spent his money more generously."

(Chap. 5) Mrs. Bull (Chap. 4) says:—"You rot, you loiter about saloons and taverns, spend your time at billiards, biscuits, or puppet shows, never minding nor my nor your family. Don't you hear how Lord Strutt (King of Spain) has bespoke his liveries at Lewis Baboons shop (France)?. . . Fie upon it! Up man!. . . I'll sell my shift before I'll be so used."

Washington Irving says: "One would think, in personifying itself, a nation would. . . picture something grand, heroic and imposing, but it is characteristic of the peculiar humour of the English, and of their love for what is blunt, comic and familiar, that they have embodied their national foibles in the figure of a sturdy, corpulent old fellow . . . with red waistcoat, leather breeches, and a stout oaken cudgel (whom they call), John Bull."

TWIN SUNS SWIM INTO OUR KEN.

Dr. J. B. Plaskett, Director of the Dominion Astrophysical Observatory, Victoria, B. C., is reported to have discovered twin-suns, fifty quadrillion miles from the earth. Scientists have heralded the discovery as the outstanding astronomical achievement of modern times, and the suns have been named "Plaskett", after their discoverer.

We are told that the light which, travelling at the rate of 186,000 miles a second, started from these suns five thousand years before there was any credible human history on this earth, is reaching here only to-day. An aeroplane travelling from this earth at the rate of 200 miles an hour would require 30,000,000 years to reach these twin suns. They burn at a temperature of 20,000 degrees Fahrenheit as they whirl around one another. One, the more massive, is seventy-five times the bulk of our sun. The lesser is sixty-three times heavier. One is 15,000 times as bright as the sun, the other 12,000 times as bright. Plaskett is more than five times as large as any other known heavenly body.

Professor Jacob, of Columbia University, in commenting upon the discovery declares that it is most remarkable, and he assures us that the measurements recorded by Professor Plaskett may be accepted as most reliable. We are sure that no one will challenge the professor's calculations. These "Watchers of the skies" deal in infinitudes, and we are content with a yard stick.

Canada should be proud of this achievement, and it is a pity we could not annex these fiery orbs for heating purposes during next winter. As it is, we must console ourselves with having discovered a source of heat, however remote it may be. We have at least the joy expressed in Keat's immortal couplet:

"Then felt I like some watcher of the skies,
When a new planet swims into his ken".

—HERE AND THERE—

LEAD PENCILS.

Where do all the lead pencils come from, and where do they go? Although almost everybody has one, many folk never buy one, but, even so, more than 750,000,000 are manufactured for use in the United States alone every year, requiring many thousands of cords of wood.

But, says an American paper, woods suitable for lead pencils are becoming scarcer, and many manufacturers are turning to paper. Red cedar and red juniper, according to the Forestry Association, are the woods chiefly used in making lead pencils. In Kent is to be found the wood that will take the place of these. In East Africa a kind of cedar has been found with which experiments are being made. The preference for red cedar is shown in about 30,000 cases of pencil slats per year. From each case 100 gross of pencils is made. This results in about 1,000,000,000 pencils of American-grown cedar.

As far back as history goes man has tried to make things to mark with and to set down his thoughts. The Aztecs and the Peruvians had crude marking devices. As early as 1320 Petra, a Swedish naturalist, made experiments with American cedar. In 1812 William Monroe made 500 pencils at Concord and sold them in Boston, but the war stopped his plans. In 1861 Eberhard Faber began making pencils on a large scale in the United States.

The graphite which makes the mark is, of course, the important part in the manufacture of the pencil. Ceylon has furnished much of the graphite used in America. Graphite is also found in Madagascar and in Mexico. Cumberland has contains deposits of both the amphorous and crystaline graphite. In the United States the chief deposits are in Alabama, New York, and Pennsylvania.

A MYSTERIOUS EPISODE.

A queer, queer story has reached London from South Africa. A resident of Cape Province, one Frederick de Beer, was charged with fraud and the execution of a grave, put on trial, convicted of the first crime and convicted of the second.

As the tale is told, it seems that a group of Nationalists in the province had offered a reward of £50 for the bones of Commandant Sheepers, a man who was executed by the English during the Boer War for committing an act that to the Boers was heroic, not criminal. This reward the too enterprising de Beer determined to get, and, for some reason not stated in the account at hand, he went to the Dutch Reformed Cemetery, dug up the bones of his own father and passed them off, or tried to, as those of the martyred Sheepers.

Could he have had the cause in that the remains of his father belonged to himself, and he had a right to do with them what he would, aside by disturbing some other grave he would have committed another and a greater crime. But that part of the tale has not yet been told, and a general condemnation, for somebody who is described as a "sympathiser" paid for him the £15 which was imposed as the alternative of three months in prison.

REVIVAL OF CLAY PIPES.

Clay pipes are said to be coming into fashion again. These "homely" pipes were smoked by all classes before 1850 and were considered "the thing" till the arrival of briarwood and meerschaum. In the late fifties and early sixties fancy pipes were quite the thing, and the selection by cadets of a good one out of a fresh consignment packed in sawdust was eagerly watched by the "Johns". These clay pipes are referred to in one of Surtee's novels as "the clay pipes of gentility." Milo used to charge 12 cents each for his clays, as the following burlesque published at that time would indicate:—

"Think not of mere'sham is that bowl: away
Ye good enthusiasts, it is common clay,
By Milo stamped, perchance by Milo's hand
And for a time purchased in the Strand."

THE THOUSANDTH MAN.

Rudyard Kipling.

One man in a thousand, Solomon says,
Will stick more close than a brother,
And it's worth while seeking him half your days
If you find him before the other.
Nine hundred and ninety-nine depend
On what the world sees in you,
But the Thousandth Man will stand your friend
With the whole round world agin' you.

You can use his purse with no more talk
Than he uses yours for his spendings,
And laugh and meet in your daily walk
As though there had been no lendings.
Nine hundred and ninety-nine of 'em call
For silver and gold in their dealings;
But the Thousandth Man, he's worth 'em all,
Because you can show him your feelings.

His wrongs is your wrong, and his right's your right,
In season or out of season,
Stand up and back it in all one's might—
With THAT for your only reason!
Nine hundred and ninety-nine can't bide
The shame or mocking or laughter,
But the Thousandth Man will stand by your side
To the gallows' foot—and after!

ZERO HOUR ON AUGUST 8, 1918

Four Years Ago Today Was Turning Point of War

CANADIANS WON

Honor Theirs of First Breaking Through the German Line

Four years ago today the great battle of the turning point of the war. It was struck by the Canadian Corps, fighting alongside the Australians, in the battle of Amiens. That day there was no looking back, and the famous "Hundred Days" campaign, which ended in the signing of the Armistice, was proudly displayed in the Grande Place of the ancient city of Arras.

"Zero" hour at twenty minutes past four in the morning of Thursday, August 8, 1918, found the Canadian Corps at fortnight of intensive preparation. The historic date had first been set for Aug. 10, a date long regarded by Sir Arthur Currie as the most suitable of time for transferring the Corps—some hundred thousand men—with all its impediments of war, from the Arras area to the Amiens front. It became necessary to advance the date by two days. Can you do it? the Corps Commander was asked? It was done. Every man, every gun, every dressing station, the vast accumulation of ammunition—six hundred rounds per gun—was in position at the appointed hour. The Corps administrative services, strained to the utmost, responded gallantly, as was achieved by the "A. and Q." Nothing on the same scale, with all the handicaps of absolute secrecy, had ever been attempted in war. "Keep your Mouth Shut" was the slogan, and throughout that great movement no word leaked out to betray the casual chat with British or French soldiers encountered, was allowed. Even men in the Corps knew what was up—they thought they were going south to the Marne or up again to Flanders—but all entered into the spirit of the thing, and thus made possible the great surprise attack, which overnight, in one's upwards and over-whelmed him in his dug-outs.

The night was clear and starry. Enemy reconnoitring aircraft could have missed the sight of the white roads chequered with black sabotage of marching troops, batteries and ammunition columns—the tanks rumbled heavily across railways, creeping from every little cover. There they had to wait. But that night our control of the air was complete. Battle squadrons flew low and flocked at such a point of excitement. The men marched in silence, the dark columns filtered by the secret and flocked at such a point. The men marched in silence, the dark columns filtered by the secret and flocked at such a point. LADY RACHEL'S DANCE
WAS BRILLIANT AFFAIR

A dark-haired, vivacious, and very happy girl, Lady Rachel Cavendish, the fourth daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire, was the life of the brilliant ball given for her by her mother at 3 Carlton-gardens, S.W., London—dance which is one of the most important functions of the season, says the Daily Mail. Although overshadowed by the tragedy of Sir Henry Wilson's death—which has cast a gloom all over London and a small of which some members of the royal family who had hoped to attend were not present—the dance was a very bright affair. The gaiety of the ball was largely due to its youthful character. There was really a "boy and girl" dance and most of the guests were either young officers or smiling debutantes—merry girls in lovely dresses, youth indeed was triumphant. Lady Rachel wore the bridesmaid's dress of silver with blue at the waist which she had for Princess Mary's wedding. With her hair done very simply, and a single string of pearls about her neck she looked radiantly happy. The Duchess of Devonshire wore a gown of sapphire blue and gold brocade. Most of the girls were dressed in white. Miss Elizabeth Ashley, who arrived about 11 o'clock and almost at once began to dance with her fiance, Lord Ludlow Monckbatten, was dressed very simply in white, and wore a string of pearls round her neck. In the earlier part of the evening there were far more men present than girls, and as most of the men were eager to dance there was much competition among them for partners. As a result the debutantes had the evening of their lives.

MARIAN
George Meredith
She can be as wise as we,
And wiser when she wishes;
She can knit with cunning wit,
And dress the homely dishes.
She can flourish staff or pen,
And heal a wound that lingers;
She can talk the talk of men,
And touch with thrilling fingers

Match her ye across the sea,
Natures fond and fiery;
Ye who rest the turtle's nest
With the eagle's eyrie
Soft and loving lit her word,
Light, and lofty soaring;
Mixing with its fire-like dole
Passionate adoring.

Such a she who'll match with me!
In flying or pursuing,
Subtle wiles are in her smiles
To set the world a-wooing.
She is steadfast as a star,
And yet the maddest maiden;
She can wear a gallant war,
And give the pomb of Eden.

THE OUTFIT OF THE MODERN CHILD

Of the little Loed Fauntleroys, the little Kate Greenaways, the brave little John Hiveland lads and lassies, La Mode has taken a long farewell. We loved them while they were with us. Now that they are gone we do not regret them. We are glad to see the vain little heart of the modern juvenile, beats beneath a frock fashioned after correct simplicity.

Bobbed hair, bobbed shirts and bobbed socks—give these, the rest is a mere matter of detail.

A small edition of her mother, her aunt or her big sister, little Miss Two-Stitches, is not burdened with superfluous undergarments. With many of her frocks she is entirely independent of petticoats. She wears little panties just like her frock and doesn't care who knows it! Banded around her chubby knees, and showing beneath her short tunic, they announce themselves. Now that we think of it, some of them announce themselves not at all. They are just like little straight leg trousers, buttoned on to or attached to an underwaist.

To be really fashionable the little aristocrat of today must be too simply dressed, but her clothes must fit. A dressmaker let us into a fashion of the day which we pass along to you in strictest confidence. She said the reason so many patterns do not fit the child is because there is no extra fullness in the front, that is, the back and front are the same width, and a well dressed child is always plump across the breast, and must have room. Another thing she mentioned was that the shoulder seam should be almost straight and not slanting as they sometimes are on patterns. Now we pass this along for your consideration, with the advice when choosing a pattern "Fit your boy right, then go ahead."

Dresses for very small girls from two to eight or over, fit quite closely around the base of the neck and many of them have only a slit down the side fastened at the top, with a button, instead of the old way of opening them down the back or front and fastening with buttons. The silver-over-the-head idea has been adopted to children's clothes. They have a silver band from neck to belt with the fulness gathered in at the neck, or smocked to form rather a "Hans" or "Gretchen." The yoke is also looped or straight and buttonholed or bound, perhaps with a contrasting color. This is resemblitive after the peasant style, and for summer the sleeves are short, but for winter they are gathered into a cuff.—Canadian Home Journal.

DIFFERENT KINDS OF WINDOW GLASS

Did you ever know that the kind of glass in your window panes has its effect on keeping out the cold in winter? As many people are building their own homes at this time, it is well for the housewife to understand the different kinds of window glass. Plate glass is, of course, the most beautiful and most expensive. It is flat and even, so that objects appear through it without distortion, and keeps out the cold far more effectively than ordinary sheet glass. It is, however, soft and much more readily scratched than common glass.

Common, or sheet glass, comes in two classes—single thick and double thick. The former is one-sixteenth of an inch thick and the latter about one-eighth of an inch. Thin single thick glass is more easily made than the double thick, and is therefore not only cheaper, but flatter and clearer from defects than double thick of the same quality. Therefore, it is generally used in houses built for sale. It is, however, very fragile and presents little resistance to the cold of the outside air, so that the double thick is always to be preferred. Although it costs very little more than the single thick glass, it is much more efficient as a protection against the cold winter.

WEDDING BELLS APPEAL NO MORE

Cost of Home in Germany Keeps "Hans" From Marrying

Berlin, Aug. 8.—"Fathering one's nest" is a formidable proposition for the young German of today, who contemplates matrimony. Furniture and building costs have risen to such heights, and wages relatively have sunk to such depths, that the struggle of wedding marches fail to have much of a siren appeal for either "Hans" or "Gretchen."

Tradition has long decreed that the young man in Germany is expected to provide a home for his bride-to-be before marriage. The latter, in her turn, should approach the altar with a dowry sufficient to furnish her new home with everything from spoons to featherbeds. Statistics and special comforts for the household ordinarily are contributed by relatives or by guests attending the wedding ceremony.

However, there is little prospect of a German curl in the middle or lower classes living up to this custom today. Depending on earnings of a hundred marks a week, she finds it little to save up for her dowry. On the other hand, the man of her choice disqualifies as a husband if a place to rent is forced to consider himself or promise when confronted with present day rental prices. After deciding to erect a brand new home for his bride, he finds the price of building materials are more than 81 times what they were before the war.

It cost 1,564,90 marks on July 1, 1914 to build a one-story cottage covering 70 square meters in the June-July year, building circles claim, exception of such a dwelling entailed the expenditure of 126,000 marks. The cost rose 13.6 per cent. in May alone.

The stone required for such a house, they assert in the summer of 1914 cost 700 marks, while now it demands an outlay of 90,784 marks. Cement and lime for it now cost 2,-306.35 and 5,413.10, respectively as against 60 to 73 marks before. Its roofing tile costs have risen from 343.90 to 17, 919.80 and those for beams from 264 to 24,950 while its flooring today would be 49,675 as compared with 85.50 marks in 1913.

MARY MILES MINTER AND HERBERT RAWLINSON AT GRIFFIN'S IN NEW PLAYS

Mischievous, rollicking youth that blithely forges its way to happiness in spite of all obstacles is the principal ingredient in the swiftly moving Realart comedy "Moonlight and Honeysuckle" which was exhibited for the first time in Canada at the Griffin's last night. Mary Miles Minter is always best in those parts which call for pep and vivaciousness and the role of Judith Baldwin certainly gives her plenty of opportunity to exercise those qualities. Complications galore arise when she proposes trial engagements with a couple of her most ardent wooers in order to see which one of them will "wear" and thus be a potential husband. Of course all is strictly conventional as far as trial engagements can be and before the final adjustment there is a world of super-humorous situations.

There's no time like the present! That's what the hero of "The Bond Leper," impersonated by Herbert Rawlinson in "The Scraper" thinks. And when he met Eileen, a sweet Irish colleen, he up and kisses her without any preliminary announcement or hesitation.

"The Scrapper" is the five reel photoplay which brought Rawlinson in a starring role to the screen on the double feature bill at Griffin's last night. It is a picturization of H. O. Kirk's story "Malloy Compacted" published in The Saturday Evening Post.

Gertrude Olmsted is sweet and capable in the role of Eileen. Gertrude was quite a beauty to start with—being a winner of contests at that line. The story is of the type extremely suitable to Herbert Rawlinson's talent and personality.

The Harold Lloyd comedy exhibited during the evening, caused great laughter throughout.

HE LOVES THE BIRDS

JACK MINER IS A UNIQUE CANADIAN PERSONALITY.

Story of the Man Whose Sanctuary For His Winged Friends Has Become Famous in Every Part of the Civilized World—Lives in Danger Now Near Kingsville.

It's a difficult task to define in words so unusual a personality as Jack Miner—a realize the man who made the wild geese tame you must hear him speak. Then, he turns, he makes you touch with his droll humor and impresses you with his tremendous sincerity. His grips your attention without seeming to try. He is too keenly interested in his message to feel concerned, after about his audience, or about himself.

The story of Jack Miner has been told and retold till it is familiar to most Canadians. But it will bear retelling.

Jack Miner of to-day is a big, upstanding man of 56—an out-of-doors man, generally with the out-of-doors habits of hard working and clear thinking. As a boy he came to Essex County, Ont. The "marl of us on the clothes" as he aptly described the Miner family, got little education, and went to work early. "A dollar bill looked like a horse blanket" in those days, as Jack and a favorite brother hunted for the market. They became wizards of the gun.

Meanwhile Jack grew up, raised a family, and sent them to that common school—the big world outside. They induced their father to attend. He found settlers, and shooting with the little folks taught him. He is torn taught Bradley and Bell shooting for the market—and then came those marvelous years that have made Jack Miner known throughout this continent.

The wild geese and wild ducks had learned to trust him. How could they not? "Surely they would know a friend when they saw him," he says, and set himself to make friends with the wild things.

The story of his gradual evolution was infinitely patient. First, a bird or two would come, then a dozen, and dabbled his tempting concoction. Next year there was a little more company, the third interest grew from year to year. Now in March and April every year the wild geese congregate by hundreds and thousands in the Miner sanctuary, come forth to the far distances of North Carolina, Southern Illinois and Texas. To-day this one spot in America is dedicated to the wild geese—the great resting-place stand.

It took four years to induce the birds to call. Eight birds constituted the first "visitation." Last year Jack Miner's feathered friends required 2,000 bushels of corn, and their number at this half-way house between North Carolina and Hudson Bay.

The same birds come back. Jack Miner has proved that. Among the thousands of birds that gather every spring at the famous goose pond are Canada geese easily wearing aluminum "anklets," with which Jack Miner encircles the leg of a gosling. Many such anklets have been returned to Jack Miner from points as far apart as the Gulf of Mexico and Dakota. As for the ducks, 600 of them tagged returned from 81 different points, one found in Australia, but mostly south from Gurdan, Louisiana, and the area of country between and west stretches from Long Island, N.Y., to Engleford, Alberta—a fair million square miles of territory—yet, year after year, the birds come back to this little spot.

They know.

It's an interesting sight to watch Jack Miner strolling through a flock of Canada geese, or wild swans, with the shyest birds alive. He talks to them in their own language—and has mastered several words in the goose vocabulary. He feeds them almost as though they were a flock of barnyard ducks. The only thing that they are safe from the hunter is Jack Miner's word. Jack Miner's efforts, the Dominion Government has made this spot a sanctuary. Not a bird may be shot there, and a bird by a man who motored down to Kingsville one day last fall, drove his car off against the sky hovered a flock of wild swans. Jack Miner's protest was quiet, suddenly. "That's one of my birds," he said, and knew instantly that the distant bird came voplaining from Jack Miner.

That is how intimately Jack Miner has won the birds, and how intimately the birds know Jack Miner.

Even before Jack Miner ever thought of putting his story on paper he was vaguely conscious that he had held his story of the birds before all sorts of audiences except children. Then he discovered his audience, hearing Jack Miner, can long remain in that state of mind.

"Farmer and Drain Tile Merchant," is the modest fashion in which Jack Miner's letter-heads style him. There was a time when the fate of the tile-yard hung in the balance, and the farmer looked black for the drain tile merchant. That, however, is a story apart from Jack and his birds, and must be left for another time.

Miner believes in getting near to nature. Years ago he purchased by primeval forest, was long ago swept away from the Kingsville country-side, but at the time between his studies of the wild goose, the wild duck, the barn swallow, and the rest of them, he has planted thousands of trees. Now they are large, in a great of maples. To-day they surround a log-cabin, which is completely and isolated as on a deserted isle, he can work in peace, undisturbed.

THE BANDBOX

By Louis Joseph Vance

Thrusting the velvet knot into his pocket he ran down and opened the front door just as Alison gained the top of the brownstone steps.

He noticed that her tricksh was waiting.

Still in her shimmering, silken, summery dinner-gown of the barlier evening, a light chiffon wrap draped round her shoulders, she entered the vestibule, paused and stood smiling mischievously into his grave, enquiring eyes.

"Surprised you, Basil?" she asked.

"Father," said he, bending over her laughed.

Hand and wondering at her high spirits of gaiety so abruptly in contrast with her determined and domineering humour of a few hours since. "Why?" he asked, shutting the outside door.

"Just wanted to see you alone for a few moments; I've something to say to you—something very important and surprising. . . . But not down here."

"I beg your pardon," he said contritely. He motioned toward the stairs: "There's no elevator, but it's only one flight up."

"No elevator! Heavens!" she cried in mock horror. "And this is how the other half lives!"

She caught up her skirts and ran up the stairs with footsteps so light that he would hear nothing but the soft, continuous murmuring of her silken gown.

"Genius," he said, ironic, as he followed her. "Genius frequently seeks a loft but in more often to be found in an apartment with one. Permit me"—he added with the door to his study—"to introduce you to the garret."

"So this is wehere you starve and write!"

Alison paused near the centre if the room, shrugging her wrap from her shoulders and dropping it carelessly on the table. He saw her shoot swift glances round her with bright, prying eyes.

"I'm afraid I'm not enough of a genius to starve," he said; "but sayyou, what's the matter?"

"How interesting!" she drawled in a tone that conveyed to him the impression she found it anything but that. And then, a trace abruptly: "Please shut the door."

He lifted his brows in surprise, and "Oh?" and turning back did as bid. At the same time Alison disposed herself languidly in a capacious wing-chair.

"Yes," she took up his monosyllable; "it's quite as important as all that. I don't wish to be overheard, Basil," she added with nonchalant irrelevance, "I do want a cigarette."

Basil Leroy produced his metal cigarette-case and offered it, put a match to the paper roll held so daintily between the lady's lips, and then helped himself.

Through a thin veil of smoke she looked up into his serious face and smiled bewitchingly.

"Are you thrilled, my dear?" she asked, delightedly.

"Thrilled!" he questioned. "How?"

She lifted her white, gleaming shoulders with an air of half-tolerant impatience. "You have a beautiful man alone with you in your rooms, at this hour o' night. . . . Don't you find it romantic, dear boy? Or aren't you in a romantic mood tonight? Or perhaps I'm not sufficiently beautiful. . . . She—ended with a charming little petulant moue.

"You know perfectly well you're one of the most beautiful women in the world," he began gravely; but she caught him up.

"One of—?"

"To me, of course—you know the rest: the usual thane," he said. "But you didn't come here to discuss your charms—now did you?"

She shook her head slightly, smiling. "I've an interest in your welfare, my dear."

"Indeed?" he said, with a trace of irony.

"Yes," she went on, "I've been thinking over your affairs, and I've decided here early today in a hospital by wood alcohol poisoning. His daughter Ruth and his sons, Gordon and John, are well known for their funny antics behind the footlights. The elder Dooley and his wife came here from Ireland about 30 years ago and entered vaudeville.

MANY BALLOONS START IN RACE

Geneva, Aug. 6.—With perfect weather conditions prevailing, nineteen balloons entered for the James Gordon Bennett Cup rate took off from here today while a crowd of forty thousand persons watched and cheered.

The sun was shining and a gentle breeze carried the gas bags slowly over Lake Geneva and they passed out of sight toward Munich. Experts however, predicted that in higher altitudes air currents which would probably carry the balloons southward where the Danube would be encountered.

The United States entrants will have to beat the best balloonists of France, England, Spain, Belgium and Switzerland, and it is not expected the prizes will come to earth before Tuesday. One of the French balloons is equipped with a wireless receiving apparatus, and all the American entrants might be equipped with a wireless receiving apparatus, and all the American entrants might be able to send messages, but they did not find wind sufficiently favorable.

CHARLIE WHITE GETS KNOCKOUT

Bobbie Barrett Lasted But Three Rounds in Fifteen-Round Match

New York, Aug. 7.—Charlie White (Chicago lightweight, to-night knocked out Bobbie Barrett, of Philadelphia, in the third round of their fifteen-round match in New York Velodrome.

A stiff right over the heart sent Barrett to the canvas. He sprawled on his face, trying to arise, and after being counted out was lifted to his corner, where he sat in tears. Two minutes and fifty-seven seconds of the round had passed when the referee finished counting over the Philadelphian.

In the first round Barrett had taken the offensive. He peeled a sock from White's nose; much later and surely, Barrett was a bit wild and White attacked his body, weakening him. They clinched frequently.

Barrett took the lead in the second round and held his own, though White again sent hard punches to his body. In the third Barrett rushed in, swing at right. He missed and was caught with the full impact of the Chicagoan's right.

The defeated boxer gave the appearance of a diamond in the rough. He forced the struggle as long as it lasted. White continually avoided the reputed dangerous right hand of his adversary and, when his opportunity to end the contest came he was quick to take it.

In the semi-final to the White-Barrett bout Pal Moore, of Memphis and Jack Weil, of Cleveland, fought twelve lively rounds to a draw. The crowd did not like Moore's jumping tactics and booed the decision.

Charlie McKenna, of New York, former amateur heavyweight champion, made his professional debut by giving a boxing lesson to Tim Kelly, of Brooklyn. McKenna covered Kelly's body with blows, closed one eye and cut a gash over the other one. He was given the decision at the end of their six-round bout.

Jack Worman, of Maryland and Sammy Green of the Bronx, fought a four-round draw.

THE GLAMOR OF HORSE RACING

Popular Topic of Young and Old in Big Cities.

Much is said these, stirring days about the alleged evils of race track betting and gambling in the large cities especially, when the Exhibition meet. While a person might live in Belleville and other smaller cities, for a considerable time and never hear any direct "info" on the racing game, yet it is surprising how quickly your attention is drawn to the fact that the horses are still running, when you visit the "big smoke."

Some friend always knows of a certain fellow, who works in the next office, who got a long shot last week and made an easy two hundred, or someone is always volunteering tips which may or may not, (mostly not) amount to anything. Indeed there is a certain amount of glamor and romance to the thing for anyone who has sporting blood coursing through his or her veins. (Yés, the ladies are guilty also.)

The thoroughbreds with the peculiar names, the beautiful course on a bright day, the uneven, at people and the busy part-mutuels supply the excitement and romance. So enthused do some of the patrons become that they simply must continue to follow their game after the horses leave their city. Then it is that the hand book men come into their own.

One of the horses running at Saratoga now, is named "Better Luck" and will no doubt have little difficulty in getting all kinds of backing. "Shakaleer" is also running there and no doubt this name will be familiar to many of the suckers.

Flying Ford, Lee Enfield, Bell's Lass, Cockroach, Perfect Lady and Vanity Dresser were some of the racers of Deloraine opening last Saturday.

"Flying Ford" sounds good but it is a safe bet, that Shockwood will be "in the soup." However you never can tell. The writer knows of a gambler who won several weeks' wages by placing a bet on "Saphariou" at the Dufferin races in the past because she used a perfume by that name.

LEAFS LOSE TWO TO BUFFALO

Wild Throw by Andy Anderson Was Costly for Leafs

The Leafs left last night for a swing around the eastern end of the circuit, smarting under a two-ply lacing handed to them by Buffalo over at Arthur Cronin's stadium of ninth yesterday. Cliff Bent blew in the third inning of the morning game, the Bisons pumping him for five hits to score four runs. Then, after some timely clouting, and "Red" Wingo's twenty-third home run had knotted the contest, Andy Anderson, who does not make many boots, pulled a two-base wild throw in the tenth to let in the run that broke the tenth to let in the run that broke the ice. "Babe" Dye crashed out a hit in the afternoon encounter and the Hoyt-ron, 6 to 4. Manley Llewellyn, late of the New York Yankees, who beat the Leafs on Friday, turned the trick again in the afternoon game, only he did it much more effectively. He allowed the closing Quakers but two singles, one by Mike Gonzales in the sixth inning, and another by Anderson in the seventh. He passed them but not a Toronto player reached second base, and Joe Kelly, Wingo and Onslow, the heavy hitters on the Toronto team, were helpless before his blinding speed with a hop and spherical change of pace. Llewellyn walked seven, Wingo twice failing a victim to the smiling Buffalo hurler's deceit. Dan Baumgartner pitched a good enough game to win almost any time, but the Bisons bunched three hits, including a home run out of the park by Kane in the second inning. Dye's double and Sheridan's single were the other shots, and they scored a run in No. 3 frame, while the third counter of the afternoon came in the eighth. Millet was hit, die went to second on Kane's sacrifice and rushed in when Urban cut a one-base blow over second.

The latter, though strengthened by Dillon, of Lonsdale, and R. Fair, of Port Hope, were outclassed by the T.F.B.A. team. He also took a 100-mile race in 53 minutes bars yesterday after his record-breaking 50-mile run in the Cotati sprint. The former record for 50 miles was held by Ralph De Palma, which is the mark at Sheershead Bay, N.Y., on June 14, 1919, when he negotiated the distance in 36 minutes, at last 41-100 seconds. Tommy Milton was second and Eddie Hearne third.

LOCAL TEAM AT RIFLE SHOOT

Corporal M. Cummings of Argyll Team Among Prize Winners

Thunder competed with the rattle of musketry at the Long' Branch ranges yesterday, when the annual matches of the Ontario Rifle Association opened. Intermittent showers, which made the underfoot conditions miserable for the contestants, and occasional flashes of lightning, with their disconcerting influence on the machinery, were unfavorable conditions for good shooting, but in spite of this gratifying scores were recorded.

The entries this year number 940, a figure considerably higher than that of last year. Many U.S. marksmen came from the West. Alberta was represented by 20 entries, Manitoba by 10, and Saskatchewan by 5. Nova Scotia, which has not been represented in the matches for several years, sent a team of 10. The Royal Canadian Regiment, which carried off the City of Hamilton Centennial Challenge Trophy and a cash prize of $50 with an aggregate of 145. The First Wellington Rifles won the second cash prize of $25 with a score of 140, the 91st Regiment came third with 137 marks and won $20, and the 48th Highlanders won the fourth prize of $15 with a score of 135. Other teams entered and their scores were: Hamilton C. I., 133; H.Q.M.D., No. 2, 131; Royal Grenadiers, 130.

In the individual contests in this match Pte Charles Dyer of the Wellington Rifles and Q.M.S. H. Carter of the Royal Canadian Regiment, each shot for the list with scores of 33 out of a possible 35. The former won the first cash prize of $10 and the latter the second cash prize of $8. Owing to the numerical tie both will shoot next Friday for a $15 Medal. Third prize, $7, Pte. F. Macgregale; fourth prize, $6, Sergt. Operman.

There was $434 in cash prizes in the City of Hamilton Match.

In the Eaton match, for rapid firing at 500 yards, Sergt. H. Ashton of the 30 and won the first prize of $15.

The first range in the City of Toronto match was shot yesterday, and the scores promise well for to-day's shooting when it will be completed. There were three "possibles" made by marksmen in this match yesterday.

Fifteen winners of $5 prizes and their scores are: Q.M.S. W. Hughes (C.M.S.C.), 32; Corpl. W. Cummings (A.L.I.), 32; Q.M.S. W. Hobbs (Queen's Own), C.I.), Cadet Corp. E. S. Thomas (48th Highlanders), C.I.), 31; Sergt. L. J. Allingham (3 C.M.R.), 31; Pte. T. W. Mackay (W.R.), 31; Sergt. A. Beveridge (91st), 31; J. E. Belting (12), 31; Pte. W. F. McRae (48th), 31; R. Davidson (R.C.D.), 30; Pte. F. E. Richardson (48th), 30; Corpl. L. Miller (H.G.), 30; Pte. W. Bower (91st), 30; Q.M.S. W. R. Wilkinson (R.C.R.), 30; Corpl. D. Walton (91st), 30.

GIRL ATHLETES ON WAY TO PARIS

Group of Athletes To Take Part in International Games

Christobal, Canal Zone, Aug. 8.—A group of girl athletes from the Canal Zone is now on the way to Paris for the International Women's Games which open in that city Aug. 20. The young women are giving exhibition games at Havana and Bermuda, and in Spain on the way over. After the games they will tour Germany, England and Scotland and then come to New York about the middle of September. It is planned to have them appear in New York, Boston and Philadelphia.

The Canal Zone team consists of Lona Rathbone, Esther Greene and Mrs. C. H. Bath, Mrs. J. L. Greene accompanies the team as chaperone, and Homer Baker, physical director in the Canal Zone, will manage and coach the team.

Miss Rathbone has a record of 15 4-5 seconds for the 100-yard hurdles, and does exceptionally well with the javelin and in the standing broad jump. Mrs. Greene has a record of 12 2-5 seconds for the 100-yard dash; 45 seconds for the 300-meter run and 4 ft. 7 in. in the running high jump. Mrs. Bath's best performance for the shot put, 8 pounds with right and left hand, is 25 feet, 3 inches. She is incidentally the bowling champion and the champion sharp shooter of the Isthmus.

Jack Tars as Citizens.

The restriction of naval armament's following the Washington agreement is likely to have the effect of bringing about reductions in the personnel of the British navy. As a result many naval officers and men will be looking for new careers in the overseas portions of the Empire.

With the object of giving the officers and men under his command an opportunity to hear something about Canada from the lips of a Canadian, Commodore Boyle of the Royal Naval Barracks, Devonport, England, recently invited Mr. Wm. C. Noxon, the Agent-General for Ontario in the British Isles, to give an address on a gathering of blueJackets at that great naval base. On the occasion of the Agent-General's visit there were over 5,000 naval men in the Devonport barracks, many of them receiving special courses of training in gunnery and other branches of naval work.

There was a very large attendance of blueJackets and officers at Mr. Noxon's lecture, which was descriptive of Ontario. The speaker gave a racy description of the extent and resources of Ontario, its products, good roads, hydro-electric power, the character of its population, its farms and farm products, and spoke in optimistic terms of the great future which lies ahead for a province so richly endowed with natural resources, and with such an enterprising, progressive people.

The lecture was rendered additionally attractive owing to the fact that it was illustrated by three Ontario Government films and a number of lantern slides.

MAKE A COMPOST HEAP.

Save the Garden Rubbish and Make Easy and Valuable Manure.

Garden waste, decayed vegetables, dead vines, weeds, and the organic rubbish that collects about the place during a busy summer may be cleaned up and put to work again through the agency of a compost heap. Start the heap by laying down a bed of stable manure which has not been burned or heated. The size of the plot will vary with the amount of refuse to be used; for ordinary use, if the bed is made 8 feet long by 6 feet wide and 3 feet deep it will serve the purpose. Over the manure spread a two-foot layer of refuse and cover with another layer of manure. This layer need be only a foot in thickness. Repeat the layers until all the waste has been disposed of and then cover the whole with a layer of earth.

If it is desired to add to the heap from time to time the top layer may be opened and the new material emptied into the hole thus made. This is the method for the suburban home where there is no animal to consume the kitchen waste. In the spring the heap is well mixed with a fork and the contents of most of the materials that have been thrown upon the pile. The process may be continued indefinitely by simply adding enough manure to insure heating. Compost is especially valuable for use in hotbeds and cold frames.

Office Assistants Wanted

Two more urgent calls from outside the city for male office assistants were received yesterday afternoon at Ontario Business College. One of them, which follows, came from Rochester, N. Y.:—"Have you a bright young man who can take dictation and operate a typewriter open for a position? We are looking for a man who is trustworthy, willing and in earnest. We have a good position where he can advance rapidly."

As business conditions improve, the shortage of well-trained, reliable office help will become greater; the demand for some months past has exceeded the available supply. This is an opportune time for ambitious, capable young people to get all the business education they can to qualify for the best positions.

THE 'LEATHER BOTTLE' IS UP FOR SALE

Ale House Beloved by Dickens Is to Be Sold

London, Aug. 8.—The Leather Bottle, known to Dickens lovers the world over, is for sale. It is the "clean and commodious ale-house" in the little Kent village of Cobham. It was thither Mr. Pickwick, accompanied by the faithful Snodgrass and Winkle, followed Mr. Tupman on receipt of the plaintive letter from Mr. Tupman which announced that he had been "deserted by a lovely and fascinating creature." He went to Pickwick "Any letter addressed to me at 'The Leather Bottle,' Cobham, Kent," will be forwarded—supposing I still exist. I hasten from the sight of the world which has become odious to me."

The old inn contains many Dickens relics. The hanging sign bears a picture of Pickwick advancing the clog. The old-fashioned shutters which are still fitted to the small windows help to preserve the old world air which Dickens loved and has made famous. Frequently brought down to Cobham parties of his friends to whom he exhibited all the oldtime delights of The Leather Bottle.

Dickens loved the Cobham neighborhood so much that he returned to it for his honeymoon. Later he took up his residence at Gad's Hill, close by.

THE FARM LOAN SYSTEM

Government Plan for Developing Farm Property.

Loans Limited to Specific Purposes —Redeemable Rate of Interest for Long Term Loans—Helps to Enlighten Canada Taught—Above Repayments.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

On October 30th last the Agricultural Development Board passed the first loans under the Farm Loans Act, legislation of the previous session. Since that time loans to the amount of about $300,000 have been passed.

In noting the progress as shown by these figures it is well to remember that the loans are limited to certain specific purposes. Acquiring land, erection of buildings, straightening up an estate — these were the purposes in the original Act. And loans up to 75 per cent. of the value of the property could be made. To those purposes have since been added the discharging of encumbrances where such encumbrance do not exceed 40 per cent. of the value, and the cost of installing the water.

Three Features.

There are three features of the plan which have been commented on favorably by applicants. These are:

1. Money is available.
2. Rate of interest.
3. Amortization of repayments.

There has been a general feeling that there was always plenty of money available in rural Ontario to finance all the farm mortgages offered. This is not so true now in any section as formerly, and it is not true at all in some sections. Victory bonds attracted large sums of money from rural Ontario and moreover development on understanding of bonds and their advantages for investment which did not previously exist. Consequently many applicants for loans have stated that there was ever little or no money available in their community for farm mortgages.

Then the rate of interest at six per cent. is regarded as reasonable for a long term loan. It is, of course, two or three per cent. less than the rate given in New Ontario, and there is reason to believe that in old Ontario it is also a satisfactory rate.

But the feature which appears to appeal to many is the basis of repayment. When the repayment is spread over a long term of years the principal and interest and spread over a long term of years it gives a sense of permanence and enables a man to work out his plans accordingly. A payment of $7.17 per thousand dollars borrowed, distributed over the entire loan for 35 years, and the interest upon more than the interest payments which would be asked in some otherwise good loans, moreover are looking forward to having the entire loan discharged long before the maximum period, but when they are told they can pay as much as they like on the due date after the third year they are quite satisfied.

As to Red Tape.

It is perhaps asking a good deal to expect a skeptical public to believe that any Government or semi-Government organization operates without red tape. Certainly it is the aim of this Board to do so. To comply with the Act and to see that the interests of the Province are protected as advocated there are some conditions with must necessarily be rigidly insisted upon. Within these lines, however, the Board has endeavored to keep the interpretation of the plan as simple as possible from the administration of the Act. Sometimes there is a slight flaw in the title, making it necessary to get the signature of someone now several thousand miles away. It is for the interests of the borrower, as well as of the Board, that the title be made absolutely clear, even if it takes a little time to do it.

In this work it will be obvious that inspection of values is a most important part. The Board is expected to work in close touch with the Province. Covering such a large territory with such a variety of conditions as is the job of the Board must necessarily place reliance on the information which comes to it from its inspectors.

Estate and Business.

One of the purposes for which loans are authorized under the Act is for straightening up estates, and this has been found an advantage in a considerable number of cases, for instance, where the property has been left to the oldest son, with instructions to pay off obligations to other members of the family.

In Old Ontario naturally the applications for loans to erect buildings have not been numerous, but a number of such applications have been passed. Here is a case of a hundred acre farm with buildings, put down as worth $7,500, free of debt. Yet the buildings are poor and old. Hence the owner secures a loan of $3,500 to build a new house and spreading the payments over a period of years will enjoy the additional comfort while it is being paid for. In other cases it is to put up a barn or improvements to some of the existing buildings. Not many have been applied for on small holdings.

Repayments.

Repayments are probably the final test of the success of any banking scheme. Repayments to date under this scheme until next fall, and hence no evidence on this point is available. Every precaution has been taken to safeguard the matter of repayment, and every borrower is given to understand that it is such a matter of proposition and must be treated on a strictly business basis.

A good site is the beginning of a good herd; a bad one is the end of any herd.

Allahabad.

Allahabad in the holy city of the Ondia Mohammedans. Benares is the holy city of the Hindus while Cusco is that of the ancient Incas. Jerusalem is the holy city of the Jews and Christians. Mecca, Medina, and Jerusalem are first places in the affections of the Mohammedans.

MINISTERS ABROAD.

Costs of Trips to Old Land In Wartime.

Expenses of Canadian Ministers, who went to Europe during the war and since, were the subject of a return which was brought down in the House of Commons recently. The return covered the travels of more than a dozen Ministers of the Crown, including the regimes of both Sir Robert Borden and Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen.

It opens with the trip of the Hon. E. F. Totzke to England, respecting the cattle embargo, which cost $8,131. Hon. A. L. Sifton's expenses while in Paris at the Peace Conference were $18,207.

Sir Robert Borden's name appears three times in the records. His voyage to England in 1915 cost $4,332. His expenses in 1917 were $3,006. Three amounts were advanced to him by the Privy Council office. From the Department of External Affairs for his visit at the time of the Peace Conference, he was advanced $16,721, and returned to the Department $7,471, making the expenses $9,250.

Mr. Meighen's name appears twice. When he was across the water as Minister of the Interior he was advanced $1,562; he expended $1237; refunded $540, and the balance of $112 was used on western trips. In addition his journey to the conference of Premier last summer cost $1,612.

Sir Thomas White went over as Minister of Finance in 1918, and the cost was $9,000. Hon. C. J. Doherty went abroad $7,253 for his trip to Paris, and refunded $1,434, leaving an expenditure of $5,818.

MEIGHEN UNMASKS KING GOVERNMENT

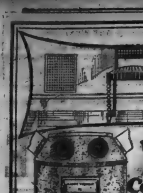

Conservative Leader Exposes the Duplicity of the Liberal Government—Declares That Every Pledge Given at Election Has Been Broken

APPEALS FOR STRAIGHTFORWARDNESS

Kingston, Aug. 9.—A vigorous and searching arraignment of the duplicity of the Mackenzie King Government was delivered by Hon. Arthur Meighen at the Kingston Conservative Association picnic held here yesterday. At the opening of his speech Mr. Meighen made a strong appeal for straightforwardness. He said:

When I last spoke in Kingston I did so on behalf of the government which I was then the head, and devoted my time to a defence of the principles upon which that Government had acted in the discharge of a long series of unprecedented responsibilities. I sought as well to explain its administrative conduct wherever that conduct had been attacked. My appeal to the people of Kingston was an appeal for policies firmly established both by argument and by practice. It was an appeal for the favorable verdict of this constituency on a great and trying task which I honestly believed had been well done.

Beyond these objects I appealed as well against the making of hollow and dishonest promises on the part of public men, or failure and contempt will be the reward. I was never interested there should be any degree of performance. I told you that there was a party seeking power prepared to gain by any means whatever. Its leaders were determined to get votes by any means whatever. Its leaders were determined to get votes by any means whatever. Its leaders were determined to get votes

GRUESOME MURDER IN NEW YORK CITY

Drunken Man Murders Wife With Clock After Continuous Quarreling

New York, Aug. 10.—Leo Durdher, said to be a member of a prominent Rochester, N.E., family, was arrested early yesterday morning in the Hotel Seaboro, No. 226 West Forty-third street, four floors after Mrs. Dorothy Durdher, his wife, had been found dead in a rooming house, at No. 112 West Forty-fifth street, her skull fractured and her body cut almost beyond recognition by an alarm clock with which she had been beaten. The husband, his clothes clotted with blood and his shoes bearing telltale strands of a woman's hair which had stuck fast, is said to have admitted his guilt to the police.

The murder, one of the most gruesome with which the police have had to deal in recent months, was the outgrowth of a session of prolonged quarrelling between Durdherr and his wife. The couple, in their room on the fourth floor of the rooming house, made so much disturbance around 8.30 Saturday night that Charles L'Homme, proprietor of the Cafe Francais on the first floor, sent Reuben Scardigli, a waiter, to request quiet.

Durdherr, who had been drinking heavily, slammed the door in the waiter's face when he learned of the latter's mission. About an hour later screams, which attracted not only the attention of patrons of the Cafe Francais, but persons on the street, brought Mrs. L'Homme to the Durdherr room to make an appeal for a discontinuance of the noise. She was assured by Durdherr, who came to the door that "nothing's the matter" but she said she also noticed that Mrs. Durdherr was lying on the floor bleeding from the left side of the neck and apparently unconscious.

A third visit to the room by Mr. L'Homme no longer later, when the quarrelling continued, elicited a reply from Durdherr, it was said, that "It's all over now." A half hour after midnight when the noise had quited down for a while, Scardigli had occasion to go upstairs. He said the stillness in the Durdherr room gave him an intuition that something was wrong. He opened the door and saw Mrs. Durdherr still on the floor, her body terribly disfigured and covered with blood. A battered alarm clock, the glass in the face broken, gave mute evidence that it had been used in assaulting the woman.

ENGLISH PREMIER HAS KIND HEART

London, Aug. 10.—Lloyd George, though Prime Minister, is one of the most accessible of men, say his advisers, and he will listen to anybody who speaks to him civilly. So will Lord Riddell, and both of them are kind-hearted.

Samuel Farrington proved both these statements to be true and thereby found a way out of his troubles. He now occupies a cottage near the Walton Heath Golf Links, where he has been given employment as a caddie.

Farrington is an ex-soldier who went through the Boer War and the Great War, too. Owing to his inability to find rooms anywhere, he and his wife and two children have been camping out recently on Reigate heath.

A few days ago Lloyd George and Lord Riddell were playing a round of golf on Walton Heath. Farrington with a "now or never" feeling, accosted the two players and was given a sympathetic hearing.

He told them how for months he had been unable to find a home. He had been ejected from one place after another that he had found unoccupied and "commandeered"—cottages, sheds, barns, etc.

Only when he and his family had suffered the rigors of the open air life by day and by night, and he was at his wit's end what to do, did he be determine, he said, to lay his case in person before the Premier.

When finally Farrington mentioned his war service and spoke of his four wounds, and his experiences in the retreat from Mons, his case was won. His luck had turned.

By post next day he received the key of a small cottage built by Lord Riddell."

LINDSAY PROTEST COBOURG

Oshawa, Out., Aug. 9.—Lindsay's protest against Cobourg on the game of Saturday, August 5th, was received by the secretary of the Central Ontario League this morning, and was served on Cobourg the same afternoon. Lindsay claims that after Umpire Rosevear called time in the eighth innings, when Catcher Cummings was hurt, that Skitch went to third before the umpire called "Play ball." The league executive will meet in Port Hope on Monday next to hear same.

LEASIDE DETERMINED

Regarding the baseball battle at Peterboro on Saturday between the Petes and Leaside, the Examiner states:

Leaside are coming here Saturday with the avowed intention of tieing the crimp in Petes second round aspirations. George Peacock's crew figure that they are very much in the running and they count on climbing at the expense of the first half champs on Saturday. They believe that they have evolved a system of attack that will beat Heckman and they promise a warm battle all the way. Lefty Maguire is being groomed for the struggle and the Leasiders will let out to the last notch to trim the Petes. The game is called for 2.30 o'clock.

BACK TO OLD DANCES

St. Catharines, Aug. 9.—There is a very noticeable difference in the style of dancing here this summer over previous years, and the difference is on the right side. The indecent posture is being frowned down in all the outdoor resorts, and the dancers are being compelled to live up to the rules.

At Lakeside park Saturday night the management put on some exhibition dances to show how dancing should be done. The old-fashioned waltz is back again and now there are nearly as many waltzes as trots. People here who are interested in the welfare of the dance believe that the day of the indecent dance is over in St. Catharines and district.

SETBACK FOR OSHAWA

Bowmanville, Aug. 9.—The Bowmanville baseball team this afternoon put a crimp in Oshawa's aspirations to win the second series of the Central Ontario League by defeating them by 2 to 1. Up to the ninth only once did Oshawa look dangerous and that was in the fourth, when Evans and Gallagher were on.

The visitors scored their only run in both nipped at the plate.

In the final innings and looked good to even the score, but Chambers retired the side by striking out Fair. Corden was a big factor, on the local team by batting a homer, a double and a single. Chambers had wonderful control, struck out eight, and did not pass a man.

Meighen Unmasks King Government

of Mr. Mackenzie King. The Finance Minister, Mr. Fielding, brought down his budget. Later he proceeded this mind and brought down still another budget, while he practically left the House. Finally, so far as the tariff was concerned they had forsaken all swerving from the policy pursued by their predecessors in office and had come right back into the footprints of the Government they had denounced. Instead of a sweeping schedule of free goods, the budget there five list is the porcelain parts of pumps!

Shifting of Imported Goods

Then there was reform No. 3. "The old Government," said Mr. Fielding, "provided by law for the marking of imported goods with the name of the country of origin. This, Mr. Fielding had said, was a kind of protection he did not like and the Government was going to get rid of it. The way he finally got rid of it was to abolish the law and to provide that the Government would do the same thing by Order-in-Council. In this way, Mr. Fielding is able by Order-in-Council to penalize one industry and help another, and all this is done by men, who shrieked themselves hoarse for three years about Government by Order-in-Council.

Then there was reform No. 4. "The sale Government," said Mr. Fielding, "provided by way of special percentage against dumping that valuations might be made on the basis of cost of production plus reasonable profit." This was deemed essential if the fruit industry in particular was to be saved to Canada. "This kind of thing," said Mr. Fielding, "is vicious. We cannot allow of any power to make valuations up to the limit of cost of production and reasonable profit." With a triumphant wave if the hand he announced that the washing and waiting Progressive, on that this thing his Government had decided to sweep away. What happened? The practical effect of such a course was pictured in telling language by Mr. McKelvie, Conservative member for Yale, British Columbia. Deputation after deputation disclosed to the Government is folly. Then the third budget came down and in the small hours of the morning, while Mr. Fielding was dramatically absent the Minister of Customs announced that the Government had decided not only to permit of valuations up to the limit of cost of production and reasonable profit, but to any sum on earth that the Government might see fit to fix. This too, they were going to put in effect by order-in-council.

Under the law as now enacted by these champions of free trade, by these crusaders against autocracy, they are able to fix a tariff rate just as high as pleases their sweet will, and they are able to do so without bothering their heads about Parliament sodoing as they don't relieve. These first fiscal creation is a tariff by order-in-council.

By the promise of sweeping away for purely political purposes they for supposedly extreme clauses, of have taken the skeleton militia orsweeping away the special dumping ganization heretofore maintained at clause, by these they had led the the lowest cost by far, in proportion Progressives to talk about "facing in to our people, of any country in the the right direction" and about "half world, and they have made it, on a loaf being better than no bread." the admission of the new Minister of After they got the Progressive com- Militia himself, ineffective for its mitted, they faced right around in the purposes, and sadly below the lowest other direction and swept away the standard of safety. They have, as well few miserable crumbs that had been shrunk from bearing in the least degoing the duty for the half loaf. But gree the honorable share of this Dr. Mr. Crerar took good care that this minion's cost by tax, in proportion same was successful and made sure without apparently any sense of that enough Progressives would sup- shame, called on the British taxport the Government and shield it payer to carry the whole burden of from all sign of harm.'

New Taxation

The rest of the budget consisted in a lot of new taxes on cheques, on sugar beets, on soft drinks, on cigarettes, on a long list of articles, every one of which was impracticable and impossible and every one of which was either swept clean away or changed through and through before all the budget wrigging was over. Never has such an ill-digested budget been presented to the Canadian Parliament or to any other Parliament. The only efficient performance of the whole controversy was the simple alluring contrivance of the marches up and the marches down by which proves the kindly and benevolent Progressives were easily kept in line. But here we stand now with the performance over. We have a tariff protective in principle, in theory, in practical application, in everything. It is the tariff they pledged themselves in opposition, in vention to destroy. The farce is now complete. Tens of thousands of voters, yes, hundreds of thousands who supported the Liberal candidates and Progressive candidates on the faith of pledges pledged would, on the faith of their definite and tangible promises, those hundreds of thousands of voters have been taken into camp. They have been betrayed. The work of perfidy is over. The crown of dishonour encircles the brow of Mr. Mackenzie King. Duplicity has won a wretched and hollow triumph, but the opportunity of the people of Canada will come again.

They told us a thousand times over in Opposition that our national debt had become appalling; many of them seemed to think that a war debt can be fought with words and that money and men were superfluous. Two or three members now in the Government declared in printed pamphlet that we were on the verge of bankruptcy and were drifting helplessly into the amexationist arms of the United States. As soon as they came into power their first announcement to Parliament was that Canada was in a better position than any other country that had been in the war. They had told us for months that the debt should have been diminished. In seven months they have added in our debt at least twenty-five million dollars. In their whole program of last session there was not one single proposal looking toward economy. The only boast they could make was that the money required to reestablish our soldiers on the land had already been provided by the late Government and that they were accordingly free of that obligation, and that the betterments necessary on the National Railways had been made by us and that they were saved many millions on that account. Save for these responsibilities from which they were freed by the courage and capacity of the Government that had gone before they brought down estimates the same as ours in every way except larger, and they propose to spend this year many millions more than were spent in our last year of power.

Essential Services Impaired

It is true that the Government submitted to influences which have not only impaired but largely destroyed certain essential services of the country. With all this program of expenditure, including millions against the late Government and bring home crimes of conspiracy against the people, disclose secret, horrifying alliances and destroy the reputations of public men. Can anyone tell me what he has done? Put in any words that have a meaning the conversants Mr. Murlock made with the people from public platforms and put alongside them his dreary performances in session. He has not started anything. He knew he never could disclose anything. He has not stamped out anything. He evidently had a promise of high office he set out to get by any means within his command.

Government Generously Treated

The Government has had generous treatment at the hands of Parliament. From Mr. Crerar and his followers it was promised benevolent neutrality. It has received a kindly, a gracious, a fraternal service. The two groups have played the game of give and take between them; the logs have rolled hither and thither across politics and a succession of promises—no rational principle whatever. "Special privileges" which each group had vied with the other in bestowing, were hastened to and fro, the idea being to help each other politically—all at the expense of the people of Canada. Were the Government was in the act of shamefacedly adopting the policy of its predecessor and consequently was assured of the votes of the Opposition, then the Progressives, knowing the Government was safe, voted the other way. But in case of even a whisper of danger, Jonathan was never closer to David than Mr. Crerar is to Mr. King. Some day soon they will amalgamate their forces; they have tried to already, but Sir Lomer Gouin stepped in and forbade the banns. They may amalgamate and they may not and if they don't it will be because they believe they can carry more seats under two party flags than under one. Because they believe by continuing the two organizations they can keep within their folds the Conservatives whom they have deceived. They know that after the election they can easily make the practical results just the same.

The Opposition has been an opposition, but it has been a fair opposition. It has criticized with freedom and with vigor; it has offered time and again practical constructive amendments. At no time has the Government been treated so generously. Its very parentage is unwholesome. You cannot take the elements that for purely party purposes inflamed one great province against military service and the elements that brought in class consciousness to further their political fortunes and make of these a combination that can really serve this country. Unsterile session may be followed by another, sterile so worse than sterile, but the end cannot be far. The people of Canada will demand stes, of candid, of dependable, of approved optimism, of honest public conduct, men united as to what ought to be done and of courage and resource to do it. They cannot want a government that is a government and that has command of its task.

Hon. Mr. Ferguson.

Mr. Ferguson in addressing the gathering said that the U. F. O. Government had failed to redeem their pre-election promises to reduce expenditure and abolish patronage. In 1910, under the Conservative government, the capital expenditure was 47 millions; in 1921, under the Drury Government, it was 120 millions, a while the cost of managing the ordinary business of the country had increased by about five million dollars. The speaker said that there was a great lack of efficiency and an enormous waste of money in connection with the Government's good roads program. The Drury Government was going to get rods of expensive lawyers, but in two years about a million and a half had been spent for legal services. They were told that under the present Government there would be no patronage, but patronage was never so rampant and glaring as at the present moment. There was a patronage committee in every riding and patronage was the universal rule.

POLITICAL HYPOCRISY.

It is part of the duty of a leader of the Opposition to castigate the Government, and no leader ever had an easier task than that of Mr. Meighen in his speech at Kingston on Tuesday evening, when he stood up the present administration at Ottawa. Mr. Meighen is to be congratulated upon his masterly analysis and criticism of the King Government's recent and pre-office history, but the most important part of the speech was the beginning, where he condemned hollow and dishonest promises on the part of public men in order to gain power, and appealed for candor and straightforwardness in public life.

There is no greater need in Canadian politics to-day than that of common honesty. The success of such methods of gaining office as those used by the Liberal Party under Mr. Mackenzie King puts a premium upon hypocrisy. Mr. King stamped the Dominion as a sort of political chameleon, taking upon himself the particular political shade of those he happened to be appealing to for support. When in the East he put the soft pedal on Free Trade, when out West he was all for reciprocity, and, now in office he is powerless and without a mandate of any kind.

Nobody knows what the present Government really stands for; it is without either policy or principles. It is ready to make any sort of alliance in order to make itself secure. It sought for office and nothing more nor less, and it is willing to barter the avowed policy of the party to which it professes to belong in order to hold on to power. Even the few items introduced into the budget in the nature of tariff reform were pitched overboard in order to save the ship.

When Mr. Meighen criticized the Government for failing to live up to its promises to the Free Traders, the only answer he received was—"Why should you worry? you ought to be glad that we are saving the country from what you regard as ruin." Even the sanctimonious Globe stuck its tongue in its cheek and winked a knowing wink when it was reminded of its pre-election advocacy of drastic tariff reform.

In Mr. Meighen, Canada has a statesman who sets forth fairly and squarely his policy and principles and who stands by them even if he goes down to defeat. In Mr. King the country has a Premier who sought office for its own sake, who has shown by word and action that he is not only lacking in backbone but is not to be trusted. The greatest condemnation of the Government is not contained in the fact that it "did not carry out its program of tariff reform, but that it preached a gospel of prosperity by Free Trade in which it had absolutely no belief itself. This is the greatest of all sins in politics, morals or religion, this shiny sin of hypocrisy.

Mr. Meighen's closing words should be deeply considered by the people of Canada if we are to have honesty and sincerity in public life: "The people of Canada will demand men of candid, of dependable, of approved cohesion, of unmingled public conduct, men united to what ought to be done and with courage and resources to do it. They want a government that is a government and that has command of its tasks."

DE VALERA AND DE WET.

De Valera is acquiring a reputation for ubiquity that threatens to out-do that of the redoutable Boer commander De Wet—note the similar prefix. So many reports of the rebel chief's omnipresence have been in circulation that a special correspondent of The London Times sent a despatch from Dublin on July 27 recording the fact that on the day previous he was at Carrick-on-Shur.

One of the people who seldom sees and spoke to him at this place was an enterprising Woman correspondent of an American journal, who managed to find her way to his headquarters, thanks to her possession of an irregular's pass obtained during the days of what is now euphemistically referred to here as the "recent controversy." Mr. de Valera was naturally somewhat upset at having been found out so simply, and in reply to a request for an interview made an appointment for this morning. In the meantime the pass was taken away, and the correspondent and her companion, also a woman, were ordered not to leave Carrick. Later in the afternoon they learned that Mr. de Valera had left the town, whereupon they started off in their motor-car and managed to get through the irregulars' lines back to safety.

DOCTORS AND LAWYERS DIFFER.

In an editorial on "Insanity and Crime", The London Times makes a valuable contribution to the discussion on the question raised by the True case in England and the Delorme case in Canada. The British Medical Association had discussed the subject at a recent meeting and The Times in commenting upon this discussion declared that there was an immense gulf set between the medical and the legal view of mental aberration, and that this gulf has grown steadily wider. The Times goes on to say:

"The suggestion put forward by one of the speakers that it might be bridged were doctors to know something of law, and lawyers something of medicine, is scarcely helpful. It ignores the real character of the issue between the professions. That is determined by the respective attitude to life of those who seek generalizations and those who refine from them. Law consists of the application of principles to particular instances; medicine works in precisely the opposite direction. When, therefore, a medical witness is called upon to say whether or not a criminal was insane at a particular time he is placed in a false position. It all depends what is meant by "insane." Sanity is a relative term in medicine, an absolute in a Court of Justice. So also must be insanity. Doctors, in fact, cannot decide legal issues of this kind. Their whole training unfits them for the task. All that they can do is to express opinions which may or may not be accepted; or, in other words, the views of a jury in possession of evidence, expert and other, are likely to be of greater value to society than those of a panel of alienists. They are also likely to prove fairer when put into effect. It is idle for doctors to object to this that their more exact knowledge of mental processes entitles them to lay down the law. It entitles them only to instruct the lawyers. In the last issue an accused man's actions must be weighed and decided on by ordinary people. Any other course is likely to produce later, to inflict grievous injury on the community by bringing the law, if not into contempt, at least into obscurity."

Birds are Primitive Poets

Dr. Garstang thinks that birds, aesthetically, are probably somewhere near the level of primitive man, and that by the birds' songs we may be enabled to reisrare some of the steps by which the primitive emotional-esthetic were transformed into the beginnings of artistic music. "Primitive types of birds," he says, "exhibit simple types of song, these being advanced and modern types of bird, the Thrush family, display the greatest complexity and rarely is their melodic polarity."

I like his remark that birds are not automatic musical-boxes, but "sound-lovers," who cultivate the pursuit of song combinations as an art as truly as we have cultivated our arts of similarly aesthetic character.

Birds songs are not expression of a momentary excitement, but of an emotional state, a prolonged, if periodic, elevation of the spirit. It is clear to his mind that the song of each bird is a fine and subtle transformation of his ordinary language, his every-day calls of every sort divested of their associations of meaning, and played with as marbles of sound, and as glittering beads to be threaded and unthreaded as fancy, skill, and inspiration suggest.

He has some penetrating remarks on the unity and pattern of the song, the origin of which he finds much subtler and harder to trace.

Dr. Garstang has studied writing his book, and he has felt what he says about the rewritten it, and no work that has given him more delight could can fail to convey some measure of it to those for whom it is done; but when he proceeds to put the songs of the birds down italicised phrases of printed sounds it is not so easy to follow him. It were easier to follow phrases. Birds have acquired to themselves names and sentences, little bits of human speech from the constant chatter around jargoning. The Whip-poor-Will and the Katy-did in America, and the Wby-did-he-shoot, the small fishing hawk on who gives that plaintive cry, all these explain themselves and find instant acceptance. It is perplexing to see a stanza of nine lines on the page before one, representing the Skylark's song, every line composed of such utterances as "Sis-se-ree," "Jee-o-jee-o," "Soo-soo-soo," and the like, then is reminded of the traveller who saw a stuffed bird in a glass case in an antiparlour, one shot displayed the evidently the hand of the taxidermist, and who was told by the innkeeper that it was his Woodcock, and that he had himself stuffed it. And the traveller said meekly: "It may be your idea of a Woodcock. It isn't God's idea of a Woodcock." And so with these phonetic songs. A verse, the metre of which gives the arabesque of a bird's song, and the words to its assonance, is better suited to convey a true idea. The Lark's Song," by Charles O'Donnell, is such as this:—

La gentille alouette,
Avec son tire lirra-lire,
Etincelle-a-lire
Tirelirant-a-lire
Vers la route du ciel,
Puis s'creul vers ce lieu
Vire,
Et dcsire dire
A Dieu Dieu!
A Dieu Dieu!

That is exquisite. It gives the Lark's song more nearly than all Dr. Garstang's "Se-se, se-se, Tirry-wirry, tirry-wirrier."

Again an image, a figure of thought that represents the impression that a bird's song makes on the mind, gets it nearer. Take the Golden-Crested Wren. If we can think of a small roll of clear water travelling quickly down an incline till it reaches a point when it must cast itself—a little jet of crystal song—into silence—and then the whole long equalization repeats again and again, among the warm pine-needles, if we can visualize this, then we have got the meaning of the bird's song into your mind, and will have secured it for halcinal recognition.

HERE AND THERE

A WORLD OF BLUE SKIES.

We know that the surface of Mars is comparatively flat that there are no mountains worthy of the name on our neighboring world; nor are there any large bodies of water on the Martian surface; if ever there were permanent oceans they have long since disappeared (writes the Rev. Mester Macpherson in "Discovery"). The planet's atmosphere, too, is very rare—"thinner at least by half," according to Lowell, "than the air upon the summit of the Himalayas"; and its surface pressure, following, is likely to be between one-half and one-tenth of that of the earth's surface.

The Martian atmosphere is much clearer than ours. It is not however, absolutely cloudless. "Clouds," Pickering wrote in 1914, "are nearly always visible on the disc, but they are not usually reported because they are difficult to observe. . . . Later, in the Polar regions the clouds are sometimes so white as to be with difficulty distinguished from the snow. After they have disappeared at the poles, the ground is often seen to be white enough to deceive one. Sometimes cloud-masses partially conceal a whole hemisphere, and cloudy nights appear to be frequent." During the opposition of 1894 the observers at the Lowell Observatory were impressed by the unusual haziness and cloudiness of the Martian atmosphere. But we may say that Mars is usually a world of blue skies and bright outlines.

SHOP WINDOW EXPERIMENTS

Some interesting tests have been recently carried out by an institute of business science at Manchester, Germany, in order to discover what sort of shop-window display proves most attractive. The experiments were made at a large shopcentering specially for women.

The shop had 15 windows for the display of its goods, and these were arranged in different ways. In one window the articles all bore price labels, in another they were not priced; in some windows one color alone was used, in others there was a variety of shades; some windows were severely practical. A means was divised of checking the number of actual purchasers that each window or each different scheme of display attracted.

Some of the results were quite odd. The sale of articles bearing price labels greatly exceeded those of articles unmarked. Windows with vari-colored articles were more popular than those in which one color only was shown, and usually, but not always, a large variety of articles drew better than a few. The result least expected was that the plain, unfrilled, unadorned window, with decorative accessories, proved a much less effective salesman than the undecorated window.

EVERY KIND OF RETURN.

"And so we get every kind of return to nature at once: Cowper's return to the country, Burns' return to the plain people, Blake's return to spirit, Wordsworth's return to all three, spirit and people and country at once. All are connected as a return to nature.

"And so is even the work of the great romantics. Scott and Byron and Keats knew that nature has colour and has detail and been the marks of its past: all things that had been forgotten in the abstract generalizing of the eighteenth century. And now another hundred years have passed and we see the same thing once more. The Pre-Raphaelite Victorian figure was Tennyson, the poetic child partly of Wordsworth and partly of Keats: though perhaps he owed more to the Latin and Greek classics than to any Englishman. Still he carried on the tradition which to him as to them seemed to be founded on life and nature.—John Bailey, in the Fortnightly Review.

THE GIVERS.

Now I am dead, low-voiced you come to me;
You wall me in with flowers on every side.
White rose and jasmine mingle tenderly,
More lovely than the garlands of a bride.

In loneliness I walked a little while,
Hearing but Echo flinging back my call;
Ah! if dead lips could smile, how mine would smile
In deep, sad pity for the hurt of all!

Oh, take a dewy bud and trailing spray,
Scatter their petals where a road cuts steep—
Too late you strew pale blossoms for me today,
Could dead eyes weep, latterly mine would weep!

Not all your tears, not all your grief or art,
Can bring a quickened beat to a dead heart!
—Lilian Bradeley, in New York Times.

MAVOURNEEN

O, your feet were very light on the wind-swept grass
Mavourneen,
Where the pointed, sun flecked shadows loved to pass,
Mavourneen.
Was the song of the thrush from his last shadowed nest
World flutter the heart of me deep in my breast,
Those your eyes filling laugh was of all songs the best,
Mavourneen.

O, your eyes were very blue when the world was in flower,
Mavourneen.
And your hair gleamed gold as the cornfields after a shower,
Mavourneen.
Had the heart of you world leap when Spring stood on the hill,
And the amber skies at evening would set your lost a-thrill,
But the feet of you would follow their wild, young will,
Mavourneen.

O, August has returned, with poppies in her hair,
Mavourneen,
O, the hills are very green and the lakes are very fair,
Mavourneen,
But the grass will wait in vain for your eager feet,
And the thrush will never sing again as he did so sweet,
And O! the years are dragging, that must go so fleet,
Mavourneen.

—Agnes M. Foley, in The Canadian Bookman.

THE MATRIMONIAL STRUGGLE FOR SUPREMACY

While a strong-willed man and woman wed there is often a struggle for supremacy. Dr. Johnson admitted that he resorted to maintain the "whip hand" from the first day of his marriage to Mrs Porter. The couple set out on horseback for the wedding ceremony at Derby, and the bride protested that the bridegroom rode too fast.

"When I rode a little slower," said Johnson, "she passed me and complained that I lagged behind. I was not to be made the slave of caprice and resolved to begin as I meant to end.

So, quoth he, the bridegroom "pushed on briskly," and left the lady far behind!

When Mrs. Porter overtook her lover he "observed her to be in tears." Apparently Johnson was the victor in this initial conjugal duel.

She had read the bid romance," he explains, "did her got into her head the fantastical notion that a woman of spirit should use her lover like a dog."

Do you know the self-asserting type of woman who ruffles all her feathers at the bare hint of wifely compliance with a husband's rule? She tells you that "no man will ever break her spirit," sets her lips firm, tilts up her chin, and—looks for trouble.

And have you not met the man who suspects a love of dominance in all women and talks about spoiling his food down firmly from the outset of marriage?

The useful description "opposition" suits many men and women who utter wedlock with the determination to wield domestic authority, says the "Daily Mail."

They are usually persons who have been unduly repressed and are "up against" austere authority. Such people are wont to imagine that it is a happier state to "boss" in marriage than to be led.

Women are rather too prone to believe that the average man possesses an overweening impulse to dominate in the home, and men are too apt to imagine that the ordinary woman has the making of a tyrant in petticoats.

I suppose "the biological dual of the species" really exists. We hear much learned discussion upon "the difference in aim of the two sexes" and the irritable clash of masculine and feminine personalities. But incessant talk about warfare breeds a pugnacious spirit.

It is more sensible to assume that the majority of men and women do not habitually want strife, and that a fixed idea of maintaining supremacy in conjugal life is comparatively infrequent.

Success in marriage does not depend upon which person shall wield authority, but upon co-operation and mutual help. The deliberate consideration of who shall control introduces an element of discord.

If a man begins married life with the view that women are universally obsessed with a yearning for dominance, he may soon transform an amenable partner into an obstinate rebel.

The woman who deceives herself that all men are "out to enslave her" and that it is certain to act in a provocative defensive manner. She will suspect highhandedness and even tyranny when they do not exist.

It is the whole duty of lovers and husbands and wives to study the character traits of the other sex without masculine or feminine prejudice. Those who strive to understand do not talk about the whip-hand in matrimony.—Saturday Night.

FASHIONS OF GEORGIAN BAY

Georgian Bay," the Mademoiselle Knickerbocker is the belle of Georgian Bay this mid-summer of 1922. Through its thirty islands and lands she of the knickers and bobbed hair is queen. From the crowds at Honey Harbor of Minaki Inn to the furthermost north you see her. Somewhere in the Georgian Bay summer variety, ofttimes the khaki of the land girl or riding habit breeds, of courtesy, others look as if they had eloped with Little Brother's knee pants. But smartest of all were a group we saw boarding a yacht at Minaki.ou. They might have alighted from a magazine cover and say musical comedy manager would have secured them on sight. All had bobbed hair—one blonde had curls a French doll would have envied. Others' features were very full and fashioned of white linen. With them were worn middy sweaters in beige and delicate hues and their socks were rolled down from sunburned knees. They looked as if they could walk on handbanding miles a day or assisting as crew in a glorious sailboat race.

Somebody on the boat cried out: "Just see them they must be all cripples." I have a group of girls wearing WHITE knickers." But a lady who keeps up with the style order" catalogue gipes out:—"Not necessarily you can get them in Toronto now!"—Toronto Telegram.

Salt and pepper.

Melt three tablespoons butter, add four tablespoons flour, one-half teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper and when smooth and bubbling add two cups milk. Cook until thick.

For one cup of buttered crumbs use one cup crumbs and one fourth cup butter, melted.

Place the fish and sauce in layers in a baking dish, or in individual shells or dishes. Put the potatoes through a bag and rose tube, or form with a spoon a wall around the fish and sauce.

Cover all but the potatoes with the buttered crumbs and set in a hot oven until the sauce bubbles through and the crumbs are brown.

Salmon is a good fish to use in this way, and green peas are a good accompaniment.

WESTERN EDITOR KILLED

Saskatoon, August 7.—No inquest will be held on the death of Joseph A. Tape, editor and proprietor of the Bruno Leader, who was killed on Friday night at Bruno, Sask., by the propeller of an aeroplane he was watching the tossing of the engine of the machine.

AMERICAN TRAVELLER REBUKED

Brenner, Aug. 8.—Some resentment was aroused in a cafe here recently when an American diner took a thousand-mark note from his wallet and easily cleaned his shoes with it as an exhibition to other patrons in the place. He then handed the note to a waiter in payment for his bill, with the remark that it is merely "German paper."

THE BANDBOX

By Louis Joseph Vance

"Don't let's talk about that now," she said in a soft, pleading voice. "That's getting farther and farther away from my errand."

"By all means," he returned pleasantly, "let us go to that at once."

"You can't guess?" She unmasked again the battery of her laughing eyes. He shook his head. "I'll give you three guesses."

He found the courage to say: "You didn't come to confess that I'm in the right about the play?"

She pouted prettily. "Can't you let that be? No, of course not."

"Nor to beker about it?"

"Nor to beker about it."

"Nor yet to conduct a grossing control?"

"Then I've exhausted my allowance. Well?"

"I came," she drawled, "for my hat."

"Your hat!" His eyes opened wide.

She nodded. "My pretty hat. You remember you promised to give it to me if nobody else claimed it."

"Yes, but . . ."

"And nobody has claimed it?"

"No, but . . ."

"Then I want my hat."

"But—but could on—give somebody a chance—"

"Stupid!" she laughed. "Isn't it enough that I claim it? Am I nobody?"

"Wait half a minute. You've got me fairly dizzy, myself, frowning dubiously, recollecting his wits; then by degrees the light began to dawn upon him. "Do you mean you really did send me that confounded bandbox?"

Coolly she inclined her head: "I did just that, my dear."

"But when I asked you the same question on the Automotive—"

"Then as I denied it."

"And you were in London that Friday, after all!"

"Yes. Had to be, hadn't I, in order to buy the hat and have it sent you?"

"But—how did you know I was sailing Saturday?"

"I happened to go to the steamship office just after you had booked—saw a duke on your page name to the passenger-list on the bulletin-board. That gave me the inspiration. I had already the hat, but had I dared come back to the shop and instructed them to send it to you."

"But, Alsbod to what end?"

"Well," she said languidly, smiling with amusement at his bewilderment, "I thought it might be fun to bondwind you."

"But—I fail to see the joke."

"Wait and you'll tell you All."

Her tone supplied the capital letter. He shrugged helplessly. "Proceed."

"Well," she began with sublime assurance, "you see, I'd been figuring all the while on getting the necklace home from here. And I finally hit upon what seemed a rather neat little plot. The hat was part of it, I thought it for the purpose of smuggling the necklace in, concealed in its lining. Up to that point you weren't involved. Then I happy accident let me see that name on the list. Instantly it flashed upon me how I could make you useful. It was just possible, you see, that these hateful customs men might be shrewd enough to search the hat, too. How much better, then, to make you bring in the hat, all unsuspecting! They'd never think of searching it in your hands! You see?"

His face had been hardening during this amazing speech. When she stopped he shot in a crisp question.

"The necklace wasn't in the hat when delivered to me? You didn't trust it to the shop people over night?"

"Of course not. I merely sent you the hat; then—as I knew you would—you mentioned it to me aboard ship. I got you to bring it to my room, and then sent you out—you remember? While you wasted I opened the necklace in the lining; it took only an instant. Then Jane carried the hat back to your steward."

"So," he commented stupidly, "it wasn't stolen?"

"Naturally not."

"But you threw suspicion on Hr—"

"I daresay he was guilty enough in intent, if not in deed. There's not the slightest doubt in my mind that he's that man Issuy, really, and that he shipped with us for the special purpose of stealing the necklace if he got half a chance."

"You may be right; I don't know—and neither do you. But do you realize that you came near causing an innocent man to be jailed for the theft.

"But I didn't. He got away."

"But not if alone—there's myself. Have you paused to consider what would have happened to me if the inspector had happened to find that necklace in the hat? Heavens knows how he missed it! He was persistent enough. But if he had found it, I'd have been jailed for theft."

"Oh, no," he said sweetly; "I'd never have let it go that far."

"Not even if in confess would mean that you'd be sent to jail for smuggling?"

"They'd never do that to a woman."

But her eyes shifted from his unusually and he saw her colour change a little.

"You know better than that. You read the papers—keep informed. You know what happened to the last woman who tried to smuggle. I forgot how long they sent her up for—five months, or something like that."

She was silent, her gaze evasive.

AGNES AYRES AND JACK HOLT IN "BOUGHT AND PAID FOR" AT GRIFFIN'S TO-NIGHT

A play that has never failed to thrill an audience anywhere is George Broadhurst's "Bought and Paid For." And now the William DeMille screen version of it, which is the feature offering at Griffin's to-night to Saturday, with a matinee Saturday probably will thrill them even more effectively.

So well known is the story of this popular play that to repeat it seems quite superfluous. It need only be said the picture follows the story of the play with faithful exactitude, diverting only in those slight instances where diversion meant better interest.

For its direction, the picture could not have been in abler hands than those of William DeMille, whose consummate skill in the interpretive of scenes filled with dramatic intensity has led to his becoming one of the foremost producers of the fotion picture world. Heading a popular cast are the popular Paramount stars Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt, each possessing a creditable host of laurels. In their support are such favorites as Walter Hiers, the rotund Paramount comedian, Leah Wynant and George Kuwa. The adaptation was done by Clara Beranger. Altogether, a picture to be hailed as a decided acquisition on the part of Griffin's Theatre and a sure-enough treat for picture fans.

A 3-reel Century comedy, "One Horse Town," a beautiful Travelogue, and George Walsh in the latest chapter of the historical chapter play, "With Stanley in Africa" are announced for exhibition on the same program.

NEW OFFICES FOR THE SALADA TEA CO. IN LONDON, ENGLAND.

The Salada Tea Company has just removed its London, England offices from 1 Mincing Lane, to the magnificent new "Port of London" Building. This was recently opened by the reviving throb of World Trade made larger and more commodious quarters necessary for the many busy port officials. The flow of shipping to and from London, (which by the way is the greatest port in the world) is again established. For some time much shipping was diverted to Liverpool and Southampton, but the facilities now offered by the port of London to the merchant ships of the world are such that the miles of docks and warehouses are again palsing with activity. As London is the Tea market of the world, The Salada Tea Company maintains there at all times a staff of experts to arrange for its large requirements. The new offices in the "Port of London" Buildings will offer very much better facilities for transacting this "SALADA" Business, and in security—at all times the finest tea on the market.

TEN CENTURIES OF MUNICIPAL LIFE CELEBRATED AT GOSLAR

Goslar, Germany, Aug. 10.—Drowsy old Goslar, Melancholy of the Harz, has tripped lightly into the limelight to announce to the world it has reached its thousandth birthday. A gala celebration, attended by prominent men from many parts of the country, marked the occasion.

In preparation for the event, Goslar dressed itself all up in its "Sunday best," with a general coat of fresh paint and lavish decorations. It took on once more something of the old glory of centuries gone by, when it often served as an imperial residence. Even the venerable Kaiserhaus, built by Henry III and said to be the oldest secular building in Germany, appeared brightened up for the day.

The anniversary observances began in this building with a formal morning program in which public leaders in town, provincial, and national life took part.

TRUNKS TRIM TIGER TYRES

Railroaders Outclass Trent Valley Leaguers by Score of 12-0

The stellar attraction at the Civic Holiday celebration Wednesday, was a baseball game between the Grand Trunks, of the Central Ontario League and the Tiger Tyre nine of the Trent Valley League, the result of which was an overwhelming victory for the Trunks by the lop-sided score of 12-0.

Those among us who ever thought the Tigers could at least give the Trunks a game, will surely be convinced, that judging by Wednesday's exhibition, we were mighty amiss in our calculation, as the Tigers were hopelessly outclassed.

Ray Mallen pitched five innings for the Trunks and Jack Williams finished the battle. The Tigers got only 1 hit, and that was off Williams in the 8th inning, when the second man up, Clapper, laid a bunt down to Williams and made first, on that lucky had a narrow escape from a no hit game. But one of their men reached third base. Tigers went three pitchers, and all were easy for the railroaders. "Cap" Smith opened the game, "Chuck" Jeffery taking up the cudgels in the 6th inning, and "Lake" Smith went in at the 8th, and finished out the battle.

Strike outs were not plentiful on either side, the fielders on both teams having the best pretext of the season. The Trunks fielded like demons, and the Tigers did very well for a time. Finally, however, the odd bit jolted through, and the Trunks broke through strong at every opportunity. "Cap" Smith had 3 strike outs, Jeffery 3 and "Lake" Smith 1. Mallen had 2 and Williams 2. Cap passed 2 and Jeffery 3, while Mallen issued complimentaries to no one, and Williams to 1 man only, in his initial inning.

The first two innings were pretty much of the 1, 2, 3 out variety, but the Trunks got away in the third, and tallied 4 runs. Alex. Weir got safe on Kelleher's wild throw to first. Mallen got a hit to left field, scoring Weir, who had pilfered second. Then Meagher pounded out a 3 bagger, scoring Mallen. V. Weir flew out, but Casey got on when Platt fumbled his hit. Harry Mills slammed the pill out to right garden, scoring Meagher and Casey.

In the 4th the Trunks got 2 more, when Weir after drawing a pass, and stealing second, scored when Casey hit a roller to Clapper, Casey got on, and also scored, when Ross got a hit to left field. In both the 6th and the Saturday 7th the railroaders got 2 runs, making the even dozen.

In the 6th with 2 down, Mallen drew a walk, and Meagher beat Jeffery's throw to first, when he laid down a bunt which should have been handled. Vern Weir then proceeded to beat out a home run, scoring both base runners. In the 7th, four errors and 1 walk netted the railroaders their final three runs, despite the fact that Jeffery struck 3 of them out.

The Trunks had 1 error only during the game, and hit the ball hard Vern Weir was the only man to get a circuit clout, but several 2 baggers went on record.

Line-up in batting order:—

Grand Trunks—Meagher, 2nd b; V. Weir, ss; Casey, r.f; H. Mills, lb; W. Ross, c.f; J. K. Williams, 3b; S. Hagerman, c; A. Weir, l.f; Mallen and Williams, p.

Tiger Tyre—O'Connor, s.s; Clapper, lf; Kelleher, 3b; Platt, 1b; Goyer, c; Young, 2b; Symons, r.f; Langdon, c.f; "Cap" Smith, Jeffery and "Lake" Smith, p.

WHY BIRDS ENTER PROTEST

Base Runner Advances One Base After Rosevear Called Time

Saturday's game at Cobourg with Lindsay Greyhirds as the contending team was one of the best witnessed on the Horse Show grounds in years. It was a thriller, and the unfortunate part of it is that the Birds had the game in their mitt, so to speak and then lost out by a run in the extra tenth innings. As it is the Birds have good grounds for lodging a protest as when "Time" was called Umpire Rosevear allowed a base runner to advance from second to third, and this runner afterwards scored the tieing run.

It was a game of thrills. Cobourg started out with a clean home run. Tyson the sturdy catcher leading on the first ball pitched to the first inning for a homer. In fact the Cobourg crew had a lead of 6 to 0 at the end of the fourth innings, but the Birds kept pegging away consistently, and managed to take the lead on the Tanks. The team entered the 8th, tieing with Lindsay one ahead, but in Cobourg's half of the eighth, with two out and two on bases, something happened.

When Catcher Cummins, who had been previously injured, squatted down in the catcher's box with the pain in his ankle, Umpire Rosevear left his position behind the Catcher, discarded his mask, and called "Time." Pitcher Ostic who was then called left his position behind the pitching box, and advanced towards the home plate to render assistance. Third baseman Cummins also noticing that the game had been called, left his beg and advanced to the home plate. During the time play was suspended the runner on second advanced to third, although the runner on first remained there. Coach Baird immediately objected and stated that the runner should go back to second, and in the argument which followed Rosevear grabbed Baird by the back of the neck, turned him around and shoved him off to the dugout, which was not the proper procedure for any Umpire to take.

Catcher Bart Cummins faced Umpire Rosevear and asked if he had not called "Time," the Umpire replying, "If I did I forgot." The game was resumed and the runner who was not sent back to second base scored the tieing run.

The ninth innings was passed and the battle started, Lindsay failed to score, but the Tanks came across with the winning run, on an error.

As a result of the game Cobourg goes to the top of the second half with the same vengeance as in the first half with four wins and no losses.

NATIONS TO REVERT TO BARTERING

Difficulties of Exchange Are Being Overcome in This Way

London, Aug. 10.—Barter, or the exchange of goods, as against the transfer of actual cash has figured in recent international loans, according to the Geneva correspondent of the Observer. In this way the difficulties of exchange have been overcome.

Rumania wanted a loan of 45,000,000 gold francs from Switzerland. The Swiss said it was impossible unless they knew how the money was to be spent. Rumania replied: "We need to replenish railroad rolling stock, particularly engines."

"Fine," said the Swiss bankers, "we have these for sale. Take them, and pay for them in corn in petroleum, both of which you produce and we need." Thus were the arrangements concluded.

Similar borrowing and paying by barter also has taken place with Czechoslovakia. Here, again, Czechoslovakia is receiving Swiss manufactured goods and is to pay for them with truckloads of sugar. Therefore the question of exchange and the comparative values of the Czechoslovakian krona and the Swiss franc does not arise.

No Dust or Gas
FROM THE Pease
"ECONOMY"
FURNACE

One great objection to a poorly constructed furnace is the dust or gas nuisance. But with the Pease "Economy" this difficulty is overcome by the one-piece ashpit and the cup joints. To be convinced on this score, read this report from a resident of Dunn Avenue, Toronto:

"The results from the Pease 'Economy' Furnace have been very satisfactory. Good even heat with no dust or gas."

You know the old saying about the proof of the pudding; and the Pease "Economy" has certainly proven itself a dependable furnace in every way. Let me tell you something definite regarding price.

The manner in which each event was carried out was an evidence of the efficiency exercised by those engaged in carrying out same.

The various booths about the grounds which were in charge of young ladies did a good afternoon's trade.

Visitors were in attendance from Trenton Picton and other places in this locality, whilst a number of our country friends were present.

LORD LASCELLES FAILS IN BUSINESS

Manufacturing Company, of Which He Was Head, Is Sold

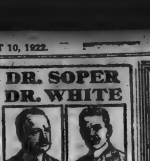

London, Aug. 10.—The first business venture of Lord Lascelles, better known as the husband of Princess Mary, has proved a failure. The Conqueror Typewriter Manufacturing Company in Stourton, near Leeds, of which he was the head and principal shareholder, has just been sold.

The concern was started in 1919 with a nominal capital of half a million sterling. It was intended by the promoters to produce an all British typewriter which should compete with the best of the American machines.

The erection of the factory and its equipment was undertaken at a time when prices ruled high. No expense was spared and when the works were completed they were considered the "last word" in modern mass productions.

It was hoped that the new industry would provide regular employment for 400 work people. Much experimental work was undertaken in order to justify the name of "Conqueror" and ensure production on a sufficiently profitable basis. But owing to the industrial slump just a single machine has been produced for sale.

EYESIGHT IS GOOD AFTER YEARS IN DARK

Mine Mules After Twenty Years Underground, Can See Perfectly

Hazleton, Pa., Aug. 10.—The coal mine mule, which ordinarily spends years of his life in the darkness of mine tunnels far under ground, retains his eyesight even though he does not use his eyes.

So veterinarians in the anthracite region have determined following examination of many mules which have been brought to the surface since the mines closed down last spring. With this announcement the veterinarians exploded a theory held by many for years, that because he did not have any use for his eyes, the mule lost his sight.

The coal mine mule usually begins life like any common farm mule. Once he becomes a mine worker, however, things change. He is sent far underground into the dark workings of the hard coal mines and there he stays, often for the remainder of his life. Being a hardy animal he sometimes remains in the mines for 20 years without seeing daylight.

When the mules were hoisted to the surface and turned loose upon the companies' properties some of them blinked a bit at the sunlight. When the veterinarians looked them over they found their eyes were there and as good as ever.

AN ANGLER'S PARADISE
Two hundred miles north of Toronto and one hundred and seventy miles west of Ottawa is situated Algonquin Park, where the fishing this year is better than it has been for some time. Great strides have been made—Black bass running three and four pounds, speckled trout three pounds and salmon trout up to twenty-five pounds. This park is ideal for the camper and canoe cruiser and good hotel accommodation makes it the popular spot for the summer vacationist who does not like to rough it. Ask any Canadian National Grand Trunk Agent for illustrated publication telling you all about it or write to C. E. Horning, D.P.A., G.T.R., Toronto, Ont. 8d,9,10,12

A GIFT OF THE GODS
Bounteous nature has supplied us not the pleasure and comfort of mankind. When pure and fresh, it is a most delicious and beneficial drink. In winter, if it is served hot, it is delightfully exhilarating, and in the heat of summer, if iced, there is nothing more refreshing. Unquestionably the purest and most delicious tea to use is "SALADA." Your grocer can supply you. Ask for it to-day.

GREAT WEALTH IN WHITE NORTH

In Fifty Years Barren Lands of North Will Disappear. Says Stefansson

WRANGEL ISLAND

Toronto, Aug. 10—The age of exploration of the Arctic regions is over; the age of commercial development has begun, according to Stefansson, the explorer who has set to the reclaiming of the frozen north. "Instead of the explorer going over the top of the world to the exploring of the north lands but to the building up of a greater Canada," he said, the famous explorer, Vilhjalmur Stefansson, on the occasion of a short visit to Toronto. "I venture positively that within fifty years from now there will be less land in the northern hemisphere that is considered inaccessible than there is land there is land in the south that is considered worthless because of its being dry."

Discussing the proposed flight of the explorer, Amundsen, over the North Pole Mr. Stefansson could see no reason why Amundsen should not succeed if he does succeed it will be merely the first flight in a continuous series" said the explorer. The conditions are ideal. It is only the ill-informed who believe that flying conditions over the pole in summer are worse than those over over the Atlantic. As a matter of fact they are better because the temperature is about the same, and there is usually a more uniform because there is no inlet, and the daylight is continuous. The flight over the pole is practically a straight record. The natural journey from Newfoundland to England has already been accomplished and that is longer."

Small Mystery Again Revived Man Arrested

Prisoner Was Working As An Auto Mechanic at Hotel, Under Name of Albert King — Information Given by Nameless Woman.

AN INCRIMINATING LETTER

Story That Small Was Brought to Montreal Under the Influence of Powerful Narcotic.

POLICE STILL ON SCENT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Montreal, Aug. 11.—A despatch received here from Perce, Quebec, reported the arrest of Max Phillips, alias Albert King, wanted in connection with the disappearance of Ambrose Small, of Toronto, theatrical magnate, who has been missing since Dec. 2, 1919.

Phillips was arrested at the Summer Hotel, where he was employed as an auto mechanic. The arrest is a sequel to the arrest of a woman in New Brunswick who gave the police valuable information regarding the case. She is being held here.

Fallows Arrest of Woman

Toronto, Aug. 11.—The arrest in the province of a woman, whose name has been withheld by the police. The woman was arrested by the Provincial police at the request of Detective Mitchell, of Toronto, who has been working on the case for some time. Mitchell was in Montreal on Wednesday, and left for the province of New Brunswick for the purpose of arresting the woman. Mitchell refused to make any statement regarding the arrest, saying the police would be given all the details at the Montreal police headquarters, where she had been left by Detective Mitchell.

Detective Mitchell was here until three days ago, working on the information supplied by the prisoner. He was assisted by Detective Fox, in the search in Montreal. The finding of what the detectives believe to be the body of Small is the object of the search.

WHERE H.M.S. RALEIGH STRUCK

Point Amour, where the flagship of the North Atlantic squadron was wrecked, is shown on the above map. The Raleigh ran aground in a fog, and six of the crew were drowned.

Two months ago Joseph H. Chenier of the Cairo Viger Hotel, 264 Drummond street, made a statement to the newspapers, in which he said he knew something of the affair and would be released to meet Detective Mitchell. Chenier said that he had already given information to a private detective on the case. The latter had later returned to Montreal afterward with the woman, whom he had located in a small town, in New Brunswick.

The information given by Chenier was that on October 3, 1921, a man and a woman had registered at his hotel as Dr. and Mrs. Gray of New York City. The woman received letters and the man was distant to other men in the place. The couple had arrived in an auto bearing the license number 37600, Ontario, 1921. They told Chenier that they were to remain one week in the city. On the night of the day that they arrived and registered at the hotel Chenier was surprised at not seeing his guests around the house. A few days later, they were still missing, and a search of room No. 31, that they had occupied, was made. There were found a suitcase and several small articles of clothing, but no sign of Chenier. The suitcase was put away in a store room for safe keeping, and it was only six months later that Chenier addressed and also a letter addressed to a person, care of General Delivery, Toronto.

Letter That Gave Clue

The letter was as follows:

"Dear Martha—Gray is in trouble again. I am afraid that he is suspected wherever we go. I had advised him to sell the automobile. We could get $300 for it. At the start I told him to sell the car because he was mixed up in the Small affair in Toronto. I think that that party doubled-crossed him, despite the risk that Gray ran in getting him out of Toronto. He received only about half of what he had been promised. They know that Gray cannot force their hands. Gray says that he will get more money when he can get into communication with a certain friend. I am sending you this letter addressed to General Delivery so that your husband will not see it. If he read it by chance it might spoil everything, because he hates Gray.

"We are at the Vigor Square Hotel. Do not write before you hear from me again. We will leave Montreal as soon as Gray can get some money. There are two suspicious looking men in the hotel office. I stop. I would like to know what they are saying to him.

(Signed) "Lillian Gray."

HARVESTERS LEAVE FOR THE WEST

The first Harvesters' excursion train left for the Canadian West today, and Belleville and district sent quite a representative detachment of harvesters to the prairie fields this year. A number of the boys were city bred, and are in great spirits in anticipation of the big time they will have in the wheat fields.

Crops in Western Canada are reported to be excellent this year, so that the harvesters will no doubt have a long season between stooking and the wind up of the threshing in the late autumn. The next excursion is on August 21st.

Woodchucks Sneeze to Death

Farmer Has New Method of Dealing With Marauders on His Land

(By Canadian Press)

Haverhill, Mass., Aug. 11.—Take it from Farmer Bill Evans, you've got to have pep, and if you can't get 'em one way you can another. And believe it or not, says Bill, he got eight woodchucks with pep.

The chucks were raising particular Cain on Bill's farm out on the Whittier Road, and they were canny woodchucks, too—susceptible neither to traps nor choice brands of deadly poison—and Bill was at his wit's end—for a time.

Then he conceived an idea and trekked for the pepper pot. Literally Farmer Bill peppered the immediate vicinity of the entrance to each woodchuck hole he could find. Result—eight woodchucks lying outside their bounds next morning with their necks broken.

They had sneezed themselves to death, according to Farmer Bill. Take it or leave it, believe it or not, but the holes are there to prove the story.

IRISH REBELS ARE HEMMED IN BY NAT. TROOPS

Ranks of the Insurgents

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, August 11.—A correspondent of The Daily Mail telegraphing last night from the headquarters of the National troops, says: "An expedition is landing to-night on Kerry Coast which will close all gaps and ham the rebels on Mallowfermoy-Michaelstown find, where they must make their last stand. There are many deserters from their ranks."

WHAT WAS THAT MOANING NOISE AT MIDNIGHT?

Was It a Ventriloquist in Quinte Hotel?

Evidently all the blood-curdling and awful moaning, sobbing and yelling heard in the Walmsley building on Wednesday night about 12 o'clock were not so terrible as might be expected according to the possibly exaggerated reports.

For more reasons than one, there is no need by further fears in this connection. A report is come the rounds that a mischievous ventriloquist, who was a guest at the Hotel Quinte, took this means of "throwing a scare" into the few, respectable Belleville citizens, who were not yet in their beds. There is no doubt that a good ventriloquist can certainly throw his voice a considerable distance, and make a monkey of members of the audience at a show, but that he could throw his voice so great a distance in the midnight air is doubted by some folk.

When asked for his opinion on this suggestion this morning, Police Sergeant Hanman did not hesitate to declare the idea to be ridiculous.

The officer also assured The Intelligencer that there was nothing worry about with regard to the "Walmsley Mystery" as the police already KNOW what caused the whole affair, but refuse to divulge the secret to a newspaperman at least. They stated, however, that it did not amount to anything, and that there is no cause for alarm.

Sergeant Hanman and Plainclothesman Truesch thoroughly investigated the affair on Thursday and are well satisfied with their investigation.

Summer waning, skies still raining and coal stocks, unfortunately, not gaining.

NO TRACE OF POISON IN CANADIAN CHEESE

Dominion Product, Which Caused Illness at Dover, Thought to Have Come Into Contact With Poisonous Substance After Arrival in England.

London, Aug. 11.—The analyst's report on the Canadian cheese which was recently alleged to have poisoned a number of Dover people, has been received by the Canadian Agriculture Department here. The analyst says he found no trace of arsenic, lead, zinc or other poison in the cheese complained of, and although he ate some of it himself he suffered no ill effects. There is no doubt that the cheese eaten was Canadian, in fact, it has been traced back to the factory which made it. Only cheese sold by one retail firm in Dover was the subject of complaint, however, and as this was only a small part of the shipment made by the factory which produced it, the opinion held is that the cheese which caused the trouble may have come in contact with some poisonous substance after arriving on this side. The British Ministry of Health is not even convinced that cheese was to blame. Although the effects produced in the victims of the poisoning were severe, none died and all are now reported to be convalescent. The analyst's report is regarded as very satisfactory by the Canadian authorities here, since an adverse finding would have seriously damaged the high reputation enjoyed by Canadian cheese in this market.

COAL SITUATION IS UNCHANGED

Local Dealers Anticipate Getting Fuel From the United States

As far as Belleville is concerned the coal situation remains unchanged but the dealers are hopeful that within a few days there will be developments that will prove beneficial. In conversation with some of the dealers the unanimous opinion was that it was not desirable to negotiate for Welsh coal unless it was absolutely necessary to do so. The prevailing idea is that within a few days a settlement will be effected of the bituminous coal strike in the United States and if such is the case that coal in enough-able quantities will be available for export to Canada. There are in reality no new to load coal for Canadian ports when this article of fuel can be secured. At Cleveland yesterday the conference of operators and miners got under way in the formulation of an agreement for ending the bituminous coal miners' strike. Except for a few scattered produces, Illinois and Indiana operations were not pressed, but those on hand gave the gathering what is deemed by the miners a "Four-Star" character.

After a conference of some the Credential Committee reported that about 20 per cent. of the tonnage in the central competitive field was represented.

Rang the Changes Once too Often

Plainclothesman Truaisch Brings Two Prisoners From Peterboro for Trial Here for Performing Short-Change Trick

Plainclothesman J. Truasch left this morning on the 8.20 a.m. train for Peterboro, and on his return he will bring two prisoners back to this city. He will arrive back here this afternoon.

The officer will be accompanied by Thomas Hughes, an alleged dope user and peddler, and Frank Taylor, a go-between. These men were arrested in Peterboro a week ago, and were held on a charge of vagrancy until the officers came for them.

The credit for the capture of these two slick gentlemen goes to Plainclothesman Truasch, who tracked them to Peterboro, and had the police of that city place them under arrest.

How They Work.

Dressed in the latest, and best, these slick gents stepped into Belleville one half holiday, recently, and began their pet trick-quick Wallingford scheme. They chose grocery stores in which to work their game, which is alleged to have been the old short change trick. On entering the store, the proprietor is asked if he would change a $50 or $100 bill. After he has handed over the change, (in smaller bills) the operator decides he does not need to change after all for his sufficient change to make the purchase, so they sometimes buy some trifling article. He then receives his large bill back, but in handing back the change to the proprietor, he slips out a bill, and thus short changes him.

In this way, three or four local business places were tricked, two of them for $10 each as they claim.

Officer Truasch immediately got busy, traced the pair to the Grand Trunk depot, and to Peterboro, where he had yet the trap for them; and which they fell into. Hughes and Taylor will appear in police court here on Saturday morning.

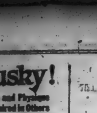

The pair will likely be separated, Hughes going to Ottawa, where he is said to be wanted for breaking parole, and Taylor here where the police got on their case first. The Peterboro police made the arrest before the men had time to get busy. The Belleville Investigation Department was unable to show a record against Taylor, but the Peterboro police have the record of a charge that he was acquainted with the interior of prisons.

Reports from his record, is an amateur operator. On September 29th, 1919, he was sentenced in Ontario on four charges of theft, receiving one account 18 months and on the other three months, the sentences to run concurrently. He went to the Ontario Reformatory, but on July 30, 1920, broke jail at Sudbury. He again fell into the toils of the police and received two years in Portsmouth penitentiary. On December 22 he was released on parole, but again then has violated the parole, and he will probably be re-sentenced. Officers authorities have asked that he be returned and the police are awaiting further word.

SCHOOLS FOR PARENTS

By Byron Stauffer, in The Toronto Star.

If we only had a school for parents! We have all sorts of night classes, summer schools and correspondence courses. All we need now is a training school for managing children. There are enough men's Bible classes and women's cooking schools, ladies' aid societies and women's clubs. But we lack classes in every community where fathers and mothers could be taught how to control their offspring—the most important thing of all.

The time is surely ripe for such a movement—everywhere. Witness the daily grind in our juvenile courts. And the cases which are dragged into the light of Judge Mott's courtroom are but the overpins, the excrescences of a lamentable situation which is hidden in far too large a proportion of our homes. Juvenile wilfulness seems to be rampant.

The first lesson in such a course would be the absolute necessity of harmony between husband and wife. That is the real beginning of child training. If fathers and mothers quarrel there comes what Judge Mott calls a divided loyalty on the part of the child. And this conflict in allegiance begets cynicism and kindred evils to the gravy verge of misanthropy. If a child discovers that one or both of his parents are immoral, there almost invariably follows a loss of faith in human nature in general. Then the lad or lassie falls an easy prey to the first temptation to do evil.

Out of every ten cases before the juvenile courts of America, at least seven come from homes in which parents chronically disagree, or in which there has been a departure from the narrow path of virtue. In Los Angeles it has been shown that two out of every three juvenile offenders are the children of divorced parents.

The second lesson might be devoted to the importance of a definite atmosphere in the home. A police official of long experience in handling juvenile offenders declares that non-churchgoing parents furnish by far the larger percentage of delinquent children. At any rate there must be clear-cut notions as to right and wrong, and the children must have the earnest example of their father and mother. It is astounding to learn from social workers how many parents leave all moral training to teachers and Sunday school workers. The Ten Commandments, practically demonstrated will save the home.

Another feature of such a school would be to teach parents how to say "No" to their offspring. "I simply cannot refuse my son anything," said the father of an eleven-year-old sonny boy. I am sure he was rather proud of his foolish assertion. "I am on the road three-quarters of the time, and when I get home I just feel like giving him anything he wants. He might have added, I am quite sure, that his wife did exactly the same in his absence, just because the dear lad's daddy was away and, bless his dear heart, he must therefore have somewhat more latitude than the average boy.

The very first condition to saying "No" to a child is to convince it of the parents' desire for its real and abiding happiness. If your child wants to run over to the neighbors' for an hour's play and you think it all right, let the assent be given cheerfully, not grudgingly. And when he returns, let him tell you of the fun he's had. Enter into his chat with enthusiasm.

If you feel, however, that you must refuse, give a reason for it. Let him see that the refusal is for his ultimate good.

And having said "No," stick to your guns! Let there be no whimperings and bawlings in the hope of your relenting.

So many parents need a course in chaperonage. To find out where your children are; to check up their statements, however much you trust them; to confirm their reports as to outlays of money; to get accurate information as to the character of their associates—all these precautions may save a child and a parent's peace of mind.

"I will come for you at ten-thirty" I heard a father tell his seventeen-year-old girl as she was leaving for a school dance. By her cheery "all right," I knew they had a perfect understanding. His neighbor had been too lax to go after his daughter at coming-home time or to at least see that she had proper attendance. He lived to rue his easy-going neglect to the last day of his life.

Engines and Cars await Grain Rush

Preparations upon a monumental scale for the marketward movement of Western grain crop have been made by the Canadian National Railways. Hundreds of giant locomotives and tens of thousands of freight cars have been put through the Railway's shops at Winnipeg and Transcona and stand ready for the greatest traction effort of the year. And of interest to you.

—The mobilization of equipment has been in progress since the beginning of the year, with the result that Canadian National Railways are now fully prepared, waiting, and even eager to get to the business of hauling grain. If all the engines ready for service were placed end to end, they would stretch out for a distance of more than ten miles; while if all the cars prepared since the first of the year for the movement of grain were placed end to end, they would stretch out approximately 750 miles.

The history of the preparation starts with the course on the part of the Management to ease the unemployment situation last Winter, and at the same time accomplish some useful purpose. The Management conceived the idea of putting into the maximum of efficiency all of the bad-order equipment on western lines. Full staffs of men were set to work in the two great shops and yards, and all ailing locomotives and freight cars headed in for treatment.

The locomotives ready to move the crop have an average length of 85 feet. Some conception of the enormous power represented in these iron steeds may be gleaned from the statement of fact that assuming them to be equal to the Mikado, capable of drawing 4,540 tons; the hauling capacity of these locomotives would be 121,320,320 bushels of wheat if all the engines were hauling capacity trains at the same time. In other words, the motive power prepared by the Canadian National for moving the crop, is equal to the task of hauling about one-third of the total crop of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba at once.

New York City Marine Officer Shoots Waiter in Street

New York, Aug. 10.—Fellowman David A. Owens, of the Marine Division, under fire from federal authorities to account for 46 cases of liquor missing from the police boat Hide Boy after a harbor raid, accomplished some liquor from some source Sunday night.

He went on a drunken rampage in crowded Fifty-fifth street between Eighth and Ninth avenues and after firing several shots at two negro ball boys in an apartment house, he shot and probably fatally wounded his aged waiter, who tried to pacify him and then sent a bullet into the forearm of Policeman Bernard J. Green.

With his right arm hanging limp, Green got out his pistol and shot Owens through the stomach, but this failed to stop the drunk crazed officer, who was still clicking his trigger on a "dud" cartridge when a citizen picked up Green's club and brought it down on Owens' head, knocking him unconscious.

At Roosevelt Hospital it was said last night that William J. Lane, 60 years old, of No. 324 West Fifty-fifth street, the waiter, probably would die. A bullet entered his right breast and passed out his back. Owens' wounds will result fatally, physicians said.

The police of the Marine Division declined to say last night whether Owens had been a member of the police party which seized one hundred cases of liquor from the rum-running launch, B.N.J., off Bonner Shoals early Friday morning. When the police harbor boat Blue Boy returned to harbor "A" er, rather after the prisoners captured in the raid had been arraigned in the Tombs court, customs officials decided only that thirty-five cases of the liquor were to be found in police custody. The incident resulted in a letter from United States District Attorney William Hayward, to Police Commissioner Enright, calling upon the police to return the liquor, which was still missing last night.

It could only be learned that Owens worked on harbor craft from 6 o'clock in the morning until 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when apparently he was relieved from duty. Owens was unable to talk at Roosevelt Hospital late last night, although a police surgeon and members of the homicide squad were prepared to take any ante-mortem statement he might make.

Several hundred persons were sitting on stoops and walking in West Fifty-fifth street when Owens' rampage began. He first attempted to enter the Francis Restaurant, a French table d'hote, at number 319 West Fifty-fifth, street, but the proprietor, noticing that the man was obviously under the influence of liquor, and inclined to be harsh, refused to admit him.

"He became abusive and talkative and aroused diners in the restaurant, but I finally got him out and slammed the door in his face," Francis told detectives later.

Angered at this, Owens, who wore a dark suit and cap, lunged up the steps from the restaurant to the sidewalk, but soon went back and kicked on the closed door several times, according to witnesses. When it seemed evident to him that he was not going to get in, he reeled again to the sidewalk and plunged through a group of young boys playing in the street, knocking one or two of them down as he went.

Only a few persons had noticed him up to this time. But the whole block was aroused a few moments later when he demanded to know who wanted to fight. Spying two uniformed negro ball boys standing in front of the Stanwood Apartments, Owens walked over to them. They were Marcus Collander, of No. 251 West 46th street, the elevator operator, and Alexander Burnham of No. 34 West 31st street, the telephone operator.

"Want to fight?" Owens asked the negroes. "I can lick anyone in the block, and I'm going to start now."

He lurched at one of the negroes, who parried the blow. And then both ball boys fled into the apartment house. Owens pursued. Inside he clinched with Burnham who soon freed himself and ducked for cover behind the desk. Collander sought safety from the intruder in the elevator.

As Owens started to leave the building, one of the negroes poked his head out of his hiding place and the policeman turned. Drawing his pistol, he fired a shot which imbedded itself in the wall in the hallway. As he stood in the front door of the apartment house he fired another shot. At this, women screamed and children fled into basement areaways. The cry of "Someone is shooting" was taken up through the block.

Owens backed into the street, pistol in hand, and started to walk down the middle of the street toward Ninth avenue. Half way down the block he reeled into the old waiter, Lane, who had left his home opposite the Stanwood just as the first shot rang out. Lane patted Owens gently on the shoulder and attempted to take the pistol from the police officer. They walked side by side, while persons in the block watched from cover and from windows.

They could see Lane trying to persuade Owens to give him the pistol. The waiter's head almost met that of the second officer when suddenly Owens pushed the old man away from him.

"You want to fight, too," he cried. "You'll get it."

With no more warning than the raising of his arm he fired at the waiter, who sank moaning to the sidewalk, a door or two away from his own home. The bullet entered his right breast and passed through his frail body.

While Owens was swaying unsteadily over the body of his fallen victim, whose only interest in the affair was to protect other persons in the block from the fire of a drunken man on a rampage, Frank J. Bray, a taxi driver, of No. 375 Eighth avenue, who was waiting for a fare to come out of the Dearborn Apartments, in front of which Lucie lay, started his car and drove over to Ninth avenue, summoning Policeman Green, who had just reached the southeast corner.

Told that Owens had a pistol Green made his way cautiously and took cover behind a taxicab standing in the block. His plan, he said later, was to put Owens out of business with his night stick.

He said he did not want to shoot the man unless absolutely necessary in the fear that, a bullet might go wild and strike persons in the crowd of curious people closing in on the scene from both ends of the block. And then he did not want to kill anyway.

Green waited for an opportune moment, and advanced toward Owens who was sputtering inarticulately and waving his pistol menacingly. With a rush Green ran forward, his night-stick poised for the blow that would put an end to his quarry's rampage. Instead, Owens, turning quickly, saw the running policeman, shouted an oath, and fired a shot which sent Green's night-stick flying out of his hand. The bullet pierced Green's right forearm.

Although painfully wounded, Green closed in, and with his right arm hanging limp, reached around to his right side holster and crippled his service pistol. While Owens was taking aim to shoot again Green dropped him with a bullet in the stomach. Owens rose on an elbow and attempted to shoot again, but his pistol either misfired or was empty, and the hammer clicked harmlessly.

At this point a youth, about 18 years old, who lost himself in the crowd later, picked up Green's night stick and brought it down with a crushing blood upon Owens' head. Green gave way to the pain and loss of blood he had suffered and sat on the curbstone in a partial faint.

He quickly pulled himself together and with the aid of others and a volunteer taxicab driver took Owens and Lucie to Roosevelt Hospital, while hundreds of persons attracted from the adjacent streets and Broadway swarmed about to hear of the shooting from volunteer narrators who had remained out of sight during the mix-up.

Music at the National Exhibition

Music has always been something of a factor at the Canadian National Exhibitions, but until recent years there has been no co-ordinated effort. The present year will mark the beginning of a new era in this direction by the greatest of annual fairs, for President John G. Kent has announced that hereafter Music Day is to be as were to be on of the "ember days" of the institution. For years past we have had Stockholders Day, Manufacturers Day, Educationists Day, Labor Day, American Visitors Day, and so in. At last Music is to have specific recognition of a similar character.

This is a sign of the times; for it is abundantly clear that the art is taken much more seriously now than it was. Of course, musical exhibits have always played a very considerable part in the displays of manufactured articles; but I can remember a time when the piano exhibitors were regarded by the general public as a nuisance They used to hire piano pounders to demonstrate with instrument could make the most noise and the competitive efforts produced a terrible cacophony.

Finally it was found necessary to put them out of the old Manufacturers' Building and give them an annex all to themselves. This musical annex used to be visited for purposes of amusement by those who could stand the din; but few remained for more than five minutes. The irony of the music trades in their attitude towards the arc of music was characteristic of the public sentiment of the time. But presently the commercial firms identified with music awoke to the fact that by their own interests they should try to make music charming and sympathetic, rather than ridiculous, and a gradual improvement ensued.

Two or three years ago the exhibitors interested in the phonographic devices undertook the step of conducting musical competitions for solo voices. It meant nothing to them in the selling of machines and records, but it served to place them before the public as men eager to do something for music as an art; and they had the co-operation of some of the most eminent Canadian musicians and adjudicators. The idea took so well that last year it got quite out of hand. The accommodations provided for the contests became quite inadequate for the crowds which wished to hear the trials and it became clear that the competitions must become a part of the Exhibition's permanent and official activities.

Owing to the erection of new structures, the President and Directors have found themselves able to place at the disposal of the Canadian Bureau for the Advancement of Music, which has now taken charge of the competitions, the former Dairy Building which has a special advantages in that it was originally and originally constructed as an auditorium for lectures on scientific dairying and for an ideal place for musical trials. The Bureau in question is "an association of, those interested in the musical advancement of Canada through the development of music in the home, church and school." Its Honorary President is Mr. H. A. Fricker, Conductor of the Mendelssohn Choir, and the one who give were to many of its artistic plans is Dr. A. S. Vogt, Managing Director of the Toronto Conservatory of Music. It embraces in its membership, not only the commercial leaders of the music trades of Canada, but many of the leading musicians and teachers as well.

The competitions which have been placed under the management of this Bureau are by no means limited in scope, and candidates from all parts of Canada will be welcomed. They will be classified as follows:—

Vocal Competitions

Soprano, Contralto, Tenor and Bass.

Piano Competitions

Class A. Open

Class B. Up to 16 years of age

Class C. Up to 12 years of age.

Violin Competitions

Class A. Open.

Class B. Up to 16 years of age

Class C. Up to 12 years of age.

Prizes

Gold, Silver and Bronze Medals shall be awarded to the prize winners in each class and a scholarship of $100.00 to the outstanding competitor in each department, that is, one Vocal, one Piano and one Violin Scholarship.

The following musical institutions have agreed to supply adjudicators:

Toronto Conservatory of Music

London Conservatory of Music

Hamilton Conservatory of Music

A very important point is that all selections must be memorized. The singer or Instrumentalist who appears with music, as has been customary in past competitions, is thus automatically disqualified. The test pieces selected by the judges are as follows:—

Soprano (1) "A Spirit Flower" Campbell Tipton (Schirmer)

(2) "Pastorale" (Novello)

Contralto (1) "A Blood-Red Ring Hung 'round the Moon" Coleridge-Taylor

(2) "The Open Road" Brancombe (Schmidt)

Barlone and Bass (1) "Blow, Blow, thou Winter Wind" Sergeant

(2) "Galloping Dick" P. E. Fletcher (Novello)

Note: Each competitor will perform Test Piece (1). The Adjudicators will then select competitors to perform Test Piece (2).

NEVER AGAIN.

I read and read till I am dazed and confused about what's the matter with us. The College of Physicians and Surgeons, the Chiropractors, the Osteopaths, the Christian Scientists, the Spiritists, plain fakers and voodoo artists, all of them hasten to tell us what is wrong with us.

It's our heads. It isn't our bones! It is our liver. Our liver is all right! But—put your faith in Gallagher and he will pull you through.

There is nothing the matter with this generation but the book worm.

Let us study the meet and lowly earth worm for a moment. Do you realize that were it not for worms we would all starve to death inside of seven years? Earth worms renew the youth of this old world every day and without them the grass would wither, the trees would shrivel, the streams disappear, and this planet would roll around the sun a dead and unburied thing.

It would take the conceit out of us considerably if we realized how very much we depended for our existence on worms. We talk about the horny-handed sons of toil. It is to laugh. We sing about the ploughman. The ploughman, is it? The earth worms turn over more soil in one minute than all the ploughs in the universe turn over in a year.

Yesterday Bar Ann said I was a worm. It was flattered. Had she called me a lion or a grizzly I would have suspected sarcasm. Had she said I was a snake—but, no—she said I was a worm. I ain't the only one—ask by a jugful.

But there be worms and worms. Young ladies are advised to institute enquiries as to whether or not there is insanity in his family, if he is talkacrular, if his bones are O. K., if he is color blind, if he walks in his sleep, etc. What good is that? If I were a young girl and a gent wanted to marry me I would nail him before an expert and demand to know:

"Has this fellow got any book worms?"

I would have the X-rays turned on him and I wouldn't marry him if he was the only man on earth if he had book worms.

I would chance the fact that his grandfather was hanged and his Aunt Em—is in the salvum. He might only have one good lung and a fleeting kidney. Lots of men like that have made good, but if he had book worms it's all off.

There is no such thing as a lazy man. He is sick. What's the matter with him then? He's got book worms. If you have no book worms you can't be idle. Hopes won't hold you away from your work. You never look at the clock. When the whistle blows or quitting time you are disappointed. When you go home you want to tinker at something till bedtime, and you never go to bed only to sleep. That is what a bed is for! To bed in? And a sofa a bed is for? To loaf in? To roll over in? To pray for morning? And when morning comes whine because it isn't bedtime. Some folks live in bed. Their chamber is their lair, their temple, their sanctuary, their hollow log, their hole in the wall. It has got so that some folks actually want to die in bed. All that it's good for in too many cases is a place to hatch book worms in. And I know a gent who eats in bed. He has book worms in his head.

If the earth worm is the chiefest blessing of the universe, the book worm is the greatest curse. Ninety-nine out of every hundred people are suffering from—the book worm. Oh, most lame and impotent conclusion!

The trouble with the modern doctor is that the book worm is beneath his notice. He simply won't treat you for book worms. We have royal commissions. I would like to have a commission appointed to enquire into the book worm question with power to re-ray witnesses. I repeat that there is no such thing as a lazy man. I am surprised at people who would take pleads from an age to renew their youth. If you want to be young again—if you wish to recover your facilties, destroy your book worms. They are praying on your vitality and on your every energy.

The good old Queen Victoria was much distressed because the sparrows had got into the beautiful Crystal Palace and was considering things. So she consulted her true and trusted friend, the Iron Duke. And he said "Turn in a sparrow hawk!"

If the doctors are any good they will send in a bug that will get after the book worm.

And the world will go very well then.

THE CASUALTIES OF PEACE.

"Peace hath victories no less renowned than war." Thus wrote Milton and he might have added that peace has her calamities no less tragic and horrible than war. During the last few days the news of a stupendous calamity in the shape of a typhoon has come from China involving the loss of 40,000 human lives. Such a wholesale wiping out of the lives of men, women and children without a moment's warning staggers the imagination and baffles the mind that attempts to make it conform with a Divine order of things. In the far-off antediluvian days we are told that the earth was a very wicked place and that the Great Flood was sent as a punishment upon the people. This might well have been the case, and the Chinese people may regard this flood caused by the typhoon as a visitation of divine wrath.

Scientists, however, have a very simple explanation of both the Great Flood and the recent local deluge that swept away 50,000 human beings in China. They will tell us that the deluge for which Noah prepared his ark was due to some great upheaval in the sea, or to a change in the conformation of the earth's surface. As for the typhoon, there is nothing miraculous about such a visitation in tropical and sub-tropical regions. We in this country—at least, in the West—know what cyclones are, and we generally regard them as part of the natural order of things. When we are told that the diameter of rotation of a typhoon is from two to five hundred miles, and that the velocity of the wind is sometimes as much as 200 to 300 miles an hour, we cease to wonder at the casualties that lie in its wake. But we do not cease to wonder at the strange Providence that presides over this planet. We have come to the point where it was not the Great War which smote the world in 1914 and swept away millions of lives within a few months—was that not a stupendous psychological typhoon that all the art and wit of mankind could not have prevented?

These are questions we might leave for the theologians and the scientists to settle between them. They are real live questions to many thoughtful people. Our fathers and mothers were not afraid to tackle them, though they retired baffled for the most part from the fray. We need more of that deeper and larger faith that comes from "honest doubt." If Christianity is to survive the test of time and human vicissitudes.

The kindly and deeply religious poet Cowper was no blind believer in the Divine order. He had his periods of deep dejection and despair, but he rose from them to write.

> God moves in a mysterious way
> His wonders to perform,
> He plants His footsteps in the sea,
> And rides upon the storm.

MERCY FOR THE MERCILESS.

It is a peculiar trait of human nature that even the most bloodthirsty and callous assassin has his quota of sympathizers who will appeal to the law for mercy and consideration on his behalf. The two murderers who paid the full penalty on the scaffold yesterday for having heartlessly done to death Sir Henry Wilson were scarcely subjects for special leniency on the part of the custodians of law and order. They had absolutely no consideration for their victim whom they way-laid in open daylight when he least expected and were totally unprepared for such an attack. They poured rectal after round of bullets into his defenceless body and then fled, firing indiscriminately upon their pursuers.

There may be some good arguments against capital punishment, but for such a crime as this there is surely only one penalty, and it is difficult to conceive the type of mind that could for a moment condone it.

We are told that a crowd of about fifty Irish men and women assembled outside the jail an hour before the execution and sang hymns and prayed for the souls of the condemned men. This was a more reasonable and proper thing to do, for these men needed all the spiritual support that could be humanly given to them. It is a pity that it came too late. Had they received spiritual and moral guidance earlier in their careers they might have been saved from such an end.

RANEY AND THE RACE TRACKS.

While Hon. W. E. Raney declares the Drury Government to be opposed to racetrack gambling, it is somewhat astonishing to reflect that the same Government got a rake-off of about $175,000 from the last race meeting at Windsor and the track owners claim they made nothing. The issue does not loom very large in federal circles; it is pretty well known that the present Government, or those who dominate it do not hold the same attitude as members of the Drury Cabinet, and in the recent session a resolution by W. C. Good, Progressive member for Brant, which would have placed the House on record as favoring amendment of the Criminal Code to ban track betting, did not even come up for discussion. But there is much comment on the apparent inconsistency of the provincial administration, a sample of which may be quoted from a staunch Liberal paper. In the Forest Free Press, H. J. Pettypiece, ex-M.P.P., writes:

"The province of Ontario has enacted some queer laws recently. At the races held in Forest last week two men who were selling pools on the races were apprehended by the provincial police, taken before the police magistrate and heavily fined. On the same day at the races in Windsor the pool sellers rug through bets to the amount of some $50,000, of which $15,000 went to the Government as a rake-off for the pool-selling privilege. Betting on horse races is all wrong when a little fellow does it, but if done on a large scale and the proceeds divided with the government, it is all right. If you want to gamble, do it big and deal with the authorities.

That peculiar moaning noise which was heard the other evening on Bridge street is attributed by some profane person to one or several of our city fathers, contemplating the probable result of the next civic election.

HERE AND THERE

GERMANS SENT NO DELEGATE.

That somewhat serious but, in theory at least, highly commendable "Intellectual Committee of the League of Nations" has met at Geneva, Switzerland, and begun its work. Of the twenty members, eleven were present, with American intellect worthily represented by George Ellery Hale, of the Mount Wilson Observatory. The lone absentee was Dr. Einstein, the relativity man, and had his emaginative genius was that he was too busy with his work in the University of Berlin to attend. That was a pretty clear intimation that in his opinion the achievements of the committee were likely to be of something less than supreme importance.

Even with Dr. Einstein missing the gathering was distinguished. Mme. Curie was there, and Professor Gilbert Murray, and Mlle. Bonnevis, a learned lady from Norway, whose name nettle we all doubtless ought to be informed, though some of us are not, and the variously eminent and variously estimated Professor Bergson.

The French philosopher was elected Chairman of the committee, and that is at least a guarantee that its proceedings will be interesting. How much will be accomplished toward the blessed object of intellectual co-operation between Wine Ones all over the world remains to be demonstrated. The object is noble, and everybody will hope for its attainment.—Montreal Gazette.

HOWLERS FROM THE WEST

"The most important breeds of cattle are Holsteins and Phillstines," was one of the many strange and weird answers turned in during a recent examination of Grade VIII. pupils held in Yorkton, Sask. Another pupil had a grand idea of the granting of the franchise to women by declaring: "The greatest reform of the 19th century is women's vote, "if they know how to use them." Confusion on the subject of naval and land battles resulted in this one: "At Vimy Ridge the navy did great fighting."

The following are some of the peculiar answers that the inspectors had to deal with:

If you have adenoids rub them with goose oil and tie a rag around them.

Sir Walter Scott was a member of parliament in the South Sea Bubble.

John Wesley was right about the slave trade.

George Stephenson invented engines to save boot leather.

Sir Walter Scott was with the "Armada." He was a great sailor.

HESPER'S RETURN TO ENGLAND.

"The cliffs of Dover rising white
Above the tossing of the sea
Illumined all my heart with light,
For they meant home to me.

"Beyond the gleaming of the bay,
The rolling uplands of the downs
Hid shining cities where, sheltered, lay
The little English towns.

"Oh, would it all seem just as fair
And would the lanes be just as green
As when are were so happy there—
And I was but a girl again?"

Letters from Livingstone

When David Livingstone was in Africa in 1851, he wrote to his brother Charles, then in the United States. Some of these letters are published in the July Atlantic Monthly. Extracts from them are given to the American Board of Foreign Missions by Livingstone's nephew, now living at Denver. Here are some extracts from the letters:—

"On the fourth day we came to the trail of a rhinoceros; and this being one of the animals which cannot live without water, we put the saddle on the track, and in the afternoon the perishing animals reached the river Makabi."

"After having dragged you through marshes, reeds, and rivers, I come back to the topic on which I feel most interested—the poor degraded fragments of humanity. Who will pity them if the Christian does not? They are quite black, their muscular system is largely developed, deepchested, their upper extremities are so powerful they make their light canoes cut through the water as our regatta people do at home. They are as warlike, but trust to the defences their deep rivers afford.

* * *

"They are much more ingenious as smiths, basket-makers, potters, and canoe-makers than any of the Southern tribes. The Banyeri or Balol smelt large quantities of iron ore, and make very neat spears, needles, etc. I have the vanity to believe myself, for an untaught Jack-of-all-trades, a pretty fair smith; but I could not hold a candle to them in spear-making, sheep- and ox-bells, etc."

"The country is densely populated, and the people, having generally enough food, may attend if they will to instruction. The Supreme Being is called Nyampi, or Betia. In swearing to a person having died, they say 'he was lifted by Nyampi,' or 'by the Father.' They have all kinds of divination, and prayers, too.

"I have visited a great many tribes which never have enjoyed any intercourse with missionaries either directly or indirectly, and never met a single individual, unaware of the existence of the Creator and Governor of all things. All understand the nature of sin—and the expressions made use of by all imply the belief in the existence of a future state of being. In any ever existed who had no knowledge of the existence of God, sin, and futurity, it is remarkable that no instance should now remain. Intelligent old men with whom I have conversed ridicule the idea of their ever having been destitute of the knowledge of God, and openly charge their parents and fables handed down from time immemorial in proof."

"My better half has enjoyed pretty good health in this long and wearisome trip. Thomas had the fever three times. We had another son born to us on the Banks of the Zouzs, and his mother insists on calling him Charles. If it had been left to me, I should have him called Zouzs; so you need not thank me very fiercely for the honor thrust upon you. Only be decently grateful —that's all.

"My poor wife and family sailed from Tuticorin on April 23, and I am now like the worthy sparrows on the housetop to whom we used to sing as 'companionless.' My heart is very sore. I shall never see my children again—they will grow out of my knowledge and with all forget me. But I grudge Him nothing who died for me. My tears flow, but He knows that my heart grudges Him nothing of all that I have.

"I fear for my children. The people of England will pooh children by fawning and flattering, if their fathers happen to be popular. My children will be brought before our friends at home rather more prominently than it ought, I fear silly people will spoil my youngsters, make them take that stand on the top of my popularity, small though it be, instead of trying to work out a place and a name for themselves by their own industry. Rearing all our precious children in England begat races of wild asses."

THE LIGHTER SIDE WIT AND HUMOR

Lot decided to confide.

"Well, sir, the other boys say that I am a sofly because I'm—and he gulped hard—twin twins with a girl!"

Lord Dabbington was instructing a new coloured servant in his duties, adding, "Now Zeke, when I ring for you in the morning I mean by saying, 'My lord, what will you have?' "

A few hours afterward during execution in submitting the servant, his lordship was astonished with the following: "My Gawd, what does you want now?"

HADN'T LOST HIS ACCENT, BUT

A Scotsman who landed in Canada inquired of a coal black negro for direction. It happened that the Scotsman was born in the Highland district of Scotland and lived there most of his life.

"Hey, mon," said the Scotsman, "can ye tell me whaur I'll find the kirk?"

The darky pointed with his arm. "Go right up to you wee house and turn to yer right and gang up the hill," said he.

The visiting Scot looked at him in horror. "Am sure ye true Scotland man!" he asked.

"Reckit ye are," said the darky "Aberdeen's me home."

"And how long have ye been here?"

"Above two year."

"Lord save us and preserve us," said the new arrival. "Whaur kin I get the best for, Sangle?"

NOT POPULAR

Little George Goode was standing apart from all the other happy boys, who were playing as only happy boys can.

"What's the matter, sonny?" asked a passerby. "Why don't you play with the rest of the boys?"

"They don't want me to play with 'em," replied the lonely boy bitterly.

"Why? Have you fought with the other boys don't want you to play with them?" the stranger persisted.

"They've found out something about me," the lad answered, trying hard to keep back the tears.

"Was it something bad?"

"They think so. But I can't help it," the boy defended himself.

"Dear me, you've all about it," he was told. "Maybe I can help you. What you can't help?"

"Well, tell me, anyway."

The boy hesitated for a moment,

AN INGENIOUS RETORT

Denison was a splendidly built fellow, but to the vicar's great regret he was partial—distinctly partial—to strong drink.

The vicar met him one morning and decided to try once more to get the big fellow to reform.

"I wish, Jim," the vicar remarked, "that I could persuade you to drink nothing but water for six months."

"Water, sir!" was the startled exclamation of the reprobate. "Why, Jarem's touch it, sir! The doctor told me I have got an iron constitution, and I am afraid to touch water for fear of rusting it."

MAY BE SEVENTH NEW ENGLAND STATE

Presque Isle, Me., Aug. 11.—(By Canadian Press)—Aroostook County wants to save connections with the State of Maine and become the seventh New England State. The idea has taken hold of the populace "hard" and the leaders of the movement are thoroughly sincere.

Aroostook in the northeastern part of Maine and with 6,408 square miles constitutes about a third of the State's area. Since 1905 the State has grown more than 30 per cent. in population and 30% per cent. in valuation. It is one of the most important agricultural areas in the United States and the leading potato section of the world.

The long distance of the State capital, Augusta, is one of the arguments set forth.

DRUNK BUT NOT DRESSED UP

St. Catharines, Ont., Aug. 9—Joseph Lyan, a Montreal man, used a novel excuse for driving a car while intoxicated. He was caught by policemen driving in here last Saturday, Sweden and Denmark, 263, and Hebrew other than Polish, 215 night, clad in his pyjamas.

Lyan, who engaged a lawyer to fight his case, admitted on the witness stand that he had been drinking Monday night. After going to his room he remembered he had left his auto on the street beside the hotel. He decided to go down and run it in.

"I'll admit I was intoxicated, but I was perfectly able to handle a car" said Lyan. "I am afraid there is nothing for me to do but impose the usual penalty, seven days in jail," said the magistrate.

Woman's Sphere

LIGHT

The night has a thousand eyes,

Yet the light of the bright world dies

The mind has a thousand eyes,
And the heart but one;
Yet the light of a whole life dies
When love is done.

THESE WOMEN WOULD SACRIFICE COMFORT TO VANITY

Chicago, Aug. 9—Announcement had been made that at a special clinic of the National Association of Chiropodists yesterday, a number of years would submit to the amputation of their fifth, or little, toes. Ostensibly, the idea was to do away with annoying corns, but the real reason was to enable them to crowd their feet into smaller shoes.

However, there was no general amputation. Dr. John Kenniston, of Chicago, a chiropodist for thirty years, arose at the opening session and sounded a solemn warning against sacrificing the little toe.

Cutting off your little toes will leave the fourth too unprotected," he said. "Nature has provided the little toe with an especially tough skin to protect it, but when it is cut away it leaves the tender mate next to it unprotected and you are certain to have much trouble.

"Furthermore, with the loss of the little toe you will lose your balance and will limp the rest of your life and undermine your health."

CAUGHT IN "TRAP"

"Coincidence" is the only word that aptly describes an unusual happening in Hamilton recently.

Plain clothesmen were hot on the trail of suspicious characters in the vicinity of Dundurn Park and it was necessary to keep a fence. Unknown to one of the officers a pair of handcuffs became detached from their usual carrying place at his hip and hung on the fence, a Grand Trunk Railway employee sought the police station with the request that the hardware be removed from his wrist. He stated that while on his way to join one of the railway night shifts the glittering steel caught his eye. Curious, he fitted semi-circles to his wrist, and snap—he was a prisoner. He had to go about his nightly duties with the bracelets dangling from his hand.

MINOR HOLY ORDERS FOR AMERICAN WOMEN

Subject Will Be Introduced at Episcopal Convention In Portland

New York, Aug. 11.—(By Canadian Press)—Holy orders for women will be put before the coming convention of the Episcopal Church in Portland, Ore., according to reports published here. It has been felt for some time that the Order of Deaconess was not clearly enough defined from the province now covered by the sisterhoods, and a commission was named at the General Convention in 1919 to present a report to the convention.

"Minor orders," only are contemplated, and the report makes this clear in the proviso that nothing in proposed canon shall be held to authorize the opening of the priesthood to women, but instead, to provide an order similar to the primitive Order of Deaconess as found in the Epistle of St. Paul and in the Acts of the Holy Apostles."

It is expected that this report will create more furore than a similar one passed at the Lambeth Conference in London in 1920. The fear is expressed that the canon will mean the opening wedge to the priesthood for women.

By the proposed canon, a woman will undergo the same examination and be subject to the same conditions set for men looking to deacon's orders. She must be certified by twelve persons in good standing in he diocese before even being accepted as a postulant and her papers must be signed by the Standing Committee of the diocese prior to her acceptance by the Bishop. The canons also set the literary attainments she must have.

PARIS HAS BECOME EUROPEAN RENO

Publication of Divorce Proceedings Is Banned in French Newspapers

Paris, Aug. 11.—The increasing number of divorces obtained in Paris by prominent foreigners seeking relief from matrimonial infelicity has led to many enquiries as to why the French capital apparently has become such an European Reno for discontented spouses.

The chief magnet appears to lie in the fact that divorce proceedings may be brought in French courts with almost ease and completed without even the formality of appearance in person, aware, at least through the medium of French newspapers, that there has been the slightest ripple on the sea of domesticity. Publication of such proceedings by native newspapers is a criminal offense, on the ground of lowering public morals. The newspapers may print the names of those involved if they can obtain them, and the fact that divorce has been granted, but nothing else.

Provisional decrees usually may be obtained in France in from one to three months. The complainant must establish residence in France, but declaration that he intends to stay indefinitely is held to be sufficient, or the inclusion of a year's lease on an apartment among his papers. The second essential condition is that the defendant must appear before the court in person, or through a counsel if he is a resident of France. But if the defendant lives outside the country notice must be given through the State Department.

Adultery, conviction of felony criminality, physical and mental violence, and mental anguish are included among the grounds of divorce in France. Divorced persons are not allowed to remarry in France within ten months.

NEW MOVEMENT IN INDIA

Khalifat Movement Seeks Freeing of Mohammedans From Christian Rule

Bombay, Aug. 11.—The Khalifat movement in India which, several months ago, brought about a revulsion of the Bevrey family, had a large part in the movement toward Indian home rule. Hindus, seeking Mohammedan support for the Swadeshi agitation for self-government, have seen fit to support the Khalifat movement in return.

The Khalifat movement, unlike Swadeshi, is wholly Mohammedan in its aims. Originally it was a protest against the peace terms which the Allies offered to Turkey at the close of the war, it seeks the restoration of the Khalif's temporal power and the freeing of Mohammedans from Christian rule. The claim regarding the Khalifat calls for leaving the Turkish Empire as it was at the outbreak of the war, except that, although the allegations of Turkish misrule are not admitted, the non-Turkish nationalities may, if they so desire, be granted autonomous government within the empire.

The minimum demand was stated by a deputation to the Viceroy in 1920 as follows:

"Arabia, as delimited by Moslem authorities, and the Holy Places of Islam must remain under the control of the Khalif, full guarantees being taken, consistently with the dignity of a sovereign state, for genuine Arab self-government, should the Arabs desire it. We advisedly use the word 'genuine' because the present arrangement is thoroughly distrusted by the overwhelming majority of indigenous Moslem opinion.

"Islam has ever associated temporal power with the Khalifat. We therefore consider that to make the Khalif a mere puppet would add insult to injury and would only be understood by Indian Moslems as a betrayal of them to them by a combination of Christian powers."

In India the Khalifat movement has identified itself with the All-India Moslem League, which has been in existence since 1906. During recent years the League and the Indian National Congress have, to a large extent, joined forces. The session of the League is now a pale shadow of the session of the Congress and the resolutions coincide with those of the Congress, except that there is greater emphasis on the Khalifat question.

Although the Mohammedan population of India is only about seventy million, or less than one-fourth of the total population, the Mohammedans exert a much greater political influence than their number would warrant.

The Daily Recipe

CORN CHOWDER
BY BERTHA E. SHAPLEIGH
Cooking Authority for N E A Service and Columbia University.

1 quart green corn cut from cob or 1 pint canned corn
1 quart thinly sliced potatoes
½ cup bacon or clear fat pork (cut in dice)
2 onions thinly sliced
2 tablespoons flour
2 teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon pepper
1 quart water
1 pint milk
2 crackers

Try out the bacon or pork in a kettle and in it fry the onions for a few minutes, being careful that they do not brown.

Then put in a layer of potatoes and a layer of corn, sprinkle over these part of the flour, salt and pepper. Repeat until the material is all used.

Cover with the water and cook until potatoes are soft. Add milk, bring to boiling point, add crackers and serve when the crackers are soft. Add more salt and pepper if desired.

Corn chowder is a "one kettle" dish and is sufficient for lunch or supper as the main dish. Chowders are always better the second day reheated.

Music and Drama

"BOUGHT AND PAID FOR" IS FINELY PRESENTED WITH AGNES AYRES AND JACK HOLT

Should a wife accept lavish gifts from her husband as peace offerings after misbehavior on his part?

Can a husband, addicted to drink, hope to retain his wife's love after ignoring that he bought and paid for her and that she is his by virtue of such a procedure?

Can a wife's love and self respect be bought by a man as one may buy a dog or some other domestic pet?

These questions constitute several of the vital problems in "Bought and Paid For," featuring Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt, which William De Mille has translated to the screen as a Paramount picture, from the famous stage success by George Broadhurst. The picture was shown to a delighted audience at Griffin's last night.

In this story the husband, a millionaire, marries a working girl and lavishes upon her costly gifts. For a while they are happy, then the husband rep-eatedly comes home drunk. His wife, a woman of fine sensibilities is horrified.

At last the climax comes, when she refuses to kiss him, he insults her by saying that he has bought her and paid for her, and therefore, owns her. This causes a breach. Then ensuing events and the dramatic resolution make the picture highly enjoyable. Jack Holt and Agnes Ayres, the featured stars, play the featured roles with artistic effect. It is well worth seeing.

An amusing Century comedy, an interesting Travelogue, and the latest chapter of the historical play, "With Stanley in Africa" also proved entertaining.

THE BANDBOX

By
Louis Joseph Vance

"You remember that, don't you?"

"Perhaps I do," she admitted unwillingly.

"And you don't pretend you'd've fessed such a prospect in order to clear me?"

Again she had no answer for him. He turned up the room to the windows and back.

"I didn't think," he said slowly, stopping before her—"I couldn't have thought it would be, so heartless, so self-centred. . . !"

She rose suddenly and put a pleading hand upon his arm, standing very near him in all her loveliness.

"Say thoughtless, Staff," she said quietly; "I didn't mean it."

"That's hard to credit," he replied steadily, "when I'm haunted by the memory of the line you told me—to save yourself a few dollars honestly due the country that has made you a rich woman to gain for yourself a few paltry columns of cheap, sensational newspaper advertising of fine-feathered me, the man you pretend to care for—"

"Hold on, Staff!" the woman interrupted harshly.

He moved away. Her arm dropped back to her side. She eyed him a moment with eyes hard and unfriendly. "We've said about enough," she continued.

"You're not prepared to deny that I've done the possibilities I named when you lied to me and made me your dupe and cat's-paw?"

"I'm not prepared to argue the matter with you," she flung back at him, "nor to hold myself answerable to you for any thing I may choose to say or do."

He bowed ceremoniously.

"I think that's all," he said pleasantly. "It is," she agreed crisply; then in a lighter tone she added: "There remains for me only to take my blue dishes and go."

As she spoke she moved over to the corner where the bandbox lay indicated on the unclaimed shelf. As she bent over it, Staff abstractedly took and lighted another cigarette.

"What can you undo it?" he heard the woman ask.

Staff looked round in surprise. "If I haven't touched the thing since it was brought in—beyond kicking it out of the way."

"The string's off—it's been opened!" Alison's voice was trembling with excitement. She straightened up, holding the box in both hands, and came hastily over to the table beside which he was standing "You see?" she said breathlessly, putting it down.

"The string was on it when I saw it last," he told her blankly. . . .

Then the memory recurred of the man who had passed him at the door—the man who, he suspected, had forced an entrance to his rooms. . . .

Alison was plucking nervously at the cover without lifting it. . .

"Why don't you look?" he demanded, irritated.

"I—I'm afraid," she said in a broken voice.

Nevertheless, she removed the cover.

For a solid, silent minute both stared, stupefied. The last they knew so well—the big black hat with its willow plume and buckle of brilliants—had vanished. In its place they saw the tumbled wreckage of what had once been another hat distinctly: wisps of straw dyed purple, fragments of feathers, bits of violet-coloured ribbon and silk which, mixed with wads and shreds of white tissue-paper, filled the box to brimming.

Staff thrust a hand in his pocket and produced the knot of violet ribbon. It matched exactly the torn ribbon in the box.

"So that," he murmured—"that's where this came from!"

Alison paid no attention. Of a sudden she began digging furiously in the debris in the box, throwing out its contents by handfuls until she had uncovered the ribbon without finding any sign of what she had thought to find. Then she paused, meeting he gaze with one bafflerailful, half-hysterical.

"What does this mean?" she demanded, as if ready to hold him to account.

"I think," he said slowly, "I'm beginning inclined to believe it means that you're an uncommonly lucky woman."

"How do you make that out?" she demanded in a breath.

"I'll call you," he said, formulating his theory as he spoke: "When I came home tonight, a man passed me at the door, fairly running one—I fancy, to escape recognition; there was something about him that seemed familiar. Then I came up here, found my door ajar, when I distinctly remembered locking it, found my windows shut and the shades drawn, when I distinctly remembered leaving them up, and finally found this knot of ribbon on the floor. I was typing; it occurred to me that you drove up. Now it seems plain enough that this fellow knew or suspected you of hiding the necklace in the hat, knew that I had it, and came here in my absence to steal it. He found instead this hat, and knowing no better how it to press type on to find what he was after."

"But where—where's my hat?"

TRUNKS PLAY IN PORT HOPE

Will Play Afternoon Game in Port Hope on Saturday

The Grand Trunk Baseball team leaves on Saturday morning, for Port Hope, where they will do battle with the boys of the lakeshore town. The Trunks are going like a house afire now, and it will take a curb bit, and then some, to hold them from now on, since their distinctive victory from the Memorial town team on Saturday last.

In an exhibition game here on the Civic holiday, they played gilt-edged ball, against the Tiger Tyre squad, having but one error, allowing one hit, and piling up a dozen runs, with one homer and several 2 baggers.

We mention these facts as a matter of warning to Sandy Lockington, and would advise him to shake his team up in a bag and then sort them over so as to present the strongest possible lineup.

"Peenie" Mills, the old standby receiver, is almost recovered from his illness, and was able to practise with the boys before the game on Wednesday. He will be in the harness on Saturday, and the lineup will be just that much stronger, and look what they did to Oshawa with out "Peenie."

Mallen will pitch Saturday's game it is believed.

CANCEL ALL PASSES

The management of the Lindsay Athletic Association has decided to cancel all baseball passes, and holders of the same are notified accordingly. It has been discovered that the privilege of using these passes has been flagrantly abused.

BALL PLAYER INJURED AT TORONTO

Wallace Sweetman, aged 18, of 151 Howland Avenue, Toronto is in St. Michael's Hospital, suffering from slight concussion of the braid as the result of being struck on the temple with a baseball thrown by Jack McGarry during a match at Bellwoods Park, Gore Vale and Crawford Street last night.

LINDSAY PROTEST TO BE HEARD

Will Receive Hearing by Protest Committee on Monday Next

It is announced that the Lindsay protest of the Cobourg game last Saturday will be heard at Port Hope next Monday.

Referring to the game, the Cobourg Sentinel-Star says:

They (Lindsay) are evidently twisted in the play altogether, as the play, the protest describes, came in the 10th and didn't happen in the way they describe it, either. It looked very much like a conference between the catcher and the pitcher, with the third Tassman batting in, leaving his bag unguarded. And, by the way, who ever heard of Jack Rosevear man-handling a player. We're sure nobody ever saw him.

NINE BROTHERS FORM BASEBALL TEAM

Unique Baseball Team in Watsonville, California Trained by Father

Down in Watsonville, Cal., there is a baseball team of nine players who are all brothers. Their father acts as coach and trainer, and four sisters are the rooters. The Skillicorn baseball team of this city is all in the family.

"Pop" Skillicorn raised these nine brothers on the bat, as it were. A baseball fan of many years' standing, "Pop" decided that it was not mere accident that Fate had decreed him nine boys. It's said to be the only all-brother team in the west. And they're all grown up except Elmer, 11, who plays right field. When, in a few years, he's old enough to be a real fixture the Skillicorn brothers will be a combination hard to beat.

The team consists of William, 33; George, 30; Charles, 29; James 26; Archie, 24; Eddie, 20; Kenneth, 18; Amos, 17 and Elmer 11.

Also there are four girls in the family, who go along as rooters.

ALIBI VERSUS THE TRUTH

Sandy Lockington Speaks Truth About the Belleville-Oshawa Game

Speaking of the Oshawa-Belleville game last Saturday, the Reformer says:

"The visitors had the breaks coming their way throughout the afternoon and local fans, as well as players, were dissatisfied with the work of Base Umpire Bromdy. His decisions were at times questionable. Manager Booth and his clan were also displeased with Umpire Gloster for failing to stop Williams, Belleville's dusky southpaw, from spitting on his glove. During the early part of the game Williams used a fast drop continually and despite the objections of the locals, Williams was allowed to spit on his glove just the same, although he was warned on one occasion."

Evidently thinking there was enough hay down, Mr. Lockington adds very truly and to the point,

"To be more explicit Oshawa was trying to find an excuse for their miserable showing against the Belleville team. Great sports when they were winning, but very poor losers. Even our good friend Joe Welsh, President of the club got in wrong with Umpire Bromdy and upon his orders Joe was escorted from the grounds by a police officer.

POOR OLD "UMPS"

Sydney, N.S., Aug. 9.—It costs $25 to "soak an umpire" in Sydney. In Judge Muggah's court yesterday, when John Devereaux and John Mc-Innis pleaded guilty to assaulting Clifton Routledge, because they'd-agreed with one of his decisions in a city league game, his honor gave them that fine, and read them a stiff lecture.

"I could send you fellows up for three years for this," remarked the judge, who is himself known as an ardent baseball fan.

JACK DUNN WILL MAKE CHANGES

The latest tip from Baltimore is to the effect that Jack Dunn has decided to sell four men and that the four are Jack Ogden, Moose Groves, Bentley and Boley, and that he demands in addition to cash three or four pitchers, a shortstop and a first baseman. Dunn is said to be ready to part with Bishop, but it is claimed he realizes that Max, on his showing this year, will not bring the price which the player is really worth.

NAME CHILDREN AFTER BALFOUR

Jerusalem, Aug. 11.—A large number of Jewish children born in Palestine during the last month have been given the first name of Balfour, after the British Acting Foreign Secretary. The Earl of Balfour is the author of the Zionist declaration bearing his name, and is also credited with bringing about the approval of the Palestine mandate which secures establishment of the Jewish National Home.

DID THIS CAR USE NEW ALCOHOL FUEL

A well-known resident of Broadway Avenue, Toronto furnished enough excitement for the whole district yesterday. He purchased a brand new sedan car and had it installed in a neighbor's garage, and the fun began when he decided to take it for a spin. His first move was to take the door off the garage and run the road again, and he ambled joyfully to Yonge Street, where he hit and demolished a lamp post standing against a post and ended up by colliding with another motor car. The sedan was then delivered to the agent, with instructions to sell it to the highest bidder.

BASEBALL HARD ON TORONTO PLAYERS

Benefit Game There Tonight for Seven Injured Players

In the Toronto Senior Amateur Baseball league, seven players have been badly injured since the season opened, and tonight a big testimonial game will be played at Greenwood Park between Stillcrests (Ontario champions) and the All Stars of the Trades and Labor League, for seven injured players of that circuit who do not benefit under the emergency fund. Some of the injured were members of clubs in the Riverdale and Spalding Senior Leagues and Presidents Bate and Duncan have shown an active interest in endeavoring to make the game a success. Umpires Stalebrink and Joe Cowan, and Scorer Charlie Oder have volunteered their services free gratis and will officiate. The game is scheduled for seven innings, starting at 6.30 p.m. The following is a list of the injured players and their disability which they have played with outside the Trades and Labor League: Kerr (Broadview), broken leg; Price (Leaside), bad instep gash; Logan (Riverdale), torn knee cartilage; McLaughlin (Stanley), torn knee cartilage; Brooks (Royal Canadians), bruised arm muscles; Garner, broken thumb; O'Brien, smashed finger.

LEAFS WIN OFTEN FROM READING

Reading, Aug. 10.—Eddie Onslow made certain of copping the final series with Reading here when his Leafs garnered a third straight victory over the Aces in the first game of to-day's double-header by a score of 8 to 4. The Bender tribe chase the Canadian pins in the nightcap, a two-bagger by J. Walter Trazzere scr giving the locals a 2-1 decision in a great pitching duel between Stanley Baumgartner and Francis Karpp. Myrl Brown, Reading's pitching sensation and major league prospect, was rested from the box in the first affair after having been roughly treated by the Leafs. They hammered him for 14 runs in five innings, and five of the tallies were knocked in on a pair of timely two-baggers by Johnny Onslow, on which the former crossed the plate, gave the visitors a run in the second inning. They added a brace of real savage fashion for four tallies in the fourth. Kelly singled and stole second. Wingo filed out to Clarence Stupp, batting for Anderson, who was chased from the park by Umpire Gowan for protesting a called strike; drew a pass. On Onslow's grounder to second, Barrett threw wildly to first, Kelly scoring. Jones doubled to centre, scoring Stupp and Onslow. Vincent tapped to the box, Brown to Post. Taylor singled to right, and Jones tallied, Thompson also singled but Gonsales struck out.

SMALL MYSTERY AGAIN REVIVED

she private detective. Later this detective learned and told Chenier that he had arrested Mrs. Gray. The woman had told him that she and Gray had come to Montreal with Small. Small seemed to be under the influence of a powerful narcotic all the time. She said that Small had been taken to the cellar of an empty house. She could not remember the name of the street or the number of the house. She stated that Small seemed to obey Gray's every command. In questioning Chenier said that he would like to see Detectives Mitchell.

Mitchell Arrives on Scene

It is understood that the detective on receiving this information came to Montreal and saw Chenier. He returned to Toronto and a little over a week later returned to the city in the company of Mrs. Gray. Aided by Detective Theo Lepage, Detective Mitchell visited the various places in the city with the woman, in an effort to locate the spot where Small would have been placed. This spot, it is understood, could not be found.

Later Detective Mitchell obtained information that Dr. Gray was going to be found in Peree, and he set out for that place three days ago. He still remains in Montreal this morning and will probably leave for Toronto with his two prisoners this evening.

Guthrie Not Yet Notified

Detective Inspector George Guthrie stated at an early hour this morning that he had received no word from Detective Mitchell of an arrest in the Small case.

TURKEY MAY LOSE HER RUSSIAN REFUGEES

Constantinople, Aug. 11.—The Russian refugee problem will be cleared up in the course of the next few months is the opinion of Major Clarence A. Davis, Director of the Constantinople Chapter of the American Red Cross. "Present plans are for the American Relief Administration to carry on with the feeding of refugees," he said recently, "while the League of Nations distribution them. Bulgaria and Jugoslavia have agreed to take several thousands; 1,00 will be repatriated to Siberia, and it is hoped Australia will take several thousands. The problem which has puzzled the Near East statesmen will thus be definitely solved."

Public Spanker Wanted

Toronto Chief of Police Would Appoint An Officer to Wield the Shingle

Toronto, Aug. 11.—Chief of Police Dickson wants a public spanker.

He is not in favor of having the punishments administered at the local police stations, but he wants spanking posts introduced somewhere—something along the line of the public whipping posts, stocks and pillories of bygone days.

The Police Chief was indignant when he heard of the judgment of Acting Juvenile Judge R. S. Widows restoring the case of four boys who had done damage to the home of Charles H. Bishop, 79 Parkway avenue. The Judge placed the four boys on probation with an officer of the court for an indefinite period. The Judge permitted the boys to go home with their parents.

"It was clearly a case of corporal punishment," said Chief Dickson. "I would not advocate jail terms for such boys, but I would administer a punishment that they would remember for life. I read today about some Judge in New Jersey who sentenced juvenile offenders to cedar placards around their necks and sweep the sidewalks in front of their own homes. I can't imagine anything that would carry more indignity," said the Chief.

The Chief did not think parents were the best suited to administer the spankings. "An angry parent might overdo the thing," the Chief said. "What I want to see is spanking by some public official, but I do not want it done in the police stations."

PRESIDENT OF DAIL EIREANN LIES DEAD IN DUBLIN TODAY

Arthur Griffiths Dies in Dublin

President of Dail Eireann and Founder of Sinn Fein Dies of Influenza — Was Leading Man in Establishment of Irish Free State.

WAS ILL TEN DAYS

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Belfast, August 12.—Arthur Griffith, President of the Dail Eireann, died in Dublin today of influenza, it has been learned in Belfast.

Mr. Griffith was ill only ten days and his condition was not considered serious. Yesterday, however, he suffered a sudden relapse and died early this morning.

The death of Arthur Griffith, coming with such startling suddenness, marks the passing of one of the foremost figures in modern Ireland. He was one of the most conspicuous leaders in the creation of the new Irish Free State. He was one of the founders of the Sinn Fein Movement in Ireland and from the beginning has been among the foremost leaders directing its activities. He has been somewhat out of the limelight, however, during the recent political activities which have been largely directed on behalf of Free State forces by Michael Collins, head of the Irish Provisional Government, set up under the terms of the Anglo-Irish Treaty.

Mr. Griffith was formerly an editor of Dublin, and later established the newspaper, United Irishmen, followed by The Sinn Fein and then Nationality. He was elected to the House of Commons at Westminster. This idea gradually formed the nucleus of the Sinn Fein organization which took the place of the Irish Nationalist movement.

NORTHCLIFFE FIGHTS FOR LIFE

Fights to Send Orders to His Papers—Telephone Is Fixed for Him

London, Aug. 11—Fighting for life with the will that carried him to the peak of British journalism, Lord Northcliffe today amazed physicians by once more wresting a respite when death seemed but a matter of hours.

A bulletin issued by his physicians stated that the condition of the famous publicist was unchanged.

Although Northcliffe's condition was hopeless, doctors and specialists were doing their utmost to prolong his life. Workmen during the night cut a hole in the roof of his bed chamber and erected a temporary shelter for him. It is planned to-day to hoist Northcliffe's bed near the roof to give him more air.

Messages of cheer from all parts of the world reached the viscount who was too weak to know of them.

In his delirious, which grow more frequent, "the chief" as they call him in Fleet Street, fought with these about him to get up and send orders to his papers. He refused to give in. A telephone, connected near his bedside, enabled him to send instructions to his editors. But the messages never reached Fleet street. A secretary took them down in an adjoining room.

For a month a strange potion, mysterious of origin, has been seeping through Northcliffe's system. The best English specialists and a prominent American, who have attended Northcliffe, now believe his trouble may have had its origin in a cancer of the throat. They point to the fact that the viscount was frequently in alternate high spirits and deep depression, even when apparently enjoying good health.

DEATH CENSORS THRILLER FROM A PEARL WHITE FILM

New York, Aug. 11.—A thriller was cut from a film Pearl White is making here. Death did the censoring.

The set was complete and the director shouted "camera." Pearl swung from a rapidly moving autom obile to a giant steel pillar of the elevated railway, where she was to escape the desperate villian who pursued her. "Pearl" missed the hold on the pillar, dropped to the ground and died a few minutes later.

"Pearl" was a man, John Stevenson, 36, who is said to have volunteered to double for the real Pearl White. At Miss White's studio it was decided that Stevenson was acting for her. Her attorneys declared she never employed a double.

They Are All Lucky At This Hotel

Toronto, Aug. 13.—In catering to the desires of its guests, a Toronto hotel has gone so far as to take into consideration a superstition common to many people.

It is a well-known fact that many persons reach thirteen as an unlucky number, and for those dining and entertaining, the management of the hotel has endeavored to solve a big problem. Thus it has answered. Its thirteenth floor, fourteen, and has banished "Room Thirteen" from every room.

No guest, therefore, is called upon to occupy a room bearing an unlucky number.

CANADIANS ORDER 100,000 TONS FROM THE WELSH MINES

Americans Have Also Placed Orders for 400,000 Tons

ANTHRACITE GOES UP

London, Aug. 11—The international miners' conference at Frankfort has decided to take no action regarding coal for America.

Transatlantic orders for British coal are reported to-day for the last few days. Americans have placed orders in South Wales for 400,000 tons. Canadian orders from Newport 125,000 tons of coal were shipped last week to various destinations. This is Newport's highest record. F. A. Paddock, of the New York firm of Dexter and Carpenter, is in Cardiff at present, not only placing large orders, but examining samples of Welsh coal and familiarizing himself with the character and qualities of the various grades.

The policy of Welsh coal-owners is not to push up prices beyond the ability of supply under conditions existing. The highest price yet paid for best steam coal is thirty shillings, which is very reasonable for admiralty quality. Anthracite has mounted to seventy shillings and the supply is limited. The cost of freight remains at twelve shillings and sixpence a ton. The delivery period for orders now booked extends into October.

NO SHOESHINES IN PERU

For the Simple Reason That They Don't Wear Shoes — No Trade in Shoe Polish.

(By Canadian Press)

Washington, Aug. 11.—Manufacturers of shoe polish seeking foreign markets for their wares might just as well pass up Peru. The Department of Commerce announces that it has received this information from its representative in Peru. "Shines" are practically unknown in Peru, the U. S. trade representative reports, chiefly because the major portion of the population are Indians who never wear shoes.

ARREST OF KING MAY NOT SOLVE SMALL MYSTERY

Automobile Mentioned in Montreal Story Stolen Last Year

MAY SHED LIGHT

Police Hope That Mitchell's Trip May Clean Up Some Aspects

Toronto, Aug. 12.—Whether the arrest of Max Philips, alias Albert King, and a woman, by sergeant of Detective Austin Mitchell, as reported from Perce, Quebec, has any connection with the disappearance of Ambrose J. Small will not be known until sergeant Mitchell returns to police headquarters.

This statement was made by Chief of Police Dickson this afternoon. He stated he had received no word from Mitchell, but stated he was not in Montreal but somewhere in Quebec, as he did not think he would hear from him for some days.

It is a question whether the arrest of Phillips and the woman will bring a solution of the "great mystery." Philips is wanted by the Toronto police on a charge of the theft of an automobile from Vincent Denike, and also on a charge of non-support laid by his wife.

Car Stolen in 1921.

The car was stolen from Mr. Denike's garage last October. And as Mr. Small vanished in December, 1919, it is not thought the car has any connection with the Small case. The car was located some months later in Quebec and is now being driven by Mr. Denike.

Both Chief of Police Dickson and Chief of Detectives Guthrie said they could not discuss the case fully until Sergt. Mitchell.

The feeling at headquarters is that the arrest has no direct bearing on the Small case, but may supply an eagle, and a bi-ing sifted by Mitchell.

Was the story came out last June about a man and a woman leaving a grip in a hotel in Montreal and there was a letter found about the Small case. Chief of Police Dickson decided to investigate the case thoroughly and sent Sergeant Mitchell down east.

At police headquarters the opinion prevails the story about Mr. Small is the talk of the "crazy woman."

But the police await word from Sergeant Mitchell. The Small case has been a big strain on the police, and any new news come out that arrests had been made every officer at headquarters expressed the hope it would solve the mystery.

THESE CORN BORERS FAILED TO BORE

Refused to Be Enticed by Government Grain

Toronto, Aug. 12.—Ontario Government experts have been informed that about 1,000 corn borers that had been placed in a field of corn at the Dominion Government laboratory at Strathroy have all disappeared, the corn being allowed to grow unmolested, so that experiments with the pests have been blocked. None of the corn fields in the neighborhood show any trace of the borers. While entomologists are puzzled by the situation, they state that in all probability a discovery of great importance to the corn industry may result from the experiences at the Strathroy laboratory.

Another Movie Romance Comes to an End, But Not in the Film Fashion

Los Angeles, Aug. 12.—It A now just about unanimous at Hollywood, the famous film colony.

Blanche Sweet, movie heroine, has separated from Marshall Neilan, actor and producer, after a brief marriage career of less than two months.

The roll can now be called from A to Z, and is a difficult to find a movie home which has not been searched.

Hart, the good bad man of the screen, vowed to-day that he would not stand for any charges of extreme cruelty on the part of his wife, who is about to sue him for divorce. Mr. Hart says he cannot let such heartless charges go before "his public."

The sad part of the Hart explosion is that Will Hayes, the ambassador of a new moral life in the movies, had just given Bill Hart a clean bill of health. On his visit to Los Angeles and Hollywood two weeks ago, the former postmaster-general pointed to Hart and referred to him as "an ideal example of what American home life can be."

But what Bill Hart will be accused of formally is not yet on record, but Bill himself steps quickly to the front with a denial that he can be charged with cruelty, which may be a good bit in itself. He says he has never done a wrong by any woman. Tears well in his eyes and his mouth twitches with emotion as he says it.

"DOBBIN'S" DAYS ARE NOT OVER SAYS VET.

Toronto, Aug. 12.—Dr. J. M. McCallum, chief of the equine division of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, gave as his message at the second day of the Ontario Veterinary Association that the day of the horse had been over for a time but that a new day had dawned. He instanced that the demand for horse was better than the tractor for farm work, that horseback riding was still popular and that commercial draft horse was still the field of the horse.

The classes of horses that he advised breeding were the thoroughbred horse and the thoroughbred. He opposed the breeding of the common horse that so many farmers used.

Wayne Dinsmore, President of the Horse Association of America, said that people in the United States were leaving motorcars in favor of the old-fashioned horse.

In an address on "Differential diagnosis of Poultry Diseases" Dr. W. A. Thompson emphasized the importance of the ben.

But these arts fail to impress Mrs. Hart. "Tell it to the judge," she says in effect.

But Bill and his friends don't want it told to the judge. They are trying to arrange a quiet little movie divorce with no public scandal or anything of that sort.

Mrs. Hart has not yet agreed to the plan. She is very bitter and the money settlement for herself and her unborn child will have to be extremely heavy to appease her aggrieved feelings. Hart has a large fortune. Mrs. Hart knows it. She herself, as Winnifred Westover, has been a star of the screen and she knows something of the extravagant salaries of a short time ago.

Hart has always been considered in moreland a thrifty person. He says he has made what he feels is a most "liberal offer" to Mrs. Hart. Her attorneys laugh hoarsely. They say that Bill hasn't begun to approach the right figures yet. Therefore, negotiations are under way.

It would appear that Hart is in pretty much the same position that Charlie Chaplin was when his loving wife, Mildred, decided she wanted her freedom and a large cash settlement. Chaplin also is on the thrifty side, but it was a case of business before pleasure and he had to come through handsomely.

"GERMANY UNITED UNDER REPUBLIC"

Berlin, Aug. 11.—Under the banner, "Unity, Right, Freedom," the Reichstag to-day celebrated the third anniversary of the German constitution.

Deutschland uber alles" thundered from the halls of the buildings. President Ebert was feebly cheered as he entered.

Herr Sommel in an address, said the German people had become unanimitied of the defense of the refined under the republic. In discussing the situation caused by Bavaria's nullification of the defense of the republic act, he said, "We love our Bavarian brothers, but we love Germany more."

BREAD PRICES ARE CUT AND LISBON STRIKE ENDS

Lisbon, Aug. 10 (Associated Press)—The general strike in Lisbon was terminated today, following a declaration from the Government that the price of bread would be reduced.

The strike was called a few days ago in protest against the increased cost of this commodity.

MAYOR HANNA AFTER FUEL FOR WINTER

Mayor Hanna has been instrumental in securing three car loads of pea coal of a first class article, localling 156 tons. The cost to parties who desire same will be $13.50 delivered in the city. His Worship is also making every effort to secure a sufficiency of hard wood to be delivered in the city at a reasonable figure.

In connection with the fuel situation Mayor Hanna last night had a conference with some of the members of the G. W. V. A. of this city and a co-operation in regard to the matter was agreed upon doing all in his power to secure the necessary supply of fuel of some kind for the citizens and his efforts in this direction will be appreciated by homekeepers generally.

BOW AND ARROW TO HUNT DEER

Famous Naturalist Would Forbid Dogs Being Used in Deer Hunting

Toronto, Aug. 11—Ernest Thompson Seton, famous Canadian naturalist and author, whose books on wild animal life are in a handy spot in the library of every outdoor loving boy, paid a short visit to the city today on his way to Algonquin Park, where he will spend a week giving lectures on woodcraft to the boys in camp there.

Mr. Seton told of his fifty-acre preserve in Greenwich, which, is literally teeming with wild life. "I have seen more wild minks there than I have in all my western trips," he said. "I get screen fence and kinds of every description in my tramps through the property, but I am sorry to say that I have to use them. Two years ago, the protective laws were taken off and foreigners in the neighborhood slaughtered them all.

"I would entirely forbid the use of dogs in hunting," he went on. "It is not sport. Partly as a result of this there has been a wave of extermination of animal life right across the continent. This has been followed by sporadic attempts at re-stocking, but the only solution and the only way to save many kinds of animals is by a system of havens, where they will be completely protected. At the present time destruction is greater than reproduction and that can have only one effect."

Twenty-five years ago I looked forward to the day when the gun would be forbidden as a weapon for hunters" Mr. Seton went on.

"But how can a man hunt at all if he has neither dog nor gun?" The Star asked.

"With bows and arrows," was the reply. "You think that a joke, a dream," he said as the questioner looked little sceptical, "but I can give you an example of it. Two years I had with me in California, two boys. I call them boys still, but they are both doctors now, strapping fellows over six foot high. These lads were taught to use the bow from their childhood. First they shot a cross or something of that sort, later they killed a bob-cat, then a deer and finally a black bear."

Last year they received permission to hunt grizzlies in Yellowstone Park with their bows. The authorities were quite willing to allow them as they did not think the boys had a ghost of a chance. They killed seven grizzlies."

AN INTERESTING MATCH

CORK CITY CAPTURED BY FREE STATE

Rebels Set It on Fire Before Withdrawing

FIERCE FIGHTING

De Valera Said to Have Been in Doomed City

Dublin, Aug. 11.—Another dramatic Rochestown, three miles from Cork the four surprise landings of national troops yesterday in Cork County. The rebels, who had prepared Cork for a long siege, have withdrawn from the city after having blown up important buildings, including two newspaper offices, the Victory Hoof and the military barracks. A battle is in progress a few miles south of Cork between the rebels and the National troops, who boldly mulled up the harbor and landed in tiny boats at Rochestown, three miles ferom Cork itself.

At the moment the actual position is hard to ascertain, because Cork is cut off from all communication except by sea.

Two landing parties, who were disembarked from troopships near the port, are endeavoring to close in upon the irregulars. How far they have reached is not known, but it seems that the irregulars are retreating as usual, leaving behind them a trail of destruction and desolation.

Dublin, Aug. 11—Ramone de Valera was reported to-day in command of the few remaining bands of insurgents in Cork who are holding out in their smouldering stronghold against the terrific fire of Free State troops.

Although most of the rebels have evacuated the city, small detachments were putting up a stubborn resistance in several buildings they have seized.

Many big buildings blown up by the insurgents were driven out, were gutted by fire, according to word received here.

Accounts of the battle of Cork received here were meagre because Cork is only accessible by water.

Bitter Fighting Outside City.

Bitter fighting between the loyal troops of Michael Collins and the rebels was in progress outside the burning city.

Free State officials to-day believed that the serious aspect of the Irish civil war ended with the capture of Cork.

The free State work started by the insurgents, who realized that it was impossible to hold the city in face of the superior Free State forces.

Most of the rebels had brought here on a steamship any the irregulars were closely pursued on a Passage West tramcar. The nationals had to fight their way under intense fire, a number being wounded and one killed. They reported that the government troops who landed at Unionhall also are fighting their way through the hilly country.

The crew of another vessel arriving from Cork said the Admiralty House and the Imperial Hotel, two of the finest town were blazing when they left, as well as two other large buildings in which frequent explosions were heard.

MIGHT OPPOSE WHEAT BOARD LAW

Conservatives, It Is Said, May Fight Project In Special Session Called

Winnipeg, Aug. 12.—A report is published here that should the Bracken Government call a special session of the Legislature to put Manitoba in line with Saskatchewan and Alberta in the creation of a Wheat Board, the necessary legislation will be opposed vigorously by the Conservative group in the House, in particular by J. T. Haig and Sanford Evans, members for Winnipeg city. It is suggested that the result might be a lengthy debate, which would make impossible to pass legislation in time for the handling of this year's wheat crop.

"JENNY" WREN MAKES HOME AMONG THE LOVE LETTERS

(By Canadian Press)

Millersville, Pa., Aug. 12.—John Seigler, a mail carrier here for two weeks was putting letters into the mail box of a local resident without knowing that the box sheltered a family of wrens. A few days ago he was putting a large package in the box and when he opened the cover two wrens flew out. Seigler investigated further and found six baby wrens in it. The parents had built a nest in the corner of the box and hatched their brood.

A TEMPLE OF SCIENCE

M. Camille Flammarion, who has mysteriously accompanied his eighty-first birthday, has never held any official position, though he has been described as Director of the Paris Observatory. But he is, in a very special sense, France's "Astronomer Royal," for he began his astronomical observations at the age of five by watching the eclipsed sun reflected in a pail of water, and has done more to popularize astronomy than any other living astronomer. For many years he made his observations from the balcony of his flat in the centre of Paris, but in 1882 a wealthy admirer presented him with a fine mansion and grounds at Juvisy, which he converted into a veritable temple of science.—Montreal Gazette.

"They're very unusual people."

"How so?"

"Too. Indeed. Even the neighbors are satisfied with the way they are bringing up their children."—Detroit Free Press.

JIM LARKIN AND THE LAW

In 1920 James Larkin was convicted of criminal anarchy in New York State and sentenced to State Prison, and April, 1922, through the wonderful workings of the criminal laws, was granted a certificate of reasonable doubt by Mr. Justice Cardozo. What his activities were before his conviction and since the public is well enough informed. His latest achievement has been to address a meeting in Rosbery, where he is reported to have assailed the churches and welfare organizations.

It is not here a question at all of free speech. Larkin was convicted of a crime, namely, criminal anarchy, two years ago, and today he is having a good time abusing whatever happens to take his fancy. It does seem as though in this country of speed his final guilt or innocence could have been determined in two years. The average loyal American (Larkin is not an Irishman, it appears, but was born in Liverpool) when he hears of a man being tried for such an offence as Larkin's has a general impression that where he is convicted, he is punished, and this average American continues in his blissful ignorance about the working of the criminal law for such as Larkin. He thinks that the courts are, really for the purpose of seeing that justice is done and the public protected. He himself has to pay his taxes and he is fined if he leaves the sub-kerosil in unscrupulous places, and so he supposes that everybody else has to too the mark. The Larkinses are immune from the bourgeois servitude. In their cases, courts in New York have, reasonable doubts, and the pale prisoners are let out to busy themselves as they may wish.

About a year before Larkin was convicted he addressed a meeting of reds in New York and fell foul of Mr. Gompers, our infant Samuel, as we may playfully call him. Larkin drew a tearful picture of Samuel crossing the ocean on the bridge deck of a steamer and associating with the officers and never even saying goodbye to the crew when he left the ship. He said that Samuel was "over there trying to save the British Government"—it is surprising that he did not accuse this eminent sociologist of being a marquis in sheep's clothing. This he pitched into the American Federation of Labor and said the labor leaders in America were "a most corrupt gang of rascals," and he and the comrades and the Jovarishes and all the best had ardent communings together. But Larkin said one thing that had a lot of cheer in it he said that Russia was the only place where men and women can be free. Perhaps the New York court, with no Lenin's words and actions and his admiration for Russia, has granted him a certificate of reasonable doubt.—Montreal Star said.

EARL HAIG IS NEW DIRECTOR

Field Marshall Elected to Executive of Edinburgh Distillery

London, July 28.—Field Marshal Earl Haig has been elected a director of the Distillers' Company at the annual meeting held in Edinburgh. The chief product of the company is whiskey. There are some people who think it rather detracts from the Field Marshal's approval as lately as usual as it would dignity and reputation to be interested in a business of that sort, but their disapproval is shortly to be cured as he will be in America. The Haigs have long been financially interested in whiskey.

Earl Haig is usually credited with being thorough in all that he does, and he intends to be thorough in the whiskey business. When he was asked to join the Board of Directors he consented, it was stated, on the understanding that he would be no mere figure-head, but would take his full share of the work as well as of the responsibility attached to the office."

He is likely to have plenty to do.

TOO LITTLE BLOOD

Too little blood is what makes people look pale and sallow and feel languid. That is what makes them drag along, always tired, never real healthy blood. If you do so no rubbish breathless after slight exertion, so that it is wearisome even to go up stairs. Doctors call these ills new anaemic—the pain English being too cheerful by taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that by new color means. Those pills enrich and renew the blood, which reaches every part of the body, strengthens the nerves, and brings new health and vitality. Miss Dorothy M. Ellis, Davidson, Sask, says: "I have found great benefit through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I was weak and run down and seemed to have no ambition, but after taking the pills felt restored. I shall be glad to recommend them to any sufferer."

If you are suffering from any condition due to poor, watery blood or weak nerves, begin taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills now, and note how your health and strength will improve. You can get these pills through any dealer in medicine, or they will be sent by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ROSY FUTURE IN SIGHT

Constantinople, Aug. 12.—The increased cost of living in Constantinople is now 806 per cent higher than in 1914, according to figures compiled by the American Chamber of Commerce. The highest figure reached during the war and post-war period was 1066 per cent. in 1920. There has been a slight falling off in the figures during the past year.

Few government employes have received more than one half of their salaries during the past two years. But to-day new taxes are in sight, and the Turkish treasury says full salaries may be expected within a few months.

MOTOR VEHICLES CAUSE MANY DEATHS

According to Annual Statistics for New York City

New York, Aug. 12.—Babies who were too young to realize danger, and old men who couldn't move quickly enough to avoid it, swelled the total of accidental deaths to 3,463 in New York City last year, health department reports reveal. The reports a decrease of 600 from the accidental deaths of 1919.

Only 987 of the victims were females, while 2,476 were males. Even among infants the death rate for males was by far the higher, probably, according to the health office, because boy babies often seem to grief through inquisitiveness and a natural tendency to seek adventure.

The most important cause of accidental death from a numerical standpoint is the automobile," the report continues. "Last year 849 persons were killed in this city as the result of automobile accidents. This is equivalent to a ratio of almost 15 per 100,000 of population and represents a net increase of one per cent. over 1919.

"We must not lose sight, however, of the fact that the number of fatal street accidents has not kept pace with the increase in the number of vehicles using the streets. If the same ratio between accidents and vehicles obtained today as in previous years, the fatalities would be many times greater, so that in reality a big saving in life has been effected through regulation of traffic and the closing of streets for play during certain hours of the day."

Almost 13 persons per 100,000—numbering 684—died in falls, says the report; 403 from scalds and buildings and 138 from fire-escapes and vigilows.

"Certainly that was a needless loss of life," says the health department. "Almost one-third of these deaths occurred among children under five years of age. In other words, among little children who were allowed to go out on fire escapes or to lean out of windows.

"Surely this indicates gross negligence and calls for active propaganda to educate parents not to permit little tots to engage in such hazardous forms of play."

APPLE CROP PROMISES WELL

Barley and Oats Are Also Bumper Yields in Ontario

Much of the barley has been cut, and the oat harvest is well started. Threshing results indicate a bumper return for both of these grains, although lodging may make the cutting of some oats difficult. There are a few complaints of smut in the latter crop.

Speaking of the production of oats, Editor reports some fields yielding 60 bushels to the acre, while Kent claims that as high as 80 bushels per acre have been registered this season.

Fruitmen say that field peas are more promising than for years.

The Dundas representative states that he saw a fine stand of annual sweet clover (Hubam) during the week, some of it over six feet high.

Hastings says: "Large yields of red clover have been harvested in the district and the unfavorable weather during haying - One farmer has a 30-acre field of what at one time looked to be an excellent crop of hay. As a hay crop, sweet clover has lost favor in this county."

Halton states that farmers are threshing alsike in the field. The average yield is about six bushels per acre, and the quality of the seed is good.

Lincoln says: "Early apples are coming forward in abundance and the market seems to be handling well. Transparent and Astrachans and Duchess is very keen. Tomatoes are gradually falling off in price, but the quality is not promise to be large enough to cause a slump."

Huron says that while there will be a large yield of apples, damp weather during the latter part of July tended towards the development of scab.

Several correspondents state that fall wheat is not threshing as heavily as was expected from field observation.

Considerable new wheat has been marketed during the week, prices ruling $ a bushel, but others reaming lower.

Huron reports a considerable enquiry for stockers, as a very good crop of hay has been cut.

Middlesex says that a few carloads of grass cattle are ready for the market, and that a week ago two carloads were shipped to Highland.

Lambton reports that six carloads of steers were shipped on Saturday for export. A carload of horses was also shipped to Montreal mostly rough loggers, around 1,500 lbs. at prices ranging from $160 to $175.

Bruce states that a number of grass cattle were shipped during the week.

Prontenac says that a few loads of calves changed hands at from 4 to 6 cents a lb. during the week.

Hastings states that some reports have been heard of tainted milk caused by pasturing sweet clover.

The London Creamery at Petrolia, is now producing 10,000 lbs. of butter a week.

Victoria says of hogs: "A noticeable thing about shipments is that while about 90 per cent. of the hogs are of good bacon type, only about 10 per cent. are in the select class, the balance being for the most part over-finished."

Wellington calls attention to the large number of litters last this summer, and cites the case of one farmer who lost 60 young pigs from white scours.

Little pigs are selling at prices ranging from $12 to $15 a pair.

It pays to handle live stock well. Choice dorbed and castrated lambs sold at from $12.50 to $13.50 during the past week, while the top price for uncared for stock was about $11.50.

A good deal of land is being prepared for fall wheat. Brant says that much of the sowing will be late in order to avoid the Hessian fly.

Lennox and Addington says that a good deal of tractor plowing and cross plowing with horses is being done.

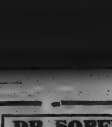

Five laborers from Holland arrived in Lambton during the week, and were at once placed on farms.

CLERGYMEN NOW HAVE SMALL FAMILIES

London, Aug. 12.—Clergymen no longer have large families, the members of the Neo-Malthusian Birth Control Society were told by Professor Macbride at a recent conference. Thirty years ago the clergy were reckoned among the most prolific members of the community, and rightly regarded as breeders of talent; be t today roadsweepers, dock laborers and people of that class indulge in large families ,while clerical families consist or only one or two children.

The Professor declared also that every species of animal and plant, if allowed to exercise unchecked its natural powers of reproduction, would in a few years completely overrun the earth and crush out other forms of life.

ANOTHER SCREEN STAR LEAVES HIS WIFE

Reel Love Match Blasted When Winifred Westover Loses Her "Cream Puff"

Los Angeles, Aug. 11.—"Big Bill" Hart, two-fisted, two-gunned, he-man of the movies, has separated from winsome Winifred Westover, who called him her "cream-puff," when they were married last December.

Hailed as one of the real love match-es of the celluloid world, it became known to-day that the romance was blasted three months ago, when Bill went back to sister, and Winifred to mother.

The man from the flickering bad lands played true to the role in which he is worshipped by millions of boys in America, when he said, concerning the charges: "I can now appreciate the feeling of a man accused of murder when he knows in his heart and soul he is innocent." Big Bill flashed his mast fury with embarrassment when approached concerning the marital mishap.

Mystery surrounds the charges that Mrs. Hart, herself an actress, has confided in her attorneys and close friends.

She is quoted as saying that in spite of the fact that she expects to become a mother in September, she does not longer stand life with Hart.

Hart said that he had made ample provision for the support of his wife.

"Mrs. Hart and myself separated three months ago," he said in a statement submitted by his attorneys, "and a few days later, property contracts were executed making ample provision for her maintenance as well as for our unborn child. Whether she contemplates divorce proceedings or not, I have no knowledge.

PRUSSIAN TEACHERS ARE ORDERED TO STOP PROPAGANDA

Minister of Education Takes Steps to Foster Republican Ideals

Berlin, Aug. 12.—Dr. Boelitz the Prussian minister of education has taken an important step to prevent the undermining of republican institutions by an order sent to the school authorities throughout the country forbidding all societies or organizations of school children, the aim of which is openly or secretly to proselitize the youth against democracy. It enforced strictly this order will stop the systematic campaign of the reactionaries to poison the minds of German children and make them turn against the republic and will cause the younger generation to respect and love republican institutions.

The surprising thing, observers say, is that no action of this sort was taken until three years after the adoption of the German constitution. The reactionaries until now have practically had no opposition in their education campaign.

KING'S STABLES A FINE SIGHT

Any American May Visit Them Who Wishes To Do So

London, Aug. 11.—The Earl of Chesterfield lives up to his ancestral name, and any American in London who wants to visit the King's stables at Buckingham may do so, and feel he is welcome, unless by chance he has done something which causes him to be regarded with suspicion by Scotland Yard.

First he applies to the Earl, who is "Master of the Horse" and once in receipt of the Earl's polite note giving him permission, the card is sent Paw horses, even those of American multi-millionaires, are better housed than those of the King, and no American multi-millionaire, unless he goes in for racing extensively, has so many of them.

The stables are built in form of a quadrangle. Rows of wide, roomy stalls are on either side of a long chamber, with a lofty arched roof. Each stable can accommodate scores of animals, but the population of the Royal Mews has shrunk considerably in recent years until now but a splendid specimens of carriage and riding horses remain as against the normal figure of 185 in pre-war days.

Each horse has his name over his manager, and has his special duty assigned to him on the roll of the Master of the Horse. Here are the state coach horses, the special carriage pairs, the Windsor greys, horses for the King's chargers, the horses of the Prince of Wales, Prince Henry and others.

The principal attraction of the coach houses is the great state coach which is used for coronations and a few other very special occasions when Royalty is expected to put on all the stylish it can muster. It weighs 4½ tons, is 24 feet long and was built 160 years ago.

In the adjoining harness room is displayed in large glass cases the eight sets of red morocco leather harness overlaid with gold used by the eight horses that draw the great state coach. Each set or trappings is cut from a complete hide so that there is no joint in the leather. Gun metal overlaid with gold was used for all the metal work, the eight sets costing £15,00. The Master of the Horse has very little to do with the practical running of the royal stables. That is done by Captain Benbow. He is far too great a personage for work of this kind. He is paid $2,500 a year and must be a peer to be qualified for his position. He is a political appointee, and when there is a change in the political complexion of the government he is among those who lose their jobs and have to make way for somebody who fi of the same political faith as the party that has come into power.

Oshawa Taxi Driver Falls For Gypsy Queen's Tactics

Oshawa, Aug. 11.—Taking a roll of bills out of a local taxi driver's hands, while he was paying for some gasoline at an Oshawa garage, Margaret Johnie, a gypsy, who was pardoned through here, in company with a number of others, exclaimed: "Mebless it for you." When the taxi driver found that the roll be returned to him, he did not discover that $20 was missing until after the effects of the blessing had worn off and the visitor had departed. The police were notified and the gypsy was caught at Courtice. She was placed under arrest and brought to Oshawa lock-up. When she appeared before Magistrate Hind she made a pathetic appeal. She had brought with her two infants, whom she claimed were twins, and also a boy to look after them.

Investigation by the police revealed the fact that one twin was several weeks older than the other. Accused was remanded. In the meantime the police got in touch with the Attorney-General's department, and a fine of $500 and costs was the penalty for blessing other people's money. Accused was one of a party of seven car-loads who passed through Oshawa. One complaint was received from a Pickering resident that his bank roll had also received a blessing, and that it had cost him considerable money.

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM, AN IRRETRIEVABLE DISASTER

In which The Khan discoveres on the damage done to the Dominion by an immortal "Bad Boy," and marvels at modern methods with Youth.

It would be no exaggeration to say that Peck's Bad Boy was the most tremendous calamity that ever befell this continent. Jesse James, William Lloyd Garrison, Jefferson Davis, Billy Sunday, Minnie Eddy, Carrie Nation, Frumpton Johnson, Sitting Bull, Bob Ingersoll, William Randolph Hearst, Lefty Lewis, and the first Irish, the first Russian, the first Hebrew, the first Negro, the first Bolsh, the first Rumshian refugee will each be cited by future historians of the Benighted Age as the crowning disaster, but not one of them is in the same class with Peck's Bad Boy. This vulgar, vicious and contemptible little brat has already done more harm then the American war, the various droughts, hails, floods, and early frosts of the past thirty years put together, not to mention strikes, negro riots, Indian uprisings and the rise of labor as a disaster, but there is no reason why it should be an irretrievable disaster. Peck's Bad Boy was in fact (as the immortal) an irretrievable disaster, for we will never get over him.

One of the strangest religious tenets of a mighty heathen people is the worship of their ancestors. The old are held in deep respect and the aged parent is reverred. They are pagans, they are a heathen people and for thirty years we have been sending missionaries to these folks. We have more cheek, conceit and gall than any other race of men on the planet. During these thirty years we have been deliberately cultivating irreverance in our young. Some whelp that was impolitent to his mother, some prat who was the terror of his neighborhood, some young barbarian with half the intelligence of Little Wolf or any of Ship-Shu on the Buck's boys is made a hero of. The young reptile should be out at Mimico or at a school fenced in with barbed wire. We have been eager to destroy ourselves and our young that every Saturday, we flood the land with reviewed comics to give the half-savage-in our homes some new ideas. One Saturday evening we asked our boys to read and copy these young beasts, the Katzenjammer Twins, and next day we send them to Sunday school to hear something about that beautiful boy called Jesus! We are great jokers, we are!

One of these days the people of China will politely tell us to keep our missionaries at home where they are needed—and this is true, the Lord knows. The people of Japan have already given us a broad hint that they look upon a missionary, not as someone to feed on but as an imperilence. They are not like the French-Canadians who find a Methodist a necessary evil—starving. He is also profitable. He will pay so much a head for converts who, when they come to die, invariably send for a priest. Down in Quebec the common people would have starved to death long ago but their recent liquor legislation had it not been for missionary money which went in by the barrel.

There is enough irreverance in this continent without breeding and encouraging it. Marriage is a joke, and a vulgar joke in some places. We poke fun at our mother-in-law, who by long odds is the most useful person in the community. We laugh our heads off at other people's religion and we make a hanging ridiculous. Were a Christian to-day to cut the whole from his feet before he entered the portals of God's House, he would be held up to ridicule. For one of us to say, "We have a great harvest this year, thanks be to God who sent the dew and the rain and sunshine!" he would be regard-ed with suspicion as a temperamental lunatic.

I am a boy of my own and he tried any Peck's Bad Boy antics on me, I'd whale the daylights out of him and I'd keep it up till he had due respect for his old man.

More than that, I'd see to it that he didn't get a colored supplement.

LET US HAVE CLEAN MOVIES.

When will the people of this continent wake up to the fact that their morals and the characters of their children are being perverted by the promoters and actors in the moving picture business? For some years now these degraded and unprincipled persons have held the eyes of the public fixed upon their screens, and, while many of the pictures are harmless, some entertaining and a few educative, most of them have been of a demoralising nature. The worst side of human life has been depicted, and in many instances made to appear attractive. Love has been presented as a commercial attribute, and all the amatory picture plays end up in a repulsive manner that brings the blush to the cheek of the pure minded and a silly giggle to the throat of the thoughtless.

Is it any wonder that the actors in these immoral plays become like the characters they represent, and carry out into their personal lives the sort of morals they hold up for public appreciation? These movie actors and actresses are different from the artists on the ordinary theatrical stage in that they have to throw so much realism into their acting. There is very little of the make believe and absolutely no artistic restraint about their work. They live an unnatural life that tends to social looseness and moral irresponsibility.

These are the teachers of our youth, and there seems to be no redress for all their productions are passed by the Government censor. Presumably, even our censors have become so degraded by constantly looking at these films that their eyes have become slimy.

We are aware that we are treading upon thin ice, and that the movie men will not love us any better for the above lecture, but it is time the more sane people out for the sake of the rising generation. The theatre men themselves might well take the matter up in their own defence, for there are signs of a revulsion from movie plays on the part of a large section of the community. Several of the picture show companies are in financial difficulties through the falling off in public patronage.

The Arbuckle scandal and the repeated divorces among movie "stars" have opened the eyes of the public generally to the kind of morals engendered by such a degraded art. Only today we have a news item to the effect that "Big Hat Hart, the two-fisted, two-gunned he-man of the movies" has been separated from winsome Winifred Westover, who called him her 'cream puff' when they were married in December last." We are told that this marriage was hailed as "one of the real love matches of the celluloid world".

All this sort of thing is the natural result of the life and the acting of these men and women, for they play fast and loose with morals in their play-acting, and it is an easy step to reality. The pity of it is that the average young man and woman are led to believe that these actors are living the true life of romance. O Love, how much moral putridity is passed off in thy name!

WHAT BECAME OF A "MENTAL TWIST"

We are all so used to the telephone that it no longer appeals to our sense of wonder, but less than fifty years ago the idea of sending the human voice a distance of even fifty miles over a wire was not merely a wonderful one, it was regarded by most people as the dream of a mad with a "mental twist". In a letter to the New York Times, Mr. Willis Pratt gives an account of his early associations with Alexander Graham Bell, when the inventor was working on the idea of transmitting human speech by means of electricity. Mr. Pratt claims the distinction of having seen the model of the first fruit of Bell's experiments in telephony. This was in the year 1872 when Mr. Pratt was a small boy of ten years living in Hartford, Conn. Mr. Pratt tells the story thus:

"One day on my return from school my grandmother, Mrs. Ellen C. Van Deusen, said to me: 'Come here, Willis. I want to introduce you to Professor Bell, who is doing a very wonderful thing. He is actually teaching deaf mutes to talk.' I remember a tall, dark, melancholy man around, and that I acted a great many questions of the pale young man to whom I had been introduced. I gathered that Professor Bell had recently come to the hotel to live while engaged in the work of developing the power of speech in those who had been deaf and dumb from birth, that he was naturally inclined and that my mother had invited him to use our piano whenever he felt so disposed.

It is my recollection that the young man thereafter was a frequent visitor to our apartments and that he would sit at the piano for an hour or so at a time. Whether or not he was a master of the instrument I do not remember but I know that we all enjoyed his music. One evening I came into the parlor and was admonished for interrupting Professor Bell during an explanation he was making of a curious device that was standing on one of the small, oval marble-topped tables common to that period. I was in a great hurry to get permission to visit a small friend, so remained only long enough to notice that the device had a small wire attached to it, one end of which ran over the edge of the table with its end in a cup of some liquid that stood on the floor and under which a newspaper had been placed, evidently for the purpose of protecting the carpet in case its contents should be spilled.

It was not until later that I knew what I had seen. Next day I overheard my grandmother say to my mother: 'Jennie, isn't it too bad that a young man of Professor Bell's attainments should have such a queer mental twist?' Of course I asked what was the matter with Professor Bell and was told that the little device I had seen on the parlor table the night before was an apparatus by means of which the young scientist believed he would some day be able to carry the human voice over a wire, so it could be heard 'perhaps fifty miles away.'"

The world could do with more men with mental twists as that which affected Alexander Graham Bell. There is a potential inventor in every family, and parents would do well to encourage rather than discourage the development of the inventive faculty. Some of our brightest boys—and girls—are stultified by the system of training through which they are forced to go in our schools, which seem to be little more than factories for turning out human adding machines and phonographic records. When will we devise a method of education which will give to the pupil the freedom necessary for the development of the personality and of these "mental twists" which have in the past contributed so humanely to human knowledge, convenience, and comfort?

Miners in Alberta are still disputing over the wage question. They had better agree with their advocates quickly before the winter sets in and settles the strike—and them too.

PRESS OPINIONS

COURAGEOUS RAILWAY ACTION

(New York Journal of Commerce)

A settlement of the railroad strike upon the terms and conditions laid down in these proposals, however attractive for the moment, would have been contrary to the ultimate public interest. The men who remained loyal to the railroads and to their country have saved the day both for the transportation industry and for the public, but the claims of these employees are long delayed, another emergency will find the one to hold the bridge. The community may be somewhat inconvenienced by the situation in which the roads find themselves today, but there is no occasion, whatever for alarm and certainly none for surrender of Mr. Jewell and his associates.

The public wants peace on the railroads, but it is not willing to pay the price the latest proposals would require. It wishes to see the strike come to a close, but it desires a settlement of basic issues, not a mere postponement of trouble.

CRIME AND PROHIBITION

(Toronto Star)

A typical case of misrepresentation of the effect of temperance legislation on crime is provided by an evening paper which prints a despatch from Ottawa with an introduction stating that "The measure of prohibition adopted in Canada shows so far but little neutralising effect upon crime in this country according to an abstract of criminal statistics issued for 1921 by the Dominion Bureau". And the heading declares there is an "increase in almost every class of offence."

It is true that the figures for the year show an increase in crime for the Dominion as a whole, including the two provinces of Quebec and British Columbia. But either through carelessness or for ulterior reasons no comparison is made with the years before prohibition came into effect.

Going back to pre-war days we find Canada is less given to crime and violation of civic by-laws than it was eight years ago. Take the following figures for example:

Number of charges of indictable offenses in 1914; 23,007. In 1921, 24,943.

Number of convictions for non-indictable offences in 1914; 153,805. In 1921: 157,704.

Number of persons convicted of drunkenness in 1914: 69,047. In 1921: 54,362.

This works out to a reduction of 17 per cent. in the more serious criminal cases; 13 per cent. in the less criminal cases, and 47 per cent. in drunkenness as against eight years ago. And the census shows that in the last ten years the population of the country increased 23.95 per cent.

For reasons that can be readily imagined a certain class of our citizens like to believe and spread the news that a crime wave has swept back and forth over the country since most of our provinces adopted prohibition. But it is a poor kind of citizen that thus slanders his own country.

LINK BRITAIN WITH AUSTRALIA BY AIR

Sir Keith Smith's Aviation Plan Also Takes in India

Sydney, N.S.W., Aug. 12.—Sir Keith Smith has submitted to the federal government details of a scheme for a mail and passenger air service between England, India and Australia. The mails now take four to five weeks from England and Sir Keith estimates the air service would only take twelve days. The plan is divided into two stages as follows:

A service twice a week to India.

A service to India on alternate days, with a weekly extension to Australia.

The Australian extension would allow ten tons of mail weekly each way at a surcharge of fivepence a letter and forty cents a parcel, each at £130 each, or £30 below the Brindisi steamer fare. Sir Keith's plan calls for an annual subsidy of £81,000 from Great Britain and £40,000 each from India and Australia.

Premier Hughes has promised to refer the scheme to parliament.

WESTERN COAL PUZZLE

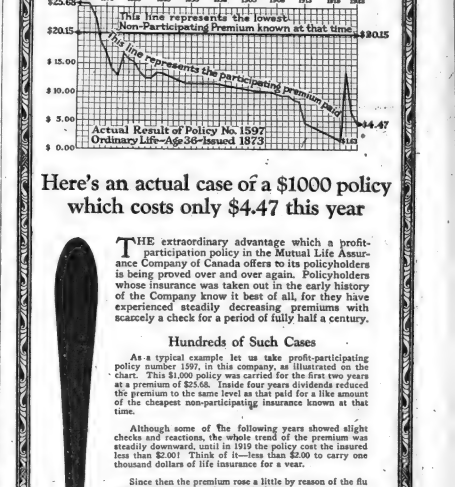

Only Thing Clear Is That There Is No Fuel

Ottawa, Aug. 11—The situation which has developed in Districts 18, Southern Alberta and British Columbia, where the Western Canada Coal Operators are reported to have accepted the majority report of the conciliation board, is regarded here as somewhat curious. The majority report which has now been accepted by the operators is that which was signed in June by the representative of the miners and by the chairman, while the representative of the operators at that time presented a minority report. This appears by reference to the records of the Labor Department here. It is stated, however, at the Department that the miners have now declined to accept this report.

Mutual Profits Pay almost Entire Premium

Here's an actual case of a $1000 policy which costs only $4.47 this year

THE extraordinary advantage which a profit-participation policy in the Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada offers to its policyholders is being proved over and over again. Policyholders whose insurance was taken out in the early history of the Company know it best of all, for they have experienced steadily decreasing premiums with scarcely a check for a period of fully half a century.

Hundreds of Such Cases

As a typical example let us take profit-participating policy number 1597, in this company, as illustrated on the chart. This $1,000 policy was carried for the first two years at a premium of $25.68. Inside four years dividends reduced the premium to the same level as that paid for a like amount of the cheapest non-participating insurance known at that time.

Although some of the following years showed slight checks and reactions, the whole trend of the premium was steadily downward, until in 1919 the policy cost the insured less than $2.00! Think of it—less than $2.00 to carry one thousand dollars of life insurance for a year.

Since then the premium rose a little by reason of the flu epidemic, but this year it was only $4.47!

Saving Totaled $472.85

Meanwhile the non-participating policy issued at the same time is costing $20.15 yearly, the premium at which it started, and which will remain the same as long as the policyholder lives. The difference between the two has meant a total saving of $472.85 to date in favor of the Mutual Profit-Participating Policy.

Could a more graphic illustration of the benefits of real mutuality, as applied to Life Insurance, be asked for?

HERE AND THERE

HIS OFFENSE CAN BE IMAGINED.

It takes not a little thought to arrive at even a suspicion why anybody wants to assassinate Dr. Einstein. Whoever has seen his picture knows how unlikely he is to excite angry passions in any minds. He is gentleness personified, and it is incredible that he ever gave anybody any of the ordinary forms of offense.

But wait! Not long ago he announced, or at least allowed somebody else, without denial, to announce, that there were not more than twelve people in the world who could understand his new theory of relativity. That, come to think of it, did waken something of animosity in every mind whose pounder lacked the self-confidence to number himself among the so exceptional dozen. Humiliation is an unpleasing sensation, and few if any turn more readily to dislike of him who causes it, and hatred is not far away.

This may not be the basis of the rumored plot against Dr. Einstein, but it is a working hypothesis that will stand until facts are brought forward to prove it untenable.—New York Times.

PASSING OF THE STEERAGE.

Most of the millions of immigrants from Europe to this country in former years came in the steerage. For a majority, perhaps, the voyage was more tragic than romantic. It is only within recent years that accommodations for steerage passengers have been brought to a humane standard. It has taken much agitation and strict governmental regulation to bring about the change. On most modern steamships on the North Atlantic the steerage is practically abolished. The large liners now uniformly have first, second and third-class passengers, but the third-class is better than was second-class a few years ago. This raising of steerage has been a factor in the change, but the controlling factor is keen competition by the companies. Quality of third-class accommodations is more important to-day than the number carried. The old-time steerage met its Waterloo for still another reason. Vessels with large steerage capacity could only be filled at the height of the season, and only on westbound voyages. Steamship owners have found it more profitable to provide comfortable cabins for third-class passengers and cater to all-year traffic.—Chicago Journal.

A GARDEN BY THE SEA

(William Morris.)

I know a little garden close,
Set thick with lily and red rose,
Where I would wander if I might
From dewy morn to dewy night,
And have one with me wandering.

And though within it no birds sing,
And though no pillared house is there,
And though the apple-boughs are bare
Of fruit and blossom, would to God
Her feet upon the green grass trod,
And I beheld them as before.

There comes a murmur from the shore,
And in the town two fair streams are,
Drawn from the purple hills afar,
Drawn down into the restless sea;
Dark hills whose heath-blooms fade no bue,
Dark shore no ship has ever seen,
Tormented by the billows green,
Whose murmur comes unceasingly
Into the place for which I cry.

For which I cry both day and night,
For which I let slip all delight,
Wherefor I grow both deaf and blind,
Careless to win, unskilled to find,
And quick to lose what ill men seek.

Yet, tottering as I am and weak,
Still have I left a little breath
To seek within the jaws of death
An entrance to that happy place,
To seek the unforgotten face,
Once seen, once kissed, once felt from me
Amid the murmuring of the sea.

THE FIRE FLOWER

It was the beginning of August when he first saw her. He had been pulling stumps in his clearing—charred stumps that blackened his hands and, in turn, his face. To the west along the river bank mile upon mile stretched an old brule, the whole a great garden of glorious, pale purple flowers, long spikes of pinks. Here blossoms, the fireweed, with which the Earth, after the flaming scourge of the bush has passed by, seeks to cover her black barrenness and desolation.

She was standing among the flowers watching him. Her dress was plain, of print, and in her hand she carried a big "cow-bite" hat. Her hair hair, oh, the beauty of it—her hair was crinkly, shining gold. There was a halo around her head in the light of the westering sun. At first he thought her unreal, the Spirit of the Fire Flowers, or a sister to the clumps of goldenrod scattered here and there among the purple blossoms.

Pallieu a huge spotted red hand brushed out of his overall pocket he wiped his dirty face. He liked the battered straw hat. He stood and stared at her with childish wonder, not at his friendly.

"I'll help you get that out," she said. She came forward, moving with ease and grace. She swung on to the stump with him after he had first adjusted the block under it, and with her added weight the stump quickly turned over. And that was the beginning of it.

Towards the end of September, when the muskegs were turning yellow and red, when every little bush and vine vied with its neighbor in vivid colorings, when the leaves and the poplars glowed golden against the dark green of the fir trees Russell Dennison and Hester Allen were married.

Russell and Hester were wonderfully happy in the beginning. They were impatiently integrated in everything about them and to each other. Their cleaning and their big house seemed to be a little bit of Paradise dropped down in the bush. It was an endless source of delight to Russell to watch his new wife working about the home. His eyes were never tired of following her busy fingers. Sometimes he wondered how he had ever existed before she came to him. And she in her turn adored him.

The long northern winter settled down upon them. At first the weather was soft and wet, the skies were dull. But by the new year the cold grew more intense, the days were shorter. Russell was chopping cord. Sometimes Hester went out and helped him with the underbrushing or with the pussy's axe. In the evening they sat by their big round-barrelled camp stove which they piled with three foot tamarac logs. Sometimes when there was a mess they would take a shod stump up the river on their snowshoes.

It was the middle of January. Russell came home one afternoon to find Gordon Patton there partaking of afternoon tea and cookies. Patton was a very likeable fellow and delightful to talk with, but of no use to anyone in the world, for even there was any whiskey within reach everything else went by the board. In fact, that was why he was living by himself in the bush, because his people would not have him at home where he was continually tempting them. So they paid him to stay there. When he found Hester made him welcome at home often, he began living all by himself in the bush grows lonely. In his bachelor days Russell had liked his self-sufficiency but now, with Hester there, and Patton being what he was.....

Life in the bush is monotonous in the winter, neighbors far away and friends few. Hester was always glad to see Patton. But Russell, coming in tired from his chopping and finding the man there once or perhaps even twice a week, felt outraged. Finally he ejaculated,

"Hi, I like to hear him talk. I like to listen to him. He tells such interesting stories. He's not like anyone else around here. And he's not doing any harm." Hester refused to see any reason why he should not come.

"Do you think I'm going to have him lazing around here, saying pretty things to you while I'm out working hard?"

Russell worked long hours. Now he worked longer. He stayed away in the bush. He grew sullen and suspicious. The little house became silent as their intimate conversations dwindled and the songs died in Hester's heart before they reached her lips. Hester resented his absence. She liked Patton only for the change and entertainment he afforded her. But she was a bit stubborn. She would not have it that he should not come.

Finally, one day Patton came was disgusted and perhaps a trifle afraid. Russell had seen him coming and returned to the house. Hester felt grateful for his protecting presence.

But Russell was more under the influence of his anger and jealousy than Patton was of drink. He had Hester's bags in the room. Hester, being unused to taking such brusque orders from anyone, refused to go. He glared at Patton belligerently.

"Whishda ya wanta send your wife out for, eh? She'll get cold. Pretty li'l girl. She—she makes good cake. Let 'er stay, Russ."

Russell's face was white. His mouth was grim. He took a couple of steps forward. Patton objected to being loaded at in that way.

"Say, you lookin' for a fight?" he asked stiffly.

Russell controlled himself with an obvious effort. He held the door open.

"I wouldn't fight with a drunken swine like you! Get out!"

"That's all right, my hand, I'm quit big enough!" He went out sarcastically and made his slightly unsteady way down the river bank, singing and hallooing at the top of his voice.

Russell shut the door and turned to his wife. He was a different man from the man she had known—the man she had first seen that summer day struggling with the blackened stumps, the man who later had adoringly watched her willing hands preparing food for him, performing duties, the man who had won her love twice over with a hundred tender attentions. He was a stranger. His eyes were wide and staring. His breathing was labored. She did not know this man.

He came across the room and stood in front of her. His hands were clenched. He gave her a shake; she thought it a ghastly smile. She hoped to goodness he was such a smile as this strange man gave her.

"We've been married four months," he said, "and already you're running after a new face and fine manners." His words seemed to speak with an effort. "I hope you're satisfied now you've had a taste. Now I'll be free for your pretty friend.... Friend? Say, isn't one man enough for you? What are you, a damned Queed-love? To think I ever wasted any love on such as you! .... and me working my fingers to the bone here for you! What do you know about love, a light thing like you? .... Flighty—flighty every time one of her was quivering. She edged away from him. He didn't love her any more. He thought such terrible things about her.

"Oh, you don't need to run away from me. I'm not going to touch you. I wouldn't lay a finger on you. No. I wouldn't touch you with a barge-pole." He turned from her with a sneer. He went out, banging the door to after him. He went back to the bush where he had been chopping. He sat down on a newly-felled spruce trunk, put his arms on his knees and looked at the snow.

He sat there till the sun was setting, till the cold was penetrating to the marrow of his bones. He lifted his face which no longer looked grim. "I hate myself like poison," he said. "It's hideous." He knew she didn't mean any harm. I'll go home and perhaps she'll forgive me and kiss me and forget all about it."

So Russell went back home. But he arrived to find no Hester. He searched the house. He found she had left on the train from the little station down below, but he was gone for she bought no ticket at the station.

Left to himself the winter seemed to close down upon him. By night the stars glittered overhead; the great Orion swung from east to south. Sometimes the northern lights marched back and forth across the sky; the moon showed up the snow, every tree and shrub alive, shone back at it. The tree trunks snapped like pistol shots with the cold. The wolf pack, horned owl, secure in the black shadows, drifted on wide wings through the trees and cried its melancholy note to the lonely bush—not more lonely than this man.

After a long, long time the spring came. The bare, brown patches of earth smelled sweet. The river was swollen with the melting snow.

"Perhaps she'll come back now, along with the birds," thought Russell wistfully. "I must get a garden in for her."

He planted the garden carefully with everything he thought she might like. Around the house he had pansies and sweet williams and by the south wall where he thought the summer frosts would not catch them he put in nasturtium seeds. By the time they germinated Hester knew. He kept the house spick and span in case she might return. Everything he did was for her. All his thoughts were of her. The sudden flicker of a bird's wing made him catch his breath.....Hester's dress was fluttering in the wind! When a song-sparrow sang from the roof of the house, day after day, with a white throat wistful with exquisite sweetness from the big stump by the river bank, he wished that Hester might be there to hear. The first tiny violets growing in the moss he picked for her and put in water. Sometimes he grew desperate with longing and rushed out and threw himself into his work so that he might be too tired to think. He hoped against hope.

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" GAVE IT

Chronic Constipation or Insufficient action of the bowels, is one of the great causes of disease. Some authorities even claim that Constipation must be permanently corrected. This is a great mistake, because here is the proof that constipation can be cured and the bowels made to act regularly and naturally.

TAMWORTH, P.E.

"For years, I was troubled with Constipation, and had to take laxatives and purgatives all the time. If I neglected to take them, the bowels would refuse to do their work.

"About two years ago, a friend advised me to try "Fruit-a-tives", which I did. The first box helped me so much that I obtained three more supplies of the remedy and continued the treatment. After using about eight boxes, my bowels were able to perform their particular function without aid.

"The relief my case has been lasting, as up to date, I have never had any further trouble. I can recommend "Fruit-a-tives" to all suffering as I did and I am sure they will derive equal benefit".

A. W. FRANKLIN.

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c., or sent postpaid by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa, Ont.

Yet Hester did not come.

The bud of spring blossomed into summer. July were sway, August came. The fireweed was in bloom again. For spoon and, mile upon mile, the old brules were alight with the glorious pale purple flowers. This was the time she had first come to him. He felt that if she did not come soon she would never come at all. He went back to work among the blackened stumps beside the river.

"Oh, God!" his heart cried in an agony of yearning. Oh, God! Give Hester back to me now for the flowers have come again. For me—I have no fire flowers to grow in me to set my love ablaze. Hester don't you understand? .... Hester, my love, my love!"

He could not be idle. He fell to work on the old half-burned stumps. The solid roots he attacked with his axe. He worked arduously. Stump after stump turned out before his fierce grasp. Now he was working right in among the flowers. Here was a bad stump. It did not want to come. There must be a root binding underneath. He fell to work with his mattock, his axe, then back with his block and jack.

As he was straining every muscle, a voice with a little break in it spoke to him. "I'll pay you ten dollars —if you'll let me," it said, hesitatingly.

Here, standing among the tall flowers, was Hester in a plain print dress and with her hat in her hand. Her dark hair had caught the light of the sun in its crinkles, outrivalling the scattered clumps of goldenrod. Her face was wistful. She smiled at him uncertainly.

"Hester—Hester!" he whispered hoarsely.

"I thought perhaps you might have got over being angry with me," she said, "and I wanted to come back .... when the fireweed was blossoming again. So I left Patton and came on as I never would have the courage again."

His was all clay and charcoal dust and sweat. As he crossed the intervening pace, half consciously he pulled out his big red handkerchief and made a rough pass at his face. He held out his arms to her. She saw the look that was in his eyes and she did not mind the clay nor the charcoal dust nor the sweat.

"Hester .... Hester .... you have come back to me .... oh, thank God! .... you've come back to me .... with the fire flowers."

WEDDING BELLS
YATEMAN — BELL

A pretty wedding took place in Scott's Methodist Church at half past eleven o'clock on Wednesday, August 9th, when Miss Myrtle Viola Bell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Bell, of the 4th concession of Sidney, was united in marriage to Mr. Horace L. Yateman, of Trenton. The church was very tastefully decorated with foliage and flowers and the occasion was unique in that it was the first wedding service ever held in the church. The wedding march was played by Miss Doris Bradshaw, of Thurlow, and the ceremony was performed by Rev. W. E. Honey. The bride, becomingly attired in Canton Crepe, was given away in Canton Crepe, was given away by the friends retired to the home of the bride where they participated in a sumptious repast, after which the young couple left on a motor trip to Toronto and Oshawa. On their return they will reside in Thurlow.

Woman's Sphere

THE CORN HUSKER

(Pauline Johnson)

Hard by the Indian lodges, where the bush
Brooks in a clearing, through ill-fashioned fields,
She comes to labor, when the first still hush
Of daybreak follows large and restful yields.

Age in her fingers, hunger in her face,
Her shoulders stooped with weight of work and years,
But rich in tawny colouring of her race,
She comes a-field to strip the purple ears.

And all her thoughts are with the days gone by
Ere night's injustice banished from their lands,
Her people, that today unheeded lie,
Like the dead husks that rustle through her hands.

CUCUMBERS
BY BERTHA E. SHAPLEIGH
Cooking Authority for N.E.A. Service and Columbia University.

While cucumbers are in season one has to use them very often, either fresh or made into pickles and relishes.

The very young cucumbers are better sliced, with oil and vinegar, but older ones are excellent cooked.

Forego people have this, and as cucumbers are one of the oldest known vegetables many interesting recipes has come down in history. In the Orient cucumbers are stuffed and baked.

Cucumbers parced, cut in one-inch pieces crosswise, may be fried in a little oil or butter.

Dip the pieces of cucumber in egg slightly beaten and diluted with two tablespoons water.

Roll in flour. Or corn meal the pieces thus dipped and cook slowly in the fat. They should be sort all the way through and nicely browned.

THE CHRONICLES OF AUNT JANE

Her Impressions of The Intelligencer Office on her first visit to the City, after 65 years on the farm.

My dear Samuel:—Tom will see from this that I have survived the trip and am still alive. My rheumatism has not bothered me so much as usual since I left, perhaps because I have not had time to think about it. I am fairly comfortable in this house, and get enough to eat, though I don't think their eggs are as good as the brown ones from Shady, our keghorn. I hope you feed the hens regularly and see they are carefully penned up at nights.

We had a fairly good trip on the train, although the woman next to me would insist on keeping the window open. The smuts were flying pretty freely and I had the satisfaction of seeing that her face was quite dirty when she got off.

Of course Sarah insisted on taking me to see the Intelligencer office in person. Tom you know your Uncle George has taken the Intelligencer ever since you were born, and thinks there is no paper like it. So nothing would do Sarah but I had to go along and see it. A very pleasant young woman showed us over, and at Sarah's request offered to show us over. Of course I can't explain it very well because I don't know the names of half the things. We saw some girls working in a "bindery," though couldn't see anything for them to bind, except a lot of sheets of paper, so it seemed foolish to call a place where Uncle George's binder would hardly have room to move among the things "a bindery."

Then we went on to another room where the editor worked. It was littered all over with papers. There were a nice young lady and there and they were all too busy to take any notice of me.

From there the young lady took us into another long room. Down one side were a number of thingummybobs. I forget what the lady called them, but with new printing on them like the cash register at the corner grocery. Every once in a while a long arm would come down from below and print a number and I begged Susan to go on because I was afraid it would hit the poor men who sat in front of them. There was a dreadful smell of gas and a smell something like as if the pot had boiled dry on the kitchen stove. I thought they used type in a printing office and I remember some your Uncle George bought you some when he was in Toronto to see Sun. But all they had here was little flat bars of bright metal. The name escapes me, but I think so but I dropped it quick. If their type is so hot as that I can understand why Zebedee Kind, who is a re-F. O. man gets so hot when he reads a Conservative paper.

Then we went back down stairs to another department and here they showed us the press. I couldn't understand how they printed a paper on it, because all I could see was sheets and a lot of white paper on a big roll, and you know the Intelligencer is in two big sheets. Sarah talked at me on one side, and a big, jolly-looking man explained on the other, but I was mostly smothered with the smell of gasoline, so I guess I couldn't take it in very well.

Anyhow, we had a nice visit, and I shall be more interested in the Intelligencer then ever now. They had my name in the paper next day, so I suppose it was worth climbing the stairs and smelling the smells to get "fame" My, won't Mrs. Samifra be jealous when she gets her paper to-day and sees my name in it as large as life.

Now, my dear Samuel, I must close this letter and run on to go to Front Street with her shopping.

Be sure you don't forget your chest protector these cool evenings. I hope you won't forget to feed the cat, and give the canary fresh seed every day, and change the water.

Give my love to Ann and the children. I must close now.

Your loving—Aunt Jane.

THE BANDBOX

By
Louis Joseph Vance

"I'll tell you." Staff crossed the room and picked up the string and label which had been on the box. Returning, he examined the latter and read aloud the name in the shop the afternoon you ordered your hat sent to me, though she steadily refused to tell me who was responsible for that imposition. Now, on the jury today, our luggage was placed side by side, hers with mine—both in the ll section, you understand. My examination was finished first and I was taken back to my statement to be searched, as you know. While I was gone, her examination was evidently finished, for when I came back she had left the pier with all her things. Quite plainly she must have taken your box by mistake for her own; this, of course, is her hat. As I said at first, find Miss Searle and you'll find your hat and necklace. Also, find the person to whom you confided this gay young swindling scheme of yours, and you'll find the person who was intimate enough with the affair to come to my rooms in my absence and go direct to the bandbox for the necklace."

"I—but I told nobody," she stammered.

By the look in her eyes he disbelieved her.

"Not even Max, the mourning, before you decided that reward?" he asked shrewdly.

"Well—yes; I told him."

"Then you have confided it to somebody else; three things spread. Or probably Jane may have blabbed."

"I—I did," she protested, but without conviction in her accents; "whether of them would be so foolish ...."

"I'd find out, if I were you."

"I shall. Meanwhile—who has Jane—where's she stopping?"

"I don't know—some hotel. It'll be easy enough to find her in the morning."

"Will you try?"

"Assuredly—the first thing."

"Then—there appears to be nothing else for me to do now," said she woman in a curiously subdued manner.

Without replying, certainly, Staff took up the bandbox very quietly and slipped it over her shoulders.

"Thank you," said she, moving toward the door. "Good night."

"Oh," he protested politely, "I must see you out."

"It's not necessary—I can find my way."

"But only I know how to fix the front door."

At the foot of the stairs, while he fumbled with the latch, Madame bent, as though with some little hesitation.

"I presume," she said stiffly—"I presume, that this—eh—ends it."

Staff opened the door an inch and held it so. "If by 'it,' he replied, "we mean the same thing—"

"We do."

"It does," he answered with his pleasant smile.

She delayed an instant longer. "But all the same," she said hastily, at length, "I want that prize."

"My play?" he enquired with again feant emphasis.

"Yes, of course," she said sharply.

"Well, since I'm under contract with Max, I don't well see how I can take it after writing 'Finis.' And besides, you're only woman living who can play it properly."

"So good of you." Her hand lay slim and cool in his for the fraction of an instant. "Good night," she iterated, withdrawing it.

"Good night."

As he let her out, Staff, glancing down, at the waiting taxicab, was surprised by the discovery that she had not come alone. A man stood in waiting by the door—a man in evening clothes; by Max but a taller man, more slender, with a better carriage. Turning to help the girl into the cab, the street lights threw his face in sharp relief against the blackness of the window; and Staff knew him. "Kalroyd!" he said beneath his breath.

He closed the door and set the latch, suffering from a species of mild astonishment. His psychological processes seemed to be out of balance; he felt as he was hardly playing the game according to Hoyle. A man who has just broken with the woman with whom he believed himself desperately in love naturally counts on feeling a vacuum in his mouth. And never let drive off with one whom he has every right to consider in the light of a hated rival, he ought in common decency to suffer poignant pangs of jealousy. But Staff didn't; he couldn't honestly make himself believe that he was suffering in any way whatever. Indeed, the most violent emotion to which he was sensible was one of chagrin over his own infatuate myopia.

"Ass!" he called himself, slowly re-ascending the stairs. "You might've seen this coming long ago, if you hadn't wilfully chosen to be blind as a bat!"

Nevertheless he pulled himself up with a start and a cry of sincere amazement.

"Well, I'll be damned!"

"Then why not lead a better life?" enquired Mr. Ill.

He was standing in the doorway to the bedroom, looking much like an exceptionally cruel caricature of himself. As he spoke, he absorbed wearily over to the wing-chair Alison had recently occupied, and dropped into it like a dead weight.

NASTY SLAM AT OUR FAIR CITY

A direct case of adding insult to injury will be noticed in the following comment on a short item appearing in this paper and referring to Ian Sutherland's Oshawa goose. Read is for yourself.

Speaking of umpires Tom Gleesone is improving, but he never gives Belleville anything. Gleesone came third in Belleville and evidently did not like the city, although the ball team can't help that—Belleville Intelligencer. Any person who was obliged to undergo the punishment of living in Belleville should be allowed a little latitude in trying to get even.—Port Hope Guide.

Mr. Lockington knows perfectly well that Belleville has always been noted as being a city of industrious workers and pretty girls, not to mention its baseball and hockey fame, and that's what helps to make any city attractive. So it is very difficult to fathom this "crack" unless,—but they have a jail at Port Hope too, though.

BRITISH YOUTHS ARE ADVENTURERS

Set Out on September 1st For An Uninhabited Island

London, Aug. 11.—Discouraged at the outlook in this country, dissatisfied with the after-war Britain, but attracted mainly by a love of adventure, about a dozen engineers' students of Loughborough college are setting out on September 1 for an uninhabited Pacific island belonging to Ecuador.

Most of them are ex-officers. Among them is an author, D. L. Duvil who wrote "Ya Brat." He expects to find in the new settlement work for his pen as well as his hands. A 90- ton vessel is being made ready for the expedition.

The chief means of existence they hope to find by utilizing the resources of the island itself; the development of fruit-growing and the breeding of cattle.

All hands will be required to work although climatic conditions, it has been ascertained, are ideal and all they will need for food can be obtained without working, if they are content just to "lost and invite their souls." Their destined home, the adventurers say, is about 600 miles from the Panama Canal.

FAMOUS BANK IN NEW BUILDING

Bank of England to Have Commodious and Up-to-Date Premises

London, Aug. 12.—The long projected rebuilding of the Bank of England will start almost immediately, the Daily Express understands. A meeting of the directors is to be held soon to make the necessary financial arrangements.

It is understood that the plans to be adopted are those of Herbert Baker, the architect who collaborated with Sir Edwin Lutyens for the new capitol at Delhi. Mr. Baker was also the designer of the South African government's administrative buildings at Pretoria, and of the cathedrals at Capetown, Pretoria and Salisbury (Rhodesia), and the Cecil Rhodes memorial on Table Mountain.

The staff of the Bank of England is now double what it was shortly before the war, largely owing to the vast growth accommodations are utterly inadequate. The National Debt, and the existing Sections of the staff have been working for a long time at various places in the vicinity of the bank.

A special committee of the directors, including Cecil Lubbock, has been considering alternative schemes for the rebuilding. The idea of razing the whole of the existing one-story building to the ground was, it is understood, abandoned partly on sentimental grounds and partly because of the difficulties of obtaining accommodation for the staff during the reconstruction. The present proposal is to retain the outer wall, which abuts on Threadneedle street, St. Bartholomews Lane, Lothbury and Princes street. This wall, which entirely surrounds the site of between three and four acres, was erected from the designs of Sir John Soane about 130 years ago, shortly after the Gordon Riots, when the bank clerks, sword and pistol in hand, defended the bank against a furious mob.

The wall is in the classic Grecian style, and in some places is 40 feet high. Security demanded that it have no windows and the architect achieved the difficult task of making the wall look ornamental by masking it with Corinthian columns and blank windows. The new building will rise within the wall to a height of 70 or 80 feet above it, and will thus be nearly 120 feet in height.

TURKESTAN SWINGS TO PRIVATE CAPITAL

Removal of Regulations and Decrees Which Retarded Commerce

Moscow, Aug. 12.—Far greater concessions toward a complete capitalistic state of affairs than prevail on Russia proper have just been made by the Soviet government in Turkestan.

The Turkestan economic council decided to remove all regulations and previous decrees which restrained trade and commerce and to retain control only of a very few "key" industries." Turkestan is normally one of the largest cotton growing regions of the world.

The decision came as a result of two factors—first, the unprofitableness of government controlled industries, and second, the unrest among the population due to the revolt against the Soviet regime which is being led in Bokhara by Enver Pasha, formerly commander-in-chief of the Turkish armies.

Cotton growing has increased greatly during the past few years. The pre-war area sown with cotton in Russian middle Asia was nearly 400,000 desstines. In 1921 about 100,000 desstines were sown and this year, in Turkestan, without Bokhara and Khiva, where the Enver Pasha revolt is stronger than in Turkestan, only 63,000 desstines were sown. This is expected to yield about 45,000 tons of cotton. To transport this to the Russian factories about 20 trillion Soviet rubles will be required by the Turkestan cotton committee. The state bank has assigned only one trillion, and though the trillion more are to be forthcoming, much of this cotton will remain in Turkestan unless private enterprise shows it. The railway conditions are also unfavorable for its transport.

Music and Drama

TWO STARS IN BIG PICTURE

"I bought you, I paid for you, and you're my wife!"

This graphic speech, the peak of one of the big dramatic scenes of a famous stage play, causes an equal tenseness in William DeMille's screen version of "Bought and Paid For", which again delighted a large audiences at Griffin's last night, and is receiving its final exhibition tonight. Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt, the featured players, both Paramount stars of reputation and popularity, were seen at their best in their trying roles. Walter Hiers, a light comedian of talent, was excellent in his portrayal of a young husband. Mr. DeMille's deft hand is seen in every scene of this captivating photoplay which is acclaimed as one of the best productions of the current season.

An amusing Century comedy, a beautiful travelogue, and Georgs Walsh in the interesting chapter-play, "With Stanley in Africa," are being exhibited in addition to the feature offering.

DAVID POWELL AND MISS DUPONT AT GRIFFIN'S MONDAY IN NEW PLAYS

An entrancing novel by a popular author, interpreted by a splendid cast headed by David Powell, the featured player, and actually filmed in the identical locales of which the author wrote—such is "The Spanish Jade," a Paramount picture which is to be exhibited on the double feature program at Griffin's this Monday to Wednesday.

The story in question is "Spanish Jade", written by Maurelce Hewlett, one of the foremost novelists of the day. It graphically recounts the struggle of a beautiful Spanish girl for happiness and of the sacrifice she was prepared to make for the man who had risked his life to aid her. David Powell, Marc McDermott, Harry Ham and Evelyn Brent are in the cast and the picture, as its title implies, was entirely filmed in Spain.

"The Rage of Paris," a colorful Universal five-reel photodrama, presenting the spectacular blonde beauty, Miss du Pont, is the second feature offering on the same program. The picture is a screen adaptation of a magazine story, "The White Peacock Feather," by Du Vernet Rabell. Heralded as "the screen's most beautiful blonde," the new Universal star adds, to her exquisite charms, a dramatic ability that is poignant. Her bearing, her poise, her genteel mannerisms all proclaim her a truly regal queen.

"The Rage of Paris" is a vivid narrative of a girl's struggle between love and her mother's selfish desires. She relinquishes her lover and marries the man of her mother's choice. He has wealth and good looks, but she loathes him when he proves himself a despicable cad. She leaves him and goes to Paris, taking up dancing, and scores such a tremendous success that she becomes "The Rage of Paris." In all the glamour and fame, she still craves the love of the man denied her by her selfish mother. The working out of this intensely interesting drama carries the story from the night life of Paris to the sands of Arabia.

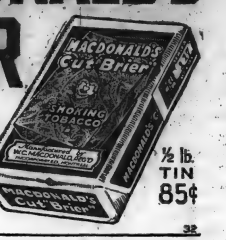

Al. St. John is appearing on the same program in an original and amusing two-reel comedy titled "The Hayseed."

Keep Children Well During Hot Weather

Every mother knows how fatal the hot summer months are to small children. Cholera Infantum, diarrhoea, dysentry and stomach troubles are rife at this time and often a precious little life is lost after only few hours illness. The mother who keeps Baby's Own Tablets in the house feels safe. The occasional use of the Tablets prevents stomach and bowel troubles, or if the trouble comes suddenly—as it generally does—the Tablets will bring the baby safely through. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

REV. C. S. APPLEGATH
SUES EDITOR OF PORT HOPE GUIDE

Members of Bay of Quinte Methodist Conference hoped they had heard the last of Port Hope church issues, but it now learned that a libel action is being instituted by Rev. Charles Sinclair Applegath against George Wilson, ex-Mayor, and W. T. R. Preston, according to the writ issued to-day at Osgoode Hall.

Mr. Applegath claims damages for an alleged libel published in the Port Hope Evening Guide on May 8th of this year.

Mr. Applegath's action follows friction during his pastorate at Port Hope, which culminated in a church trial of which the findings were recently made public. Mr. Applegath is now pastor of a Hamilton church.

U.S. TARIFF BILL AND FOREIGN TRADE

The Fordney - McCumber Measure May Become Law in October

Washington, Aug. 11.—While there is still more or less talk in Washington that the Fordney-McCumber tariff measure will not go into effect until next winter and may not go into effect at all, the fact that the Senate is expected to pass the measure this month has caused the belief to obtain quite generally that it will become law about the first of October. And this is causing a great deal of speculation about the effect on United States business with other countries.

The rates in the bill are extremely high and in some cases almost or entirely prohibitive. The evidence on this point is so strong that it can hardly be open to successful disputes.

The truth is the bill has been shaped by a small group of extreme protectionists in the House and Senate working in conjunction with high protectionists outside. The believers in low tariffs or moderate tariffs in the two houses have been like those crying in the wilderness so far as shaping the bill is concerned.

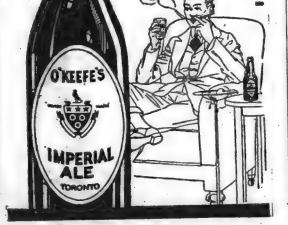

It is a most interesting fact that the high tariff advocates are openly talking the position that the country's exports have little to do with the country's imports. In other words, they are contending that shutting down on importations through high tariffs will not curtail exportations and not hurt markets for the United States abroad. They are deaf to all arguments that the only way for the United States to build up a great foreign trade is to permit the tariff barriers to be kept down to a moderate level and thus permit a considerable amount of import trade.

The evidences that the trade between the United States and Canada is tending to decline under the emergency tariff and that Canadian-British trade is increasing are having no effect on the high tariff elements in Congress. It is a fact, so far as that is concerned, that even the moderate tariff elements in Congress have not seemed to appreciate to the fullest extent the meaning of the growing trade between Canada and Great Britain and the declining trade between Canada and the United States.

What trade and business conditions in this country are going to follow on the enactment of the new measure will constitute one of the most important propositions which has faced the United States in years. Unless the critics of the bill are much in error in their economics, it will be followed by heavy declines in the foreign trade. .

AN ANGLER'S PARADISE

Two hundred miles north of Toronto and one hundred and seventy miles west of Ottawa is situated Algonquin Park, where the fishing this year is better than it has been for some time. Great catches are being made—Black bass running three and four pounds, speckled trout three pounds and salmon trout up to twenty-five pounds. This park is ideal for the camper and canoe cruiser, and good hotel accommodation makes it the popular spot for the summer vacationist who does not like to rough it. GREAT LAKES TOUR

In a letter to headquarters of the Grand Trunk from a prominent Australian travelling through Canada, he refers to his trip through the Great Lakes, via the Northern Navigation Co's steamer "Noronic" (Canadian National Grand Trunk Steamships) as follows: "The trip through the lakes is to be strongly recommended. There is no doubt that the Navigation Companies of the Pacific and the Atlantic have much to learn in catering to the comfort of passengers from the Northern Navigation Co." This tribute to one of our inland Canadian Navigation Companies is gratifying coming from one who has travelled through all parts of the world.

Lord Northcliffe Closes in Peace A Strenuous Life

Famous British Journalist and Publicist Died in London This Morning—Had a Remarkably Successful Career and Wielded Vast Influence Through His Journals

PEACE FOLLOWS DELIRIUM

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, August 14.—Viscount Northcliffe, noted British publicist died this morning. The news of Lord Northcliffe's death was given out by the doctors who have been attending him in the following bulletin:

"Viscount Northcliffe died at 10-12 o'clock. The end was perfectly peaceful."

Later it was said the cause of death was suppuration, or production of pus within the heart, followed by acute blood poisoning.

Alfred Charles William Harmsworth was the most influential publicist figure in Europe and wielded immense power. He was born in Dublin, Ireland, July 15, 1865, son of an Irish barrister and a genius for journalism took him to London, England, where he became sub-editor at the age of 21. Young Harmsworth soon became a spectacular figure and purchased the London Evening News. In 1896 he founded the Daily Mail. Made baronet in 1904, he was raised to the peerage in 1905. In 1908 he became chief owner of Times. He is survived by his wife. He had no children.

Lord Northcliffe was ill at the time the Armistice was signed. His illness was diagnosed as due to sclerosis of the thyroid gland, for which he underwent an operation in June, 1919. Although he was incapacitated, he carried considerable influence on the British government during the Peace Conference at Versailles.

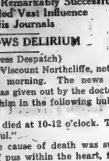

Plans were made early in 1921 for a world tour. The start was delayed until July because of labor troubles, involving the publishing industry, and other causes of hostilities between Lloyd George and himself. Lord Northcliffe attacked the motives of the Premier and Winston Churchill in desiring to represent Great Britain at the Washington Arms Conference. As a result of this attack Lord Northcliffe was barred from the Northcliffe press. Lord Northcliffe mislaid for America defying the boycott.

Shortly after the completion of his world tour, differences grew in the Newspaper Proprietors' Association over wage matters. Lord Northcliffe entrenched certain methods of the newer members of the Association. He later resigned.

In May, 1922, dissension broke out between Northcliffe and other members of the Associated Newspapers Ltd., owners of the Northcliffe press. In June, 1922 libel suits were brought against Lord Northcliffe by Sir George Newnes, vice-chairman, and Walter C. Fish, a director of Associated Newspapers.

The day on which the announcement of the filing of these suits was made, Northcliffe was reported to be suffering from a nervous breakdown in a London hotel. He was brought back to England several days later, and was reported then to be ill from ptomaine poisoning.

Early in July his differences with Lloyd George were said to have been ended and the libel actions brought by Fish and Caird were said to have been dropped. His health, however, continued to grow worse, his ailment being diagnosed as due to "unknown poisoning."

TWO ACCIDENTS OVER WEEK END

American Car Strikes Wagon Near Corbyville—Car Hit on Front Street

An Oldsmobile, owned and driven by Hugh Wilcox, 6343 Turnbull Avenue, Detroit, struck a farm wagon which was being driven by Percy Reynolds aged 16, son of John Reynolds, R. R. No. 1, Corbyville, on Friday last; damaging the wagon to the extent of $10 and skinning one of the horses badly.

The accident occurred at the bridge near Foxboro. The car was bound for Havelock.

Car is Side Swiped.

Mr. Joe Black, North Front street, reports that no car was struck by another car while it stood at the curb in front of his store on Saturday at 11.15 a.m.

The car while turning on Front street struck his car damaging it slightly, then swerved into the curb long enough for the number to be jotted down.

SUNDAY FIRE IN RESIDENCE

The Fire Department received an alarm on Sunday morning about 10 a.m. to make a run to a fire which had broken out in the house at 102 James street, occupied by Mr. Pulky.

The Brigade was soon on the scene, and after some difficulty, extinguished the blaze. The fire started in the partition between the woodshed and the kitchen, and it was rather difficult to get at it. The tar paper also made a dense black smoke which was disagreeable to fire fighters.

It is not known how the fire started. Damage to the extent of $500 were sustained, it is believed.

The Pulky family were in Kingston on Sunday and had neighbors not noticed the smoke, the house might have been burned to the ground.

EXPECTS PEACE AMONG MINERS

Operators and Men Confident Settlement of Strike is Near

OUTLOOK IS GOOD

Question of Arbitration To be Threshed Out To-day at Cleveland

Cleveland, O., Aug. 14.—The coal peace conference buckles into its second week today with union chiefs declaring that settlement of the Minnesota strike will be here by Wednesday.

Last night John L. Lewis, national head of the United Mine Workers, said: "I am optimistic that it will be possible to reach an agreement within the next 48 hours. We are hopeful the conference will develop something definite along this line. The developments of the last twelve hours have been gratifying and portend an end of the long strike now entering its twentieth week. An important development in respect to the anthracite situation also has taken place today, and I feel assured that a joint conference of operators and miners will be arranged and actually take place within a few days."

Among the 150 union representatives here the general talk is that they will be checking out by Wednesday with the strike settled. The question of arbitration is to be threshed out tomorrow. Michael Gallagher, President of the Pittsburg Coal Operators' Association of Ohio, and Mr. Lewis have been striving to frame a plank on this "Gordian question" that is the new term attached to the idea, and the chief difficulty is in finding a formula which to the miners will mean arbitration and to the operators will look something like arbitration.

The miners, Mr. Lewis says, have not receded one jot from their position against arbitration. If settlement terms are reached, the men are expected to be ordered back to the pits forthwith, the matter of a referendum vote to be taken up later. Opinion is it would be a mere formality.

EXPLOSION ON ADRIATIC KILLS FIVE OF CREW

Cause Was Spontaneous Combustion in Coal Hold

BURY VICTIMS AT SEA

Passengers Raised $7,000 For Families of Dead and Injured Men

Aboard the Steamship Adriatic, off New England, August 13.—An explosion occurring yesterday aboard the steamship Adriatic in the reserve coal hatch killed five members of the crew and injured four others.

The explosion, which took place at 1.30 a.m., was caused by spontaneous combustion.

Not a passenger was killed. Of the five members of the crew who were killed, one was believed to have been blown overboard.

The following description of the explosion was given by Martin P. Glynn, former Governor of New York, a newspaperman and a passenger:

"It came like a clap of thunder.

"The captain of the ship, Hugh R. David, is a strict disciplinarian, and this showed today when he performed great work. He had the fire in the hold under control and the ship again on her way a few hours after the explosion."

"The discipline, the courtesy of all the officers was admirable, and the members of the crew were true to the best tradition of English seamanship.

"The explosion and the attending flash awakened me. I landed on deck, to find scores before me, and there we stayed until the van came up, and what we saw was complimentary to human nature.

"It was a tense time. There was solemnity, a seriousness in the air, a quietness of speech, a hush of expectancy, and a looking of fate in the face, but no whimpering, no snivelling, no hysteria, no wailing, no sound of complaint.

"Then while the boat was still drifting and the pumps plugging away, from out of the shadows came the voice of a woman, who said:

"Captain David will pull us through all right!'

"And he did."

Last evening, while the sun was gliding down the western sky, two of the victims, embedded in the Faierlie Jacks, were interred in the deep, while 1,500 people stood in reverential attitude as the bodies slipped over the side of the ship for which they had given their lives.

QUICK CHANGE ARTISTS JAILED

Use of Dope Causes Down-fall of Two Smartly Dressed Youths

CAUGHT IN PETERBORO

Described by Crown Attorney Carnew, K.C., as being superior boys, possessing educational advantages, Frank Taylor and Thomas Hughes, two well-groomed and presentable-looking young men, appeared before Magistrate Masson this morning to receive sentence on a charge of theft, to which they had pleaded guilty. They were sentenced to one month in the county jail dating from July 28th, the day of their arrest, and they must make restitution and say costs amounting to $38.05.

Hughes and Taylor pleaded guilty to a charge of theft on Saturday morning, in connection with a short change deal in which they figured, and came out $10 to the good. The offence was committed on a Bridge street grocery over three weeks ago. The boys then left Belleville for Peterboro, where they were arrested on warrants on advice from the Belleville police, and were given suspended sentence of one year by Magistrate Langley at Peterboro on the charge, before being brought back to this city by Plainclothesman Truslach.

Bad Cases.

When arrested at Peterboro, Taylor, whose home is in Montreal, had nine decks of "coke" in his possession, and is a self-confessed narcotic addict.

"I have used dope," he exclaimed this morning, "and know I have got to quit, but I am going back to Montreal and get to work."

Hughes, who is the younger of the two, and "as smooth as they make them," is in very delicate health, suffering at present from tuberculosis. To this fact the boys owe the exceedingly lenient view which both Crown Attorney Carnew and the Magistrate have taken of the case. Hughes is out on parole from Otta-

St. John's Report Says 800 Officers and Men Were All Landed

St. John's, Nfld., Aug. 14.—If the present fair weather holds, there is a possibility that the British cruiser Raleigh, aground on Point Amour, Labrador, may be refloated, according to reports reaching here tonight from the scene of the wreck. The sea was smooth in the straits of Belle Isle, the report said, and the wrecking tugs were expected hourly.

Vessels sent from Quebec by the Canadian Government when the grounding of the Raleigh was reported by wireless, were due up Point Amour tonight. The cruiser struck early Wednesday morning during a dense fog while making for Forteau Bay, returning from a cruise along the coast of Labrador. The tender

New Fuel Controller Says Citizens Will Have to Burn Soft Variety

J. A. Ellis, Ontario's new fuel controller, held a conference with about 30 leading coal dealers yesterday afternoon. Premier Drury attended it for a few minutes. Mr. Ellis expressed the opinion that coal will have to be doled out in small quantities this winter and that even the United States will have to adopt a coal rations system. He said that little hope of securing anthracite from Wales or the United States and that soft coal would have to be burned in the furnaces. He stated further that we will have to depend on the United States and Wales for our bituminous coal, as Nova Scotia cannot supply a great deal. TWO TORONTO GIRLS DROWN AT RICE LAKE

Mabel Swan and Polly Frost Lose Lives While Swimming

Peterboro, Aug. 14—Two Toronto girls, Mabel Swan, aged 18, and Polly Frost, aged 20, employed by J. F. McDonagh, of Toronto, were drowned Thursday afternoon near the summer home of their employer in Rice Lake. The two girls left the McDonagh cottage on Mclntyre Island to go swimming in the afternoon. They did not return at the expected time, and a search was made. The clothes of the young women were found on the bank and after much searching the bodies were recovered.

Dr. G. M. Ferrie, the coroner, of Cobourg, was called, but decided that the drowning was purely accidental and that an inquest would not be necessary. The bodies are being shipped to Toronto today.

A sad feature of the fatality is that Miss Swan's father and mother, who are still in Ireland, were preparing to sail shortly for Canada. In addition to her parents Miss Swan is survived by three sisters in Toronto, Violet, of Crawford street; Mrs. A. Molloy, of 596 Crawford street, the wife of P. C. Alfred Molloy, of No. 1 station, and Mrs. Kelly, of 61 Fermanagh avenue, and one brother in London, Ontario.

Miss Frost, who came from Ireland, had been in Canada less than a month.

The bodies are being sent to Toronto.

CALLING THE CATTLE HOME

In the Mountains of North Carolina the Note of the Yodel Is Still Heard.

I sometimes wonder where the cattle calls heard in the Carolina mountains came from, syllables melodiously fancied down from one generation to the next, Wade of Kirkland writes in the Outlook.

When the sharp cries scurrying and scurrying with sharp, hurried bleatings across a pasture seem with herders grey and shaggy as themselves, the cry that brings them to the salting is "sheep-sheep, sheep-sheep." When the cowbells are hear at hand, their tuneless clamor subdued by sunbaking tree and bush, there is no need of calling the cows home, but when these are slow in returning from pasturage in the long gold twilight; then the cattle call of the mountains is a cry long to be remembered.

Some mountain women standing by the bars suddenly straightens and breathes deep, then utters a rich yodel that rings and echoes far and far up the black recessed cover where she knows what mysterious evening herdment intervals, until full darkness possesses the forest, when another bird begins, and the pathos of the whippoorwill issues from the wood like the ghost of an old fall.

Tomorrow. — When here recently Mr. Grant Hall, Vice-President C. P. R. said his trip was simply in the nature of an ordinary inspection tour and that the company had no definite plans in mind connected with it. The new pier work will proceed as rapidly as possible.

As far as he could judge from his trip through the prairies and from reports received, there would be a good crop. The work of the company was making its usual preparations for handling the crop as efficiently and expeditiously.

Asked if the big harvest and readjustment of freight rates would necessitate the company would carry larger quantities of coal, Mr. Hall replied that it was a matter over which the Canadian Pacific had no control.

"It all rests with the owner of the grain," he said. "We are prepared to haul it either East or West, just as he directs."

Rumor periodically revives the story that the Canadian Pacific is about to electrify its mountain lines in British Columbia. In regard to this Mr. Hall stated, as he has on former visits here, that the company is still conducting experiments with a view at some later date of formulating a policy in regard to the proposed electrification. The impression he gave was that if the plan is pronounced feasible by its experts and the company is ready, it will proceed with the work. In any event this is liable to be a considerable time distant.

The vice-president was accompanied through the British Columbia division by Mr. F. W. Peters, general superintendent. He was met on arrival here by leading officials of the company and several personal friends.

Assiniboia, Alberta. — A further programme of improvement of lines of the Canadian Pacific in the west was announced by D. C. Coleman, vice-president in charge of Western lines, who is on his way west.

The largest item on the list was the relaying with one hundred pound steel of the double track between Ignace and Kenora.

A considerable number of bridges will be replaced with more permanent structures.

With respect to work on new branch lines it was announced that the existing gap on the Weyburn-Lethbridge will be closed; the line from Russell north will be completed; the first fifty miles of the Lanigan northerly line will be fully equipped for traffic; and the grading will be continued on the branch lines from Cossell east. In this connection, Mr. Coleman said: "We had hoped to announce a larger programme of branch line construction but until the effect of the freight rate reductions just ordered on the revenues of the railway companies can be accurately determined, it is obvious that an ambitious policy is out of the question."

Port Hope. — The C. P. R. Port Hope bridge is fifteen hundred feet long. It is an interesting question how long it will require to paint it and how much paint will be used on the work. There are at present eleven men swinging the brushes; they will be busy for at least eight weeks and three hundred gallons of paint will spread over the long span. The work of preparing the girders is a big job and a tedious one. Men go over the entire structure with small picks and hammers removing all the corroded parts after which it is brushed down with steel brushes. A graphite paint is used and it comes all ready prepared for the work. The wages of the men for this job will exceed two thousand five hundred dollars, which gives some idea what the painting account for the C. P. R. would amount to each year. There are two cars which provide eating and sleeping quarters for the men. It is but seven years ago that this big structure was given a liberal coat of paint.

Montreal.—Mr. Alfred Pahe, General Manager Eastern Lines, Canadian Pacific Railway, for over forty years, who has relinquished his duties with the Railway for an indefinite period, left Montreal on the C. P. R. "Montrose" recently, bound for England.

Mr. Price, who is accompanied by his daughters Misses Laura and Grace Price, will spend some time at Torquay, Devonshire, England, where it is hoped Mr. Price's health will be restored.

Several of Mr. Price's friends went aboard the "Montrose" to see him off. Amongst the Canadian Pacific officials present were: A. L. MacTier, Vice-President; James Mason, Assistant to the President; John J. Scully, General Manager Eastern Lines; W. G. Annable; W. Ballantyne; Arthur Allan; George H. Ham; John Leslie, C. P. R. Comptroller, who was accompanied by Mrs. Leslie and Miss Leslie. There were several other friends and well-wishers present. Souvenirs presented to Mr. Price included a pair of binocular glasses.

Mr. Price's cabin was lavishly decorated with flowers by his friends.

New Paradise of the Rockies

JASPER PARK LODGE IS A REAL HOME AMONG THE MOUNTAINS

Jasper Park, embracing 4,400 square miles of the most magnificent virgin mountain scenery in the world, has long been known to the sportsman, alpinist and tourist, but this summer it calls to holiday seekers with a new voice. It now offers ideal accommodation at Jasper Lodge, the first of a series of Alpine chalets to be built in the Jasper and Mount Robson districts, and was formally opened to the public on June 15th.

The lodge is beautifully situated among the singing pines and cedars on the shore of Lac Beauvert, while towering in solemn grandeur on all sides rise the rugged snowy peaks, sometimes gleaming like opals in the shimmering sunlight and sometimes lost amid the low-hanging clouds. It consists of a group of log rustic buildings blending with the rugged surroundings. A spacious lounge building with an ample stone fireplace, an airy dining-room, a dancing pavilion and a number of separate sleeping cabins, each containing four bedrooms and a sitting-room, are electric-lighted and tastefully furnished throughout.

Here in the Northern Canadian Rockies the tourist will find all that makes a worth-while holiday. The joy of adventure in exploring and mountain-climbing, boating on Lac Beauvert, fishing in the wild mountain torrents, riding through the valleys with the fresh mountain breezes in your face, dancing with the gayest and purple mountains keeping watch—all offer a most interesting variety of recreation. The best of accommodation has associated with it congenial companionship and scenery rivalling even that of the Swiss Alps.

These lodges not only tend to make Jasper Park one of the great travel centres of the Dominion thereby increasing the revenues of our Canadian National Railways, but also add their share toward ultimately placing Canada on the map as one of the outstanding regions of the world to evolve

BLACK KNIGHTS COMMEMORATE

Sir Knight W. C. Mikel, K.C., was chairman and in the course of his remarks said:

"You members of the Royal Black Preceptory are the leaders of Orangeism, the aristocracy of the order. You have been called to the order of Knighthood, and like gallant Knights you have heavy responsibilities. You have to see that the tenets and principles of the Order are observed, that the Order is protected from attacks from without and from weakness within. Many people are under a misapprehension as to the Order. They think the Constitution contains provisions defending and criticizing the Catholic Religion and the Church of Rome and, therefore, that the Orange Order is bigoted and that Orangemen are bigots.

The speaker produced a copy of the Constitution of the Orange Order which he said the Grand Secretary informed him was the last official Constitution of the Order, and said it was open to anyone to read as there was nothing secret about it. It does not contain one word condemning or criticizing the Catholic religion or the Church of Rome. He said: "Of course, the membership is only open to Protestants, but that is not bigotry. The Knights of Columbus is only open to Catholics. Certain Jewish societies are open only to Jews. Canadian Orangemen did not refuse to help Belgium, though it was a Catholic country, against Protestant Germany. True, religion was not their only reason, but fifty thousand Canadians left Canada solely for the liberties of Catholic Belgium. From the organization of the Order, September 21st, 1795, down to today, The Constitution has forbidden its members to persecute or injure any one on account of his religion, and compels them to support the religious liberties of Catholics as well as Protestants.

"The Orange Order did not cause the trouble in Ireland, because religious strife existed there long before the Order was established. No doubt many Protestants are kept from joining the Order because of the belief that the Order stands for bigotry and strife. Perhaps some of the members are in some measure responsible for this. It is your duty as Sir Knights to remove these erroneous impressions of the Order and bring about a better understanding between Protestants and Catholics. The Knights of this noble Order are too intelligent to deny that the Church of Rome has done good in the world, and you are ready to protect and defend those who desire to worship at that altar, in their liberty to do so."

Mayor's Welcome

Mayor Hanna in a few well chosen remarks extended a hearty welcome to all present to the most beautiful city in the Dominion. A welcome was ever ready and it gave one to do so. He hoped their stay would be pleasant and profitable whilst in the city.

Sir Knight E. G. Porter

Sir Knight E. G. Porter, K.C., M.P., referred to the pleasure he had to meet so many members of the Order. This was the first celebration of the kind held in Belleville. It was a pleasure to know that the relief of Derry was still being celebrated in Canada. Through the efforts of the Protestant religion we enjoy much freedom today. Such celebrations should be encouraged. The world was today in a state of unrest, and the great war was to a great extent responsible for such a state of affairs. Law and order had come into disrepute. Even individual conduct is such that we do not altogether know what our neighbors are doing. Any organization having the good of the Empire at stake should do all it could for the benefit of humanity as a whole. The Orange Order is needed in the world today. It has accomplished much good in the past and it is proper today that Protestants exert themselves for the betterment of the country. It has been said that a good opposition is an incentive to good government. This might be said of organizations. The Orange Order has opposition, but we can turn it to good account if we will. The R.C. propaganda of today is having its effect in the world owing to the world's condition. It is up to the Knights and to everywatch the propaganda that is being circulated. Many Catholics were true friends of him (the speaker). He was not afraid to proclaim the old slogan of "no surrender." Be awake, be watchful, be earnest, and there would be no doubt of the result.

Sir Knight Tummon.

Sir Knight W. E. Tummon of Tweed, D.D.G., was pleased at being present upon this occasion to celebrate a notable event, namely, the closing of the gates of Derry. It was one of those early times that the societies we belong to came into existence. No society stands in higher esteem than the Black Knights and the various Orange Societies. These are religious societies, all members are enjoined to live a religious life. The unrest of today has touched the religious life of today, but it is pleasing to find that those societies are increasing, and it means much even to Canada. We are a loyal people. Some tell us that Protestantism is not in danger today, but it is being attacked in Ireland today and in other countries. We are not entirely free even in Ontario today. These societies stand for political liberties, to unite and co-operate with every creed for equal rights to all and down to one. We want to make this country what it is destined to be, great and glorious.

T. H. Thompson, M.P.

Sir Knight T. H. Thompson, M.P., for East Hastings, in his remarks referred to the condition of affairs today in various countries and which will tend to make conditions bad this winter. In Canada we have some who have not that regard for law and order that they should have. This was foreign to the Orange Order. This Order stood the test at the crisis of the late war and it will have its effect in helping to bring things back to normal. Every Orangeman should do all in his power to maintain the Protestant religious. The separate schools in Ontario are against sectarian schools, but we do not desire to see them abolished; but we do not want any further encroachments in this regard. The Orange Order stands for an open Bible and we should all try to live up to the principles of the Order.

Rev. Cruggan.

Sir Knight Rev. A. H. Cruggan of Tweed gave an excellent address relative to the day and its commemorating, also as to the aims and objects of the Orange societies. He made a plea for unity in matters appertaining to the country's welfare.

Rev. E. J. Atkinson.

Sir Knight Rev. E. J. Atkinson, of Moss Mills, in his opening remarks said that as an Ulster man he was pleased to be upon such a platform and speak. It was a platform that represented truth and liberty. He referred to the relief of Derry and the noble stand taken by the defenders at that trying time. The condition in Ireland today was almost the same as it was at the time of the relief of Derry. Ulster has never turned her back to the foe and would never surrender while the rich blood flows through the veins of Ulster. In 1914 they went to the front and gave a fine account of themselves. Ulster is for defence, not defiance. A bright day was dawning for Ulster, and when that day broke she will get the victory. The speaker also referred to the matter of Separate Schools and pointed out that most of a unit in Canada conducted the speech-making and those present turned their attention to the ball game that was in progress.

Notes.

Sir Knight Archie Collins, who is one of the oldest Knights and Orangemen in this section, was on parade.

Sir Knight S. B. Rollins, Reeve of Tweed Village, was in attendance with members of his Council.

During the afternoon suitable selections were rendered by the A.L.I. band of this city.

"GERMANY OVER ALL" "OUT OF POLITICS"

Old Imperialistic Anthem Has Been Revived by Members of Hun Republican Gov't

Berlin, Aug. 14.—Deutschland Uber Alles" has come back as Germany's national song after three years of discipute, during which a war looked upon by the supporters of the Republican Government as an anthem fitted only for Imperialists.

In his proclamation on the observance of the third anniversary of the ratification of the Republican constitution, President Ebert termed the song "a rallying cry for all defenders of the new Germany," and its readiness by the band when he reviewed the troops before the Reichstag building yesterday was greeted with applause.

The newspapers say the President's proclamation has restored the anthem to the meaning originally intended for it, and freed it from the stigma of party politics.

SIR ADAM BECK REBUTS ATTACK MADE ON HYDRO

Says Murray Report is at Absolute Variance With Well-Known Facts

GROSSLY MISLEADING

Costs Inflated in Manner Which Falsifies Conclusions

Toronto, Aug. 14.—A reply to the criticism of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission which has gained wide circulation in Canada and the United States through the agency of the Murray report, is contained in a "refutation of various statements," which the commission today handed out.

The Murray report was a voluminous document presented by Messrs. Murray and Flood, a firm of New York engineers, at the request of the National Electric Light Association. It was purported to be a comparison, the report states, based on an "impartial and exhaustive study," between government-owned and privately-controlled electrical enterprises. Its statutory history, was regarded by friends of public ownership as little less than an endeavor to discredit the hydro project.

Sir Adam Beck, chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission, has a lengthy foreword to the "refutation."

Following are some extracts from statements purporting to be true, but which are at absolute variance with well-known facts. He had misquoted statements, even replacing significant words therein with others. He has presented grossly misleading statements respecting even physical facts within his knowledge, and he has made comparisons between entities radically different, when even a proper recognition of the real differences would have created an impression entirely at variance with what he has represented. He has inflated costs in a manner which falsifies the conclusion. Such procedure is characteristic of the use made of most of the essential material embodied in the premises which Mr. Murray has adduced and upon which he has based his conclusions. This accounts for the worthless nature of such conclusions."

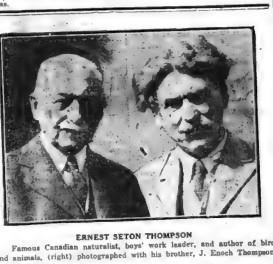

Replying to Mr. Murray's statement that the Ontario Hydro Commission enjoys almost unlimited powers, and that no suit could be brought against it, Sir Adam Beck points out that since 1912 the Attorney-General has fiats permitting twenty-five actions to be brought against the commission.

Dearer in Buffalo.

Sir Adam continues: "According to Mr. Murray, the average cost of electrical energy to the citizens of Buffalo is 20 per cent. lower than to the citizens of Toronto, as supplied by their hydro system, whereas the data rightly employed shows that the reverse is the fact and that efficiency costs in Buffalo are on the average higher than the costs of hydro service in Toronto by over 35 per cent."

CULTURES FOR SILOS

Helping Out Poor Fodders Turned Into Ensilage.

Lactic Acid Cultures Now Applied—Good Fodder Requires No Treatment—Scalding the Silo—Make a Compost Heap of Garden Rubbish.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Attempts have been made to control or direct acid bacteria. Bacillus lactis acidi has long been known to be beneficial in silage making, and its product, lactic acid, is found to the extent of one per cent. in well made silage. Experience has demonstrated that the addition of bacillus lactis acidi in quantity to the fodder as the silos were being filled gave good results, particularly so when the fodder material was past the best stage for making high-grade silage. The addition of the bacillus lactis acidi in quantity to the more or less spoiled fodder provided an active agent to check and override the other bacteria present and thereby control the fermentative process, and bring the silage mass to a fairly uniform condition with lactic acid predominant in its silage.

Add Lactic Acid Cultures.

This addition of lactic acid culture to the fodder at the time of silo filling is easily accomplished by securing a small quantity of a pure culture for lactic acid, from a creamery as a beginning. The pure culture obtained from the creamery is placed in a three-gallon can of clean skimmilk. This is placed in a warm position for three days, it can then be added to more skimmilk, increasing the bulk sufficiently to have one gallon for each load of material that goes into the silo. This skimmilk culture carrying a vast number of bacillus lactic acidi is sprinkled over the cut fodder as the silo filling proceeds.

Good Fodder Requires No Culture Treatment.

If the corn is in prime condition for silage making at the time of ensilling, nothing is to be gained by adding culture, however its use is strongly advised if the corn or other fodder is a bit off in condition due to damage through unseasonable weather, delays, etc.—L. Stevenson, Sec. Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

KING PETER'S MONEY.

Serbian Monarch Was Robbed By The Germans.

Interesting details have come to light respecting the late King Peter, Serbia's Venerable ruler, and the "grand old man" of Europe, who died in Belgrade a short time ago.

During his last illness the King asked frequently for his son, Alexander, who found it impossible to be with him because of his own serious illness in Paris. He was much attached to the Prince Regent and referred to him as "my little Alexk." He had the fullest confidence in him. He had the fullest confidence in him. He had in the last years of his life left the affairs of state entirely in his hands.

He had been especially anxious that his son should marry Princess Olga, daughter of the Czar of Russia, but whatever prospect there was for the match disappeared in the murder of the beautiful princess by the Bolsheviki.

The king died a poor man. Whatever personal possessions he had were lost during the tragic retreat to Corfu in the grim days of 1915 when the German hordes overran the little Balkan State. When the correspondent asked one of the late monarch's old friends if the king had left any legacies, he replied: "Yes, a wonderful one. A beloved, new Ikona, a great character, and an undying memory."

Throughout his seventy-seven years King Peter was ultra-democratic and simple in his tastes. He disliked ceremony and had a contempt for flattery and compliments. He insisted that his coat consist of only one dish. All his servants were peasant soldiers. His home in Belgrade was plain to the point of rudeness. When well he always attended personally to the gardens and the poultry.

Like most Slavs, he was extremely superstitious. He considered the number "13" fatal and would never begin a project on Friday. When asked to explain his superstition he pointed out that if the numerals in each of the great years of Serbia's destiny were counted up they would total 13 in each case. The King fait sure he was going to die in 1931, because he accomplished 8, 9 and 4. Included in this total is 13 years as King.

GET FUEL FIRST

Many people in Belleville are wisely considering the possibilities of keeping their homes warm during the coming winter, and Mayor Hanna and the Aldermen are seriously concerned about the fuel problem arising out of the prolonged and still unsettled strike of the miners in the United States. The people of Canada are totally in the dark as to whether they will be able to secure coal for the winter months, and the Provincial and Dominion Governments seem to be in the same position.

Presumably, it is the duty of governments to not only govern, but to concern themselves with the interests and the welfare of the citizens who placed them in office. So far, neither the Provincial nor Dominion ministers and officials have done anything officially to insure the provision of coal for the people of Canada. They have held meetings and "offered to co-operate", but, from the statement made by an official of the United States Government, it would appear that no approaches have been made from Ottawa on the coal question.

Premier King seems to be more concerned about the preservation of the life of his administration than he is about the preservation of the lives of the people during the coming winter. He and his followers have been too busy negotiating a merger with the Progressive Party to be bothered with a mere matter of providing coal for the people.

It was a good idea, that of appointing a fuel controller. It would have been a still better idea if the Government had first secured the fuel. It is reported that thousands of tons of coal are being shipped from the mines of Nova Scotia—where is it being shipped to? We need a fuel diverter. Has Canada no control over her coal resources?

THE FALL OF CORK

With the fall of Cork the last rebel stronghold has been taken and the back of the Irish rebellion broken. It was a foregone conclusion that the Free State forces would triumph. It is no great victory since the entire resources of Britain were at the command of the Provincial Government. One thing is certain that the Republican cause under DeValera has received its death blow—although it might kick for some time in the remote corners of the island and carry on a campaign of treachery and assassination in the cities.

De Valera is already discredited, even in the United States where he was born and where he received his training as a professional Irishman. Some, native Irishmen have displayed a spirit of burning worthy of a better cause, but these were not of the professional type as represented by De Valera. They came under the baneful influence of such men as the Republican leader and were led into the rebellion believing they were playing the patriot.

Such men as Griffiths and Collins were tired of the chronic rebel De Valera, and realized that they were being used as pawns in the perpetual propaganda of professional Irishism. They came into closer touch with Englishmen and were doubtless surprised to discover that they were mostly Scotch, Welsh and Irish—and were actually human! They renounced their contract with the Mephistopholean De Valera and decided to work for peace and good will between the peoples of the British Isles.

Peace and good-will were the very things that DeValera did not want under any circumstances, either between Ireland and Britain or between Irishmen themselves. Strife and hatred were the means and the end of all his propaganda. There is only one way to deal with such irreconcilables and that way has been taken by Irishmen themselves, to their everlasting credit.

IRELAND'S GREAT LOSS

British people throughout the world will regret the passing of Arthur Griffith, president of the Dail Eireann, who died in Dublin on Saturday after a brief illness which was not regarded as serious. Griffith was perhaps the ablest of all the Sinn Feiners, and he was certainly the brains of the Free State Government. His death comes at a time when he was most needed. It was due to his level-headed judgment and farsightedness that the treaty was arrived at with the British Government. Anyone glancing at the photographs of Griffith and De Valera cannot but be struck with the contrast in character between the two men. Griffiths has a human face—we will not attempt to characterize the face of De Valera, but we have heard very kindly ladies do is very effectively.

It is to be hoped that there will arise a man of equal calibre and reasonableness to take the place of Arthur Griffiths; if not, it is to be feared that the woes of Ireland are not yet over and that the Republicans will take advantage of the absence of so strong a leader counsellor.

If we cannot get coal this coming winter we had better sharpen our axes and take ourselves into the back woods again for fuel.

We many once more see great loads of cord-wood brought into the city in the next few months if those miners don't get back to work.

The denouements of the movie romances on and off the film are slightly different. On the film they end in a convulsive fit of osculation—off the screen they wind up in a rat and dog fight, followed by divorce proceedings.

The Black Knights are the only order of British nitedom that may legitimately add to their number in Canada. No one need lack a Knighthood, if he is a good protestant; but there is grand accommodation in the Knights of Columbus for those who do not protest against the supreme rule of the Pope.

HERE AND THERE

ELECTED HOUSE OF LORDS.

Judging by the English papers, the movement for the reform of the House of Lords is gaining British ground. The cabinet is pledged to carry out the following scheme, which was debated last week. The resolutions are:

1. That the House shall be composed in addition to Peers of the Blood Royal Lords Spiritual and Law Lords of—

(a) Members elected either directly or indirectly from the outside.

(b) Hereditary Peers elected by their order.

(c) Members nominated by the Crown the numbers in each case to be determined by Statute.

2. That, with the exception of Peers of the Blood Royal and the Law Lords, every other member of the reconstituted and reduced House of Lords shall hold his seat for a term of years to be fixed by Statute, but shall be eligible for re-election.

3. That the reconstituted House of Lords shall consist approximately of 350 members. (The present voting strength of the House is approximately 700.)

Money Bills Ruling

4. That while the House of Lords shall not amend or reject Money Bills' the decision as to whether a Bill is or is not a Money Bill, or is partly a Money Bill and partly not a Money Bill, shall be referred to a Joint Standing Committee of the two Houses, the decision of which shall be final.

SOMETHING MAY COME OF IT.

So heroously are the French taking their tournament of "gliders"—motorless aeroplanes that they already justify an expectation that something useful as well as interesting is going to be done with one or another of the many queer machines that have been evolved at Clermont-Ferrand. If a people so practical and logical—and as well provided with expert physicists—as the French take these contrivances seriously, the only fun for the rest of us to do is to wait and see.

Just possibly, however, the French seriousness is the product of a desire to outdo the Germans, who claim to have accomplished marvelous things with gliders of late. Not otherwise would it be easy or even possible to account for their regarding as more than a joke the proposal of men to keep themselves aloft more than momentarily through the exertion of their own strength in the flapping of wings.

Birds, large and small, all do it, and innumerable insects: In other ages, lizards of considerable size did it, and bats still are able and almost tireless fliers. One species of squirrel and one of fish can sail along through the air for a few feet, but neither of those two tribes remains as exemplars for ambitious man, though they are provided with better planes than he is likely to construct.

All the creatures that really fly of really have flown by the use of their own energy do and did so because of possessing big muscles, specially placed and adapted to that one end. Men lack them entirely.—New York Times.

THE KIRK'S FERRY FALLS

Will you meet me at the Ferry?—
At the Ferry by the Falls—
Where the river's gliding swiftly,
And the pine-clad mountain calls.
From the hills and through the valley
Comes that river roaring free,
On its never-tiring journey,
Curling, swirling, towards the sea.

See its waters spring to action—
At the Ferry by the Falls.
Hear them roaring, wild emotion
As they leap in desperation;
Ever changing in formation;
Almost challenging creation—
At the Ferry by the Falls.

See its waters crash and tumble—
At the Ferry by the Falls.
Hear them sounding, gnawing mumble
And their sullen, angry growls.
As they strive the rocks to crumble;
Woe betide you if you stumble—
At the Ferry by the Falls.

See its waters white and foaming—
At the Ferry by the Falls—
Cease their buffeting and goading,
Dancing, laughing, sparkling, loading,
Start a frolicking and rolling,
As they once more go a-roaming—
At the Ferry by the Falls.

Won't you meet me at that Ferry?—
At the Ferry by those Falls—
Where the waters travel swiftly,
And the fragrant pine tree calls,
Where the river rumbling freely,
Flashed by grass-tuft rocky walls,
Makes a wondrous spot of beauty—
At the Ferry by the Falls.

"THE HAPPY AUTUMN FIELDS"

(By "The Old Man", in The Acton Free Press.)

It is gratifying to look upon a field of ripe wheat or grain; there we see the abundance of the Great Giver and the Divine Goodness with which He gives. I said last week that my fingers tingled to get into a grain field again. When I look over the fields as they are to-day reminiscent of the early days crowd hard upon me. The splendid fields of wheat and barley and oats that may be seen just now surely bring back the old days and the old harvests, and the old-fashioned implements of those far-away harvest days. You know I was brought up with the old Buckeye cradle as the reaping tool of those days, and a farmer of muscle, fifty or sixty years ago, could make the man who followed him with the rake his bride in the shortest space of time if he chose. In those days it was a matter of muscle and real science, and there was no loafing by any one during harvest time. Then the reaper with the wooden frame came in. Farmers looked at it with a good deal of doubt and fear. The old Buckeye cradle for years after its advent. The first wooden frame reaper which came to Acton was considered quite a curiosity. A few years later when the reaper with the metal frame was introduced a change had been seen coming, for they did the work so much quicker than by the use of the cradle. It took two men, through and another to pitch off the sheaves with—these first reapers. The splendid binders now in use are a marvel to us old fogies who do great work in all kinds of grain.

I have been around quite a few harvest fields in my time and can tell you they have looked to me like real old-fashioned crops. I venture the hope that when threshing time comes many of the fields of fall wheat here-abouts will be found to average 30 to 35 bushels to the acre. I hope the editor will find room for a little yiddle he can learn about it, as to prove whether an old-timer is still a good judge of a crop or not.

PRESS OPINIONS

THE ONTARIO CONSERVATIVES.

(Montreal Gazette)

The gathering of Conservatives on Tuesday at Kingston, according to the latest reports, was a slightly tame one. There was a considerable number present, but they came from far and near to hear Sir Henry Drayton. The political speeches and other entertainment, calculated to appeal to the multitude at this holiday season. The affair was, somehow, less a significant one, and may have its effect on public opinion. For a long time Conservatives in Ontario, and in other provinces, were expected to come to the polls and vote for the party, as a matter of duty. They heard from their leaders seldom and saw them more rarely. The result was a natural one—the war came and went, then came things than politics to think about, including taxes. Then arose the United Farmers, declaring with some justice that the old parties had got stale in their usefulness and lacking vigor. They drew from the Conservatives, as from the Liberals, but the Conservatives being in control of the Government at Toronto and at Ottawa lost most. The province was first defeated the party in the election of a Legislature and then repeated the achievement in the last year's provincial contest. In each case the United Farmers gained largely. Conservative candidates did not get all the Conservative vote, either in Ontario or the other provinces. The reaction may well have begun. Mr. Meighen in his speech at Kingston indicated reasons why it should have begun. There cannot be much enthusiasm for a government which in the first session of Parliament after its establishment turned its back on almost every important pledge it had made to the electors when it was seeking power. At Toronto, also, where the United Farmers are in control of the province's affairs, they have shown the weaknesses that make for the undoing of all parties in time, and when appeal is made to the voters next year may find themselves so weakened as to need new allies, if they are not defeated. The chance of the Conservatives to recover their old strength and activity is clearly apparent. The Kingston demonstration indicates that they may have begun the task in earnest.

A LITTLE MORE ACTION, PLEASE

(Toronto Telegram)

The Globe claps its hands and lifts up its voice in hallelujahs because Premier King has made a brand new promise in connection with the National Railways. It can see him appointing a board of directors that will unify the roads, cut out patronage, clip outside the sphere of political influence and otherwise dispose itself to the great benefit of the road and the nation generally.

From the joyous note in the Globe utterance one could almost hope that it has assurances that the C.N.R. headquarters are not to be moved to either Ottawa or Montreal. At any rate, the political atmosphere is so thick that everything there quickly comes under its influence. However, a few fine promises and a little more action would come with good grace from Mr. King. Delay is the most deadly weapon in the hands of those who are working for the destruction of public ownership.

Under the circumstances inaction of action is worth a ton of promises.

BOY WANTS FUN BUT DOESN'T KNOW HOW

Thompson Seton on Boys—

Toronto, August 12.—"A boy naturally wants to have fun and doesn't know how. When he tries he gets into mischief. Our idea is to lead him to have fun and to have it without costing money." This was the system as outlined by Mr. Ernest Seton in an address to a gathering of old friends at the R.C.Y.C. last night when the well-known author gave an interesting narrative of his work among Boy Scouts and Camping organizations in the United States.

The guest was introduced by his brother, J. Enoch Thompson, as the author of "Wild Animals I Have Known," but said he might better write a book entitled, "Wild Boys I Have Tamed."

"Don't crush an instinct," advised the author. "We believe our instincts are better than our judgments and that our dominating instincts are constructive. Few men there are who are not potential lawbreakers if the laws were strictly enforced. We have not been fair to the boys, who have a natural desire to have fun with no organized manner of having it."

Woman's Sphere

A Good-By.

If I should bear fate's voice today,
And in cold accents it should say:
"Tom, you've shall see the morrow's sun
Not you this night's full course to run
Your throbbing heart at rest and chilled
Its warmth; and you no more shall climb
The mountains, walk the shores,
Now with a sparkling eye shall view
The glories of the earth that you
Through all your life have held so dear;
Those things that have no charmed you here.
But what will you with this last day
That is yours on earth to stay?
I would not choose a gladder way
Than that I spent my yesterday:
Seek the wee home I call my own,
Where morning glories partly blown
Nod on their climbing vines, and where
My little girl with golden hair
Waits at the gate with laughter glad
Each night to greet her homing dad;
And where my baby's mother moves
Queenly in every contentment grace,
Take my old place, talk of the day,
How work has gone and of the way
The world's events do shape and change.
From subject on to subject range.
Then hear my baby "lay me" said,
And tiptoe softly from her bed,
And leave the gray old, glad old world;
And my wee babe in slumber curled,
All snuggled down, with yellow hair
Outspread upon the pillow there;
And my babe's mother in the sleep;
That comes of work, restful and deep,
And so, when all the world was still,
And wrapped in slumber vale and hill,
And morning glory blooms dew wet,
Like jewels in green background set,
And with stars smiling in the sky,
I'd choose to tell the world good-bye.

Store Originality in Dress.

The woman who depends herself to be guided in her dress by others is stifling her imagination. Recently we have been getting away from the herd idea.

This spirit has forced the manufacturers to give their merchandise that are no longer alike to suit dozens of women on the same character.

The store that formerly often refuses to purchase more than one gown of a kind and in consequence the women of the town's gowns are so well groomed as their city sisters.

The country girl with the fancy clothes, puffed back hair and clumsy shoes can only be found in the vaudeville acts. The gingham bob tides, where the whole family utilized the same skirt, no longer appeals to her. In a word, she has used her imagination and has made herself as appealing and attractive as possible.

If a fashion writer says that polka dots are the vogue, study the effect of the polka dots upon yourself before accepting the verdict as applying to you. An extremely large woman in a gown that is covered with polka dots will look somewhat like a harlequinade, and certain figure may appear nearly winsome in that same gown.—Ottawa Journal.

STUFFED CUCUMBERS.

3 large cucumbers
3 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon chopped onion
½ cup chopped cooked meat—any kind except beef
1 cup soft, stale bread crumbs
Salt and pepper to taste
1 teaspoon chopped parsley
Speck of thyme

Cook the onion in the butter, add the meat and cook two or three minutes, then add crumbs and seasonings.

Pare cucumbers and cut in halves lengthwise. Remove seeds. Divide stuffing in six portions, and stuff each cucumber. Place in a baking dish, add one cup, and bake until cucumbers are soft.

IF I WERE 21 AGAIN

(By BYRON STAUFFER, in Toronto Star)

If I were twenty-one again, I would listen to the advice of a man of fifty-one. I never feel older than that except when a lady in a crowded car tells her young hospital to "get up and give that old gentleman your seat."

The youth who listens to the advice of his elders never time. Heeding the counsel of older men is the only substitute for experience. A present day career should be and normally is more successful, righteous and help ful than those of the dim past, because there are more great biography to copy and more warnings to profit by. The master charts come flat tering down through the ages. Solomon and Plutarch, Marcus Aurelius and Wesley, Franklin and Roosevelt all contribute to the making of a character of this wonderful age.

Were I twenty-one again, I would build my career aright now. Right now, while it is in process of construction, is the time to order a life. It is possible, but not probable, that you will revolutionize habit after fifty.

I would acquire the habit of neatness. I would stock up a goodly supply of linen and underwear, even if I had to be my own laundryman. I would maintain a distinct cleanliness in my treasury, even if I had to put them between the bed-springs and the mattress every night. I would be well shaved, brushed and manicured. I would stand and walk erectly. I would have an agile body and thereby increase the agility of my brain.

I would be thorough, going to the root of things, learning all about my own job and that next above me. I would be prompt, on time at work, at church, at committee meetings. Yes, on time in my young lady's home and on time leaving it too.

I am sure that, were I starting life again, I would try to be kinder, I would avoid circles where scandals and criticism of others were current topics of conversation. I would say and think lovely things until the habit could be a part of my very life.

I would do away with hate and spite forever. Forgetting all unkindness at the hands of others, I would adopt Dr. Lyman Abbott's motto: "I have thrown out these four anchors, Faith in a Goodness, Faith in Men, Faith in Jesus, Faith in the Divine Help."

I would save some money. With my 'phile and my dictionary, I would begin a bank book. I do with a millionaire the other day, at his request, of course. When you dine with a millionaire, never make a feast at teaching for the hill; he might take you at your word. Well, this man took the waiter's bill and perused it silently. Once or twice he compared the items with the prices on the bill of fare to make sure he hadn't been overcharged. Then he seemed to be adding up the column. Finally he did pay the shot, adding exactly ten per cent. as a tip. He is known as a generous man, benevolent and given to big subscriptions towards real charities. But he sets a good example in frugality. There was a time when I would have been ashamed to wear a restaurant bill—and given a modicum sized tip. I regret those days.

If I were beginning life I would cultivate self-respect. I wouldn't underestimate my ability or my possibilities. I wouldn't envy the showy man, nor size up a man by his boasts. Charles Kingsley said this his greatest handicap was admiring, envying and even following men who were really by his inferiors.

I would develop manly morals, combining manliness with decency. I would be good without being a prig. Theodore Roosevelt followed his father's example by teaching a Sunday school class while going through Harvard. He said, "I intended to be a middling-decent fellow, and I didn't intend that anyone should laugh at me with impunity because I was decent. My ordinary companions at college would have had a tendency to look down on me for doing Sunday school work, had I not also been a corking good boxer, a good runner and a general member of their clubs."

I would cultivate everybody's good opinion. Reputation is a man's balance in the bank of public opinion. Why not then have every good acquaintance as a booster, instead of turning some into knockers?

I would make my record so clean that at the end of life I could say with John Ruskin, "I have been the brother of all women and the friend of all men."

THE BANDBOX

By
Louis Joseph Vance

He wore no hat. His clothing was in a shocking condition, damp, shapeless and shrunken to such an extent as to disclose exhibits of bony wrists and an ankle almost immodestly generous. On his bird-like cranium the pale, mouse-colored locks lay plastered furiously. Round his thin lips hovered his habitual timid, semi-asinine, semi-shrewd, smile.

"Do you mind telling me how in thunder you got in here?" asked Staff courteously.

If waved a hand toward the bedroom.

"Fire-escape," he admitted wearily. "Happened to see your light and thought I'd call. Hope I don't intrude. . . Got anything to drink? I'm about fit to."

EX.

A LIKELY STORY.

"If I'm any judge, that's no exaggeration."

Thus Mr. Staff after a moment's pause which he utilized to look Mr. Ilf over with a critical eye.

Mr. Ilf wagged his head. "Believe me," said he simply.

Staff fetched a decanter of Scotch and a glass, placing them on the table by Ilf's elbow, then turned away to get a siphon of charged water from the icebox.

But by the time he was back a staggering amount of whiskey had disappeared from the decanter, a moist but empty glass stood beside it, and Mr. Ilf was stroking smiling lips with his delicate, claw-like fingers. He discontinued the occupation long enough to wave the siphon away.

"Not for me," he said tersely. "I've swallowed enough water this night to last me for the rest of my life—half of the North River, more or less; rather more, if you ask me."

"What were you doing in the North River?"

"Swimming."

This answer was evidently so adequate in Mr. Ilf's understanding that he made no effort to elaborate upon it; so that presently, growing impatient, Staff felt called upon to ask:

"Well? What were you swimming for?"

"Dear life!" said Ilf.—"Wife, liberty and the pursuit of happiness: the incomfortable birthright of every free born American citizen—if you must know."

His relapsed into a reverie which seemed hugely diverting from the imminent twinkle in the little man's eyes. From this he emerged long enough to remark: "That's prime whiskey, you know. . . . Thanks very much, I will." And again fell silent, stroking his lips.

"I don't want to seem to try," said Staff at length, with elaborate irony, "but in view of the fact that you've felt warranted in calling on me via the fire-escape at one a.m., it doesn't seem unreasonable of me to expect some sort of an explanation."

"Oh, very well," returned Ilf, with resignation. "What would you like to know?"

"Why did you disappear this morning—"

"Yesterday morning," Ilf corrected dispassionately.

"—yesterday morning, and how?"

"Because the time seemed ripe for me to do my marvelous vanishing stunt. You see, I had a hunch that the dear captain would turn things over in his mind and finally determine not to accept my credentials at their face value. So I kind of stuck round the wireless room with my ears satisfactorily pricked forward. Sure enough, presently I heard the message go out, asking what shape I was and how on."

"You mean you read the operator's sending by ear?"

"Sure; I've got a telegrapher's ear as long as a mule's. . . Whereupon, knowing just about what sort of an answer'd come through, I made up my mind to duck. And did."

"But how—?"

"Told be telling, and telling would get somebody aboard the Autocrat into terrible bad trouble if it ever leaked out. I crawled in out of the weather—let it go at that. I wish," said Mr. Ilf soulfully, "those damn' Pinkerton men had let it go at that. Once or twice I really thought they had me, or would have me the next minute. And they wouldn't give up. That's why I had to take to the water, after dark. My friend, who shall be nameless, lent me the loan of a rope and I climbed down and had a nice little swim before I found a place to crawl ashore. I have you that the North River tastes like hell, . . . Oh thank you; don't mind if I do."

"Then," said Staff, watching the little man help himself on his own invitation —"then you are Immy?"

"Wrong again," said Ilf drawingly. "Honest, it's a real shame, the way you can't seem to win any bets at all."

"If you're not Immy, what made you run the risk?"

"Ah!" cried Ilf admiringly, "shrewd and pertinent question! Now I'll tell you, and you won't believe me. Because—now you stay strict attention—because we're near-twins."

"Who are twins?" demanded Staff stanzy.

To be continued.

TRUNKS WALLOP PORT HOPE NINE

Railroaders Play Runaway Game with Lake Shore Squad, Score 16-3

PITCHERS WEAK

Opposition use Three Weak Twirlers Who Also Received Poor Support

The Port Hope C.O.R.L. squad received a gamisun walloping at the hands of Walt Gerow's Grand Trunk nine at Port Hope on Saturday afternoon, when they were defeated by the one-sided score of 15-3.

The Port Hopers were weakened by the absence of Cook, their pitcher, who was out of the game on account of the death of his aunt, which occurred in Port Hope on Friday. Ware did the receiving, their pitching staff was very weak also, and the support surged at times. They tallied two of their runs in the second and last two, squeezed another over in the ninth inning, Trunks scoring every inning of the game except the second and last two. The Railroaders got 2 in the first, 4 in each of the third and fourth, 2 in the 6th, 1 in the 6th and 2 in the 7th.

R. Mallen pitched the whole game for the Belleville squad, and turned in a nifty exhibition. He struck out nine men, and did not issue a complimentary during the whole argument. One man got a base on being hit by a pitched ball in the ninth inning. The opposition used three slab artists, (if they may be termed such), and one was as bad as the other. Dear started, and lasted until the fourth inning when he was replaced by "Finnegan" Hills who lasted one whole inning. Then Rowden, the third sacker, went in and managed to finish the game. The three pitcher ensemble did not get one strikeout, and their respective offerings were hammered hard. Dear passed two men, but Hills and Rowden were all right in that 'way, for if they ever shot one near the pan, the Trunk sluggers would give it a merry ride.

The Trunks pounded out 10 hits during the game, Vern Weir clouting out a home-run in the seventh inning with Meagher on; while the opposition got five hits off Mallen's offering, getting three clean hits in the initial inning.

The Railroaders sailed right into the Port Hopers, realizing to the full extent that they are a sort of jinx team. Some days they can trim anything in the circuit and other days they are easy picking. They defeated Cobourg recently, having the distinction of being the first squad to take a fall out of the Cobourg nine during the second schedule, allowing them only two runs. Belleville needed the game badly, and knowing this, did not stop trying hard until the last man was down in the 9th inning.

It certainly was a listless exhibition to witness, however, for the usually large crowd that paid admission, for after the first inning, it looked like Belleville all the time. The opposition had many errors, and the Trunks also let the odd one through. Port Hope had 12 errors and the locals had six. Two of the errors credited to the Trunks were bad bounces, which, however could not go for hits, it being no disgrace to the fielder accepting the chance, and failing to make the put on it. The whole team was right behind Mallen and any hits the Port Hope squad got, were all by the way of variety.

The Port Hope infielders were loose. They did not field the rollers anyway and made some bad throws to Carter at first base, who did not prove to be a sure catch either. Second base was stolen time and again on Ware, who proved easy for the fleet-footed base runners, so that the loop holes were numerous, and the Trunks soon tumbled to the situation.

For the locals, possibly Vern Weir, Babe Casey and Peenie Mills were the king pin hitters of the day, especially from the run getting standpoint. Weir got three hits, one home run a two-bagger and a single, his hits scoring two of the runs. Peenie pounded out four long flies to centre field, and a screw cutter through second. The first fly was dropped, Meagher scoring after the ball was fumbled. The next one was caught, but Weir scored after it was caught. The third was a sensational run getting scoring belt, Meagher and Weir, and the clout through second, which should have been handled. Peenie's other trip to Mills was responsible for 5 of the 16 runs. J. K. Williams also got two nice singles to centre field, and Casey got two also; Casey hit a Texas leaguer in the fourth inning, scoring two runs also.

Peenie Mills played left field, Stan Hagerman working nicely behind the bat, and although only one fly was hit to left field during the performance, Mills certainly earned his position on the willow.

Heckman, pitching for the winners, fanned ten, and had seven assists and one put out to his credit. McGuire, Lesaide port side ace, did the twirling for the visitors, and his excellent support was all that averted a much bigger score. He fanned two and walked three.

Calf Feeding a Real Problem.

It is well known to dairymen that calves under six months old make little or no gain on pasture alone, however good the pasture may be. This is especially true of calves born in late winter should be kept in the barn during the summer if they are to make proper growth. It is well to have a small pasture or yard in connection in which they can run a few hours a day. In hot weather, the night is the better time for them to be out of doors.

For feed, skimmilk, mixed whole oats and corn meal and half, and clover or alfalfa hay, are always satisfactory rations. When there is a shortage of skimmilk clover or alfalfa hay, some oilmeal will greatly add to the ration.

Calf scours are frequently caused in summer by careless pails. The pails should be used, and they should be washed every day and set out in the sun.

BIG DOUBLE PROGRAM

AT GRIFFIN'S TONIGHT

One of the most entertaining and genuinely likeable stories of Sunny Spain ever filmed and offered from the silverscreen is "The Spanish Jade," the Paramount version of Maurice Hewlett's well-known novel, which is being exhibited on the open air feature program at Griffin's tonight to Wednesday. The story is a sterling romance of a beautiful girl and a modern Don Quixote and was actually filmed in Spain, the entire company journeying thither for the purpose.

John S. Robertson directed the picture, and included in his cast each popular players as David Powell, Mare McDermott and beautiful Evelyn Brent.

A loveless marriage can never bring anything but unhappiness to the lives of husband and wife. The tragic ending of Mortimer Handley, the rose husband, is a startling climax to "The Rage of Paris", the second five-reel feature offering to be exhibited on the same program. Miss De Foest, acclaimed by critics as America's most beautiful blonde plays the stellar role in this Universal special attraction. "The Hayseed," a two-reel Fox Al St. John comedy is announced for exhibition on the same program.

BOY SHOT ON ROAD

Accident Occurs on Highway Near Peterboro

Peterboro, Aug. 11.—Stanley Edwards, aged eight is in Nicholls Hospital to-day suffering from buckshot wounds in various parts of his body, received yesterday in some unknown manner, on the Gravel Road, south of Springville, and the police are baffled by the case.

No signs of a gun have been found but the wounded boy, it is said, claims he was shot by another boy. He was shot with a shot gun and was wounded in numerous places. He was accompanied by a younger brother about six years old who was spattered with blood from his brother's wounds. The two children were walking to Fraserville, three miles away, when the shooting took place. They were only a short distance from their home, which is at present a tent on the side of the Gravel Road, but neither the mother or other children or the neighbours heard any report of a gun.

The wounded boy was able to reach his home, and physicians were summoned from Peterboro. Dr. G. S. Cameron attended and the boy was rushed to Nicholls Hospital in Bellegrove's Ambulance. His exact condition had not been determined, it was stated at the hospital to-day and the nurse could not say whether his condition was serious or not.

pendent on the United States in this crisis and that the situation here hangs entirely on the question of how much coal our neighbors to the south can supply.

The fuel controller said that he was confident that the coal dealers would give him their whole-hearted support in any measures of relief that he might take. Any failure on the part of the dealers will be checked up at once, according to Mr. Ellis, but he did not think that necessity for this would arise. He said that he realized that the dealers must make a fair profit.

Mr. Ellis will not engage a special office or staff to assist him in his new work, but will use the facilities now at his disposal in connection with the railway and municipal board, of which he is vice-chairman.

ALBERTA HARVEST WELL UNDER WAY

Losses From Hail This Year Are the Lightest Ever Experienced

Calgary, Aug. 14.—The harvesting of wheat will be general in Alberta in about a week's time, and if the continued absence of hail extends over that period, the losses from cause will be the lightest ever known, according to hail insurance experts. They state that have been no serious storms at all this season.

Returning from the eastern section of the province, J. M. Cameron, general superintendent of the C.P.R., reports the crop from the western part of Saskatchewan and in the Empress district and on the main line, as being very satisfactory. From Medicine Hat west it will be good and in the majority of other parts of that section there will be a good average crop.

So far as the north is concerned, the recent rains will help fill the grain. Generally speaking, grade men who are in close touch with the situation consider the Government's crop estimates to be conservative.

C.G.I.T. GIRLS ANNUAL CAMP

Bathing, Hiking, Cooking and Eating Are Prominent Features

The C. G. I. T. girls of Emmanuel Church, are enjoying their annual camp on Tuesday next is time to return to the city by the moonlight boat running for the S. S. picnic.

There are a number of 30 girls quartered in the cottage belonging to the hotel, the young people are under the care of their leaders Mrs. C. Naylor and Miss Tebbutt. They are all dressed in the holiday attire of the order, which is absolutely necessary for the maintenance and freedom of camp life. Bathing, tennis, hiking, cooking and eating are prominent features in their daily life.

On Sunday morning there was held in the pavilion, by kind permission of Mr. Groff, the pastor, a Sunday School session, many other campers and visitors availed themselves of the opportunity of of studying the heroic character of Queen Esther.

At 3 o'clock divine service was held, the rector of Emmanuel church, Rev. George Marshall, being the preacher. All the C. G. I. T. were in attendance and about 50 others quite a number were from Belleville, among whom was noticed Mr. G. and Miss L. Warham, Mrs. C. Marshall, John Rigby and family, Geo. Naylor and family, Robt. and Mrs. Santer, Mrs. L. Santer, Capt. T. and Mrs. Santer, Mrs. and Miss P. Widder. Also several friends from Trenton.

The preacher said he had been invited by the leaders, as well as by the girls, of the C. G. I. T. to come and hold that service. It was a great pleasure to him, as he was sure it was to all the 'grown ups' present, to do anything that would advance the happiness and welfare of young people. The Rector preached a sermon suitable to the occasion from Ruth 2, and 17, in the course of which he said. The book of Ruth was a novel in four chapters, he believed it was safe to say that there never had been written, either in truth or in fiction, a more charming love story, than that of Ruth, whose unselfish and industrious devotion to her widowed mother-in-law, won for her the admiration and love of the wealthy Boaz and by becoming his wife she also became the mother of Obed, who was the grandfather of King David, and a direct ancestor of the parents parent of our Divine Lord, an honour that many in her day would greatly prize.

The girls were exhorted to imitate Ruth in her devotion to duty, in service to the needy, and in loyalty to the highest things of life. Right doing would certainly be rewarded.

The sacrament of Baptism was administered at the close of the service. After which the visitors were entertained by the C.G.I.T. to a bountiful supper in the grove.

Honesty has been the guiding policy of The Salada Tea Company since 1892, when the business was founded. Honest Quality, Honest Value and Honest Representation through advertisements, have combined to make those people use "SALADA" tea daily than any other tea sold in North America. GUNMEN'S THREATS WERE CARRIED OUT

Former R.I.C. Officer Dangerously Wounded After Warnings by Mail

London, Aug. 14.—Major Neilson, chief intelligence officer of the Royal Irish Constabulary for four years during its recent disbandment, was shot and dangerously wounded in a lonely lane near Ashburton, Devonshire, Thursday, by gunmen who made their escape.

The Daily Mail says Major Neilson was last week in Dublin and received an anonymous letter threatening him with death on August 11, that being the anniversary of the death of a member of the Irish Republican Brotherhood who was shot by Neilson in self-defence. Returning to London, Neilson received another similar letter.

From London he went to visit friends at Ashburton, and while walking along a lane three men held him up and shot him. Friends of Neilson, surprised at his long absence, made a search for him and found him lying wounded. He was able to describe the incident and ascribed his not being killed instantly by the assassins to the fact that he feigned death when he fell to the ground wounded. Neilson is at present in the Exeter Hospital in a critical condition.

Railway News

New Westminster.—According to Mr. Grant Hall, vice-president of the C. P. R., Messrs. C. Murphy, general manager of western lines; George Allen, K.C., of South Winnipeg; F. W. Peters, general commissioner for B. C., and Mr. Ed. Coghill, local agent, who met Mayor T. J. Johnston, Mr. W.T. McQuarrie, K.C., and members of the council and board of trade recently, in the mayor's office, the C. P. R. will advance to the province made some years ago to establish a union depot, joint passenger, freight and wharf facilities in the New Westminster harbor.

Winnipeg.—"We hope to have the missing link in the Edmonton-Lethbridge line closed up in three or four days," is the latest word on that section this fall from Mr. W. D. Mc-Neill and C. Coleman, vice-president of the C. P. R., respectively.

A local passenger service, he added, would be installed there for the winter. There are thirty-seven miles over which no service is being given in the broken link.

Eighteen miles of this distance have rails laid. Nineteen miles must be constructed to link up the long-projected new line through Southern Alberta to Lethbridge, connecting with the Crow's Nest Pass line.

Mr. Coleman was also questioning through the West were looking better, according to his impression.

Hamilton.—Announcement was made recently by Jas. Lahey, manager of the local office of the C.P.R. Telegraph Co., that in future, the telegraph office will remain open all night for the transmission and receiving of messages. Telegraph offices are considered the nerves and industrial barometer of any community, so that it is significant that as all-night service has been found necessary.

"It has been evident to us for some time that business conditions were rapidly returning to normal," said Mr. Lahey. "There has been a noticeable increase in the volume of business in our office."

A "Careful Critique" campaign is now going on in the United States. The public are advised to stop, look and listen at railroad crossings, in an article by J. W. Ludden in the St. Paul Pioneer Press says:

"Virtually all accidents at grade crossings could be averted if the public using the highways and grade crossings reasonable care, the engineers contend.

"The railroads are doing all they can to prevent these accidents. They believe that co-operation of the public is necessary.

"Automobiles were involved in 76 per cent of the 1920 crossing accidents; 1,971 persons were killed; 8,077 were injured, of whom 1,193 died subsequently.

While deaths from railway crossing accidents are not as great as in numerous as in the United States there have been too many. Some auto drivers thinking they can beat the train to a crossing beat it to eternity.

Montreal.—Not only does the Canadian Pacific Railway recognize acts of bravery by its own employees, but it acknowledges them when performed by others outside its service. This was shown when the Canadian Pacific recently applied to the Canadian Royal Humane Society for recognition for Samuel J. Dixon, of Pendleton, Ontario, for his gallantry in saving Miss Amelia Secord-ault, of St. Faunal, Ontario, from serious injury or probable death.

At the suggestion of Mr. A. D. MacIver, vice-president, C.P.R., several affidavits from witnesses of the incident and others bearing on the courage and presence of mind displayed by Mr. Dixon were supplied to the Royal Humane Society, and as a result the society has decided that a medal be forwarded to him.

The incident happened at 6.30 p.m. on February 11th last, when Miss Secordeault, who was late for the train, ran after it as it was leaving Pendleton station, and in attempting to board it fell between the end of the platform and the train wheels.

Affidavits of several witnesses pay a tribute to the pluck displayed by Mr. Dixon. They state that as he was walking on the platform he noticed the young lady slipping in the lane of a coach. Just as he reached her she released her hold and fell, her head striking the all wards beam of the car truck. This swung her around with her feet on the rail. Part of the train hit her, throwing her head and shoulders across the rail. At this instant Mr. Dixon grabbed her and pulled her clear of the moving train wheels. While holding her until the train passed out, Mr. Dixon himself was hit on the head by a coach step. The injured woman was taken to the C.P.R. agent's residence and attended by the company's doctor. She recovered soon afterwards. Mr. Dixon's action has commended him as one to blame for the compliment bestowed.

MAKE A COMPOST HEAP.

Save the Garden Rubbish and Make Cheap and Valuable Manure.

Garden waste, decayed vegetables, dead chips, leaves, and the organic rubbish that collects about the place can be made a heap manure can be classed up and put to work again through the medium of the compost heap. Start the heap by laying down a bed of stable manure which has not been burned, about 6 inches deep and the plot will vary with the amount of refuse to be used; for ordinary uses, if the bed is made 3 feet long by 6 feet wide and 3 feet deep it will serve the purpose. Over the manure spread a layer of leaves or straw and cover with another layer of manure. This last layer of manure be only a few inches thick. Repeat the layers until all the waste has been disposed of and then cover the whole with a layer of earth.

If it is desired to add to the heap from time to time the top layer can be opened and the new material emptied in. This plan is found to be most in convenient for the suburban home where there is no animal to consume the kitchen waste. In the spring the heap is well mixed with a fork and the compost is ready to be spread on the garden plot. The heating manure will effectively destroy any weed seed present and will also break down the manure of most of the materials that have been thrown upon the pile. The process may be continued indefinitely by simply adding enough manure to insure heating. Compost is especially valuable for use in hotbeds and cold frames.

In the Mesa Verde Region.

The Mesa Verde region, writes Arthur Chapman, has many attractions besides its ruins. It is a land of weird beauty. The canons, which seam the mesas, and all of which lead toward the distant Mancos river, are, in many cases, replicas of the Grand Canon of the Colorado. While the summer days are very warm, the nights are cool, and the visitor should bring plenty of warm clothing and shoes and shoes necessary for the work of climbing around among the rocks. Little horseback riding can be done.

It is a country of active foot work, but there are a few days of cliff dwellers themselves. But, when one has spent a few days among the cedars and look piece of the Mesa Verde, well named "Green Table" by the Spaniards of early days, he becomes an enthusiast.

From Trumpp to M.P.

Mr. Thomas Murdock, Canadian Minister of Labor, who was recently elected by acclamation in West Kent, created amusement at the annual banquet of the Ottawa Board of Trade by declaring he had only been in the constituency twice.

The first time was some thirty years ago, when he was kicked off a train as a hobo, and the second time was when he was returned as a Minister of the Crown.

BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, TUESDAY, AUGUST 15, 1922.

ONE COAL STRIKE BROKEN ANOTHER HAS STARTED

All Details of Agreement Accepted in Principle by Men and Operators

WAGES ON OLD BASIS

Contract Will Be Signed at Once—Drafting Committee Appointed

Cleveland, Aug. 15.—The soft coal strike was virtually broken last night, but prospects were that the actual signing of the agreement between the United Mine Workers and operators controlling an annual output of 60,000,000 tons would be delayed until to-day. The signing of the contract will actually end the strike in part.

All details of the agreement were accepted in principle by both miners and operators, and the actual drafting of the contract was left to a subcommittee, which continued its work into the night. The actual signing of the contract, President John L. Lewis of the miners said, is expected to follow a meeting tomorrow of the union's Policy Committee. The agreement, it was said, would provide for re-establishment of wage scales that were effective last April, and the new contract would run until next March 31.

Operators controlling approximately 60,000,000 tons annual production were represented at the conference. Their mines were understood to be in central Pennsylvania, western Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, northern West Virginia and Michigan.

Under the decision of the conference it was understood that any soft coal operators anywhere in the country might become parties to the agreement by signing copies of their names to follow immediately. These operators, it was said, might sign the agreement as individuals or by State or district organizations.

MAYORS TO CONFER ON FUEL PROBLEM

Mayor Hanna is Invited by Fuel Controller to Attend Conference in Toronto

Mayor Hanna to-day received a communication from Controller Ellis, of Toronto, to-meet him at the latter place on Thursday morning of this week. The object of the meeting is to hold a conference with mayors of various municipalities in regard to the coal situation, and to ascertain the needs of the various cities. In regard to local conditions there are no changes to note, as dealers are anxiously awaiting news of the settlement of the strike in the neighboring republic. Mayor Hanna stated to a representative of the Intelligencer that he had received a offer for a quantity of Virginia coal laid down here at $15 a ton. The quality of this fuel is, however, questionable as it has not been used here. His Worship anticipates that something definite will be arranged at the meeting to be held at Toronto on Thursday. Citizens generally will be anxiously awaiting any news in regard to the fuel situation.

Agreement Entered Into by Men's Executive Is Repudiated

TIE-UP IS COMPLETE

Division of Opinion, as Some Men Call it "One-day Holiday"

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Sydney, N.S., Aug. 15.—The strike of the Nova Scotia miners is now said to be one hundred per cent. All mine employees in Cape Breton are now out and twelve thousand workers are involved. At noon to-day miners, firemen, pumpmen, leaders and trimmers were all idle and executive officials were pressed into service to keep the pumps and safety apparatus working lest the pits become flooded and choked with poisonous gas.

Sydney, N.S., Aug. 14.—A general strike of the miners of the South Cape Breton coal fields went into effect at midnight.

Disregarding notices that the strike order had been recalled, and repudiating the settlement negotiated by their executives with the British Empire Steel Corporation on Sunday at Sydney, the men commenced leaving the pits with the coal this afternoon.

At midnight every mine in the Glace Bay and New Waterford subdistricts were reported idle.

District 26, United Mine Workers, headquarters stated tonight that it looked as if the whole 12,000 membership of the Province would be out on strike by sunrise.

Coming on the heels of this morning's optimistic announcement of the Sunday settlement, the walkout of the Cape Breton miners came as a surprising blow to the general public here, although it was far from unexpected in mining circles.

As a bright spot there is said to be the possibility that it may all be a mistake, the result of misunderstanding, and that the miners' leaders may be able to induce the men to go back into the pit pending a renewal of the Sydney agreement.

SMALL MYSTERY STILL UNSOLVED

Police Satisfied Persons Arrested in Quebec Not Implicated

Toronto, Aug. 15.—"There is only one item which the Jamieson Small case will keep in mind, and that is the significant remark of Sergeant of Detectives Austin Mitchell, during a candid statement made yesterday, in which he said that Herbert King and Cecilia Haley, brought from Montreal, had nothing to do with the disappearance of the theatrical millionaire on the night of December 2, 1919.

Explanation of Letter.

Sergeant Mitchell explained that he was absolutely convinced that the man and woman had nothing to do with the letter found at the Montreal hotel, and in which the Jamieson Small case was referred to. The supposition is that the letter was placed in the hotel room, and found its way into the hands of the couple, who had eloped from Toronto in the auto stolen from the garage of J. V. Deuzo, on Osmington Drive.

Charged With Theft.

Herbert King and the woman appeared in Court yesterday, charged jointly with the theft of the Deuzo auto, and were remanded for a week. King, through his solicitor, informed the Magistrate that Cecilia Haley knew nothing about the stolen car, resulting in the woman's release in the care of Salvation Army officers. If the case against King goes to trial the woman may be used as evidence.

Charges Simplified.

It was admitted in police circles last night that the trial of King on the charge of auto stealing, and with failing to report his wife, a resident of King street, will be the end of this supposed angle of the Ambrose Small case, which had its beginnings when the letter was found in the Montreal hotel.

Mrs. King, since disappearance of her husband in October, 921, has been receiving assistance from the I.O.D.E., Scottish societies and Rev. A. Logan Gregor, pastor of the Parkdale Presbyterian Church. Her sad plight due to her desertion is a sorry tale.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Ottawa, Aug. 15.—Rosanna Marcaret Powell, daughter of the late Col. William Wallis, of Port Hope, Ont., and widow of the late William Fredrick Powell, who represented the county of Carleton for many years in the Parliament of Canada, before Confederation, died here yesterday in her 86th year.

Division of Opinion, as Some Men Call it "One-day Holiday"

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Sydney, N.S., Aug. 15.—The strike of the Nova Scotia miners is now said to be one hundred per cent. All mine employees in Cape Breton are now out and twelve thousand workers are involved. At noon to-day miners, firemen, pumpmen, leaders and trimmers were all idle and executive officials were pressed into service to keep the pumps and safety apparatus working lest the pits become flooded and choked with poisonous gas.

Sydney, N.S., Aug. 14.—A general strike of the miners of the South Cape Breton coal fields went into effect at midnight.

Disregarding notices that the strike order had been recalled, and repudiating the settlement negotiated by their executives with the British Empire Steel Corporation on Sunday at Sydney, the men commenced leaving the pits with the coal this afternoon.

At midnight every mine in the Glace Bay and New Waterford subdistricts were reported idle.

District 26, United Mine Workers, headquarters stated tonight that it looked as if the whole 12,000 membership of the Province would be out on strike by sunrise.

Coming on the heels of this morning's optimistic announcement of the Sunday settlement, the walkout of the Cape Breton miners came as a surprising blow to the general public here, although it was far from unexpected in mining circles.

As a bright spot there is said to be the possibility that it may all be a mistake, the result of misunderstanding, and that the miners' leaders may be able to induce the men to go back into the pit pending a renewal of the Sydney agreement.

POINCARE'S FACE WAS SMILELESS AT DEPARTURE

Would Not Pose for His Photographer at the Railway Station

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, August 15.—Delegates to the unsuccessful conference of the Allied Premiers on German reparations left for home this morning. Premier Theunys and secretaries departed first for homes in Belgium, and Premier Poincare and party and the Italian Premier Minister Schanzer left by a later train. Premier Lloyd George did not see M. Poincare off at the station.

Sir Edward Grigg, Lloyd George's private secretary, Premier Secretary Curzon and Sir Robert Horne, were among those who said farewell to the French and Italian delegates.

All were in good spirits except M Poincare, who was pale and unsmiling, and who even refused to pose for a photograph. Before going to the station the French Premier visited the grave of the unknown warrior on which he placed a wreath of flowers, bound with the French tricolor.

THAT STRANGE NOISE NOT AT WALMSLEY'S

Police Know Who Made the Moaning but They Are Not Worrying About it

Out of fairness to the owners and the employees of the Walmsley Building, we wish to state that the wailing and sobbing heard recently in the boiler-room of the corner of Bridge and Pinnacle streets, and at first thought to be referred from the Walmsley building, did not come from that building.

To make sure of this statement, the Intelligencer sent reporters and police officers this morning, and were assured that the Walmsley building had nothing whatever to do with the noise, it being well known now by the officers where the sounds came from.

MONKS MAY MARRY

Revolutionary Changes in Russian Church Rules

Moscow, Aug. 15.—All restrictions on marriage for bishops and clergymen have been removed by the "Living Church Congress" of the recently formed Soviet Church, whose members are working to have the new church take the place of the old Orthodox Church. Among the "Red clergy," as the clergymen of the new church are called, the Orthodox Church is referred to as the "Dead Church."

Regarding monks, the congress decided that the higher monks may dispense with vows and marry, still retaining their positions.

LEFT THE CANOE TO RECOVER PADDLE AND WAS DROWNED

Toronto, Aug. 14.—Elmer Withbridge, 18 years old, son of Frederick and Mrs. Withbridge, Toronto, was drowned Saturday in Scugog Lake. The youth was in a canoe with a Toronto girl, Miss F. Fraser, when he lost his paddle. As it floated away he plunged in and swam to it, but was not able to return to the canoe and sank exhausted. Miss Fraser was rescued from the drifting canoe.

PRAIRIE PREMIERS HAVE ABANDONED THE WHEAT BOARD

Premiers of Saskatchewan and Alberta Declare Against It

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Calgary, Alta., Aug. 15.—Premier Greenfield of Alberta and Premier Dunning of Saskatchewan last night decided to abandon the Wheat Board this year, and so informed the Federal Government. This action was taken after John I. McFarland and James Murray had refused appointments to the Board.

In announcing their decision not to accept appointments to the Board, Messrs. McFarland and Murray declared that they were guided largely by the opposition of the grain trade to the Wheat Board.

THROW HARD CIDER TO THE FISHES

If the fish in the bay are noticed to be rather over playful and inclined to come to the top for air occasionally to-day, fishermen need not be alarmed, for this morning at the police station here, a barrel and one keg of hard cider were dumped into the sewer. The concoction was seized by the police here some time ago, and was finally disposed of in this manner.

SOME OF RALEIGH'S MEN ON MONTROSE

Halifax, N. S., Aug. 14.—A wireless despatch to Halifax tonight stated that the Canadian Pacific steamship Montrose, from Montreal for England, has picked up 43 o., cers, 39 petty officers and 470 men of the stranded British cruiser Raleigh, which went ashore near Point Amour in the Straits of Belle Isle, on Tuesday.

HARDING WILL EXPLAIN RAILWAY SITUATION AND ENFORCE SERVICE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Aug. 15.—President Harding will place the entire railway situation before the United States' Congress and before the country within 48 hours it was officially announced at the White House this afternoon.

It was stated by his advisers that the President had decided to request the railway executives to operate the trains and that he had promised the protection of the government in efforts to give service to the public and the country.

PREMIER WILLING TO BE BARTENDER

So Long as Profits Go to Education, Health, and Roads

Buckingham, Que., Aug. 14.—"The leader of the opposition, Arthur Sauve, believes he does no injury when he calls me the head bartender of the province of Quebec. He is mistaken; I am willing to assume the title of head bartender of Quebec provided the Quebec liquor act continues to act satisfactorily and the revenues derived therefrom continue from its operation are applied as now to further the cause of education, combat tuberculosis, promote colonization, and agriculture and give added impetus to the good roads in this province."

The above was the statement of Hon. L. A. Taschereau, premier of Quebec, in the course of an address here last night in support of the Liberal candidate, Desire Lahaie, who is contesting the forthcoming by-election for Labelle county.

MEIGHEN DECLARES WHEAT BD. "FIASCO"

Tory Leader Scores Government for Legislation to Market Grain

Portage la Prairie, Aug. 14.—The Wheat Board legislation is a fiasco and was intended by the Government side to be a fiasco when the legislation was put through," declared Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, ex-Premier and Conservative Federal leader, speaking at a picnic here this afternoon given in his honor by the Portage la Prairie and Lakeside Conservative Association. Other speakers were Major F. G. Taylor, Conservative leader in Manitoba, Hugh Armstrong, former Provincial Treasurer, and Sanford Evans and J. T. Hale, Conservative members of the Legislature for Winnipeg.

MENTAL BREAK CAUSED DEATH OF NORTHCLIFFE

Complete Mental Breakdown Accompanied His Mysterious Ailments

MYSTERY OF ILLNESS

London, Aug., 15.—Lord Northcliffe's death, although expected, came as a shock to London and forms the chief news on the subject of all evening papers, crowding out such events as the International Conference.

Lord Northcliffe died at his home 1 Carlton Gardens, where he had been lying ill about three months since his return from America. There was much mystery about his place of residence during his illness, not even members of the staffs of his own papers being allowed to know where he was.

Mystery About Illness.

There was mystery also about his illness, which was said to be due to an affection of the heart caused by some obscure poisoning. It is no secret, however, that he suffered a complete mental breakdown at the end.

He first began to show signs of the strain more than a year ago and was persuaded to take a world trip in the hope that rest and change would restore his health. This seemed effective at first, but after his return he plunged into work again and had to go to Switzerland. There the final breakdown came and he was brought home by relatives.

There is much speculation about the disposition of his immense newspaper and other properties. He left no heir to his title. He left a widow and four brothers—Viscount Rothermere, Sir Harold and Sire Hildebrand Harmsworth but it is said no one knows the contents of his will.

DE VALERA HAS LEFT THE CAMP FOR SAFE PLACE

Rebel Leader Said to Have Left For Continental Port

TROOPS DISPIRITED

Irish Rebels Destroy Roads and Bridges as They Retreat

Cork, Aug. 15.—Irregulars after abandoning Cork, have retreated towards the Kerry Hills and as usual destroyed the roads and bridges along the way.

At Macroom, an irregular brigade dispanded because of a dispute as to the destruction of Macroom Castle which they garrisoned. They also are reported to be retreating from Fermoy, where the barracks were set on fire.

In their flight, the irregulars commandeered vehicles and horses everywhere by orders of their leaders, who hope to prolong guerilla conditions, although it is thought the rank and file are dispirited particularly as supplies are exhausted and the people are in revolt against their imputations.

De Valera, who has disappeared, was last seen in Cork, Thursday, and there are rumors that he has left for some continental port on board a sailing vessel.

DRURY DROPS FARMER PARTY

Letter From Mr. Drury Reveals Further Uniting-Out Policy

Toronto, August 15.—Despite frequent denials, Premier E. C. Drury has apparently at last definitely decided to drop the distinctive Farmer character of the political movement which placed him in power at Queen's Park and form a third party—a Progressive party along the line of the two old parties, with town and city people taking definite part.

The first definite move toward "liberalizing out" was taken recently by the Premier a month ago, and has only now become known. Premier Drury, it is stated, at that time, July 15, sent to practically every U. F. O. member, with one or two interesting exceptions, a communication practically suggesting the calling of a Provincial Progressive convention, which, presumably, would organize a new party and draft a new platform.

The Letter Mr. Drury Sent.

The Premier's letter to the member follows:

"Toronto, July 15, 1922.

"Sir,—A proposal has come to me from friends of the Progressive party in the city of Toronto, and in some other cities, looking toward the calling, at some time in the not too distant future, of a Progressive Convention for the Province of Ontario.

"It is recognized that the strength of the Progressive party of Ontario is found in the rural districts, but that there are many in the village, town and cities who think as we do politically, and who will be willing and eager to aid us when the time comes for a test of our strength in the Province.

"With a view to discussing out' ook' with a view to enlisting the active aid of these urban friends, it has been proposed that a general convention should be called which those would be invited to attend.

"First, however, it has been suggested that it would be well to get in touch with those urban friends and find out their views on the matter. With that end in view, I am writing you, asking you to send me, in confidence, a list of urban friends of the Progressive cause in your riding or in your district, to whom I may write and may be acquainted, and which is not at present represented by a Progressive member.

"Your co-operation in this matter would be greatly appreciated, and will, I am sure, contribute greatly to the success and strength of Progressivism in the Province of Ontario. Any list of Urban friends you may send me will be treated as confidential, and I would ask you that you treat this letter in the same manner."

(Signed.) "E. C. Drury."

PROFITEER CONSCIENCE-SMITTEN ON BOARD THREATENED LINER

Skinning People All His Life Aged Passenger Said He Was Afraid to Die

New York, August 14.—Passengers of the Adriatic, which docked last night after an explosion at sea Friday morning adopted a testimonial to Captain H. F. David, and his crew, lauding their "discipline, coolness and kindness" and Captain David replied that the "working of an allwise and merciful Providence which controls our actions" had saved the ship and its human freight from disaster.

George S. McLeish, a former theatrical man of Toronto, who was one of the first passengers on deck after the explosion, said that the women were better behaved and less nervous in the face of danger than the men.

One old fellow, about 70, he said, came running up on deck in his pajamas, asking: "What's the matter?"

"Nothing," Mr. McLeish answered, "go to sleep."

"I can't," rejoined the old fellow, "I don't want to die."

Mr. McLeish accompanied him to his cabin.

"You're not afraid to die, are you, old fellow?" he asked.

"Yes," he answered solemnly, "I've been skinning people all my life."

OPIUM SEIZED AT KINGSTON

Four Celestials Taken In Raid Made at Limestone City

Kingston, Aug. 14.—Four Chinamen, Lee Hong, Kee Kim, Lee Chong and Fong Hum, who were arrested in an Ontario street residence during the week-end, the last of whom was charged with having opium and the other two with frequenting the farmers' place, were remanded for a week by Mayor Corbett this morning.

Two of the prisoners belong to this city. Another come from Ottawa and the other from Deseronto. They were released on $100 bail each, which fellow countrymen provided. The evidence was brought to court in samall candy pail containing match boxes, paper bundles and bits of bamboo.

NEED FOR TRADE WITHIN EMPIRE

Bonar Law Urges Development of Trade Between British Dominions

London, Aug. 18.—The need for the development and expansion of trade within the confines of the British Empire has been stressed recently by a number of public speakers.

Among these is Andrew Bonar Law, former Chancellor of the Exchequer, who at a recent luncheon to the visiting members of the Dominion parliaments said:

"I am not an advocate of complete indifference in the wreck of Europe, but I do say our first duty is to develop our own heritage, and in that will be found the way to safety and prosperity.

"The war could not have been won without the help of the self-governing dominions. It will be one of the tragedies of this world if, after this co-operation, we should not be closer than in the bonds of a common interest."

"The whole of Central Europe, from the commercial point of view, has gone. If we have to wait for the hope of recovery until order is restored in that part of the world, it will be a black outlook for this country.

"Before the war our total exports to Germany, Russia, and the whole of Central Europe amounted to far less than half of what we sent to our self-governing dominions. It is to them we must look."

The Association of British Chambers of Commerce at its quarterly meeting in London passed a resolution urging on the government the need for meeting at an early date an Imperial Conference at which the government, the dominions, and commerce and industry should be represented, in order to consider the development of empire resources.

The government has decided to meet half the cost of sending all approved emigrants to the dominions. This will cost it about $3,000,000 annually.

"If that has been the rest of the British Empire," said Lord Birkenhead, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in referring to this measure, "it will be as nothing to its future if the wisdom of our statesmen in all parts of the Empire is equal to the gigantic task that awaits them."

KING GEORGE MAKES A FINE SPEECH

He Seldom Gets Credit For Original Ones, However

London, August 16.—So many of King George's speeches are written for him by his ministers, as all the world knows, that he never gets credit for the good speeches he thinks up himself. People always say: "The speech was all right, but some one else wrote it for him."

This is not always true. In everything that relates to affairs of state he speaks only through the mouths of his responsible ministers, and the "speech from the throne", delivered when Parliaments shuts down, is far from a thrilling production, and it is not his.

But King George made a really good address the other day in London at the opening of the fine new building of the London County Council. He dwelt upon the wisdom of the men of past ages in erecting fine buildings in their cities, and drew a picture of the necessity of the vested authority being adequately housed; an authority meanly housed would be meanly esteemed. It would be difficult to emphasize Joo strongly the importance of efficient local government to the general well-being of the country, the King said, and the handsome edifice of the London County Council should stimulate the development of that sense of citizenship so difficult and yet so imperative to cultivate.

His Majesty undoubtedly wrote this speech himself, and it has been most favorably commented upon; nevertheless he is getting little credit for it. The world thinks it is the product of some minister whose mouthpiece was King George.

INDIAN MAHOUT CURES ELEPHANT

Curious Method of Curing Big Elephant of Laziness

London, Aug. 15.—A big female Indian elephant that went on strike at the Zoo last spring and refused to do what all big elephants at the Zoo are required to do—earn meals by carrying children around on her back—has been cured of the sulks and laziness by the seeming magic treatment of an Indian mahout.

She was presented to the Zoo by the Maharajah of Cooch Behar two years ago. She had been well trained and acted at all times like a sensible, well-behaved elephant and obeyed orders properly. She developed no vices beyond that of pickling pockets for edible dainties. But every elephant that has any sense at all learns to do that in the Zoo.

Then she took it into her big head that she would not submit to being bossed any longer. She declined to stand between the new riding steps that had been fixed up for the convenience of juvenile elephant riders. When the old wooden steps were substituted for the new ones she promptly declined to stir. In the end she declined to leave the elephant yard at all.

As the elephant is a fine animal, and quite good tempered, it was decided to obtain a mahout from India. He was cabled for, and arrived in due course. He was taken to the elephant house. He at once entered the enclosure and formally saluted the animal, standing first at her head and then at her tail. Next he took off his shoes, and knotted a rope loosely round the elephant's neck, which he afterward used as a kind of stirrup.

With little difficulty he persuaded her to kneel and talking volubly to her in Hindustani, he had got on good terms with the animal. Then he took her round to the elephant ride, and apparently had her in complete control.

Phrases of his admonitions, freely translated, were as follows: "I am told that you eat your food, and will not work; it is wrong; Allah enjoins on us all that we must work if we would eat. You are cheating your masters, and it is unworthy of you. I am only a black man, and you need not mind me. Put four out of your mind; take it up from your heart, and throw it out."

The elephant certainly seemed to understand, and now obeys every order. The mahout was given quarters in another part of the gardens, but he obtained leave to sleep in the elephant house, and he says that he wishes to talk to the elephant during the night. He has not yet tried to saddle her, as he wants to take things slowly, but he is confident he will conquer all her fears and make her permanently obedient.

AIRPLANE LINES.

Regular airplane lines are in operation in France.

Paris-London (Several departures daily in either direction.)

Paris-Brussels-Amsterdam.

Toulouse-Barcelona - Rabat - Casablanca (Africa).

Bordeaux - Montpellier - Nice - Paris - Prague - Warsaw (Poland), and others.

The rates are very reasonable and in some cases cheaper than the rail ticket, as for instance for the flight Paris-Warsaw, which costs 800 francs.

Many regular services of comfortable motor cars have been organized, in most cases by the railway companies themselves, and in practically every region of France. The price per seat, for an afternoon excursion, varies from 20 to 25 francs.

Several passenger cars, of the latest models, can be hired without difficulty in every important centre. Five persons travelling together can make a trip of 1,000 miles in 15 days for 2,000 francs (about $475.00, at the present rate of French exchange), which includes the hiring of a car, the chauffeur's expenses and the gasoline.

The gasoline price in France is at present 7.50 to 8.50 francs for five liters (practically 1 7-8 gallon, according to district).

LORDS ARGUE OVER AIRCRAFT

Great Britain's Naval Policy is Unchanged, Says Lord Lee

London, Aug. 14.—The question of the aircraft menace and the building of the two capital ships sanctioned by the Washington Disarmament agreement, has been raised in the House of Lords by the Marquis of Linlithgow.

"Why, he asked, should it be thought that supremacy in the air would give to the belligerent that obtained it the military advantage belonging to command of the sea? He doubted the ability of aircraft to carry any appreciable quantity of the food supplies needed by Britain, or to protect her lines of commerce. Also he doubted that the bomb-dropping or torpedo-firing aeroplane would be able to neutralize the capital ship, against which a stream of "interested propaganda" was being directed.

Lord Lee replied that Britain's naval policy was unchanged and the capital ship was still regarded as indispensable.

"There have been no new developments in connection with either aerial or underwater craft," he said, "which necessitate a reversal of the decision of the government to proceed with these capital ships, or, indeed any modification in the constructional designs which have been approved.

"It is the result of a long series of experiments, that it is possible, both constructionally and financially, to build capital ships which shall be reasonably proof against any known or likely methods of attack. The necessary designs for that purpose already have been worked out, and approved, and are ready for the use of the builder.

"Unless these two capital ships are proceeded with," Lord Lee concluded, "we shall have to abandon the one-power standard and fall to third place, as compared to the United States and Japan, in the most vital portion of a fleet. Such a course would be fatal to our security and incompatible with government pledges."

Britannia still rules the air though she may not quite rule the waves. So claims Air Ministry in a statement. From this it appears that—

The British Navy is better equipped in regard to aircraft than that of any other power.

The number of fighting aircraft available for the navy can be expanded at the briefest notice, and pilots supplied.

Important new types of machines for the use of the navy shortly will be adopted.

"Development of the naval wing of flying," said an official of the Air Ministry, "has been greater in England than in any other country. We claim that the naval side of the air service is the most efficient and up-to-date in the world.

"We have about 98 fighting machines in commission, equivalent to eight squadrons; another 48 are in use for training purposes, and over 300 are in reserve, apart from machines requiring reconditioning. These can all be manned. Only one squadron is abroad.

"At any moment we can put 700 or 800 machines into the air, and we have an additional 3,000 machines available."

Secret tests carried out by aircraft attacks on battleships are said to have proved the effectiveness of smoke screens thrown out by aircraft before attacking with torpedoes. The machines used were torpedo-planes and the torpedoes carried oil instead of the usual explosive charge. A part of the fleet was detailed to be prepared for a sudden attack from the air, but the time of attack was not given and anti-aircraft gunners were kept on the alert.

The planes speared high up out of range and suddenly planted a smoke screen around the fleet by means of bombs. Behind it they twisted and turned until they had obtained broadside position. The torpedoes were discharged at short range and it is understood the umpire awarded 100 per-cent hits. All the machines returned safely to their base and the operation is said to have lasted only 80 seconds from the time the gunners sighted the planes to the time they got safely away.

THE CORN EAR-WORM

Most Destructive Enemy of the Corn Crop.

The Mother Moth Lays Eggs During June, July and August—Egg to Moth Cycle About Forty Days—Deep Fall Ploughing Advocated—Horse's Efficiency Depends on Rations.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The moths responsible for the egg laying that produces so many destructive worms appear in June and deposit their eggs—on various food plants during June, July and August. The female moths that are attracted to corn lay their eggs on the silks. The eggs are usually laid in circular flattened discs, that hatch three or four days after being deposited. The worms feed on the silk for a day or two and then work down into the interior of the husk tips, where they continue to feed on the silks and tender kernels at the tip of the ear, gradually working downward as they grow to maturity. When fully developed the Ear-worms leave the ear and drop to the ground from about four inches to pupate. Two weeks after entering the soil the transformation is completed and from that pupa soon comes up as a moth.

Egg and Moth Cycle About Forty Days.

The life cycle, egg to moth, is completed in about forty days. The brood that attacks the corn silks is the most destructive one. These moths are strong flays, and may go considerable distance from their birthplace in search of new fields. No new generation of moths developed on corn Ear-worm has been devised. Deep fall ploughing to destroy the last brood of the season is in part successful. If all land owners would practice a general clean up and deep ploughing of all lands in the autumn this pest would be reduced considerably. With many neglected areas scattered through the corn growing sections this insect's presence will be felt for some time.

Date of Planting a Factor in Control.

The date of corn planting is a factor of importance in escaping Ear-worm injury, with the probable date of the second brood of moths emergence being known with fair accuracy, the planting may be done at a time to insure the corn ears being developed beyond the green silk stage before the moths of the second brood appear. The early planted corn has suffered less injury than the late.

Deep Autumn Ploughing Recommended.

Deep autumn ploughing of all land not in crop, the cleaning up of all materials that shelter insect life, the use of early ripening varieties of corn, early planting on well prepared land at dates well calculated to miss the major portion of the egg laying moths, are ways of reducing the probable injury from Corn Ear-worm.

Horse's Efficiency Depends on Rations.

One of the factors that materially affects the efficiency of the work horse especially in hot weather is the feed he receives and the manner in which he receives it. In order that a horse may do a full day's work regularly throughout the summer months and yet maintain a presentable condition he must be fed just about to his full capacity. In order to do this and not injure his health, care and judgment must be exercised in the selection of feeds used.

The feeds best suited to form the principal components of the ration are good bright clean timothy or upland prairie hay and bright, clean, sound oats. The average horse weighing 1,500 pounds will require daily 12 pounds of hay and 12 to 14 pounds of oats a day.

There is a wide variation in food requirements of different horses of the same weight, however. Some do not have the capacity to consume and digest that much feed, and must be fed less even though as a result they cannot be expected to work as hard, while others commonly spoken of as easy feeders will do more and do well on a little less feed than the prescribed amount. The successful teamster or feeder will study the individuality of his horses and feed accordingly.

Horses that are handled quietly and patiently will do much more work and keep in better condition on a given amount of feed than will horses that are abused and consequently kept nervous and in fear of the driver.

The ration given above can be improved upon by using one feed per day of good, bright, clean alfalfa or clover hay, or by substituting bran for about 10 to 20 per cent of the oats used. The grain feed should be replaced by a bran mash or feed of boiled barley or boiled oats on Saturday nights. The daily grain allowance should be reduced by about one-fourth on Sundays. Corn can be used in place of oats to constitute one half of the grain ration, though straight oats is conducive to slightly more vim and endurance over a long period of time.

The heavy feed of the day should of course be given at night, while the heavy feed of the noon hour is at a minimum. Watering both before and after feeding grain is the most satisfactory method. Work horses should also have an opportunity to fill their bellies with hay.—W. H. Peters, chief of the Division of Animal Husbandry, University of Minnesota.

The efficiency of the hog is determined by his ability to make a maximum gain on the minimum amount of feed. To do this the young pig must be kept thrifty.

Mark the value of the incidental. It was in photographing a comet that in 1893, instantly solved great new to astronomers. From that incident came the project of photographing "all" the stars suitable in cameras.

BEAVER WAS FINED.

William Beaver of Madoc township, near Madoc village, who was captured by Inspector Wm. Nugent of this city, while on a "stilt" hunt in the north country, one week ago Saturday, appeared before Magistrate Masson on Saturday last and, on pleading guilty, was fined $200 and costs or six months in jail.

It is believed that neighbors will come to the rescue and pay the fine for the man. Beaver has a wife and nine children to support.

It will be remembered that Beaver was caught after a foot race over the hill, as he carried a hot still in his arms. He was not the man for whom the officers were searching, who thought that the man they wanted was in his house. Beaver went to jail, however, when he saw the law, and while attempting to get the still out of the house, walked into the room in which the officer was standing.

TWO BAD INSECT PESTS

Play Havoc With Some Field and Garden Crops.

The White Grub, Larva of the June Beetle—The Wireworm, Larva of the Click Beetle—How to Deal With Them—Calf Feeding a Real Problem.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Much injury is done to certain field and garden crops by the two insects named above. Hints as to their control are given below:

The White Grub.

The White Grub working and feeding beneath the soil on grass roots, field crops and garden crops, destroys many thousands of dollars' worth of after each year, much of the destruction in the corn and strawberry fields can be charged to this insect. Pasture fields, hay meadows and grain fields are frequently much reduced in value through the roots of the plants being nibbled off by this pest. The parent of the white grub is the June Beetle, usually very common as a night flier in late June and July. The female beetle usually lays her eggs in grass land, meadows, pastures, lawns, fence rows, bush gruths both in twelve to fourteen days after the eggs are laid, they require two years to develop, living and feeding on grass and other plant roots until ready to pupate. The change from grub to mature insect takes place between the autumn of the second year and the following spring. Since these grubs live and feed beneath the soil for full two years it is impossible to reach them with poisons or sprays. Cultivation to break up the pupal cases or expose such to the weather or birds is the most efficient way to control. Old sod lands are usually heavily infested, and the crop following the first ploughing suffers heavily. A short rotation with deep autumn ploughing whenever possible, and not more than one year out of three in grass will keep the numbers down sufficiently to permit profitable crop production.

The Wireworm.

What is the matter with the crops? Much of the seed has failed to produce a plant and the plants have developed are weak and stunted. Scratch away the soil and look for the seed that you planted some weeks ago. If you find that the seed grain has been penetrated or partly devoured you will have learned that wireworms have been at work. You may even find hard smooth shining slender cylindrical" ate-legged larva at work the wireworms vary in color from reddish to yellowish brown. The wireworm is the larva of a class of beetles commonly known as "Click Beetles" (Elaterides). These beetles frequent and breed in grass land. Fields that have been grown to hay or pasture for a number of years are generally heavily infested. As the first crop sown after breaking the sod usually suffers severely. The legs is the best agent to destroy the young beetles, in short rotations that does not include hay or pasture more frequently than one crop in four is generally effective in controlling the pest. The ploughing should be done early in the autumn, and the land worked so as to expose the grubs to the hard freezing weather stops fire the hard freezing weather stops the soil will break up many pupal cases and thereby expose the young to developing. Land so treated should be wet. All or many will perish, reducing the possibility of serious infestation of cultivated lands during the following season.—H. Stevenson, Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

Music and Drama

"The Spanish Jade" Proves Entertaining Picture.

To be able to sit in a comfortable seat within a stone's throw of one's home and yet see for a whole hour life in many Spain is a treat as rare as it is beautiful. Yet that is what the management of Griffin's theatre intended for patrons last evening with gratifying results. Though the treat may seem from this more or less in the nature of a Travelogue, yet it took the form of Paramount's really delightful six part drama, "The Spanish Jade," adapted from the Maurice Hewlett's famous novel "Spanish Jade."

The story is one of a modern Don Quixote, poor of purse today, rich of purse tomorrow, but big of heart always. And forever on the lookout to befriend people in distress. It deals with his course of a pretty young girl from a cruel alliance into which her father was forcing her and of the many stirring adventures the pair went through before happiness ultimately caught up with them.

John H. Robertson, the director, took his company right across to Spain in order that the picture could be filmed in its correct location. His artistry is unmistakable throughout, and the genius work that he put into "Sentimental Tommy" is reflected again in this later production. The cast which he assembled is one of uniform excellence and includes such well known names as David Powell, Marc McDermott and Evelyn Brent.

"The Rage of Paris," the fine reel Universal photoplay, introducing to stardom Miss Du Pont, declared by many to be "America's most beautiful blonde," was the second feature offering on the same program. "The Rage of Paris" is an absorbing and colorful study of woman, with the upper strata of the exclusive set of New York, the revelry of Parisian night life and the burning sands of the Arabian desert as a dramatic background.

The story, adapted by Lenore Bickhard from DuVernet Radell's magazine success, "The White Peacock Feather," proves a most suitable vehicle for allowing Miss Du Pont the fullest range of her dramatic powers. It is a worth while picture.

The comedy bonds for the program was given by Al St. John who appeared in an amusing Fox comedy titled "The Haywood."

At his recommendation the Board approved the expenditure of $120,000 for a new pump in the district capable of supplying an additional 20,000,000 gallons of water daily.

HARMSWORTH AND NORTHCLIFFE

Lord Northcliffe is dead. Alfred Harmsworth died some years ago. We will be told that these were one and the same man, but those of the memory of Harmsworth the journalist and Northcliffe the monopolist and public dictator must come to the conclusion that these were two distinct personalities. The dictatorial publicist may have developed naturally out of the enterprising journalist, but the two men were different. In thinking of the later days of this great man—for he was a great man—one is reminded of the lines in Kipling's "Recessional"—

"If drunk with sight of power we loose
Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe."

Both Harmsworth and Northcliffe were lacking in a due sense of humility, but there was a human side to the younger man which seemed to have become obliterated in the older. Those who remember the numerous publications that started with Answers, and which attained such wide popularity in Great Britain, will have a kindly thought for the man who initiated them and conducted them so well. One thing can be said of Alfred Harmsworth's credit, that his early publications were clean as well as entertaining. Even his comic papers were such as the average child might read, and no longer was of a higher order than that contained in the grotesque caricatures of human life known as the American "comic strip". The Harmsworth papers and magazines were undoubtedly a good influence in the homes of the English people.

Success has its dangers and great success has its tragedies. The "sight of power" is a veritable intoxicant with some men and when a man is intoxicated no one knows what is going to happen, and even the man himself is not responsible for his words and actions. On his death-bed we are told that Lord Northcliffe tried to hold on to power and dictated orders to his papers over the telephone—which, however, was "fused."

The pity of it is that the last impression of this great man may remain in the minds of people; it is so well that it should, if only as a warning, but it is not a fair impression. Even Lord Northcliffe the dictator performed valuable service during the war. He kept Britain alive to the seriousness of certain phases of the conflict and had an important influence in bringing the United States actively into the struggle.

We regret the passing of this great newspaperman, and especially the mode of his departure. Kipling has either his death-scene appropriation—

"If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or walk with Kings—nor lose the common touch."

The lesson to be learned is one that might well be made a note of by other men who boast of their "success", and write books about their stupendous feats in the direction. We need not go may further than Kipling for advice on this point—

"If you can meet with triumph and disaster,
And treat these two impostors just the same."

THE GOVERNMENT'S CONVERSION SCHEME

The attention of the holders of the five and a half per cent war loan bonds maturing December 1, 1922, is directed to the offer of the Minister of Finance to renew the loan on favourable terms. The last Canadian loan was placed in New York at a satisfactory price. The Minister is making his present financial operation entirely a domestic one by offering to exchange the maturing bonds for new bonds bearing the same rate of interest, running for either five years or ten years as the bondholder may prefer. A further inducement to the investor is that he receives a bonus of one month's interest. The terms offered are decidedly favorable to the investor and it is probable that a large part of the maturing loan will be renewed. Arrangements for the exchange of the bonds can be made at any branch of the chartered bank. Holders who do not wish to reinvest will be paid in cash on the 1st December.

ANOTHER COINCIDENCE

The other day a local newspaper—we use the word "local" advisedly—found it necessary to apologize for the appearance of ad editorial which read like an editor talking through his hat. In a Western exchange that has just come to hand we have come across a similar mix-up, here it is.

Someone sent the editor of a weekly paper a few bottles of home brew. The next day he received for publication a wedding announcement and a notice of an auction sale. The result was as follows:

"Wm. Smith and Miss Lucy Anderson were disposed of at public auction at my home one mile east of a beautiful cluster of trees on the front and two white calves, before a background of farm implements too numerous to mention in the presence of about seventy guests including two milch cows, six mules and one bobsled. Rev. Jackson tied the nuptial knot with about 200 feet of hay rope and the bride's parents left on one good John Deere Gang plow for an extended trip with terms to suit purchasers. They will be at home to their friends with one good baby carriage and a few kitchen utensils after ten months from date of sale to respectable parties and some chickens."

The use of "coke" is prohibited, and it would appear the price of coke has suddenly become prohibitive. Strikes, like wars, make profiteers.

HERE AND THERE

HOW HOT ARE THE STARS!

Stars which are within a certain radius of the sun are estimated to have a temperature of 6,000 degrees Centigrade and even at very moderate solar depth this increases to 10,000 degrees Centigrade. In the cyclonic whirls of sun spots—the temperature of the rising columns of gas drops, as a result of rapid expansion, to something like 3,000 degrees Centigrade. Yet at the base of these whirling vortices it is believed that the temperature lies in the neighborhood of 20,000 degrees Centigrade, and in the depths of the sun a temperature of millions of degrees probably is attained.

In the comparatively cool sunspot regions, where the temperature is approximately that of the hottest source of terrestrial heat—the electrical furnace—certain refractory chemical compounds exist, such as the oxides of titanium and magnesium. The "planet stars, Betelgeuse and Antare among others, at one end of the chain of stellar evolution and the red dwarf stars at the other end have spectra that are very similar in some respect to the spectra of sunspots. They reveal the presence in those stars of oxides, chiefly titanium, and of carbon compounds. The temperatures of these stars are estimated to be about the same as in the sunspot regions, or between 3,000 degrees and 4,000 degrees Centigrade.

Stars which show numerous metallic lines in their spectra, such as Pollux and Arcturus, come midway between the deep red giants and dwarfs and the solar type stars, of which our sun is one. They average about 4,000 degrees or 5,000 degrees Centigrade in surface temperature. Stars of the so-called solar type, such as Capella, average about 6,000 degrees Centigrade in temperature. The metallic lines in the spectra of these stars are less pronounced than in the late metallic types, and consequently the stars are hotter.

The hottest of all stars are white hydrogen stars and the intensely luminous helium stars. Among these stars we temperatures lie between 10,000 degrees and 12,000 degrees number the well-known Sirius and Vega and Rigel. Their Centigrade.

In all instances these are the temperatures that prevail at the radiating surface of the stars. How high the temperature rises below the depths of the stars' interior is more difficult to determine, but it is believed that the best must run as high as several million degrees.

A BLOCK OF THE OLD CHIP

Those of my readers who know Sir Philip Gibbs by sight will appreciate the following, which I cull from an English exchange:

Sir Philip Gibbs looks extremely young to be the father of a boy of 14. Sir Philip has a son of that age, and the other day the boy was taken to a cricket match by his father. Sir Philip was recognized by the crowd, and the boy was pointed out as his son. "Is that your father?" asked a friend. "Yes," said the boy, "but I'm not responsible for his appearance."

Mr. Taft Wants to be Counted

"Probably the greatest layman actively associated with Unitarian Christianity at the present time is ex-President Taft, pew Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States," writes the Inquirer. "In his visits to this country he has had no warmer or more heartfelt welcome than he received on Monday afternoon at the Essex House in a large and representative gathering of Unitarians met to bid him welcome in the name of the churches on this side of the Atlantic, of that religious community to which he belongs and amongst which he ever stands to be counted as a member.

"Mr. Taft, in acknowledging the warm greeting accorded him, said that in the course of his varied travels in the United States he had always tried to find out the Unitarian centre, if there was one, and he always found that the Unitarians were amongst the best people there—intellectual, with high ideals, and with a reverence in their religious affiliation and a desire for better conditions for everybody, which made them, though a small element, a most important one in their community. They are not so numerous as they might be and the good of offering to exchange the maturing bonds for new bonds bearing the same rate of interest, running for either five years or ten years as the bondholder may prefer. A further inducement to the investor is that he receives a bonus of one month's interest. The terms offered are decidedly favorable to the investor and it is probable that a large part of the maturing loan will be renewed. Arrangements for the exchange of the bonds can be made at any branch of the chartered bank. Holders who do not wish to reinvest will be paid in cash on the 1st December.

"He himself claimed no credit for being a Unitarian, for his grandmother was a Unitarian who got over in the time of Channing, and her parents were Unitarians. But the older he grew and the more he had assumed responsibility in political and governmental matters, the more strongly convinced he was that the world was only to be saved by the spirit of reverent, Sacred and progressed greatly in a material sense, but they needed for the human heart and soul the neutralising power of religion as an offset against the selfishness which material progress fosters.

There were numbers of men and women amidst the people, certain religious tenets, who, drifting out of their denominations, became merely lukewarm and indifferent, and indifference and hostility were the worst things religion had to contend with.

"Unitarians were not ambitious to command the whole world, but they were anxious to furnish those people with a field of religious responsibilities of which they need not excuse themselves from assuming because they were not permitted to use their reason; and if they only attended to the inert and indifferent, they would have quite enough to do. In the United States there had been, as they knew, since the war, unusual activity on the part of Unitarians, who were seeking to improve their faith and hope upon those people who had drifted, and, to give them an inspiration which would help them to make their lives better and enable them to enter into relationship to God without accepting creeds and dogmas.

"Personally, said Mr. Taft, he was not militant for Unitarianism as against other denominations, though in days when Unitarians were made the objects of more exclusion than at present it would have been hard not to be militant. But now, in his country, at least, that spirit of discrimination had largely passed away. When he ran for the Presidency he was known as a Unitarian, and it made no difference, although he did occasionally receive a telegram from the back of the mountains asking him to deny the slander!"

PRESS OPINIONS

MR. CRERAR'S OPPORTUNITY.

(Main Line Leader.)

The report from Ottawa that the Hon. Thomas A. Crerar himself may be offered the Minister of Railways and Canals portfolio in succession to Hon. Charles Stewart and Wood River will be the door on the offer will be acceptable to the Board wreckers could be nominated for the House of Commons by United Grain Growers, Limited. Mr. Crerar professes to a wide acquaintance with the conditions of the grain growing and marketing." For years he has been the business head of one of the largest grain handling companies of the West, a company that has made great profits. These profits have been made out of grain produced by the Western farmer, and the presumption, at least, is that Mr. Crerar had his share in large, more would have been received by the producers of the grain so handled. Mr. Crerar poses as a champion of the poor grain grower of the West, but hitherto he has had no such practical opportunity of serving their interest as he would have as chairman of the board. The West could excuse Mr. Crerar from the job, because he in no sense seeks political advantage. Mr. Wood also can be excused, even though he was one of the chief agitators for the Board. But Hon. T. A. Crerar is the Dominion leader of the Progressives, the man in whose person is centred the hopes of the Western sections of that group. From every point of view, the Progressive leader is well qualified to take charge of Wheat Board operations, even if he could not personally serve with those in the company he manages. A man in his position with sufficient zeal for the good of his fellow grain men would screw up enough courage to take in such a useful post. If Mr. Crerar chooses up the Wheat Board opportunity, then there will probably be no Board this year, and we shall see if the whole scheme was not so managed as to "put it over" the West.

Absent-Minded.

The professor was very absent-minded, so he grasped with absentminded earnestness the hand belonging to the large bouquet on his desk one morning.

"Ah! is it, indeed!" he answered, politely. "Kindly let me know when yours comes round, and I will reciprocate."

A "Wrangler"

A clergyman of a country parish had a great and deserved fame for learning. His career at Cambridge had been brilliant, but he had settled down to a useful rural life. A stranger who knew of the clergyman's reputation lately wandered into the village. "Your vicar is a very able man," said he to a parishioner. "Eh?" "Why, he is a wrangler!" "I never heard of that," was the rustic's reply, "but the missus is!"

Kipling's Break.

Even clever Rudyard can put his foot in it. G. B. Burgin relates how Mr. Kipling at Simla was introduced to, as he thought, a "grass widow." They called those ladies "grass widows" whose husbands were detained by work in the hot cities of the plains. Mr. Kipling remarked to her, "I suppose you couldn't let's daughter of your poor husband grilling down there." The lady gave him a stony look, and it was not until afterwards that he learned that she was a real widow.—Boston Transcript.

An Advantage.

The Golfer Abroad.

The golfer went abroad in lands
Beyond the sea to roam,
And wrote his honest sentiments
In weekly letters home:
"Grand links are in the Alps, but if
The ball went in I doubt
It always, niblick, cleek or skilt
Could ever get it out.

"In Venice, with its long canals,
Are water hazards great,
The Appian Way of ancient Rome would be
A fairway fine, I'll state,
A course laid out at old Versailles
Would much improve the scene.
Hyde Park is wasted now it ought
To be a putting green.

"But Scotland is a bonny place
It's captivated me;
You cannot go on foot without
You stumble on a tee.
Golf is the leading business—get
A ticket for my wife
And bid her come to Aberdeen;
I've settled here for life."

An amiable child may grow up into a weak, untrustworthy man. "Gold's too soft without alloy." Your complaining boy becomes the victim of sharpers, the slave of bullies. Where as a "self-willed" youngster makes a strong, independent man who knows his rights and enforces them.

A GREAT LAKES ORISE.

Travellers to Sault Ste. Marie, Port Arthur, Fort William, Duluth, Winnipeg and points west, will find the Great Lakes tour a delightful break in a comparatively long journey. A Model Maker.

Thirty years ago Alexander Ross was the leading model-maker in Montreal. He devised a built a geometrical lathe for bank-note engraving. He showed its wonderful work to a friend, who said: "Ross, if only you your amazing skill of hand." Said he: "Don't envy me. If you had my skill of hand, probably you would be as poor as myself in your old age. My skill of hand has kept me at the bench, while men with skill of head have been my employers and exploiters."

An old Cunard captain was once asked if he knew all the rocks and reefs between Liverpool and Boston. "No", he said, "but I know where they are not."

Woman's Sphere

Sometimes when one is overwhelmed
With hosts of things to do,
Until he tendons bow on earth,
He ever will get through.
He's wiser far to spend a day
In God's bright out-of-doors
Until new strength and new desire
Into his being pours.

Oh, sunshine has its healing here,
Its glowing strength to give,
And it quiets the heart as well
And gives us hope to live.
More splendidly, at higher power,
Accomplishing much more
With lighter effort. Sunshine brings
No magic to restore.

Sometimes our tasks are mountain high,
As numerous as bees
That hum the happy livelong day
Of golden summer days,
But there's a way to overcome,
Our failing strength reserve:
A day of rest. We'll conquer then
And really get through.

Thank God for hope and song
That lift the heart, sustaining us
With faith to make us strong;
And sunshine—God that we've been given.

So great a share of things
So well worth while and for which,
When done, the spirit sings.

CLOTHES FOR SCHOOL.

It will not be long before school re-opens. One more month of lazy days, lucky vacation, and then books and pencils and the daily trudge to school, or the joy that it thinks he is, and more or less "distant fountain of knowledge. In either case, the wardrobe will very likely require replenishing.

In the public schools of New England, according to a gentleman who was born and brought up there, the requirements for well-dressedness are up the winter time. They are considered more sanitary than serge or any of the woollen weaves. And it does seem reasonable. A serge dress may not show the dust and grime, but it is there just the same, whereas, every time a cotton dress comes from the laundry, it is sweet and clean, and if it is not quite warm enough for the school room, warm bloomers and a woollen sweater can be added. These can be removed at home if the temperature is higher than in school.

It is a matter of economy, one has it in wearing the cotton dress, until it is worn out instead of keeping it away from one autumn till the next spring when the small girl has in all probability outgrown it, and it has to be cast aside or let down from the waist or the hem.

The gingham and linens have been so prettily colored this summer that we shall hate to see them laid away for the more sober hues of fall by which have served generation after generation of school girls. The rainbow have also been very kind this year. But, if we must, we must; and there is the ever-acceptable navy blue pleated skirt, which can be bought in the store all ready to put on and then topped off with a white wash middy or one of red or green flannel.

It is no longer considered the thing to wear a discarded frivolous frock to school. It isn't done any more. The smocks the small girl wears to school are with few exceptions very practical without being gossy-looking. They are the essence of trimness. The revolution school dress is made in one-piece sailor style with such variations as the modern designer thinks suitable for the modern school girl, and there is enough variety to avoid sameness, and to let individuality have its expression. Detachable wash collars give freshness to these dark serge dresses. Organdy in flower shades and white nets, makes pretty party dresses, for the very small girl, with the option of crepe Georgette and crepe de China.—Canadian Home Journal.

LADY BYNG AS A GARDENER.

It is not generally known that her excellency Lady Byng is an enthusiastic amateur botanist and gardener. During her trip across Canada she did not miss an opportunity of pursuing her hobby, and the result is that the baggage car of the governor-general's train had a collection of root specimens of cactus, orchids and other showy wild flowers, which her excellency gathered to be transplanted at her home in Essex, England. On her arrival in British Columbia, Lady Byng made several trips in the vicinity of the Rocky Mountains, where she obtained a number of Alpine specimens which she had not previously seen. Prof. John Davidson, of the department of botany of the University of British Columbia, was invited to take luncheon with Lady Byng on the governor-general's train, and to identify the specimens collected. A visit was paid afterwards to the university botanical gardens in Point Grey. Lady Byng has collected many of the treasures of British Columbia trees and shrubs, and seed pods, of herbaceous plants, which will in due course be planted in the spacious grounds of her English home, in which there are plants from many parts of the world.

COLLEGE COURSE FOR GIRL GUIDES

A Two Week's Course in Leadership at Havergal College.

For the benefit of Girl Guide leaders a special two weeks' course under the auspices of the Dominion Council will be conducted at Havergal College, beginning August 16th. There is great need at present for more leaders and the duties of lecturers and tests has been specially arranged to facilitate training those who wish to become leaders and who through lack of teachers are unable to qualify.

An interesting curriculum has been outlined, including work in camp craft, country dancing, girl psychology and story-telling. Mr. Stuart Thompson, will be in charge of the course and lectures in member of the Public Library staff will speak on story-telling, and Miss McDonald of Bishop Strachan school will direct the classes in girl psychology.

To those who succeed in the final examinations in camp craft, first aid, company and patrol drill (including the Morse code), and camp operation, the blue cord diploma will be awarded. The first day's program will be devoted to accommodations and members of local associations.

While distances preclude a very wide attendance, registrations have been received from various parts of Ontario, including Ottawa, Kingston and Brantford, and there have been one registration from Winnipeg.

CORN PUDDING.

This dish is excellent to serve with cold meat, or with a brown sugar sauce for dessert.

It can be made with either cooked or raw green corn, the latter giving better flavor.

1 pint grated green corn
1 quart milk
2 tablespoons sugar
1-8 teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons butter (melted)
3 eggs (slightly beaten)

Mix all together, turn into a buttered baking dish and bake 30 minutes, having the dish set in a pan of water.

If the water does not boil, the pudding bakes without separating, and the custard is the smooth. This is true with all combinations of eggs and milk.

Too Many Possessions.

"If I should marry again," says a widow of mature years, "I certainly shall not repeat the folly of filling my new home with possessions. I am through collecting household gods; they become millstones about your neck, tyrants dominating and domineering over you at every turn. They rob one of all freedom if one insists on keeping them, and cause soul heartache if one tries to pass them on."

And she told of the holidays she had missed, of the opportunities for travel she had passed up, of the work she had imposed upon herself—all because there was a home on her hands, a house and "things" that required keeping and tending. And in her manner, more than in her words, there broke and thought she found herself held down by inanimate ties that were as exacting as those of family and friends.

So this woman, living, perhaps, in the hope of a new day of happiness with a husband, proposes to savor life a bit more freely if the opportunity comes her way. She proposes to bring up her next home in the way it should go. She will have no false gods to tyrannize over her, no "beloved things" that tie her hand and foot to a house that might in time come to be a tomb.

Too many of us might profit by this little sermon. The mistake that the widow made was surely not in having the beloved things, but in letting them tom her. Say what you will, "things" as she calls them, are part of the setting of life. Life is part reality and part symbol. We can't get along entirely without some of the symbols. If we could, we would all be living in glorified prison cells with chairs to sit in, beds to sleep in, plain crockery to eat from, and nothing more.

Things are for self-expression and for remembrance, for beauty and comfort and variety. But they must be servants, not masters.

As long as the fine old Chinese vase reads the eye with its lovely line and color, it serves us. When it begins to worry us with preciousness or its capacity for collecting dust, or to crowd us with the room it takes up, it does us more harm than good.

When we all learn this fine appreciation of things and their values, Perhaps we don't need to go quite so far as the widow who tendered never again to collect household goods, but we do need to keep things in their proper places and not allow the house to be occupied with hand-painted chocolate sets and cut glass pickle dishes, Seven Years and Chippendale chairs, that they clutter our minds and harass our souls.

You can keep your arms, neck or face free from hair or fuzz by the occasional use of plain delatone and in using it you need have no fear of marring or injuring the skin. A thick paste is made by mixing some of the powdered delatone with water. Then spread on the hairs and after 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and all traces of hair have vanished. Be careful, however, to get real delatone and mix fresh.

CERTO

SOME folks experience the "Jelly-rewarding" failures by following old methods.

With Certo you never fail to get wonderful Jams and Jellies—rich in the natural color and delicate flavor of the fruit.

Certo is pure, and pectin is just the natural element in fruits which makes jelly "jell."

By using Certo you supply the correct amount of pectin needed for perfect Jams and Jellies. The "jellifying" point is reached in a few minutes of boiling instead of 20 or 30 minutes. Thus you retain the full goodness of your fruit.

—and you get more jars per fruit or jelly from the same amount of fruit. You never fail.

Certo is a pure fruit product—no gelatine or preservatives. A 2-oz. bottle

HENRY FORD WAS STUCK IN MUD

But Fordson Tractor Pulled Ford's Ford Out in Short Order

Watertown, N. Y., Aug. 12.—Henry Ford, Detroit automobile manufacturer, knows what it means to be stuck in the mud in a flivver. Mr. Ford was in Clayton, stopping with his party, while his son, Edsel, was cruising the St. Lawrence River and thence to Seal Harbor, Maine, made himself known to George Gillick, Ford car dealer, and he too started for the river bank in a Ford sedan.

Mr. Ford's ultimate destination was May Jerry Rock. Rains had made the road to the shore difficult of passage, and finally the sedan sank in the mud and gave up the fight.

Undaunted, Mr. Ford made his visit until aid in the form of a Fordson tractor arrived and pulled the car out.

Then the journey was marooned adjourned, Mr. Ford made his visit to Miss Irwin's farm.

Mrs. Stowell, sister to Mrs. Mapes Dodge, "Jeanette" Gillick lived in their directness of vision, in their talent to reproduce what they see. Certainly back the French mastery of intricate composition, of genre painting. They do not understand perspective. Often they are as photographic as not to give the most significant things in Nature for which alone Art exists. Theirs is the deftness of the precocious child rather than the mastery of a man."

"SALADA" TEA

"ICED" is Incomparable

THE BANDBOX

By Laura Joseph Vance

"Him said me—Ismay and I—double-Frist. You'll have to be patient—and intelligent—if you want to understand and follow me back to Paris. Me, Ismay Lindle, and Ismay Lindle, Miss Lindle, myself. Miss Lindle was dickering with Cottier's for the necklace, Ismay sticking around and not losing sight of her much of the time, I was looking after Ismay. Miss Landis bore the collar and a ticket for London; I, mine. Then Miss Landis makes another purchase—a razor, it's along near the hotel where I happen to be losing."

"A razor?"

"That's the way it struck me, too. Scene Two. Cadogan Street, London. I'm not sure what I said, Miss Landis seems to take; I've got a notion it's Auscratic, but I'm stalling till I know. You dredi into the office, I recognize you by the scar, and you're pretty thick with Miss Landis. Nothing more natural than that you and she should go home together in the manner. Similarity—Ismay. Oh, yes, I understand: it was pure coincidence; but I took a chance and filled my hand. After we'd bobbed and you'd strutted off, I lingered long enough to see Miss Landis drive off in a cab with a whaling-big bandbox on top of the cab. She booked right under my nose; I made a note of the address.

"Then you came aboard with the identical bandbox and your (juicy)story about how you happened to have it. I smelt a rat: Miss Landis hadn't sent you that bandbox anonymously for no purpose. Then one afternoon—early to mid ax o'clock—I see Miss Landis's maid come out on deb—and take a little package overboard—package just about big enough to hold a razor. That night I'm dragged up on the carpet before the captain; I hear a pretty fairy tale about the collar disappearing while I was taking the bandbox back to your steamer. The bandbox is on the bandbox, in plain sight; it isn't locked—behind man can see that; and the slit in its side is explained by a razor. I'm back to the bandbox and the razor and mulling the sum by the fact that the average woman doesn't go ashore until the last minute; a stranger man will take a drink; and I'm Jeremiah Wise, Esquire."

To be continued.

Statistics in a good many fields might be gathered in ballot-boxes with decided ease. If voters or answers to questions, are typewritten so as to be unsearchable, even the ages of women might be ascertained. And, under cover of secrecy, many a shrine would not be voted which with open ballot-box voting few have the courage to oppose.

Sport Gossip From Many Fields

WERE TRUNKS DOUBLE CROSSED

Toronto Papers Report Port Hope Winners Over Trunks—How Come?

"Canada's National Newspaper" made a ball-up of affairs in their sporting sheet of Monday, August 16th. They probably are not so much to blame, however, as their correspondent from Oshawa, who either took a mean advantage of the Grand Trunk baseball team of Belleville, or else "went dead" on the job on Saturday afternoon last.

We refer to the following false report up the C.O.L. ball game at Port Hope on Saturday afternoon between the Trunks and Port Hope.

Here is what the Globe says:

"More surprises were in store for Central Ontario League fans Saturday afternoon. Oshawa were nosed by trimmed on their own soil by Cobourg, while Port Hope entertained Belleville, winning 15 to 3. Port Hope have been in last place since the opening of the second schedule until Saturday but they have defeated two of the league leaders in the last week. Oshawa, runner up the first half, are now practically out of the running. The league's standing is as follows:

	Won.	Lost	P.C.
Cobourg	5	1	.833
Peterboro	4	2	.667
Lindsay	4	2	.667
Bowmanville	2	3	.500
Belleville	2	3	.400
Leaside	1	3	.250
Oshawa	1	4	.200

There is not a true statement in the article, and to complete it, the league standing (wrong of course) is given with the "wonder working" Port Hope team left out. I suppose the conclusion is that they were in a class by themselves after having "Entertained" Belleville to the tune of 15 to 3.

The Sporting Editor of the "First, last and always" newspaper should probe into the qualifications of his correspondents, else he will be in dutch with his sport readers.

ARGYLL TEAM AT OTTAWA

Compete in Annual Meet of Dominion Rifle Association

The Argyll Light Infantry Regiment is well represented at the annual meet of the Dominion Rifle Association, in Ottawa this week, which opened on Monday afternoon.

Fully 540 men, from the grizzled veterans of Bisley to the smooth-faced cadets from the public schools, are on the entry list at the Connaught Ranges. Fairer weather could have been wished for. There was little sun until towards noon but the visibility was excellent, although there was a slight mirage. A large breeze was blowing and the morning was sultry and by mid-day the scores of men who were sprawled about the ranges on the grass or gathered in little groups on the verandas of turf were sweltering in the heat and many sought the grateful coolness of the marquees.

Picturesque Place.

The Connaught Range is a picturesque place just now, with the long rows of white tents, wherein are encamped the best rifle shots in the Dominion, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the immense airdrome tents, where meals are served to the hundreds whose appetites are whetted by hours in the open, the official huts, where the clerical work of the meet is despatched, the wide meadows and the slowly falling and rising targets looking like nothing more than paintings of a black sun peeping over the edge of a sheet, field, the huge number plates beyond the targets, and the constantly shifting group of uniformed competitors and officials in charge.

Ammunition Good.

The special ammunition in use at the meet is marked with a green band, and is said by the competitors to be the best ammunition ever furnished at a Dominion meet, which record had been held by that issued last year. In this, the quality contrasted most strongly with the ammunition furnished at the provincial meets at Toronto and Quebec, of late, the ammunition there being of inferior grade by all accounts.

COBOURG HERE ON WEDNESDAY

Meet Trunks in Most Important Fixture Here on the Half Holiday

Oshawa, Aug. 14.—Cobourg filed Everyone is anxiously looking forward to the big, baseball attraction which will be one of the features of the weekly, Wednesday, half holiday (tomorrow). There is not the slightest doubt that the variety of ball dished up on Wednesday, will be of the top notch variety, and it goes without saying that anyone attending the game will receive full value for their money.

The game tomorrow afternoon is at 3 p.m. sharp, and is between the fast moving, and heavy hitting Cobourg squad, and the Grand Trunks. Cobourg are the leaders in the second half, with only one loss to their credit. The railroaders are plugging their way towards the top, after a bad start, one big a good deal to the fact that Bill Mills was out of the game. They have settled down to business, and are layin up to the situation now, with t.. wins and two losses to their credit, in the second half. If the locals can defeat Cobourg here, they go up the ladder a notch and the league leaders receive a lovely set back, so that matters will be much more evenly divided in the race for the Central Ontario League Pennant.

The Trunks are working out at every convenience, and Peenie Mills will be behind the pan on Wednesday afternoon for sure. Now it is a well known fact that rooting at a baseball game is a very desirable factor, and has been credited with winning more than one ball game. Let everyone then, who possibly can get up to the game, be there strong. Have something to say for yourself, and say encouragement, shy demonstrations of applause, or otherwise, that will be contributed, will be heartily appreciated by the boys.

Cobourg is coming up here strong in every department, team, fans, and every other way, so get ready to meet them half way. Agricultural grounds on Wednesday at 3 p.m.

Remanded on Bigamy Charge.

Alfred William Whatley, of Campbellford, was remanded to Cobourg jail on fast Friday by P. M. Payne, of Campbellford, on a charge of bigamy. Whatley, who is a married man, and a returned soldier, residing in Campbellford, went back to England, and on Feb. 14 last at All Saints' Registry Office, of Orford Road, Manchester, England, married Louise Inwood. He brought his bride back to Canada, and bigamy charge followed.

COBOURG PROTESTS PORT HOPE GAME

Both Lindsay and Cobourg Protests to be Settled at Port Hope Aug. 21.

A protest on the Port Hope-Cobourg game on Wednesday, August 9 claiming that Carter, who played first base for Port Hope, had no Central League certificate, and a copy of the protest was mailed to the secretary of the Port Hope club on Saturday. This makes two protests the Central Ontario League sub-committee has on its hands, and both will likely be heard at the Queen's Hotel, Port Hope, on Monday, August 21, the Lindsay-Cobourg protest being held over owing to sub-committee members being away on holidays.

DIAMOND DUST

If Port Hope can defeat Cobourg at will, and the Trunks can walk away with Port Hope, what should the Trunks do to Cobourg when they meet them here on Wednesday afternoon?

The Trunks are coming into their own now, and are all set for anything that steps up in the second half. They have had 3 w ins and 2 losers up to date.

"Peenie" Mills is back in the game after having missed 3 games owing to illness. Peenie did not feel inside enough to put on the harness and dodge around behind the bat all day, so he was transferred to left garden where he has a nice quiet afternoon of it. He'd rather play behind the bat, however, so he states, giving as his reason the nice long walks to and from deep, left field. Alex Weir ran the bases for Mills.

Owing to the absence of Bob Chalk, Port Hope receiver, from the game, the Belleville management cancelled its Port Hope playing Ware in that position.

Ray Mallen had a good day of it on the slab, pitching a nice cool game. His control was 100%, having passed nary a one, and he had 9 strikeouts to his credit. "Doc" also hit the ball fairly-day, and says he's going to "continue in ball doing" with the ball.

Enthusiastic rooters for the Port Hope team, spoke of dividing the melon on several occasions in the early part of the game. That Mallen is no melon they learned, however, to their sorrow before the game was over. Moral—"He who laughs last gathers the most."

A few, foolish boys who blew hard for Port Hope were also willing to wager their hard earned tin on the team. Those of them who are married, are due for a gruelling cross-examination.

Port Hope fans were very angry at Umpire Gloucester during the game. "Takin the best player Belleville has" said a small boy, just before he was banished from the players' bench. Another gentleman from Port Hope said he was sure Gloucester was drunk. An awful thing to say for 2 reasons. (1) Because he was not drinking. (2) Because it reflects on the absolutely good name of Sandy Lockington's village.

Remarks like these, however, are provoking to an umpire, even if he has made a bad decision, and it is often a wonder that they stand for such mean cuts, especially coming from men, who should know better.

Even the women rooters were becoming very irate, and in the heat, it was well for the Belleville fans that said women were not armed with umbrellas, because you can't depend on them—always.

Umpire Wilson, of Oshawa, did fairly well on the bases, but it would be wise for Mr. Wilson's own sake in future, if anything a play be good keep both arms rigid (at his side) until he has decided whether the man is out or not. A decision made by a motion of the arm is made, and it makes it bad if an umpire has to alter a decision once made, in this or any other manner.

It is the determined ambition of the Trunks to win from Cobourg here on Wednesday, from Lindsay here on Saturday, and from Petersboro here on the following Wednesday. These are the three tough teams of the circuit, and they will take some beating. The Trunks are determined however, and let's hope they are successful.

Still the most for the money

ANDREW WILSON & CO. TORONTO MONTREAL

Quite a number of Belleville fans accompanied the team to Port Hope on Saturday, and their rooting, while not musical, nevertheless was pleasing to the ears. More power to their elbow—we mean lungs.

Belleville are so sure they can trim Cobourg that it is believed they would wager the city hall of this city against the town of Cobourg (even money of course).

It was amusing to see the astonished faces of Port Hope and Cobourg people, when they were informed that "Peenie" Mills was in harness again. "We heard the end of baseball for the season" they explained.

"When shall we meet again?"

"Wednesday afternoon at 3 p.m. at the Agricultural grounds when Cobourg plays the G. T. R."

AMERICAN RAILROAD EXPERTS FINISH WORK IN POLAND

Warsaw, Aug. 15.—The American Technical Commission to Poland, working under the direction of Colonel A. H. Bartlett, will bring its activities to a close this summer.

This Commission was formed in 1919 to advise the Polish government on transportation problems. Now that the Polish railroads are practically restored, most of the work remaining is at an end. The help of Colonel Bartlett has been fully appreciated. In proof of this he was the first American to receive the order of "Polonia Restituta," established by the Polish government as a mark of honor to those who have served with distinction in the reconstruction of the new republic.

WOMAN TO PUBLISH DAILY NEWSPAPER IN JERUSALEM

Mrs. Gatling of New York is to Start Paper in Holy City

Jerusalem, Aug. 18.—Jerusalem soon is to have a daily newspaper published in English. It will be owned and edited by an American woman, Mrs. Gatling, of New York, who has spent several months in Palestine studying local conditions. Mrs. Gatling has paid $675,000 for a building to be used for her venture. The presses and other mechanical equipment for the paper are now on their way out from the United States.

MINISTER'S SON DROWNED

Lake Megantic, Que., Aug. 14.—The five year old son of Rev. Mr. Templeman, of Scotstown, was drowned in the lake Saturday. He was playing in a boat, lost his balance and fell into the water.

12 MEN ENTOMBED IN MINE IN TENNESSEE

Knoxville, Tenn., Aug. 15.—Twelve men are reported entombed by a cave-in at the Black Mountain Coal Corporation mine, between St. Charles and Pennington, Va.

SWIMMER IS KILLED DIVING AT DUNDÁS

Hamilton, Aug. 15.—Diving from a dock on the canal at Dundas this afternoon, Donald Campbell, said to be a good swimmer, struck his head violently on a submerged object and sustained fatal injuries to the base of his skull and to his spine. He was removed to the General Hospital here, and succumbed to his injuries at 10.30.

Longevity.

Longevity is a subject in which most humans take an increasing interest, especially when one reaches that point in life when the body acts as a weather barometer. Many and various are the prescriptions for extending the period of one's existence on this planet. There are life-elixirs in plenty advertised, and methods of physical regeneration galore — there is even a religion based upon the idea that disease and death are mental delusions. These things may be all the way well experimented with, but for practical purposes one requires some measure of certainty, and this is to be found in the word "pension."

That a pension will extend life to a certain point is proved by the list of widows of American soldiers who fought in the War of 1812. Of the 49 widows still living whose husbands served in that war, three are centenarians, eight are over 90 years, and 23 are nonagenarians. These ladies have been receiving pensions from the Government, and from the reports of their condition it would appear that their friend enjoyed the gratuity indefinitely.

It seems incredible that the widow of a soldier who fought in a war 110 years back should be living to-day. Even the oldest of them lady pensioners, who is now 104 years, was not born until 1818, two years after the close of the conflict.

If the few remaining pensions prevailing in Canada to-day should be the same as those in the United States, there will be many great war widows surviving in the Dominion in the year 2000, when most of us who have no pension to anchor us to this port will have sailed "beyond the sunset." If the pensions have been the means of lengthening out the lives of these widows, there may be much to be said for such an institution. It may be worth the little extra on the national budget to retain those ladies for as long a period as possible, for by so doing we extend our national memories and traditions.

Utilizing Unmarketable Potatoes.

Unmarketable potatoes are of undue coolence to the dairy ration. Where corn silage is not available and there are plenty of small potatoes, a pek a day will give an increase in milk flow. They should be introduced into the system gradually and be run through a root cutter to avoid the possibility of choking the animal.

USE BIG SHIPS AS TARGETS

Great Britain Finds Use For Vessels To Be Scrapped

London, Aug. 15.—Having found scarcers for the great group of battleships which the Washington Conference decreed should be scrapped, Great Britain is using the monsters as targets for the gunners of the Royal Navy and the bombers of the Royal Air Force. Like the United States and France, this country has a dozen or more specially fine cruisers and countless destroyers which must be relegated to the ignominious junk pile.

Thunderer, Monarch, Conqueror, Colossus, Lion, Ajax, Centurion, King George V., Princess Royal, Erin and Orion, monsters of 20,000 or more tons, once the pride of the seven seas, are all doomed. Costing more than $15,000,000 originally, junk dealers have offered the government only $30,000 apiece for them.

The navy is now engaged in a series of target tests on the famous battleships Agamemnon and Superb, which, like their sister ships, are to find their graves in the ocean at the hands of the gunners and jack tars that once manned them. The admiralty is trying by this test to determine how a direct hit can be prevented from passing from the turret down the ammunition tube.

NERVOUS AND HALF-SICK WOMEN

These Letters Recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Will Interest You

For Your Own Good Please Read Them

Cobourg, Ontario—"For many years I have had trouble with my nerves and have been in a general run-down condition for some time. I could not do my work half the time because of trouble every month. I was told of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound by friends and advised to try it. It has done me good and I strongly recommend it. Since I have taken it I have been able to do all my own work and I also know friends who have found it good. You can use these facts as a testimonial." Mrs. ELLEN PLAYTERS, Box 261, Cobourg, Ontario.

Now Like a New Woman

Toronto, Ontario—"I suffered with irregular menstruation, was weak and run-down, could not eat and had headache. The worst symptoms were getting dizzy spells so bad I could sometimes thought I would go crazy and I seemed to be smothering. I was in this condition for two or three years and could not work. I tried a great many kinds of remedies, but received no benefit. I found one of your booklets and felt inclined to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I received the best results from it, and am now a happy home and so out to work and am like a new woman." Miss M. F. FRASER, 307 King St. West, Toronto.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent you free upon request. Write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Massachusetts. This book contains valuable information.

Latest BELLEVILLE NEWS

ONE COURT CASE TODAY.

A resident of the north country pleaded guilty in police court this morning to a charge of cutting corners while motoring on the streets of this city. He was fined $5 without costs.

He gave as his reason for violating the by-law the fact that he had not visited a city in a long time until he motored into Belleville on August 8th, and was consequently ignorant of the law.

DROPPED INTO CELLAR

A. C. Barnett, of Tweed, met with a painful and what might have been a very serious accident. He was removing a heavy safe, weighing about seventy-five pounds, from the top of a pile of other boxes, when he lost his balance and fell back wards into the cellar. The soap box followed him, but fortunately came in contact with some obstruction and was smashed, otherwise the result would have been more serious for Mr. Barnett, who escaped with a few shaking up and a few cuts on his face.

INJURED GIRL RECOVERS

The many friends of Miss Bernice Tenney, of Toronto, and formerly of Bridge street, of this city, will be pleased to learn that she is recovering favorably after the severe injuries which she sustained in an accident in which she was injured in front of her home on Montrose avenue, Toronto recently. Miss Taylor was struck by an automobile in front of her home on the evening of Wednesday, August 9, when she was badly cut and bruised and had her nose broken. She is now rapidly recovering, however.

FOXES IN BURFORD.

This Industry Is Now Thriving In Brant County.

Prince Edward Island had better look to its laurels as the centre of the fox farming industry, since there is the confines of Brant County there is to-day a fox farm which is proving most successful. It is that of the Ontario Silver Black Farms, Ltd., and is located in Burford, in the heart of one of the finest dairy, stock and general farming communities to be found in the province. It extends over 200 acres and a half, and is built contrary to general opinion, in that it is in the open where wooded lots might be looked for. But while against general opinion, it is in line with the most advanced practices in fox farming, as shown by the fact that the largest fox farm in the United States, at Alaska Chasse, N.Y., is built entirely on the open fot principle.

The pens at the Burford ranch are 16x20 square feet, enclosed with a wire fence compartmented by a tunnel, and the fence spend much of their time in running between the two compartments. The foxes are let out of the pens, given the run of their quarters their fur, and the furore would have little chance of getting contaminated with the rancher, a very desirable thing. The foxes breed once a year, having from two to eleven. Breeding takes place early in the year and continues until eleven or twelve years. The animals are in good condition as ever. The female is very carefully attended by the pens during pregnancy. The foxes are naturally hardy, requiring only sanitary housing and proper feeding. They are not subject to diseases, and minor ailments can be cured by corrective methods of feeding. Food has been obtained that quality of fur can be bred for with foxes, just as quality of milk can be bred for in Holsteins. The food is varied. The foxes are very fond of apples, the balanced ration includes rolled oats, Johnny cake, oatmeal porridge, fruit, milk and eggs. The one particular thing required for a desirable condition of the dishes used, every one being sterilized after being once used. Meats are also supplied in the form, largely of beef, mutton and pork hearts.

A recent inspection showed that the foxes are very tame, some of them being quite friendly, in the rancher's hands, while on all sides they showed no resentment of the presence of visitors.

Another Kind of Minister.

Hon. E. J. Barrow, Minister of Agriculture for British Columbia, is of a somewhat retiring disposition, and is the first Minister of British Columbia's public men. In appearance he is shabby, in manner awkward, and in conversation exceedingly serious, exactly the kind of man one would expect to head a little tract on "Are You Prepared to Die?" to a casual acquaintance.

In spite of his saturnine countenance, Mr. Barrow occasionally gives indications of possessing a scene of humor. Recently, while returning home by train, when a talkative fellow passenger began to bore him, he spoke to him, and in response to his question as to what was his line of business, replied that he was a minister. "Indeed," said the stranger, "I am glad to meet you. What denomination?" "Methodist," was the answer. "Just Minister of Agriculture for British Columbia."

Not Good-Looking Enough.

When the late Mr. Justice Logie was the officer commanding No. 2 district and had charge of the training of the troops at Camp Borden in the summer of 1916, Mr. Justice Riddell occurred, which the general thought would be of great interest and amusing.

During the latter part of the summer trenches had been dug over part of the area, so as to train the troops in trench warfare. The sides of the trenches was as nearly like the real thing as could be devised, and the system of taking over by one unit from another was put in practice.

Among the first troops to go into the trenches for a 24-hour turn was the 123rd of Muskoka. The system of going in, of course, was from a comparatively secure area to the front and the sentries were keyed up to the highest pitch of excitement during the night turn. About midnight, the colonel and his staff arrived, to inspect what was going on, and were stopped by the first man, of whom they was a very large man, probably weighing 200 or 210 lbs., who was equipped with his rifle, and that it would be all right to let him pass, but His Cane scrutinized him closely for a minute and finally said, "That won't do here; the general is a good looking man."

The incident caused considerable amusement in the camp when it became known.

CHEAPER LOANS HELP

How the Ontario Loan System Helps Farmers.

An Interesting Illustration Given—Helping the Tenant—Some Applications Disappointed—Inspectors Are Carefully Selected.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto).

To help young men of farming experience, farming inclination and limited capital to get properly settled in farming was one of the reasons for the new farm loan legislation now being administered by the Agricultural Department. Broadly speaking, it is possible to point to cases where monies have been advanced for this purpose.

How If Worked In One Case.

In one of the best Western Ontario counties two loans were placed, which illustrate the way it has developed in Ontario farm life. A father, for many years a progressive and successful farmer, was anxious to get his two farmer sons, both married, properly established. Accordingly, the other boy has two hundred acres, valued quite so high because the buildings are not quite so good. He also has a full equipment of stock and implements. The properties are registered in the names of the boys respectively, and the arrangement is that, commencing on operations and making payments on the mortgage. They are settled down in well developed citizens, with a splendid opportunity for happiness and success, and every responsibility to act as a steadying influence. As a matter of time, the father remains in his home nearby to help the boys, each of his successors and maturer wisdom.

Helping The Tenant.

It should be the ambition of every man who works on the land to own the farm he tills. The Farm Loans Act gives certain this ambition there and the desire, and it is only a question of accumulating sufficient to finance the deal. Applications are passed by the Board. The tenant has the necessary stock and implements and is all ready to go ahead. These come in mind a case in one of the Central Ontario counties. The man was living on a farm owned by one of His sons. He knew the soil, he knew the local conditions, he knew everything he could do. The owner of the farm had it mortgaged and the mortgagee fell due. He could not pay it. The holder of the mortgage limited to sell, and was about to do so. The owner went to the tenant and offered to let him have the farm. Application by tenant came to the Board, and the loan was made. He put in his little savings enabled him to buy, and his owned property on the local will less than the annual payments he was making in rent.

The Disappointed Ones.

Not all the loans asked for are granted. Applications that are later not and refused by the Board aggregate $184,000. At one Board meeting nine applications were passed and thirteen declined. Astonishment at the great bulk of these were declined because the land was not suitable for the purposes permitted by the Act. In the first place no loan can be made except on the security of first mortgage. Under the legislation of the recent session, application for loans to discharge mortgages will not be declined. Now a number have to be declined because they exceed the cost of the value as determined by the inspector. Not infrequently an applicant will ask for more than 60 per cent. limit wants an additional thousand dollars to "clean up a note at the bank." and thus consolidate his indebtedness. But an "extra balance" under the Act must be "a registered encumbrance," and the bank note does not qualify, however deserving its application may be, or unsanctioned the security. Sometimes an applicant wants the Government inspectors to buy cattle for feeding, but the loans cannot be made be given. Then there are the cases which are rejected because the Board is not satisfied with the personal or material security offered. When such decisions are reached they are reached with many regret, and it should be genuinely anxious to promote agricultural development by means of the new system. Every effort will be done with due regard to reasonable security in the Province.

Inspectors Are Carefully Selected.

In view of the importance of having this information complete and accurate, great care has been exercised by the chairman in selecting inspectors. The plan followed is to utilize local men every large, not necessarily one in each county, but at least one in a district of two or three counties. Already a list of fifteen or twenty men of integrity, good judgment and good knowledge of farm values based on long experience has been secured and payment is made on the basis of the number of days actually employed in the work. Moreover, arrangements have been made to time to check up the work of inspectors by means of a chief inspector, and if an inspector is found to be careless or to be influenced or influenced by considerations other than the merits of the case, his services are no longer utilized.

THUNDERSTORM BURSTS WITH FURY ON CITY

LIGHTNING AND FLOOD DO EXTENSIVE DAMAGE IN TERRIFIC TEMPEST

City was Deluged with Voluminous Downpour, While Lightning Felled Trees--Electric Wires Down. All Mechanical Work Suspended Through Lack of Power

A tremendous electric storm broke over the city at one o'clock to-day Ominous black clouds were seen only a few minutes before thundering up from the northwest and they spread out quickly over the entire sky. The rain poured down like a deluge accompanied by volleys of thunder and shafts of lightning.

The downpour was more like a cloud-burst than an ordinary thunder showers and for some minutes vision was obliterated. The water came down in such volume that trees were brought to the earth, and in some instances telephone wires were snapped by the falling branches.

BALL OF FIRE STRIKES TREE

One big maple tree at the north end of Church street was struck by a thunder-bolt and was split and trimmed to the ground, the great branches lying prostrate across the roadway blocking all traffic. A young woman who was sitting on a verandah opposite escaped their shr ouds as a ball of fire strike the tree and shatter its boughs to splinters.

The narrow roadway of Hillcrest avenue was entirely blocked with fallen trees, and telephone wires lay along the lawn of one house.

Practically every street in the city was strewn with branches. Many basements were flooded, and the roadways were like lakes and running rivers.

The fury of the storm only lasted about five minutes, but it was more than enough. The "artillery of heaven" could be heard rumbling in the distance as the mighty army of clouds moved eastward.

TREES AND WIRES DOWN

Just in front of Griffin's theatre a large maple tree fell across Bridge street and closed traffic on East Bridge temporarily. Opposite St. Thomas church a tree fell across Church street pulling all the wires down with it and blocking the street. A tree in front of the Shepherd fire hall came down near the flower beds in Fire Hall Park were badly damaged and broken by the wind.

At 95 Dundas street a huge oak tree fell inwards and narrowly escaped striking the house. Trees are lying across Pinnacle and North Front street and wires are down everywhere.

CATERPILLARS SUPPLIED HERE

Bexley, England, August 15.—Breeding caterpillars and butterflies is a curious profession. But it has been the work for 28 years of Mr. L. W. Newman, who has at Bexley, in Kent, an extensive butterfly farm, writes Alan Dilnot, in the Daily News.

The insects on his farm consume the leaves of one and a half acres of closely-planted trees, nettles and flowers in a season, for one caterpillar eats 24 times its own weight in 24 hours.

The butterfly farm presents a weird aspect. There are stunted poplar trees, portions of which are enveloped in sacks. These sacks protect the caterpillars from their natural enemies, and prevent them going astray.

There are also numerous cages for caterpillars, chrysalides and butterflies. The latter have to be watched very carefully at this time of year. They need constant moisture, and an hour's delay may mean the loss of several pounds.

A popular delusion is that all butterflies only live two or three days. In a few cases this is so, but the average length of life is more like 20 days. Many species live from eight to twelve months, hibernating during the cold weather, and awaking when the warm weather returns.

Mr. Newman supplies schools, laboratories and museums with thousands of butterflies, caterpillars and chrysalides a week, and is obliged to employ three assistants and a secretary to cope with the work.

DUBLIN PAYS LAST TRIBUTE TO GRIFFITH

Impressive Funeral of Irish Chief in Dublin Thousands Follow Remains to Last Resting Place.

Dublin, Aug. 16.—Having followed him faithfully in life the citizens of Dublin and admirers and supporters from all over Ireland to-day sorrowfully followed the remains of Arthur Griffith, the Free State Leader, founder of Sinn Fein, and one of the most ly responsible for peace with Britain.

To his last resting place at historic Glasnevin, where so many patriots lie, after services of impressive solemnity in the beautiful cathedral of the immaculate conception.

The cathedral was crowded to the full last and thousands, unable to gain admission stood or knelt in the street during the celebration of the mass of requiem. The procession to the cemetery was headed by a cavalry guard, followed by a detachment of infantry, with band.

Then came the clergy and the hearse with a guard of honor, and with a guard of honor. The widow and children rode behind in carriages.

Next came Michael Collins, Griffith's fighting colleague and main support in the effort to establish settled government in Ireland, followed by the Lord Mayor and representatives of public bodies.

ST. MICHAEL'S PICNIC

St. Michael's church annual picnic was held today in the grove just west of the city limits which is the property of the church. A large number were in attendance and an interesting programme of sports was carried out.

The interior of the building was drenched with the smoke, but the did not prevent the firemen from proceeding with their work.

What might have been a serious accident occurred on the stairway at the rear of the building, when a spectator came in contact with an exposed electric wire and received a severe shock. The man emerged from the building with a pale countenance and badly scared. The severity of the shock was due to the presence of so much water, which created a stronger contact.

Damages as a result of the fire will be between $300 and $300.

ANNUAL ADDRESS CAN. BAR ASS'N.

Delivered by Sir James Aikens, Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba

(By Canadian Press)

Vancouver, B.C., Aug. 16.—Sir James Aikins, lieutenant-governor of Manitoba, this morning delivered to the Canadian Bar Association his eighth annual address in the capacity of president of the organization.

"The familiar songs of a people," said Sir James, "express and also mould their thought, manners, usage, traditions, faiths and glories, out of which sprang National Spirit and National Laws. What inspiration, sympathy and unity were created in England by the popular ballads and songs of the passing centuries, what in Scotland by the vocal music of his bards, and by the poetry of Burns and Scott; what in Ireland by its early minstrelsy and by the lyrics of Tom Moore. The heart of the people of the British Empire and the United States is made sorrowful, because somewhat under the allusion of the Irish popular songs is an anarchy and the defiance of the law which, if it were now observed and obeyed, would be the bulwark of Irish liberty as it is of ours, for the liberty of a free state is the privilege and power to do everything that the laws permit, and to make those laws.

"Why are the United Kingdom, the United States, Canada and those Dominions under the Southern Cross, so alike in song, in sentiments, and in laws? Because though they possess under the Crown they are born of the same spirit, the British spirit, they are many members but one body, that is, one developing civilization by which there should be no schism.

NAVAL EXPERTS IN DISCUSSION

Opinion as to Britain's Aircraft

(By Canadian Press.)

London, Aug. 16.—"The navy of the future must take to the air; otherwise it will be at a hopeless disadvantage," said Captain Viscount Curzon in the House of Commons when the naval estimates came up for discussion. He pointed out that according to the latest figures the navy had only nine fighting aeroplanes, as compared with the 56 possessed by the United States navy.

In offset the allegation of Captain Curzon, the Air Ministry has issued a statement declaring that Britain's navy "can be better equipped with airplanes than that of any other power and claiming no fewer than 93 fighting air machines in commission, with a large number of reserves.

George Holmes, a former Civil Lord of the Admiralty, expressed the opinion that the British navy was very inadequately equipped with aircraft. "Can the navy say that from the defensive point of view the money of the taxpayer is being spent to the best advantage?" he asked. "You are going to spend £16,000,000 on two new battleships, but it is absurd to spend money on capital ships unless you have sufficient aircraft for the ships you already possess."

BELLEVILLE'S BIG FAIR IS GETTING UNDER WAY

Belleville's big fair will open on Labor Day, Monday, September 4, and continues over Tuesday and Wednesday. Those in charge are sparing no pains to make the fair this year the best in its history.

Mr. R. B. Stoek the genial and energetic secretary is at the present time quite busy receiving lists of exhibitors and the prospects are that the number of entries will be far in excess of former years.

The committee in charge of special attractions have made arrangements for a number that will be both interesting and entertaining. The special speeding events will be an attraction to many.

LABOR WILL WALK

The Labor Unions of the city will on Monday, opening day, have a parade to the Agricultural park, where a programme of sports will be carried out. The Hon. James Murdock, Minister of Labor, is expected to be present to make an address.

The list of special prizes is an attractive one, and no doubt competition for the valuable prizes will be keen. This should be a most succesful fair and all that is needed is the co-operation of all citizens.

"How the sources of a nation's song and spirit are the causes of a civilized nation's laws, but there is this difference—the songs and spirit lead in the formation and confirmation of customs, usages and habits, these law follows, sometimes too far behind, and makes out of them rules of conduct, for instance, the common law passed from the ailament was the sivillsation of those usages which have stood the test of time into law by judicial decision and interpretation. But usages and methods change to suit the requirements of the days, and on occasion, swiftly. Indeed instant regulations are sometimes essential for new discoveries, and inventions. The Common Law, Code Law, and Constitutional Law, are constantly altering and advancing to harmonize, control and utilise the new born thoughts and expressed wishes of peoples. The Common Law of Blackstone's time has been so modified by judicial interpretation and legislation that it is scarcely recognizable in the rules of conduct of to-day which we are pleased to call the Common Law. It is bettering largely now from the Pardoets and the Civil Law. For the same reason Code Law is changing. The Constitution of the United States has been stretched on all sides by the Supreme Court to cover the growing body, and the Congress has been busy in sewing on amending strips. Even young Canada would feel itself bound by some restricting clauses of the British North America Act, if it and the Imperial authorities, did not quietly ignore them, and all are happy because they know the objectionable clauses can at any time be repealed when Canada requires it, and we are warned against any further written definition of status in the Empire which undoubtedly would embarass free development. Until Canada has established growing it cannot be defined. It doth not yet appear what we Canadians shall be.

"It would be a mistake to assume from what has been said that fundamental laws of all the Canadian provinces would be the same. They are not. That is why there is in the constitution of the Canadian Bar Association the clause relating to its objects;

"Promote the administration of justice and uniformity of legislation throughout Canada so far as is consistent with the preservation of the basic systems of law in the respective provinces.'

"For the basic fiscal laws of eight provinces differ more widely from those of Quebec than they do from the United States, except perhaps Louisiana.

"No doubt as time passes conference will require greater uniformity in those provincial laws which relate to clauses of business carried on between the provinces. That, undoubtedly, should left to the free volition of the provinces. No one province should be expected to make all the concessions to attain greater unity The civil code system of Quebec relating to purely local and domestic matters differs fundamentally from the system in other provinces; why it should not, if such be the will of the Quebeckers? It should be the aim of the Canadian people to keep the ex isting differences during their blendings free from all kinds of extern al ingerferences or encroachment Citizens will best develop their powers, and make their richest contribution to Canada, in the habitat and facilities and the atmosphere to which they are accustomed and most naturally adapted. They will usually do what is to their interest, and the more readily if there is no outside power appearing to thereunto compel them. If there is, their sweet reasonableness vanishes.

"Lam not suggesting that those from foreign lands should be permitted to continue their alien habits languages and ideals. As they come to benefit themselves by our better advantages, resources, and the protection of our laws, they must in all respects conform to things Canadian and they should not be admitte more quickly than they can be quietly and effectually assimilated and Canadianized. There is such a thing as bartering a nation's birthright for a mess of potage.

It would therefore be far more advantageous if our laws were substantially different than that they should be the same in principle as they are. 'Like law, like people'."

"See here," said the irate man "I'm going to sue you Look at my head. You professed to cure—"

"Wait a minute," interrupted the maker of Fakeley's Balsam. "We advertise merely that we cure partial baldness and not—"

"Well, I was partially bald when I started using your stuff; now I haven't a hair!"

"Well, then, you're cured of partial baldness, aren't you?"

MEDICS TO INVESTIGATE OSTEOPATHY

Los Angeles, July 7.—The allopaths have started an official series of research tests in osteopathic treatment of disease. The first public announcement of this fact was made today at the annual convention of the American Osteopathic Association, which has been in session all this week at the Hotel Ambassador, where more than a thousand delegates from all over the world have been in attend ance. Osteopathy has been practiced generally over the country for a quarter of a century, during which it claims have never been officially investigated by any old-school institution. Now the Massachusetts Medical Society and Harvard Medical School have begun research work at the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital in Boston, one of the largest and most important hospitals in the world. Osteopathic physicians there are now examining cases of organic disease and apply osteopathic adjustment to the spine for the purpose of cure. Extensive laboratory tests and elaborate records will check up results.

The Massachusetts Medical Society which is a branch of The American Medical Association, has just made official report in which it says: "Before any claim is justified for the value of this treatment a careful study of a large number of cases must be made in which the usual therapeutic procedures are tried on half the patients and the same procedures plus the osteopathic procedures a the other half.

"It became obvious, however, that co-operation during their limited time in a group of less well-defined conditions, such as lame and painful backs from various causes, etc., the osteopathic treatment afforded marked relief. In this group of cases comparable studies again have not been made, but one is forced to the conclusion, from the great wealth of evidence of relief in isolated cases, that benefit is frequently derived by the manipulations. Your committee has not received a satisfactory explanation as to the reason for the beneficial results and feels that at present the reasons are not known. It feel that careful study should be conducted by properly trained medical investigators on the subject at the earliest possible moment in regard to these results"

Gov. Stevens of California opened the convention, which was presided over by Dr. Samuel J. Seothorn o Dallas, Texas, the president. The National Women's Osteopathic Associa tion also held its annual convention here under the presidency of Dr. Josephine Pierce of Lima, Ohio. The annual meeting also marked the 50th anniversary of the founding of the osteopathic Society of the Philadelphia Osteopathy. Dr H J Marshall of Des Moines, Iowa, is present. A special train brought the Eastern delegates across the continent

The beauty of American women was attributed by Dr. F. P. Millard of Toronto, president of the International Society for Lymphatic Research, to their excellent, develop ment of the lymphatic system.

A conspicuous figure at the convention was Dr Grace Stratton Airey, of Salt Lake City, who is the woman member of the legislature of Utah.

The Ten Commandments.

The pile of flints still to be broken was a very large one, thought the stone-breaker, as he paused a little somolately between his bites at a large sandwich of bread and cheese with a miniature cream cheese in it, a cheery. "Good-morning," remarking afterwards that he had a deal of work to get through.

"Aye," said the eater, "then stone are like the Ten Commandments."

"Why so?" inquired the genial passer-by.

"You can go on breaking 'em," was the reply, "but you can't get rid of 'em."

BIG DOUBLE PROGRAM AT GRIFFIN'S TONIGHT

A diminution of a popular novel by a famous director with a strong and well known cast in the actual setting of the original story—that's "The Spanish Jade," a Paramount picture which is being exhibited on the double feature program at Griffin's tonight.

Readers of popular fiction will recognise in the title, "The Spanish Jade," of Maurice Hewlett, and they will further be pleased to learn that the interpretation was in the directorial hands of John S. Robertson. The company, which included such popular players as David Powell, Marc MacDermott and Harry Hans, travelled to Spain in order that the story might be filmed in the actual settings of which the author wrote

Miss DuPont, proclaimed by American artists "America's most beautiful blonde," is appearing on the same program in "The Heart of Paris," a five reel Universal drama.

The story, adapted by Larien Hubbard from DuVernet Rabell's stage success, "The White Peacock and Feather," proves a most suitable vehicle for allowing Miss DuPont the fullest range of her dramatic powers and remarkable desert audacities; terrific in its intensity and realism, as one of the unusual features of the story.

"The Haywood," an amusing and original comedy featuring Al. St. John, the inimitable, is in addition to the two above feature offerings.

GLORIA SWANSON AND BABY PEGGY HERE TOMORROW

Audiences at Griffin's tomorrow to Saturday, will learn with satisfaction that Gloria Swanson, "Her Husband's Trademark," Gloria Swanson's latest Paramount vehicle, which will be the feature at that theatre for three days.

In this case, the husband's trademark is a gorgeously dressed wife. The husband is really wealthy, hopes to attain wealth by making a name for himself in politics, thinks a then a friend of husband and wife return after gaining both wealth and position, helps him to both by aid and the husband to promote his self-ish financial gains, rather encourages the romance. The outcome of this situation is a powerful climax showing the disillusionment and after a series of encounters with bandits in old Mexico, the scene of the friend's oil lands, the death of the cowardly husband and the triumph of right-eous love.

Robert Holmes plays the husband with all his old-time finesse, as a suave villain, Richard Wayne portrays his friend, and the other roles are in the capable hands of Lucien Littlefield, Clarence Burton and Ogle.

Little Miss Mischief" with Baby Peggy, his child wonder of the screen, an interesting Travelogue, and the latest chapter of "With Stanley in Africa" adventure serial are announced for exhibition on the same program.

Woman's Sphere

SEVENTY-THREE.

When I am old I would like to be
From selfish thoughts and actions free,
Mellowed—not soured—by the passing years,
That have had their shade of trials and tears;
Then is here I would like to be
When I am—well, say seventy-three.

When I am old I would like to be
From selfish murmuring quite free,
Kind in thought, in word and deed,
Just to all, whate'er their creed,
Quick to act the "friend in need";
That is how I would like to be
When I am—well, say seventy-three.

When I am old I would like to be
From selfish murmuring quite free,
Quietly waiting, without a fear,
For the "call" that I'd know I soon must hear,
With a heart still young and a conscience clear;
And feel that people thought of me
As a "kind old soul", at seventy three.

HOW TO COOK VEGETABLES.

From earliest history vegetables have been an important part of man's diet.

In a little book published in the middle of the seventeenth century, called "Adam's Luxury and Eve's Cookery," the list of vegetables grown and the recipes for cooking them are more varied than those of the average housewife of today.

The Bible speaks of melons, leeks and cucumbers in the time of Moses.

In the diet of many, vegetables take the place of meat, and when so used there should be one vegetable which contains protein, that which builds up, and repairs waste—peas, beans and lentils are among such.

Vegetables contain valuable mineral salts which are often lost in the cooking. If a large amount of water is used and then thrown away much of the value of the vegetable is lost.

How to Cook Them.

Strongly flavored vegetables, as cabbage, onions and turnips, are best cooked in water for ten minutes. This water is drained off, taking with it the unpleasant flavor—and then fresh water is added to finish ire cooking. Asparagus it is best when steamed.

Cook other vegetables in as little water as will prevent burning and keep the kettle covered. The water remaining when the vegetable is tender may be used for making a sauce to serve with it or as a foundation for a cream soup the next day.

Carrots cooked in this way taste quite differently, as one gets all of the real carrot flavor.

Starchy vegetables should be put on to cook in boiling water, salted. Greens, such as spinach, chard or dandelions, should be washed thoroughly and may be cooked in the water which clings to them. Such vegetables as peas, beans, asparagus and corn should not be salted until nearly ready, as salt has a tendency to harden them.

Never allow vegetables to stand in the water in which they were cooked. Drain off the water and keep hot by placing over steam.

Keeping Vegetables Green.

All green vegetables are more attractive if the color can be kept in cooking. It is just a question of setting the color, and bicarbonate of soda, the common baking soda, is very small quantities, will do this.

Do not use more than one-sixteenth of a teaspoon, or as much as can be taken on the point of a vegetable knife, to one quart of spinach or half a peck of peas or beans. If the vegetable stands for a short time in very cold water and then is added to rapidly boiling water the color is kept very well.

Two vegetables that are pretty together and taste well can be served in the same dish or prepared on a platter. Often one can combine several in this way much as New England housewives did when they served "boiled dinner." Peas and carrots, cabbage and beets, or cabbage, beets and turnips, are good combinations.

Vary Dishes.

Vary the manner of cooking and serving. Sometimes take time to cut carrots and turnips into fancy shapes, and then arrange in a bowl or pan, keep hot over water, then serve, surrounded with hand-cooked peas cut in quarters and a cream sauce.

Cut carrots in slices and serve surrounded with peas and when fresh mint is available chop it and sprinkle it over the carrots and peas.

Oriental Rugs.

Most of us do not realize that real Oriental rugs are woven in one piece on hand looms in Eastern countries, and that the value of a genuine rug depends on the design, the fastness of color, the compactness and evenness of the weave, the number of knots to the square inch, and the care that has been taken of it.

In some cases imitation antique rugs are made in Oriental colors, but these have not the quality that comes with age and wear. In such cases, the rugs are often bleached and treated with chemicals to soften the garish colors resulting from aniline dyes and to give them sheen. Such rugs are likely to wear out quickly. Even an amateur can recognise signs of this bleaching. If cheap, crude dyes have been used, the darker colors generally run into the lighter, making the design blurred. If the rug has been much bleached, the colors on the surface of the pile will be soft and dull, while by separating the threads and looking closely, the colors at the base will be found to be clear and light. Rubbing the surface briskly with a damp cloth will bring out the color of chloride of lime with which the rug has been bleached, and very often the cloth will be stained with the color.

As a general rule, it is safe to buy oriental rugs only from reliable dealers, as the average person without a knowledge of distinctive features can easily be deceived.

THE TRIALS OF ANN.

The "diligists" of house moving—who shall extol them John was a fairly good husband, as husbands so—and that's not saying much. He was quiet; he kept his temper fairly well and was rather fond of his family, but he had the "moving bug", and badly bitten at that. Did we get settled in some nice place and our things spread out around us a bit orderly John immediately answered some advertisement and, presto, we were off again; a sort of perpetual "on again, off again; gone again—Finnegan" business.

And worst of all he always wanted to move in a hurry. I noticed that other husbands when they moved did so with caution and deliberation. John always jumped to his conclusions with the speed of a frog for the fly, and before my wife I tailed on after him as best I could, though a phlegmatic temperament and 200 pounds avoirdupois is a sore burden to rapid thinking or locomotion.

Now of moving I have always thought with the writer of Proverbs, and transposed his words thusly to suit mine own circumstances—"of changing many furniture there is no end, and much moving is a weariness of the flesh."

But the last move was the worst. John decided to move on Monday. On Wednesday he expected to be at work two hundred miles away—and expected moreover to have our goods and chattels with him at the same time. We hadn't a great deal of furniture, for which I devoutly thanked the Lord, though I had more than once railed at its progressive but I possess out in my best "hurt wifely" manner that it was impossible to pack in two days and clean up a house as one should leave it for a new tenant, and as any self-respecting woman would leave it. It availed not. I tried even tears. He met them with reproaches that he was sweating his heart out trying to yank for us.

He did, too. For the whole of those two days perspiration streamed down his face in a perpetual shower, as he readily could thuge in boxes, nailed—and I feel nailed the furniture together with iron nails. It didn't mollify me any that he called them "finishing nails." The finish of my furniture seemed in sight to my mind.

By the second night we were ready. A pile of household goods packed in every conceivable manner filled our back hall to the desk by the front truckman arrived, and unceremoniously bundled some of our belongings into a rocking of the truck.

We waited patiently for the return of the truckmen, the two children and I sitting on the steps and John feverishly pacing the floor, alternately consulting his watch and peeping out of the front door.

We were to leave at twelve, at eleven-fifty the truckman returned. There was room enough in which to load the rest of our belongings, to walk half a mile to the station with two boys and a baby, and secure our tickets and a seat on the train. We decided at once that it was impossible and sent the truckman away—to return in the morning for the balance and turned to make the best of our stay in the shell of a house with a few bundles of bedding as our "downy couch."

All the food was packed except a few biscuits and a little cheese. I quieted the youngsters with some of this and settled to sleep with John and Billy on either side of me, on a couple of big bundles of bedding. Another bundle formed a pillow. John slept on a big spring mattress. I slept—a little fitfully it is true, but fairly good sleep under the circumstances. I woke suddenly after midnight and was unconscious was John with a steaming cup of tea presented at my nose. Never did tea taste better. How he achieved it seemed miraculous to me until he explained. He had lit the furnace with scraps of board from the flooring and had boiled his kettle in the furnace on the end of the poker.

We got our train an hour-later and reached our destination without further excitement. Other tales must wait for another occasion being, as Kipling said, "another story."

The Woman Who Couldn't Understand

BY EMMA GARY WALLACE

In The Chistian Guardian

She was cultured and educated. Yet she couldn't understand why she had so few friends, so few invitation, so few Opportunities to share the advantages which Others seemed to take as a matter of course.

The Woman Who Couldn't Understand often eyed herself in her Mirror with pitying Glance. She was satisfied that she was as Well Favored in features as most people, rather better Gowned and Groomed than most, and reasonably Interesting and Brilliant in conversation. Yet there was no denying it, she often found herself in the Backwater Alone.

The Woman Who Couldn't Understand began to show plain Signs of Discontent. Once she took a journey by herself. Tarrying over-night in a country town, to Rest, she wandered out for a walk. There was a Club Festival in the little park, which was gay with lanterns, booths, and a Stockberry's Band. A pretty girl dressed up like a Gypsy invited people to learn their Fate.

The Woman Who Couldn't Understand followed the Impulse to have the lines of fate hand read. Under the gypsy disguise, she did not recognize the Handsome old woman she had lost track, and who at one time had known her well. She entered the dusk of the Tent. The Gypsy Crone mumbled these words over the well-manicured, soft hand.

"Yes are Unhappy—it is true, Lady?

"There are many things You Cannot understand. I will tell the truth, Lady.

"You are selfish—don't start. Is it true, Lady. Yes pity yourself so Deeply that you tire People who are hungry for joy and happiness. It is true, Lady.

"You have scrimped on the Sugar Bowl and Honey Pot, You have been ready to catch the ball but not to throw it. (You have not played the game fair. It is true, Lady.

"There is time Yet for some happiness. To be happy, you must Serve. Go! Think of what I have Told You. and you will Understand."

The Woman Who Didn't Understand stumbled Forth... she shivered in the calming Dusk. A half Sob rose in her throat.

"It is strange," she murmured to herself. "that Kverrose is ready to stab me—even the Gypsy Crone. Horrid Creature! Why couldn't she have told me something Pleasant? I—I who have known so little of Love and Appreciation surely have a right to a fragment of Happiness!"

The Woman turned into the glare of the main street.

"I'll go back to the hotel," she murmured to herself, "and have a good cry. There are several Letters I might write, but not to Gypsy Crone. Oh, I hate her. I will have one Letter All to Myself—for no one understands!"

Faint with tears trembling on her lashes, she turned back upon the Gypsy's warning—the Woman Who Couldn't Understand.—By Emma Gary Wallace—in The Christian Guardian.

THE BANDBOX

By

Louis Joseph Vance

"But—see here—why didn't you tell me before—why didn't you tell what you knew, if you knew so much about it, when you were accused?"

"Everything. You're sweet on the girl, and I don't wish to put a crimp in your young romance by showing her up in her true colours. Furthermore, you may be hep to her little scheme; if you are, you won't let me know that, if I don't believe it, but I know that, if you are, you won't let me suffer for it. And finally, in the senility of my dotage I conned myself into the belief that, if I was layed myself open to arrest for impersonating an agent of the Government. When I woke up to that fact, I knew about the smuggling game?"

Hall nodded toward the bedroom. "I happened in—accidentally—" he saying was just as Miss Landis was telling on herself."

Staff frowned.

"How," he pursued presently, "can I feel sure you're not lemasy, and, having guessed as accurately as you did, that you didn't get at that bandbox aboard the ship and take the necklace?"

"If I were, and thought I'd be here?"

"But I can't understand why you are here!"

"It's simple enough; I've say number of reasons for inviting myself to be your guest. For one, I'm wet and cold and look like a drowned rat; I can't offer myself to a hotel looking like this—can I? Then I knew your address—you'll remember telling me; and there's a colleague that runs 'Any port in a storm.' You're going to be good enough to get my money changed?" he pulled a big English paper—and buy me a ready-made outfit in the morning. Moreover, I'm after larger game, and lemsy's after the necklace; wherever it is, he will be, soon or late. Naturally I presumed you still had it—and so did he until within the hour."

"You mean you think it was lemsy who broke into there rooms tonight?"

"You saw him, didn't you? Man about my age, wasn't he? Evening clothes? That's his regulation uniform after dark. Beard and glasses—what?"

"I believe you're right!" Staff said mirthlessly. "I didn't notice the glasses, but otherwise you've described him!"

"What did I tell you?" Hall helped himself to a cigarette. "By now the dirty dog's probably raising heaven and hell to find out where Miss Sarah has hidden herself."

Staff began to pace nervously to and fro. "I wish," he cried, "I knew where to find her!"

"Please," Hl begged earnestly, "don't let your sense of the obligations of a host interfere with your amusements; but if you'll stop that thrash long enough to find me a blanket, I'll shed these rags and, by your good leave, curl up cunningly on the floor."

Staff paused, stared at the little man's bland and guileless face, and shook his head helplessly.

Hall, already resuming your colossal gall," he said, passing into the adjoining room to get bed-clothing for his guest.

"I admit it," said H placidly.

As Staff returned with the telephone bell rang. In his surprise he passed with his arms full of sheets, blankets and pillows, and stared incredulously at his friend.

"What the deuce now?" he murmured. "Then quickly—not to an answer to that," suggested H blandly, "is there."

He indicated the telephone with an ample gesture. "Help yourself."

Dropping his burden on the divan, Staff seated himself at the desk and took up the receiver.

"Hello?"

He started violently, recognizing the voice that answered: "Mr. Staff?"

"Yes—"

"This is Miss Sarle."

"Where," he stammered; "I—I know your voice."

"Really?" The query was, perhaps, excusable. "Mr. Staff—I couldn't wait to tell you—I've just got in from a theatre and supper party with some friends."

"Yes," he said. "Where are you?"

Disregarding his question, the girl's voice continued gaily: "I wanted to see my hat and opened the bandbox. It wasn't my hat—it's the one you described—but one like it.

"I know," he interrupted; "I know all about that now."

To be continued.

BOWLS AND BOWLERS

Belleville for the last three days has been the rendezvous of bowling enthusiasts of the Bay of Quinte district, and competition for the trophies has been keen. Bowling a gentleman's game, an old man's game, but it might more properly be described as a game for men of middle-age. It is a leisurely pastime which provides gentle exercise and mental diversion without conscious effort.

Bowlers are a race, not the mildest of men, who are not easily provoked although we have known some bowlers who had difficulty in restraining their temper under certain adverse developments, while others cannot refrain from giving vent to irrepressed joy at the shattering of the hopes of their opponents. But the game is restful to the nerves, and it tends to placidity of temperament and cool-headedness. This surely is proven by that famous historic incident when Drake proceeded calmly with a game of bowls at Plymouth when he received the news that the Spanish Armada had been sighted. Drake should be the patron saint of Bowlerdom, and his example held up to all Britishers to teach them to keep their heads in every crisis. The redoubtable old admiral did not regard the time as wasted which he spent on finishing the game, for he was no doubt planning the mode of attack on the Armada as he deftly sent the bowls rolling toward the "kitty".

HASTINGS CAN SUPPLY THE WORLD WITH ARSENIC

In an editorial entitled Arsenic on the Free List, the New York Times becomes forcefully satirical of the Finance Committee of the United States Senate for proposing a duty of 2 cents a pound on white arsenic, which the editor suggests is equivalent to providing a bounty on the production of the ball-weevil which destroy the southern cotton crops. In this column a short time ago we called attention to the great resources in arsenical ore which we have in the County of Hastings, and we pointed out its importance as a future source of supply of arsenic. The editor of the New York Times confirms our statement that the world's arsenic supply was running low. We reprint below the Times editorial in full for the benefit of those who are interested in the production of arsenic production in this district:—

"White arsenic, the chief commercial compound of [illegible], has a variety of uses, medical and industrial, as a drug in other chemical compounds, and as a poison for vermin. It has always been on the free list. The destruction wrought by the boll weevil in the cotton fields has created an insatiable demand for calcium arsenate, of which white arsenic is the base, the only means of putting the boll weevil out of business. Apparently while engaged enough to spare the boll weevil out of existence isn't procurable in the whole world; not half enough, some Southern Senators hold. How wise an opportunity for the elevate in the arsenic business. Every cotton planter must have the spray which the Department of Agriculture has invented for the extermination of the boll weevil. Protect the monitor! Slap a duty on white arsenic!

"It seems incredible, but the Senate Finance Committee, true to its essential policy of taxing millions for the benefit of the few, proposed a duty of 3 cents a pound on white arsenic and fought for it to the last. When these thirsty men were at their great task, why didn't they provide a bounty or the production of boll weevils? That would have been more straightforward. Senator Smith of South Carolina said that the tax would make calcium arsenate sell so high that the multitude of small cotton farmers couldn't buy it. The plan to conserve the boll weevils and reduce the cotton crop was bound to be a vote of only 78 to 5. Eleven high politicians, mainly "standpatters," voted against the duty. Only a fragment of the agricultural bloc took any interest in the fortunes of the Southern farmers. Protection is a jovial duty and persons presumably guilty of voting the Democratic ticket ought to be fined, even if they are spoon on of the plow.

"If white arsenic had been a necessary of life to the American people instead of being a necessary of death for pests, vermin, boll weevils and such enemies, it wouldn't have been suffered to come in free. Yet let us be grateful for small blessings. It seems almost a miracle that the lords of taxation pondescend to leave anything on the free list."

A CONCESSION TO HOME INVESTORS

In offering to renew the five and a-half per cent. Canadian Government bonds maturing December 1st at the same rate of interest as is carried by the maturing bonds, and allowing a bonus of one month's interest, the Minister of Finance is making a material concession to the Canadian investor, as this rate is higher than gets paid on the recent Canadian loan in New York. The high class of the security, which is the very best that can be offered in Canada, and the liberal rate of interest should lead to large investments in these Dominion bonds. Attention is directed to the official advertisement giving details.

PASSING COMMENT

Nobody seems to want anything to do with that Wheat Board out West.

That Small mystery is no small mystery.

Premier Taschereau says he is quite willing to be bad bartender of the Province of Quebec. Premier Drury would no doubt be equally willing to be known as boss bookmaker of Ontario.

When our Mayor Hanna meets the other Mayors in Toronto to confer on the distribution of coal, he should insist upon fixing a reasonable price for fuel.

Those baths at the Victoria Park would be very convenient and refreshing these hot days if they were on the ground and not "in the air".

"Throw physic to the dogs!" said Shakespeare. Our local police has a new version—"Throw liquor to the fishes!" they exclaimed as they poured two barrels of hard cider into the sewers.

HERE AND THERE

THE ANTIQUE TRADE.

Mesopotamia must now be added to the long list of countries plying a prosperous industry in sham antiques, for assyriologists are a good deal disturbed by the multitude of "fakes" coming from that land. So far, Italy has probably held first place, as visitors to Rome and Naples are well aware, though there is always a brisk trade in Egyptian fakes of one kind or another. Long after Waterloo, Belgium did an excellent business, and when the large supply of genuine relics of the late war are exhausted it may be guessed that means will be taken to keep the trade going. Even in Ireland farm-houses have some reputation for the "planting of antiques" by enterprising furniture dealers, the manufacture of "old masters" multiplying materially since the great war.

LIFE IN THE COTTAGE.

"I cannot but marvel at the skill that secured its ostensible author from all of us," wrote the late Sir Henry Jones in his unexpurgated autobiography. "A happier household, I believe, there never was; and though my father, I should say, never made a pound a week, we never lacked anything, so far as I could see, whether in the way of wholesome food or of comfortable and respectable clothing.

"Seven persons had all their meals every day in that little ten-foot kitchen, where the food was cooked and the family lived. There was no room for any of us to sit at our ease; neither the table nor the room was big enough. What then? The answer is simple: We took our meals in relays.

"I think I was more than 18 years old when I had my first new jacket; and I know that when I sat for the Queen's Scholarship in Bangor at 18 years of age, I had the loan of the suit of clothes of one brother in order that I might look respectable, and the loan of the watch of the other brother in order that I might time the answers to the questions. No indignity was meant; none was ever thought of. We were all partners in our family enterprise, and all things ran smoothly in their course."

"On the whole the victualling was as wholesome as it was plentiful. It consisted of bread-and-milk or of 'shot,' that is, ground oat-cake and milk, or of bread and soup—the soup made out of dripping bought at the squire's hall, being, I understand the cook's perquisite. And the bread was of my mother's own making—the best in all the land? Even yet I think that no bread can rival the big loaves turned out of the domestic ovens of Wales and Brittany.

"Buch was our home and our daily life in it. It was crowded and restless, with something going on at every moment. Either my mother with cooking, or my father was heating his polishing irons in the kitchen fire, or some of us sisters were clustering for bread and butter, when supper hour had stepped in to find if his boots were ready or to enjoy a chat. But we helped, and I think I may say, we in-

HOMESICK

A few lines written by a country visitor to Dublin during Show Week.

"God pity the people that live in a town!
Wid the smoke goin' up an' the smoke comin' down,
Wid their ugly odd houses, as like as two peas!
An' the brown bit or green, an' the blue-painted doors.

"Wid the weary cold pavement for miles in the street,
That's fair beak yer heart, 'tis so hard to yer feet;
An' the people all pushin' ye out av their way,
Wid out stopping to bid ye the time av the day.

"Sure, I wish I was back where there's room an' to spare,
Where there's no bigger crowd than ye meet at a fair;
Where the people has time to be havin' a chat
About hins that is layin' an' pigs that is fat.

"So I'll go home again to me own countryside;
An' 'tis thankful I'll be just in peace for to bide,
For I'll bring home the turf, an' the praties I'll sow,
An' bedad I'm the gintleman wid I go."

What is the Matter With Our Youths? From Toronto Saturday Night

The escapade of five young vandals in Toronto recently brings up the question as to what is the matter with our youth. The case in point was the wanton destruction of the contents of a residence by five boys, the oldest of whom was ten and the youngest six years of age. These youngsters, entering by force, a real estate, the owners of which were holidaying, practically demolished the whole interior, smashing the furniture, plastering the walls with refuse, smearing the place with grease, and tearing the pictures from the walls, breaking the china, and last, but not the least, flooding the house from top to bottom with a garden hose to an extent that it will probably be necessary to partially rebuild it. Destruction seems to have been the primary motive of these youngsters, though in a few things were stolen, including a watch. Other articles where youthful depredations have been committed by no means exceptional. In other words our boys of tender years appear to have the same propensity for destroying, and at the same time have developed a viciousness almost beyond belief.

What is the trouble? The boys in this instance came from good homes. They are well cared for and should have believed themselves like gentlemen, in place of like so many young fiends. In the old days the dime novel held responsible for the breaking loose of the colts of that time; but this took form chiefly in imitating pirates, highwaymen and the like; and while there was much worry on the part of the dear mothers not much real harm was done. However, the dime novel has disappeared, the "Desdroad Dicks" are no more. But in their place have arisen other and worse forms of youthful amusement, the movie and the comic strips.

Go to the movie and observe the actions of the youth when a slap stick comedy or a blood-thirsty drama is being shown. Hear the youthful gurgles of delight when some one gets a custard pie in the face. Note the clutching of small hands, in excitement when the villain shoots from behind the screen, or loading his gang, beats the hero temporarily and secures the contents of the office to the four winds, in his search for the valuable papers. What is the effect of all this trash up the youthful mind? Of security it must be detrimental. To do the things he transgresses upon is a real live one wants to do thing he

LORD NORTHCLIFFE.

(The Globe.)

Lord Northcliffe has died at a relatively early age, a victim of his own amazing energies and activities, caught in the coils of the high-speed, high-tension machine which he had created. His various enterprises were so much of a projection of himself that they made too large a draft on the strength of one man, who, rightly or wrongly, believed that he alone could give them direction and motive power. He would probably have lived longer had he been content, after building up his great organization, to devolve on others more of the responsibility of carrying it on. He seemed never to have given his brain and body the rest they needed, or to have acquired the normal successful Englishman's taste for leisure and recreation. Even on his travels he allowed himself no relaxation, but constituted himself an official missionary of Empire, carrying a corps of secretaries and keeping the wires and cables hot.

PUBLIC WANTS TO KNOW.

(Ottawa Journal.)

What the people of Canada want to know is the assurance tha they will have as much coal as can be had of one kind or another. The situation has now reached the point when an early ending of the strike cannot be looked for to prevent serious hardship. There is no assurance that it will end soon and there is definite knowledge that even if it ended tomorrow the production loss cannot be overtaken. Those who have responsibility for looking after the people's interest in the matter, therefore, have no option but to take them to deal with all the courage and energy they would summon if there was no prospect of an end of the strike at all. If anthracite cannot be got in any quantity then bituminous we must have over as much soil coal as we can get and transport. The fuel administrators will be expected to see that it is being ordered.

A severe fuel shortage in Canada this coming winter could not have been avoided unless it could have been foreseen last spring that the United States coal strike was to be of long duration. The most that can be done is to make the shortage as small as possible and to see that the best use is made of what coal we get.

WIT AND HUMOR

Too-Faced.

Flora sat gazing fixedly at a lady who was calling on her mother.

"What is it?" asked the lady, pleasantly. "Do you like my new hat?"

"No," replied Flora. "I'm waiting to see your other face. Mamma said you were two-faced, but I've only seen one."

Retort Courteous.

A teacher asked her class the meaning of the word furlough. Jack was called upon and said: "It means a mule; it says so in the book." The teacher asked for the book and it was brought forward. At last Jack came to a picture of a soldier sitting on a mule. At the bottom of the picture was "Going home on his furlough."

The Honors of Ignorance.

"'Oh, stop your kiddin',' said the girl. 'Who ever heard of a watch striking as loud as that?'

REMARKABLE SYSTEM OF VENTILATION

Each person in Building Can Control His Immediate Atmosphere

London, Aug. 16.—What is said to be the most up-to-date and complete ventilating system in the world is that installed in the Council Chamber of the London County Council's £4,000,000 palace at Westminster, recently opened by the King.

Its unique feature is that each member is able to control his own immediate atmosphere. He has a "control" button below his desk, so that if he is feeling cold he can make the air that is automatically fed to him a little warmer—or vice versa—without upsetting his neighbor.

Apart from individual regulation, 40 tons of air are automatically admitted and extracted from the Council Chamber every hour.

A maze of pipes beneath the floor of the chamber controls the air inlets and outlets with a room full of wonderful machinery in the sub-basement, including large hot noiseless fans, water sprays, thermometers, dynamos, polished gauges, and a network of brass control pipes.

Through the agency of this machinery the climatic conditions of any country in the world can be introduced into the Council Chamber and the large committee-rooms.

A remarkable feature of the ventilating apparatus is that the effect of a sudden change in the outside temperature is immediately and automatically conveyed to the sensitive instruments maintaining an even temperature inside.

A fall of rain on the roof or a spell of sunshine, are felt by the instruments and they act accordingly.

M'Fore remarkable still is the fact that a single member coming into the Council Chamber (in a comfortable) automatically efects the entrance of an additional proportion of cool air to balance the minute change.

ARE PROTESTS HANDLED PROPERLY?

Lindsay Club do Not Seem Favorable to Present System

The Lindsay Post presents a rather feasible argument in the matter of the system of dealing with protests in the C. O. A. B. L. The article which is well worth reading is reproduced as follows:

Are protests in the Central Ontario League properly handled? The question is somewhat pointed but the question is a debatable one. Without throwing any reflections on the personnel of the present committee, which, comprises Messrs. Sandy Lockington, of Port Hope; Arthur Kimmell, of Cobourg, and Fred Craig of Peterborough, we maintain that the committee is not the proper board of justice for handling protests in the Central League. There should be either three distinctly neutral men, or the League should go back to the old form of a representative from each Club. Aside from the three aforesaid officials, the President of the League, Mr. Parsons, of Oshawa, presides, and has a great deal to say in discussions. Secretary Nott of Oshawa, also acts, although he has nothing to say one way or the other, except to read communications, etc. A few pointed observations might be made as follows:

When Mr. Dedman represented the Lindsay Club at the Peterborough-Lindsay protest, he was informed by Pres. Parsons that it was not necessary for him (Dedman) to state any case or argument, as the Lindsay defence was in the hands of the Committee in writing, and the committee would go into a room where the umpire had made a mistake in ruling, and yet the umpire's decision was not upheld, and Peterborough was allowed the protest.

When Peterboro' protested against Belleville, it was again a case where the Umpire had made a mistake, but the umpire's decision was not upheld, and the protest was awarded to Peterboro'. Furthermore, according to the official report issued to Toronto papers, Belleville not being present to defend the protest, the protest was immediately thrown out.

PORT HOPE HAVE LITTLE TO EXPLAIN

Tuesday's Guide Refers Briefly to the Matinnee On Saturday Last

The Lindsay Post, of Tuesday, under a heading, "Sandy In Tears" goes on to tell that Sandy Lockington of Port Hope was so overcome as a result of his team's defeat last Saturday at the hands of Belleville, that he failed to make reference to the game in Monday's Guide.

Why shouldn't he be man? Why it was enough to take the wind out of anybody's sails. Sandy does make a short reference to the game, however in Tuesday's Guide in which he remarks that "that million dollar team of last Wednesday looked like a penny with a hole in it Saturday. The opposing team was Belleville and they did very much as they pleased with our ... "

SWEDEN ENCOURAGES DOMESTIC SCIENCE

Stockholm, Aug. 16.—To secure exact and reliable data on living costs and economic conditions in the household, the official Bureau of Statistics of Stockholm is endeavoring to set up a system of bookkeeping in families of the middle and working classes.

The Bureau furnishes a simple family budget and disinteresting book free to all applicants, and it encourages especially families with yearly incomes from 5,000 to 6,000 kronor to adopt the plan. The Bureau offers a small compensation, about 40 kronor, to anyone who keeps the accounts for a full year, while three cash prizes of 150, 100 and 50 kronor will be presented to the three that the best kept books at the end of 12 months.

The average food cost index figure shows that to-day in Sweden the retail price level is about 78 per cent. above the prices which prevailed in July 1914.

The simplest way to end a corn is Blue-jay. A touch stops the pain instantly. Then the corn loosens and comes out. Made in a colorless clear liquid (one drop does it!) and in extra thin plasters. The action is the same.

1000 Eggs in Every Hen

New System of Poultry Keeping—Get Dollar a Dozen—Famous Poultryman

TELLS HOW

"The great trouble with the poultry business has always been that the laying life of a hen was too short," says Henry Trafford, International Poultry Expert and Breeder, for nearly eighteen years Editor of Poultry paper.

The average pullet lays 150 eggs. It eggs the second year, she may lay 100 more. Then, she must be marketed, it has been scientifically established that every pullet as born is hatched with over one thousand minute egg germs in her system—and will lay them on a highly profitable basis over a period of four to six years time if given proper care.

How to work to get 1,000 eggs from every hen; how to get pullets laying at six months; how to make the old hens lay like pullets; how by keep up heavy egg production all through cold weather; how to get eggs are highest; triple egg production; make shelter more profitable; $5.00 per hen; every egg in six winter months. These and many other interesting poultry secrets are contained in Mr. Trafford's famous "1000 HEN" system of profitable raising, one copy of which will be sent absolutely free to any reader of this paper who keeps six hens or more. Every hen should earn a dollar or more a dozen this winter. This means big profits to the poultry keeper who gets the eggs. Mr. Trafford tells how to get these big returns and how to make money for you. Just send this ad and a letter with your name and address to Henry Trafford, Suite 565N, Herald Bldg., Binghamton, N.Y., and a free copy of "THE 1000 EGG HEN" will be sent by return mail.

A Good Report From Cochrane About The

Pease FURNACE

PIPELESS

Up in Cochrane the weather gets very severe, and it is an ideal place to test out any heating apparatus. One Cochrane user gave the following report:

"I wanted to test the Pease Pipeless Furnace when it was 35 to 40 below zero, and I have done so now. The temperature of the house was comfortable all the time, and the furnace burns the coal down to ashes. I can heartily recommend the Pease Pipeless Furnace for this climate."

Much Wreckage In Wake of Storm

Many Stories of the Effects of the Fury of Tempest that Swept Over the City and District Yesterday—Trees Torn Up Roots and All—Pic-nickers Assailed—Farms Damaged

THREE SILOS BROUGHT DOWN

The terrific rain, hail and electric storm that paid a brief but impressive visit to this city at noon yesterday created great havoc at the Exhibition grounds, where preparations were being made for the big Cobourg-Belleville game at 3 p.m.

Mr. Ben Sanford, who was pitching his refreshment tent was caught by the storm. His tent was carried some 40 feet through the air, and between fifteen and twenty dollars worth of valuable beer glasses were smashed in the mix-up. Strangely enough only one of the deep glasses survived the storm. Possibly this one might be sold to the museum, as the species is now extinct.

The eastern section of the bleachers was blown down and the roof of the visiting team's dug-out blown off. Huge hail stones as large as "pigeons' eggs" were blown fiercely upon the field, and a buggy which stood at the north end of the grounds was sent around the track for a spin.

About a score of poplar trees on the Marshall road west of the Fair grounds, were blown down, and the Cobourg baseball team had to go into a field in order to get by on their way to this city. They noticed the first sign of a storm at Brighton, but it was evidently not nearly so severe there as it was in Belleville.

In various parts of the city, trees on streets were temporarily held up owing to trees being across the roadways. An idea of the severity of the wind may be gathered from the fact that in the western part of the city trees were actually carried out of gardens And deposited some distance from where they stood.

Boat Caught in Storm

During the storm, the "Quinte Lady" was caught out in the bay and had a mighty rough passage. The wind swept the life boat off the dock into the bay, and tossed the craft about very roughly. On the return trip, the boat was picked up near Snake Island. Tents erected on the Islands, and, near Massassauga Park had a stormy session, and one tent that could not stand the pressure was blown away. The tent of Mr. James Broad's farm, caved in during the storm.

Crops Damaged

At what is known as Pine Grove, situated just on the south-western outskirts of the city, the property of St. Michael's Church, the storm played great havoc just as the garden peas were taking place. No less than twenty-seven trees were levelled, some being uprooted. Fortunately at the time there was not a large attendance at the park. There were several picnic parties present. As quick by as possible when the storm broke all were placed safely in the dancing pavilion and it was fortunate that although trees were falling in all directions none fell upon the building.

All housed within the building were naturally frightened. Messrs. Wm. Lynch and H. Geary did yeoman service in looking after the women and children. A warrion which was standing in the park was overturned.

Farm Property Damaged

In the second concession of Sidney Township along the line of the G.T.R. track, no less than three silos were overturned. Two were the property of Mr. H. Donnelly and Mr. May. Some small outbuildings were also damaged.

MINES ARE FLOODED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Sydney, N.S., Aug. 17.—Flooding of mines in this area this afternoon is becoming more serious hourly. Many mines may be destroyed, unhundred horses below surface may be drowned or suffocated. Situation on the surface is quiet with troops in control this afternoon.

MONTREAL MAN FAILS TO SWIM CHANNEL

London, Aug. 16.—Omer Perreault, well-known Montreal swimmer, again failed in his attempt to swim the English Channel. He left Calais on the French coast at 7.30 a.m. today in calm weather, but approaching mid channel, was forced by bolster-ous weather to board the accompanying boat, after having been in the water three hours and ten minutes. He was said to be quite fit physically and will make another attempt in a few days.

KEEP COOL.

It's hot, but keep cheerful, for 'as a man thinketh so is he.'

Don't worry. Nothing lowers the vitality more than worry.

Eat lightly; particularly of meats.

Drink plenty of water, milk and buttermilk.

Clothe as lightly as the law allows.

Exercise only in moderation.

Go for a motor ride in the evening. If you have no motor car of your own, use a neighbor's; it is just as good.

COLLINS SAYS WAR WILL END IN TWO WEEKS

Free State Troops Continue Their Successes Against Rebels

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Belfast, Aug. 17.—Hundreds of rebels were taken prisoner by national troops in reoccupation of Dundalk which has been confirmed here today.

Galaway, Aug. 17.—Clifden, on the coast has been freed of Irish irregulars and the Marconi wireless station here which was recently seized by rebels has been rescued by National troops. The station will be working in a few days, it was announced.

Limerick, Ireland, Aug. 17.—Michael Collins, head of the Irish Provisional Government, expects that military operations in the South of Ireland will be completed within the next fortnight. He gave this opinion in the course of an interview last night, in which he said also that, so far as the military situation was concerned, the new Parliament could meet at any time.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Belfast, August 17.—The Newry Correspondent for the Belfast Telegraph to-day stated he had learned on good authority that Dundalk which was captured two days ago by irregulars, was again in Free State hands. National troops from Drogheda, he says, drew a cordon around the town, and heavy fighting occurred before the irregulars retreated into the mountains.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Dublin, Aug. 17.—The national troops are continuing their successes against the rebels and the latest reports this morning state that they have reoccupied Dundalk. Reports to headquarters of the army tell of the capture of Mallow and Mitchelstown.

SIR ROBERT HORNE,
British chancellor of the exchequer, may become chief justice of Scotland.

RATS ARE HATCHED FROM PIGEON'S EGGS?

Glen Ridge, N.J., Aug. 17.—In view of the well-known enmity between pigeons and rats, Herbert T. Darlington, a New York broker living in Summit Avenue here, was amazed today to find a pigeon sitting over a nest of young rats on the first floor at his garage.

Darlington had been missing squabs for some time and had supposed they were killed by rats. He keeps a lot of pigeons on the second floor of the garage. Early today he saw a large rat, apparently a mother rat, going into the garage. He shot it.

Then he found the pigeon on the nest, which also contained one empty pigeon egg. The little rats were asleep.

LONDON PAYS LAST TRIBUTE TO GREAT BRITISHER

Westminster Abbey Was Filled To-day at Funeral Service of Lord Northcliffe

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, August 19.—Seldom has a last tribute to a Britisher whose position was wholly personal and unofficial gathered such an assembly as that which filled Westminster Abbey to-day when the funeral service of Lord Northcliffe was solemnized.

While eminent personages gathered in the great edifice those of humble station in life filled the streets and approaches to the Abbey. After the service, conducted by Canon Carnegie, the procession left the Abbey to the strains of Chopin's funeral march and wound its way to St. Magdalene Cemetery in Finchley.

TIMES FUTURE IS UNCERTAIN

Fleet Street Absorbed Over Fate of His Various Papers

London, Aug. 17.—The entire Northcliffe newspaper organization, and indeed all of Fleet Street, is absorbed in this one question today. "What disposition did The Chief make of his great properties?"

For a long time it has been assumed he would leave all his newspapers, with the exception of the Times, to their respective staffs. But on what this assumption is based no one seems to know.

There is an even greater uncertainty about the fate of the Times. It is said that in 1907 Lord Northcliffe bought part of the Walters family's share in "The Thunderer" under an arrangement by which he had control only until he died or gave up the Times.

SOFT COAL TO TAKE ANTHRACITE'S PLACE

15,000,000 Tons of Bituminous Needed to Make Up Hard Fuel Supply

Washington, Aug. 17.—Revised figures from the United States Geological Survey place the total coal production of the country for last week at 4,500,000 tons. Extensive wholesale curtailment of consumption possible now production from open mines as a result of developments at the Cleveland, Ohio, conference are for a total production of 4,200,000 tons this week, of which 3,500,000 tons should come from territory east of the Mississippi. It is estimated that 15,500,000 tons of bituminous lump coal will be needed to replace the anthracite deficiency. State Fuel Administrations in Rhode Island and Massachusetts are reported to have ordered consumers that they will be compelled this season to use bituminous lump as a substitute.

WOULD SAVE INTELLECTUALS

Henry Morganthau Pleads For Saving of Cultured Classes in Austria

Paris, Aug. 17.—Henry Morgenthau has had time, in the past week, to receive many comments upon his proposal to rescue Austria from financial ruin which he announced in Paris July 13. These the former American Ambassador to Turkey doubtless has found encouraging and helpful, for he was cheerfully ready today to elaborate his project for the formation of a $30,000,000 corporation to reorganize Austrian industry.

He dwelt among other things upon the need to the world of saving the intellectual life of Austria, and said that it was not the proper means to this end, but rather a benevolent and intelligent leadership from the outside, men who would show Austria how to help herself.

"What is needed is an outside, independent, and helpful influence," Mr. Morgenthau said to The Associated Press. "While my plan is primarily benevolent, I am quite sure that the international bank I have in mind will earn money from the start. I pitched on Austria for the work primarily, believe I fear her large intellectual class may otherwise be starved out. It would not only be a pay, but a loss to the world of art and medicine and music, should the world stand aside and let this people go to pieces. There is a larger class engaged in such pursuits in Austria than in any other country, and this is not a class that can be grown overnight. Its disaster is the result of centuries of study and thought and wealth and effort.

WOMAN IS BITTEN BY PET BULL-DOG

Toronto, Aug. 17.—Mrs. John Dunn, of 1 Earl Grey rd., was so badly bitten by her pet bulldog, which was apparently affected by the hot weather, that she is confined to her bed with her ankles wounded with over forty bites.

The dog has been taken to Fowler's Veterinary Infirmary for observation. If in the course of 10 days it appears to be all right, it will be returned to the owner.

IT

What Was It?

P. T. Barnum, circus king, is credited with saying, that "the public like to be fooled", and he knew.

Rotarians generally, are well known as wits of the first rank, and they also know that the public like to be fooled. How they gave a concrete demonstration of this fact, came to light recently at the Rotarians' Picnic at Cobourg. In their zest to raise money for a worthy cause, the Rotarians decided to fool dear old Mr. Public in order to separate him from his money, but the public, if you please was their fellow Rotarian in this case, so it's all right.

On the grounds they erected a tent plainly placarded with the word "IT" and the following explanatory remarks, "See it now, as you will never see it again." That's all the information the public received free, but on the receipt of the small sum of a dime—ten cents, the secret "it" was revealed. Some three or four hundred persons were so anxious to see "it" that they paid 10c. and entered the tent.

The "it" proved to be an innocent bottle that once contained liquor, but was now bone dry, and the "show" was quickly over consented. You have got to "hand it" to the boys of the cogged wheel.

SOLDIERS FOR NOVA SCOTIA

Canadian Soldiers Leave Quebec for Pacific Duty at Coal Mines

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Quebec, August 17.—A detachment of the Royal 22nd Regiment left during the night for Sydney to act as guard at the coal mines from which the workers have walked out. It is estimated that over one hundred and fifty men left the other ten officers make up the detachment.

Sydney, N. S., Aug. 16.—After passing through a fusillade of stones hurled by energetic strike sympathizers on the outskirts of the town, Col. Elkin's Halifax troops occupied No. 2 colliery at New Aberdeen late this afternoon.

About 1,500 steel workers were on hand at 3.15 this afternoon when the troop train from Halifax reached Sydney Mines uncomplimentary remarks were passed, but no actual hostilities ensued.

Many of the soldiers appeared to be veterans of the great war, and they were arrayed in full fighting kit, even to the tin hats.

No further incidents occurred until the train was leaving the coal mines at New Aberdeen, where several windows were smashed by stones thrown at the passing troops by a body of about fifteen lined up along the right of way.

W. B. ROBB APPOINTED MANAGER

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Montreal, Aug. 17.—At a meeting of the Board of the Grand Trunk Railway System to-day Mr. W. D. Robb was appointed ranking vice-president of the company with the title of Vice President and General Manager. He will take up the duties of President Howard G. Kelley whose resignation was announced yesterday.

DRURY WANTS NO DICTATION

Speaking at Grand Bend, Premier Draws Line Between U.F.O. Organization and Politics

Grand Bend, Aug. 18.—However, the United Farmers of Ontario may organize and function to benefit the agricultural industry, the Legislature of the Province and the dominion of Ontario must not be controlled or directed by any class or group. Permanent advancement can be attained only by building the political structure on the sure foundation of good citizenship.

Thus the Premier threw down the gauntlet to J. J. Morrison, declaring that so long as he remains head of the Government, there cannot be dictation by any class or group.

Speaking to over four thousand people gathered from the ridings of South Huron, East Lambton, North Middlesex and South Perth, he laid down the doctrine that any Government which tries to enter it alone is doomed.

"You have an organization," he declared; "this organization must be kept pure. Do not try to throw or interject politics into that organization. You have a political party. Keep your organization for its own purpose. Get your friends that organization and let your political party do. Keep your organization for its own purpose. Get your friends through that organization and let your political party do the only thing it can do, and that is go out and seek men like minded with us, whether town people or country people.

FIGHT SUGGESTION OF ANOTHER VOTE

Temperance Forces Stirred in Hamilton by Evidence Before Hotel Committee

Hamilton, Aug. 17.—If any effort is made to hold a referendum on the question of prohibition, as suggested to the Parliamentary Committee on Tourists and Hotels, in session here yesterday, it will be strenuously opposed by the local temperance forces.

Such was the opinion of leading members of the "dry" forces. George H. Leon, prominent in temperance work, and Dr. C. V. Emory, Dominion Secretary of the Royal Templars of Temperance, were decidedly against any further submission of a question which they claimed had been definitely settled.

The latter was in favor of even pro-

WARM DISCUSSION AT RAIL SHOPMEN'S CONCILIATION BD.

Montreal, Aug. 17.—Rail shopmen throughout the Dominion of Canada are on the verge of a strike as a result of Canadian Railways to cut their wages on an average of seven cents an hour, Frank McKenna, vice-president of Division No. 4 Railway Employes Department American Federation of Labor, told the Conciliation Board which is hearing the dispute here this morning.

Again the rail executives open the days skirmishing in a statement by George Hodge, Assistant General Manager C. P. R. Eastern Lines, to the effect that Canadian shop employes were in a better position than similar workers in the United States. In a sharp retort the Labor Representative not only denied the statement but charged the railways with placing importance of balancing their budgets higher than the question of justice to human beings.

HAIR CUTTING TO MUSIC

Trombone Used to Ward Off Hysterics While Children Have Hair Cut

New York, Aug. 17.—Some real excuse for the trombone has been found at last. For years and years the universe has been wondering just what trombones really were created for, and now comes Joseph Mastronardi, a progressive sort of barber over at No. 417 Second street, Jersey City, and answers the question. For some time Mastronardi has specialized in the bobbing and clipping of children's hair. But he noticed that he lost many customers when the little ones would become frightened at his snipping shears and would spoil all his efforts by jumping into fits of hysterics.

And now, instead of cajoling his young customers into looking at the mythical bird, a la photographer, all Mastronardi, Senior, finds it necessary to do in order to stave off a fit of hysteria on the part of his customer is to call for his 12-year-old son to play long, loud and lustily on his trusty trombone.

So far the youthful trombonist has been batting 1000 in the anti-hysteric league.

Warsaw, Aug. 17.—Polish imports today consist largely of cotton and metal manufactures, while her exports are oil, timber and textiles. ABOUT THE SILO FILLING Both Cutting Outfit and Moisture Content Important.

Have Sufficient Horse-power for Cutting—How to Control the Moisture Content—Mustard—Advantages of Dairying.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

When silo filling is to be done quickly, that is, one hundred or more tons of fodder cut per day, the cutter and the power must be in keeping with the work at hand. An eighteen horse-power engine or motor and a fourteen-inch blower cutter will handle one hundred tons per day. Where smaller silos are used and the farmer desires to, or has to, do the work largely with the farm help, small cutters can be used. Eight-inch cutters will handle three tons per hour if driven by an engine of not less than eight horse-power.

Have Sufficient Horse-power for Cutting.

Claims are often made that two or three horse-power outfits can do effective work, but this is a mistake. If the work is to be done quickly and effectively with the best use of labor the power should be ample. If it is desired to cut forty tons per day the power should be not less than eight horse. Sixty tons per day the power should be twelve horse. One hundred tons per day will require an eighteen horse-power engine. The cutter should be of the proper size for the power used. Carrier cutters do not require as much power as do the blower cutters, but the advantages of easier erection, simplicity and ease of wetting the fodder through the use of the blower offsets the increased power requirement. Cylinder and knife on fly-wheel types of machines are equally satisfactory providing of course that they are equally well built. Low priced, poorly constructed fodder cutters are dangerous. Select a cutter with a good reputation, and one that is as well built as a good steam engine is built.

Moisture Content Important.

It is essential that there should be sufficient moisture present in the fodder at the time it is being put into the silo to provide the water requirement for the ensiling process and leave the surplus necessary to have ample moist wall made silage, after the fermentative and cooling processes have taken place. With sufficient moisture present in the ensiled mass there is little danger of the fermentation temperatures running too high, the greater the amount of water present the firmer the cut fodder will pack and the smaller the spaces for air. Corn in the early glazed or denting stage, oats, peas or vetch green enough for high grade hay making carry sufficient water in the natural juices to meet the requirement for ensilage. Frequently it is necessary to use corn, oats, peas or sunflowers that have suffered from drouth, or have dried through delays or have been permitted to remain unharvested until long past the best condition for silage making. If so, the shortage of plant juices can be made up by the application of water in quantity sufficient to thoroughly wet the fodder.

How to Apply the Extra Moisture.

Water is best applied by running a stream directly into the fodder cutter while the fodder is being passed through and blown up into the silo. With water under pressure, a valve to control the flow and a section of garden hose the process of wetting the cut fodder is easily accomplished. Corn fodder that has remained in the field until December and become quite dry can be successfully ensiled if sufficient attention is paid to wetting and packing thoroughly in the silo. The wetting must be complete and all the air possible pressed out by tramping the evenly spread cut fodder as it goes into the silo. With red clover, alsifalfa, peas, oats, vetch, rye, sweet clover, mustard, grasses, sunflower, corn or artichoke stalks, there is little likelihood of overdoing the wetting if a stave silo is used, since such a structure permits any surplus moisture to drain away. With water tight cement concrete or tile silos a little judgment is required in determining the amount of water required to give complete saturation but not flooding. For further information regarding silo building and ensilage apply to the Department for a copy of Bulletin 247.—L. Stevenson, Sec. Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

Mustard.

Fields that are heavily infested with mustard can frequently be turned to good account by using such areas for the production of silage fodder. The sowing of peas and oats in the proportion of one bushel of oats to one bushel of peas per acre (the mustard will soon volunteer), will make a very acceptable silage. Mustard has a high feeding value, and the seed in the soil can be exterminated in time by following the practice of using mustard infested lands for silage crops, cutting the entire mass, cereal, legume and weeds and putting all in the silo in a finely cut and packed condition.

Two cabins, a seating stove which will also warm food, and a life-saving net, into which shipwrecked people can jump, are the main features of a new type of lifeboat now being built.

RUSSIAN BANDIT CAUGHT AT LAST

Harassed Red Army in Southern Russia For Several Years

Turnbuff, Russia, Aug. 16.—Alexander Antonoff, whom his followers considered in the light of a reincarnated Robin Hood, but whom the Soviet government classed as a Jesse James, fought to the last when surrounded and killed by the state police at his hiding place in a tiny village near Tambooff late in June.

Antonoff once was in the old Russian army. When the Bolsheviki took power he opposed them and, gathering about him thousands of followers—fast horsemen from the Steppes—he harassed the Red army in the south of Russia for several years.

Last September Antonoff's last band was broken up by the Reds. For months the state police sought the hiding place. Finally some of his former confederates were promised amnesty and betrayed him.

Early one June evening eight men led by Policemen Pokulskin came to the hut of a peasant woman, Marie Kotsonarev, whose name will go down in the fantastic legends surrounding the life of Antonoff. In this hut in the thick woods near the river Voronez, Antonoff was hiding. The police called to her and she came out of the house denying Antonoff was there. No sooner had the woman turned away than two men started firing upon the police from the windows of the hut. Pokulskin, stirred by the shooting, ran to the village church and rang the bells and hundreds of peasants armed themselves with sticks and stones and formed a cordon about the hut.

For several hours the battle continued until, with night at hand, the police ran very short of ammunition. Two of them crept up to the house and set the roof on fire. As the smoke began to pour out of the windows, two men broke from the house and started running toward the woods. With each step they turned to fire their revolvers at the police. They had almost reached the woods when they were shot down. Their bodies were immediately identified, Dimitri Antonoff medically identified, one being the famous chieftain, and the other his brother, Dimitri Antonoff.

To convince the population that the bandits never had been workingmen the Soviet authorities had autopsies performed and doctors issued statements saying that neither of the brothers ever occupied himself with hard work, "for their hands were soft like those of nobelmen and there was fat all over their bodies, showing that they had fed themselves very well at the time when the famine in the village carried away many souls."

THIS WEEK'S CROP REPORT

Much After-Harvest Cultivation is Practised in Some Counties

Harvesting has been delayed by catchy weather. Welland says that while some are drawing in their oats others are only getting in their hay and wheat.

Essex estimates the average yields of wheat, barley and oats in that county to be well over the average. Oats, generally, will be a heavy crop, although Haldimand says that the yield will not be as much as was expected earlier. In Lenark, some fields had to be cut before heading out on account of rust.

Merchants in Haldimand are offering from $7 to $8 a bushel for alsike seed.

Essex states that sweet clover is proving an excellent pasture and soiling crop, but is very uncertain for hay, and that many acres cut for hay have not been brought in.

Most of the wheat marketed during the week sold at about 90 cents a bushel.

Lambton growers of early peaches are complaining of the price—45 cents per 11 quart basket.

The prices quoted for honey in Oxford is 17 cents a lb. In Lennox and Addington the 5 lb pail is bringing 65 cents.

Lambton reports steers doing well on grass. Buyers are offering 6 cents a lb for cattle on pasture. One buyer is looking for 700 steers from the county.

Middlesex says that a few carloads of steers were shipped to England during the week.

Dufferin complains that too many of the cattle now being sold are in an unfinished condition.

Ontario says: "Live stock continue to make satisfactory gains as pastures have not suffered from dry weather. Cattle, however, are somewhat easier, being quoted on the local market from $4 to $7 per cwt."

Poor grade cows are selling at from 3½ cents to 3 cents a lb in Leeds.

Welland states that the demand is strong for churning cream, factorymen claiming that they can handle three times the quantity now coming in. Other representatives report the supply as fairly steady.

Ontario reports that hogs are plentiful, and are bringing $14 a cwt. Other representatives report prices ranging from $12 to $13.75, and say that there is rather a scarcity of animals. Little pigs are selling at from $12 to $10 a pair in Middlesex.

$11 is being paid in Dufferin for lambs of the best quality, but too many undocked and otherwise neglected lambs are being offered on the market.

Perth reports a wide range in the prices paid for eggs in that county, running all the way from 18 cents to 30 cents a dozen.

Oxford states that considerable progress is being made in fall plowing by tractors, but that very little horse plowing has been done so far.

Essex says that many farmers in that county are practising after-harvest cultivation.

Welland remarks: "Summer fallow this year are not as free from weeds as former farmers would like. This has been due to the extreme weather conditions retarding cultivation."

Simcoe says: "The new thistle is extremely bad in some sections of the county. The damp year has been favorable for its development, and field after field is simply yellow with the weed. Some crops are badly choked with it. There is very little after-harvest cultivation in Grey County. Wild oats are also very evident.

SECT. P. A. DAVIS PASSES AWAY

One of the Originals in the Great War

The death occurred on Saturday last in Christie street hospital, Toronto, of Sergt. P. A. Davis, after a long illness as a result of shrapnel wounds received overseas. Deceased was a South African veteran and was one of the Originals in the late war, having enlisted the second day after war was declared with the Mechanical Transport and proceeded overseas with them. On arriving in France he was a dispatch rider and carried on good work until wounded at the battle of the Somme. His wounds were so severe that since that time he has been thirteen months in hospital.

During the war he was a well known boxer, having fought under the name of "Pete" Smith, and won many battles, both here and in the United States. For a time he held the light welterweight championship of Canada. He was also a baseball player of no mean ability. When the present King of England came to Canada as Prince of Wales, deceased was one of the Dragoons that went over Canada with him. He also visited England with the Dragoons at the time of the Coronation. He was born in Belleville 42 years ago, had served most of his life in this city. His widow, three children, Beatrice, aged 21; Joseph, aged 19; and Helena, aged 13, survives.

WOMEN'S INSTITUTE ANNUAL PICNIC

Rednersville Institute Hold Enjoyable Picnic and Children's Day

Our annual picnic was held July 27 at the beautiful little grove on Cow Cottage Farm, the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Phillips. A threatening thunderstorm kept many away and as many were near relatives and dear friends of the late Wm. Peck, Esq., of Albury, whose death occurred that week, the attendance was not as big as usual. The program was given on the large verandah. An address by Mrs. Jim Garbutt of Quinte Institute, two excellent selections by Miss Muriel Anderson, and a reading by Mrs. Evelyn Dempsey. Master Howard Orvis was the lucky winner of the prize in boys' dancing. Visitors were present from Toronto, Belleville and the Quinte Institute of Thurlow. Long tables were spread in the grove and all enjoyed the delicious lunch and ice cream. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. and Mrs. Phillips and all sang "For they are jolly good fellows" to which they both responded. As this was children's day for our Institute we were glad to welcome so many. Our next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Edward Spencer on August 24th, when we hope to have with us Mrs. (Dr.) Gibson of Picton, a graduate nurse, who will give an address. The new community book will be on sale and community singing will be the feature of the program. Everybody welcome.

THE BOY GREW.

The hungry pest took a seat in an inn where the servants were of the "small speed" type.

A young boy took the order for a plate of beef and after an hour's lapse of time returned.

"Are you the boy who went for my plate of meat?" asked the pest.

"Yes, sir," replied the boy.

"Good gracious, how you have grown!"—Edinburgh Scotsman.

CORRECTED.

Father—If you want to make a bit, my son, you must strike out for yourself.

Son—You're united in your baseball talk, dad; if you strike out you can't make a hit.—Boston Transcript.

THE TEMPEST

The elements played havoc with local industries yesterday afternoon, when a terrific thunderstorm broke with sudden fury upon the city. Practically the entire mechanical business of the district was suspended for several hours.

Such an experience goes to show the extent to which electricity has entered into our every day life. Most of our activities in domestic, commercial and industrial life are dependent upon the perpetual service of hydro-electric power. Stop that service and all other service stops immediately.

We cannot control the elements, and when a storm like that of yesterday breaks upon us we can only bide our time impotently wait until its fury is abated and then pick up the pieces. The damage done is perhaps more than compensated for by the cleaning of the atmosphere, the cleansing of our streets and sewers and the watering of the earth.

NEWFOUNDLAND AND CANADA.

The London Times of a recent date contains an interview with Sir Richard Anderson Squires, the Premier of Newfoundland, which boasts the title of Britain's oldest colony, having been hosted by John and Sebastian Cabot, of Bristol, in 1497 and re-located and annexed to the British Crown by Sir Humphrey Gilbert in 1583.

Why Newfoundland is so old in years and yet so backward in development is always a wonder to the average Canadian, who does not understand that till the 19th century Newfoundland was looked upon as a fishing station and nothing more by west of England fishing merchants. In fact there was a pretty rigid law for years compelling every ship master to bring back to England in the fall every man he carried out in the spring.

Settlement in the Colony is almost entirely along the sea coast. Broken as the coastline is, indented with thousands of bays and harbors and plentifully dotted with islands, there is ample room for the population of slightly over a quarter of a million people. Towns there are few of over three thousand people. St. John's the capital, has a population of 32,000, and is the main artery of all trade and commerce. "A single track railway of narrow guage connects this city with Port-aux-Basques about 120 miles distant from Sydney, Nova Scotia. This railway runs very largely along the coast, though its existence helped to make possible the only inland town in the whole Island—Grand Falls, a place of 4,000 people, the site of the Harmsworth paper mills.

Depending as it does, therefore, almost entirely upon its fisheries of cod and herring the Island, which during the closing years of the war owing to the absence of the competition of Icelandic, Norwegian and French fishermen in the salt fish markets of Spain and Portugal, Italy and Greece, occupied an enviable position, has now dropped to a rather serious ecommercial standing, not alone on account of the renewal of all its former competition, but because of the additional handicap of a depreciated currency in the countries where its best markets are situated.

Salted codfish has fallen in price from $15 a quintal (112 pounds) in 1918 to only about $5. In addition the Newfoundland fisherman is faced with the burden of a tremendously high tariff on everything imported.

Although the soil of the Colony is not of the best, still very excellent crops of the coarse vegetables, potatoes, cabbage, beets, carrots are grown, but even so over a million dollars worth of vegetables are imported every year. In the interior, as yet practically untapped, are some excellent stretches of land suitable for agricultural purpose in the bigger river basins.

Thirty cents an acre will buy up to a square mile for anyone who desires to start a homestead, and even bigger grants may be obtained. Cattle fatten well in these river beds, where at present only the various live; but absence of communication makes the prospect less pleasant to the prospective farmer.

There is a more sympathetic feeling towards confederation during the last few years than ever before. Hundred of Newfoundlanders have sought work in Canada. These have brought back tales of Canada and have increased the sentiment.

The stumbling block in the way of union is the city o St. John's which, lying as it does on almost the extreme east looks with dismay on the tremendous growth that would take place on the West and South West coasts acquisite only by a half day's sail from Canada. St. John's dictate the politics of the Island and is anti-confederate.

We notice that Toronto is to have a big fair this year and they are inviting Belleville people to see it. How would it be if Toronto folk were invited to the big Belleville Fal Fair—they might go nearer and Fair worse.

HERE AND THERE

WOMEN DRIFTING FROM CHURCHES.

Rev. J. E. Rattenbury, of the West London Mission, says in the Evening Standard:—"I notice a secularising and separating tendency among the people, and a gradual drifting away from organised worship. The causes are many, but it is not always realised how much the various women's movements have had to do with it.

"I do not condemn these movements, but I cannot but remark that since the suffrage days, and the subsequent wartime economic independence among women, they have been much more difficult to keep within the fold of the Church.

"It is no longer true to say that women are easier to reach than men. They have developed a very critical spirit towards organised religion. In my congregation there are as many men as women, which was not so in the old days."

ORIENTAL RUGS

Most of us do not realize that real Oriental rugs are woven in one piece on hand looms in Eastern countries, and that the value of a genuine rug depends on the design, the fastness of color, the compactness and evenness of the weave, the number of knots to the square inch, and the care that has been taken of it.

In some cases imitation antique rugs are made in Oriental colors, but these have not the quality that comes with age and wear. In such cases, the rugs are often bleached and treated with chemicals to soften the garish colors resulting from dagging dyes and to give them sheen. Such rugs are likely to wear out quickly. Even an amateur can recognize some signs of this bleaching. If ehrap, crude dyes have been used, the darker colors generally run into the lighter, making the design blurred. If the rug has been much bleached, the colors on the surface of the pile will be soft, and dull, while by separating the threads and looking closely, the colors at the base will be found to be clear and light. Rubbing the surface briskly with a damp cloth will bring out the color of chemical if the pile is real. If the rug has been bleached, and very often the cloth will be stained with the color.

As a general rule, it is safe to buy oriental rugs only from reliable dealers, as the average person without a knowledge of distinctive features can easily be deceived.—Toronto Sunday World.

THE EARLY TELEPHONE

In reading the Boston Transcript The Times about the history of the telephone reminds me of hearing a few years before 1872 a squeaking noise which had the name of telephone.

Our house was on Chauncey Street, Boston, and one of the short pieces off of it was Exeter Place, a rather private residential street. We boys were not allowed to play there. Our nickname for them was "Mr. Dummy Teacher." One night the second story of the house be lived in was brilliantly lighted up and we boys reported that "the Dummy Teacher was having a party." A number of boys sitting on the front stoop heard a peculiar grating sound like music coming from the room. The next morning my father read in the papers of a band of Italians that was heard as Professor Bell's house in Exeter Place.

Another incident I remember connected with the telephone stock. It was in the courts for a long time and Boston people did not think much of it. A school friend o mine was in after years in the Gastons' office and a man was very anxious to have an interview with the Governor. Th clerk arranged it, and for this kindness the man sent him a package of stock, which he threw into the lower drawer o his desk at being no good. A couple of years after, this man meeting the clerk, said, "Well, you are rich now." The reply was "Working for the same salary." What did you do with the stock I sent you?" Steve said. "I don't remember it." He was told to look it up, and found Bell Telephone stock that was quoted up in the hundreds a share.

NO CURE NO PAY.

Sandy, not feeling well, had consulted a doctor.

"Doctor—Do you drink, Sandy?

"Sandy—Yes, sir.

"Doctor—Well, you must give that up. D'you smoke?

"Sandy—Yes, sir.

"Doctor—You must give that up, too.

As Sandy went quickly through the office door the doctor exclaimed:

"You have not paid me for my advice, Sandy.'

"I'm not taking it," replied Sandy."

THE OLD NAVY

The captain stood on the carronade: "First lieutenant," says he,
"Send all my merry men aft here, for they must list to me.
I haven't the gift of the gab, my son—because I am bred to the sea,
That ship there is a pirate, and we don't take she,
And odds, bobs, hammer and tongs, long as I've been to sea,
I've fought 'gainst every odds—and I've gained the victory!

We fought for twenty minutes, when the pirate had enough.
"I little thought," said he, "that your men were of such stuff."
Our captain took the pirate's sword, a low bow made to he,
"I haven't the gift of the gab, sir, but politic I wish to be,
And odds, bobs, hammer and tongs, long as I've been to sea,
I've fought 'gainst every odds—and I've gained the victory!"

Our captain sent for all of us; "My merry men," said he,
"I haven't the gift of the gab, my lads, but yet I thankful be,
You've done your duty bootlessly, each man stood to his gun;
If you hadn't you villains, as sure as day, I'd have flogged each one!

For odds, bobs, hammer and tongs, as long as I'm at sea,
I'll fight 'gainst every odds—and I'll gain the victory!"

—Capt. Marryat (1792-1848).

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

THE VICTORIAN CHILDHOOD

Wherein the Khan comments on the futility of the legend, "At Rest", as applied to a lay-off for a blissful Eternity to suit his taste.

Every now and then we read in the papers about some fine old nonagenarian or centenarian, who is enjoying his or her "Eternity." Strange, isn't it, what we say that a man is having a rest as soon as he is dead. He has gone to his long rest, they remember, there are a few fine old people on this side of the tomb who are taking a rest, a well-earned rest! What kind of a civilization is it that is inculcated in us, teaching us that we must die before we can enter into our rest. Why not rest some here? Of the next world is a place of rest it looks to me like overdoing it. To rest through Eternity is unthinkable, Nirvana and Paradise is not the unbeather. I wouldn't mind lying around long for a week or two—but Eternity! I'd want to start something.

Suppose, after a couple million years, a kindly angel came along and said to Wolf, Wolf, you've been resting? You'd feel kinda meek. More than that, if the angel were to sit down beside you and in a sympathetic tones, ask you what you'd been a doin' way down on Earth to get so all tired tired you needed to know what to say. Supposing you had been a chef or a bookkeeper or a street car conductor or a lawyer or a medical girl, will it, take all Eternity and then some to give you a rest?

My plan for the next world is to have a perpetual rest before I go there. It wouldn't be good business to pass into the Beyond all tuckered out. I don't think that the Celestial land will get there at all, but I think that the Lord has something else to think find easy chairs for all creation.

The tendency to joke about solemn things is to be deplored. They have recently put up a tomb over the grave of Eli Turkey, in the White Brick burying ground. Carved on it in large letters are the words, "At Rest." Folks should not jest in 'a graveyard. It is not seemly. I can remember Eli since I was so high, and I can't recall had he ever did a nap. The only exercise he ever took was when he rubbed himself with lumpkin. He wouldn't hank you for an orange or a cigar, not give him a bottle of linnyment and he would be treemendjy obligated to you. His faith was a splendid thing. I am convinced that he rubbed himself during his lifetime with every blame thing you could mention from goosegrease to blue vitriol. And they carved "At Rest" on his tomb!

Speaking of nonagenarians and centenarians, have you noticed that practically all of them were born and spent their childhood in England, Ireland, Scotland or Quebec? I have had to some trouble to discover the reason why they should live to such a wonderful age and this is the reason.

They were children till they were thirty!

That's the secret of it all. They devoted to their duties till they were married and afterwards. The wise old folks did the thinking for them. The patriarchal and clan system was strong in them. They had no worries—the chief did the worrying. The future had no terrors for them.

It is different with our young ones. Childhood hath been curtailed and youth eliminated. They are men at fifteen and old men at twenty-five. Figure fiends tell us that the average length of human life is being extended. How can you extend life at one end when you shorten it at the other? The time is coming when there will be no old folks. When all the people who got their early training in Scotland, Ireland and French Canada are gone there will be no more old folks, as we understand the term. In some communities the oldest inhabitant is an aged gent who has seen almost forty-eight summers. We are told about the so-called Dark Ages when all men were old at forty and there were next in them fatsoff times than in these parolous days.

Where Medical Serospicer dies I'd like to write something about him like this:

"He passed from our world yesterday. He was happy to think that he had a good long rest before he started. He laid off about ten years ago, when he took his farm, and has been resting ever since. He doesn't need to be laid to rest. He is rested! And now he's ready to start in and get busy in the world to come!"

It pleases me to think that Si. Peter will look at him with kindly and approving eyes and will say:

"Lo, Medad, how do you feel?"

And Medad will say:

"I feel like a thirty-year-old. I don't want no harp—gimme a hoe!"

ANCIENT MARINERS

THE DIMENSIONS OF NOAH'S ARK
By Captain Kenneth Lyon

Geography, like History, begins history. The expedition was undertaken by an Egyptian named Hanno, who made his way down the Red Sea and Indian Ocean to Somaliland and Zanzibar, eighteen hundred years before Hiram's Phoenician fleet, following the same route, brought back the gold and precious stones from King Solomon's Mines to adorn the Temple of the Holy City.

The Phoenicians were the great navigators of antiquity, and long before Homer wrote the Iliad the grave of Tyrian trader undid his corded bales at Marseilles and Celtis, and brought back from the islands of the English Channel the tin that helped to turn the Stone Age of Asia Minor into the Bronze Age of Troy. For in Troy the two ages overlapped.

Not very long ago in the ruins of Troy was unearthed an axehead of white jade. Now, this white jade has been found only in China, and perhaps that little bit of shaped stone crystallises the romance of some primeval Marco Polo who guided his pack animals by starlight across the lonely Chorasmian waste till he came upon the shores of the Aegean and the friendly smoke of the City of Troy.

The record of another ancient mariner, named Satapes, sent by Xerxes in circum-navigate Africa, is equally interesting if more tragic. He started in the reverse direction via Gibraltar. When, however, he stood to the southward off Cape Spartel, he found that his ships stopped and would not sail farther. On his return, and for his failure, Xerxes had him crucified, and Satapes paid with his life for the discovery of the south east trade winds.

When Noah Went to Sea.

But ancient mariners are not all mythical or legendary. The stage-Noah's Ark is evidence of considerable maritime skill; the Ark was of the following dimensions: Length, 437 feet; breadth, 75 feet; depth, 44 feet. his "registered tonnage" would be approximately 15,000 tons, and in the opinion of so sober a scientist as the Secretary of the Institute of Naval Architects, she was a "ship-shaped structure." The truth in this legend is confirmed by the fact that there are in Egypt existing to-day boats built in Noah's traditional era (2,900 B.C.), beside an inscription of this date records the first maritime expedition in

While The Britons Were Dancing.

Eastward and westward the geographical discoveries of the Levantine race progressed, when the ancient Britons were painting themselves with woad and dancing round the frontholes of Stonehenge. Darius, a Greek in the pay of Darius, started from Cabul and sailed down the Indus and across the Indian Ocean till he reached the civilisation of Susa. Westward, about the same time, Hanno (perhaps an ancestor of the Great Hannibal) started from Carthage and made his way to Senegambia, bringing back gorillas whose skins were the shaws of three female gorillas, which he hung up in the Temple of Baal, and which were to be seen there until the Emperor Adrian razed Carthage to the ground in 146 B. C.

Perhaps even Christopher Columbus in the Santa Maria was forestalled by some about seaman of immemorial antiquity in discovering the wonderful land which the Greeks called "Atlantis," and which Plato, in one of his dialogues, describes as God's own country existing across the ocean leagues upon leagues beyond the Pillars of Hercules.

GENERALLY ANCESTORS.

They were sight-seeing in Boston, and had reached the Old South Church of Revolutionary fame. A darky custodian, who looked as though he might have survived from Revolutionary days, showed them about. His shaky black finger peopled the empty pews with Boston notables of long ago. He could tell just who sat there.

"Yes, but do many people come 'to this old church nowadays?" some one asked.

"Oh, yaas, sir, yaas, sir. Dis bush church is well filled every Sunday. An' some o' dem dat comes is ancestors,"—New York Evening Post.

SPEEDING IT UP.

"How about this act on the slack wire?"

"That's getting tame. Anything we can do to make it more spectacular?"

"We might run electricity through the wire."—Kansas City Journal.

THE MAIDEN'S LAMENT

(After "Locksley Hall")

Comrades, leave me here a little, while I muse on many things;
Leave me here, and when you want me, sound the banjo's dulcet strings.

Let me cast my roving optic down the vista of the Past,
Meditate on all my follies, from "my first act to my last.

All the list of weary blunders had their origin and start
When I first determined I would give myself to Art—

From the day I perpetrated an umbrella stand made garnished;
'Twas a drain-pipe with scrap pictures neatly pasted on and varnished.

But this kind of decoration speedily went out of style,
So I turned me round and painted daisies on a sky-blue tile.

Then a red-legged stork I painted, 'mid some rushes on a pond;
Next I made a fierce study of some cat-tails yorked on flannel.

I have "etched" a dozen doylays, painted four depressing placques,
Covered with Kate Greenaway child-ren, mem pasteboards by the stacks.

Done "drawn-work" made ribbon rose on, burnished plaster things with gilt,
Sketched papa's face on the teapot and have made a "crazy quilt."

Then, as if this list of objects didn't "write me down an ass,"
I must needs with all the others madly try to hammer brass.

Comrades, I am very weary, and my heart is worn and sore,
In the game of Art 'most finished if it isn't, what comes next?

Must I try to do wood-carving? Must I learn to model some?
Hark! the bells of recipe onward,
Comrades, wearily I come.

—Bessie Chandler.

SAVED BY A HARE

A True Story

Many years ago I was living in Montana. A smelter had been built and it created a demand for silver rock. I owned an interest in a lead mine that had been sunk over thirty feet. Thinking the time had come to make it available, I decided to go there and get some ore and have it tested. I did so, and reached the place just in time to take shelter in the mine from a terrific hail storm. I lighted my candle and saw a rabbit, and went to work. I had not been there more than five minutes when I heard a noise that sounded like a cannon. The rock over my head shook, and in a moment the shaft caved in. You can imagine my feelings better than I can describe them when I found myself buried alive.

I tremble even at this distant day, when I think of that moment. The roof of the shaft was made of rocks, and when they came down they did not pack so tightly but that the air came through. "Years was nothing; I could do to release myself. I knew that if relief did not come from the outside I must perish. No one knew that I had gone there. A board ran past the mouth of the shaft, but it was not traveled much, and I was not likely to attract attention by calling. Nevertheless, I shouted at intervals all day.

The following morning I commenced calling again, and all day, whenever I thought I heard a sound, I shouted. When night came again, all hopes of being released were abandoned. I still not dwelt on the agonies I endured. The morning of the fourth day of my imprisonment I heard something crawl into my grave.

I lighted my candle, went to the bottom. There was only one aperture toward I felt the line pull, and some fine called. I tried to answer, but large enough to admit him; I closed it to prevent his escape. I saw in him food to appease my hunger, and my hand was raised to kill him, when a thought occurred to me that prewanted to know from descending.

I had two fishing lines. Their united length would reach to the food. I took off my shirt, tore it in strips, tied them together, and then to the fish-line. I then tied the end made out of my shirt around the rabbit's neck and let him out. He soon reached the end of the line, and I knew by the way he was pulling that he was making a desperate effort to escape. Soon the jerking ceased, and as I knew that gnawing was one of a rabbit's accomplishments, I thought he had gotten that gold loose. About three hours after-the fish-line had made died away to the cavern. I then pulled the line a little to show that I was still alive. All grew still again, and I knew the person had gone for assistance. Then came the sound of digging. I pulled in the line and it brought me food. It took all the men who worked in the shaft nine hours to get out.

A very large pine-tree that stood near had been the cause of my misfortune. It had been dead a number of years, and the storm had blown it over. The terrible blow it struck the ground had caused the caving in of the shaft. The rabbit had wound the line around a bush and tied himself so short that he was imprisoned outside as securely as I had been inside. He was taken to town, put in a large cage and supplied with all rabbit delicacies the market afforded. He, however, did not thrive, and the boys, believing he "pined in thought" voted to set him free. He was taken back to his old neighborhood and liberated. He not only saved my life, but became the benefactor of all the rabbits near, the miners refraining from shooting any, for fear it might be my rabbit.—Cora Cole McCullough.

"WE ARE SLAVES," SAYS AGNES MacPHAIL, M.P.

Chatham, Ont., Aug. 17.—Miss Agnes Macphail, M.P., for Southeast Grey, delivered an address Sunday afternoon at Chatham District Latter Day Saints, Erie Branch. The big tent wasn't big enough for ocean liners, but who wished to hear the lady member, who is an adherent of this religious denomination.

"We are slaves, indeed," said Miss Macphail, "slaves we, are today, for we have not yet been liberated. Some people have the idea that farming is a paying business, but there is only one way to grow wheat or oats and it is a success and that is to try it. People are not running away from a gold mine, and people are leaving the farms at an alarming rate. Where are the beautiful farm buildings we used to see in the old days? They are going to pieces."

GREEN PEAS MAKE GOOD LOAF WITH CARROTS

(By Bertha E. Shapleigh)

Columbia University.

Wash the peas and add a little too hard to cook as a vegetable, try making them into a loaf which is sufficiently satisfying to take the place of meat. Combination with carrots is attractive to the eye as well as good in the taste.

In the winter, dried or canned peas may be used in the same way.

1 cup cooked peas ½ cup milk ½ teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon onion juice
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons melted butter.

Rub the cooked peas through a sieve, add the salt, pepper, butter and bread together until a paste. Add peas seasonings, and eggs slightly beaten.

Turn into a buttered pan, put pan in another pan containing hot water and bake in a moderate oven until mixture is firm when tried with the point of a knife.

Loosen around the edges, invert on a platter and allow mixture to stand in a warm place while preparing the sauce and carrots.

For the sauce melt two tablespoons butter in a sauce pan. Add two level tablespoons of flour, salt, a little pepper and one cup milk.

Cook, stirring constantly, until smooth and thickened. Add carrots and heat.

Unopyer the loaf and turn the sauce and carrots around it. Another way it to peas the sauce and have the carrots cut in strips and placed, around the loaf. This is plenty for four.

MANY RICH GOWNS IN "HER HUSBAND'S TRADEMARK"

Gloria Swanson has fully established the claim to being one of the best dressed women on the screen, and at Griffin's tonight to Saturday, she will offer fuller and more conclusive proof, for she is playing the title role of a picture in which has as its central theme, the beautiful dressing of a beautiful woman. This picture is "Her Husband's Trademark," a Paramount production, and its theme founded on the strange creed of a man, who believed that a show of wealth would attract wealth, and believing this, gowned his wife in most extravagant fashion. Rue he built his creed on a false assumption and his plans came tumbling down with such completeness that they resulted in his death. It all makes a strangely unusual story, forceful, dramatic, tense. As an example of the lavish dressing of one woman, the central character, it has seldom, if ever, been equalled and Gloria Swanson is surely a prefect wearer of gowns in addition to her undoubted ability as an actress.

"Little Miss Mischief" is the title of the two reel Century comedy featuring the child wonder, Baby Peggy, an interesting travelogue and George Ade's tale in the Hoosier-phase "With Stanley in Africa" are being exhibited on the same program.

THE BANDBOX

By Louis Joseph Vance

"Yes," she went on hurriedly, ushered in his words. "I admired and examined it. It—there's something wrong with it I know," he said again; "the Cadogan collar."

"Oh!" There was an accent of surprise in her voice. "Well, I've ordered a taxi and I'm going to bring it to you right away. The dining's too valuable—"

"Miss Beatrice—"

"I'm afraid to keep it here. I wanted to find out if you were up—that's why I called."

"But, Miss Beatrice—"

"The taxi's waiting now. I'll be at your door in fifteen minutes."

"But—"

"Good-bye."

He heard the click as she hung up the receiver; and nothing more. With an exclamation of annoyance he swung round from the desk.

"Somebody coming?" enquired Ifl brightly.

Staff eyed him with overt distrust. "Yes," he said reluctantly.

"Miss Beatrice bringing the evanescent collar, eh?" Staff nodded curtly.

"Plagued nuisance," commented Ifl. "And me wanting to go to sleep the minute I ever did."

"Don't let this keep you up," said Staff.

"But," Ifl remonstrated, "You can't receive a lady in here with me asleep on your divan."

"I don't intend to," Staff told him bluntly. "I'm going to meet the taxi at the door. I'll take the box, and the fact that infernal necklace directly to Miss Landis, at her hotel."

"Right-o!" Ifl said. He said Mr. Ifl, removing his coat, "the more qualities I discover in you to excite my admiration and liking. As in this instance when with thoughtfulness for my comfort—he tore from his neck the waterproofed rag that had been his collar; "you combine a prudent, not to say sagacious foresight, whereby you plan to have a clean collar for me beyond my reach in event I should turn out to be a gay deceiver."

By way of response, Staff found his hat and placed it handily on the table, went to his desk and took from one of its drawers a leather receiver of effected aspect, unbolted and reloaded it to satisfy himself it was in good working order, and of a sudden looked round suspiciously at Mr. Ifl.

The later, divested of his clothing and crawled in a dressing-gown several sizes too large for him, fulfilled his host's expectations by laughing openly at these private properties.

"I infer," he said, "that you wouldn't be surprised to meet up with cousin Michael Dolan's collar?"

"I'm taking no chances," Staff announced with dignity.

"Well, if you should meet him, and if you mean what you act like, and if that gun's any good, and if you know how to use it," grinned Ifl, "you'll do me a favour and save me a heap of trouble into the bargain. Good night."

Staff stared again in a most business like way, lay down, pulled a blanket up around his ears, turned his back to the light and was presently breathing with the even and steady regularity of a perfectly sound and innocent sleeper.

To make his rest the more comfortable, Staff turned off all the lights save that on his desk, filled a fresh pipe and sat down to enjoy the little man. The very name of sleep was music in his burning ears.

The minutes lagged on leaden wings. There was a great hush in the old house, and the street itself was quiet. Once or twice Staff caught himself nodding; then he would straighten up, steel his will and his eyes and his ears to attention, intently listening, straining to catch the sound of an approaching taxi. He seemed to hear every inaudible night noise but that: the crash and whine of trolleys,

"Saved My Little Girl"

Mother tells how her little Ethel's life was saved.

That is what one woman wrote us recently, and then she goes on to say:—"Ethel was not just past sick, caught a bad cold last August. The child is of a highly strung, nervous temperament and could not be kept quiet in bed. We tried everything we could think of to cure her cough. But, the cough kept getting worse. I have a happy, healthy, sturdy girl she became pale and thin. She had a bad cough. She had this cough and by this time regular spasms of coughing had developed. These coughing spells left the child weak and completely tired out. I believe that in a short time the cough would have developed into T.B. After trying everything I could think of, I saw an advertisement for Carnol, saying that this preparation would build up. I got a bottle and gave it to her that night. Before it was half finished my little girl was improved, the attacks of her cough. Her cheeks began to get back their old colour. She started to put on flesh again and would run and play all day without being tired. Today, after having taken two bottles of Carnol, she is looking and feeling better than she has ever felt in her life."

Carnol is sold by your druggist and if you can honestly say, after you have tried it, that it has not benefited you, return the empty bottle and we will refund your money. 6-128

MAY YET SAVE YOUNG BOY'S ARM

Hospital Authorities Were Today Uncertain How-ever As to the Out-come

Hospital authorities here were not sure whether or not they would be able to save the arm of young Elmer Hosea, 7 year old son of Mr. Arnold Hosea, of Murray township, 2 miles west of Frankford, who was horribly lacerated on Tuesday, in his father's hay field.

While mowing i nthe hay field on Tuesday afternoon, the father missed the boy who had accompanied him to the work. Thinking he had gone on to the house, however, he did not give the matter a second thought, until he discovered that he had run over the lad with the mower while he was laying in the uncut hay, taking a nap.

The surprised man stopped the team almost instantly, but found that the boy sustained from a terribly lacerated arm, the bone having been cut off, and the rush over evidently by-Pa ed, and the artery severed. Using the great presence of mind the father stemmed off the rush of blood, by first aid methods, until the boy was taken to Trenton, where doctors consulted, and advised amputation of the arm. The father refused to consent, however, father the boy was rushed to the Belleville Hospital, where every effort is being made to save the arm.

GRAND TRUNKS SHUT OUT COBOURG LEAGUE LEADERS

Game Late and Played on Sticky Diamond—Cobourg Uses Both Pitchers—Record Crowd in Attendance—Score 14-0

From the sublime to the ridiculous, explains the downfall of the Cobourg C. O. B. L. team here Wednesday afternoon at the hands of the Grand Trunks, who shut them out cold, the final score being 14 to nil.

League leaders with but one loss to their credit in the second schedule, the heady, heavy hitting and snappy fielding Tarks stepped into their task before they had had 2 innings of the brand of baseball the Trunks are now setting up, they were a badly demoralized and broken aggregation, chasing about the field after the ball like an unruly school boys on remand on a truancy charge.

Husky, and hardened ball tossers were missing everything that came to their way, and everything served up to the pitching dept was certainly being hammered. Every man on the Trunk lineup had a bat in the first inning and six of them got hits, scoring 4 runs. Tarry came through with 4 hits in the 3rd inning and as many runs.

This, if you please, was the record of the much-taunted "Punch" Derry, who started the game, but was put in storage in the excess baggage dept., after the second. Piper finished the game, and he was going better than Derry to the street that he should be behind him settled down, and that is all. In the fourth inning, the line-up was shifted, Turpin at third who played an absolutely useless game being sent to the bench. Tackel at short replaced him Thompson came in to short from centre field, and was replaced by Marlee. This did make matters, somewhat better as Tackel managed to stop a few grounders and Thompson also made a few putouts.

Tyson, Skitch and Thompson, the heavy artillery were in the pea gun brigade yesterday, as far as hitting went, and of course the remainder of the team were likewise. Only 3 hits did they get, during the whole argument.

The Trunks played gilt-edged ball, having only 3 errors, and to hold down the team absolutely benefitted by the errors, as snappy double plays wiped the slate clean immediately.

Anything at all, grounders, liners, pops, drives, were pie for in and outfielders. All they had to bother with the enemy was, "Hit 'em in de ring," and they did too, to their sorrow. If they slipped up on the ball, they did throw to the base lying down, all the same. When they went to bat they were like a squad of mad cows all bent on the murder of the ball, and they certainly murdered it.

Trunks got 16 hits, 1 home run, three 3 baggers and 3 baggers too numerous to mention. Hit with the top of the heap in the batting with 4 hits out of 5 times up. He got one single, two 3 baggers and one 3 bagger.

Jack Williams buried a nice steady game for the Trunks, but the wee fleetfoot made it a bad day for pitchers. Jack fanned 5 men and passed only 1. Derry fanned 1 and Piper did the same.

The largest crowd of the season attended the game yesterday, it being a record-breaking attendance here.

Sensational catches were pulled by Weir for the locals and Thompson for the visitors in the dying stages of the game.

RESULTS IN C. O. B. LEAGUE

Surprises Galore Feature Wednesday Games in C. O. League

Wednesday's results in the Central Ontario baseball league certainly remind people that they are living in an age of wonders. Belleville fans and fanettes were so dumbfounded at what their team did to the league leaders that they could scarcely utter a word. Heaped upon that surprise, however, comes the tidings that Bowmanville, one of the tailenders, hung one on Lake Solomon & Co. yesterday, the owners of the first schedule. The Oshawa nine evidently "have come out of it" too as they took a hill out of Lindsay Greybirds right in Sesquicville, and Port Hope redeemed themselves after Saturday's game against Belleville, by defeating Leaside at Leaside. This goes for to complicate the second half standing and moreover each day it looks like Belleville for the top runt position.

The Results

Lindsay, Aug. 16—Timely hitting and errorless ball featured by a below par exhibition by the Greybirds, gave the Oshawa Ponies a win here today, by the score of 4 to 3. Two runs in the first two frames and two more in the last two gave Oshawa their count. The Birds got one in the fifth and two in the eighth, but, with a run to make it tie, fell down in the pinch. Lindsay was represented on the mound for Oshawa, while Allen threw for Lindsay. Five big errors were a tendency for the latter's generosity glowed lost for the locals. The Lindsay twirler had nine strikeouts to Oshawa's five. Box score:

Lindsay—Coombe, lb; H. Cummings, 3b; Carew, ss; Lyons, 2b; c.f.; Allen, p; B. Cummins, c; Mc. Mahon, c.f.; Ashton, 3b; McDonald, r.f.

Oshawa—Leeze, l.f.; Farr, 3b; Evans, c; Bowden, s.s.; Saunders, 2b; Gallagher, c.f.; Pellow, 1b; Hall, r.f. Patten, p.

Bowmanville, Aug. 16.—By snatching up one of the best and closest-contested games of the season this afternoon on Agricultural Park here with a grandstand finish, Bowmanville nosed out a victory over Peterboro, leaders in the first series of the Central Ontario Baseball League, by the score of 3 to 1. It was a pitchers' battle throughout with the honors pretty evenly divided between Chambers, Bowmanville's iron man, who has deny the majority of the pitching during the season for the locals and Beckman Peterboro's white-haired boy and star moundsman. Each pitcher had ten strikeouts to his credit.

Peterboro scored its only run in the fifth. Collins was first up, and hit a single past second. Shaughnessy struck out. Hobson knocked a grounder to short, and Piper caught Shaughnessy at second. Collins scored when McCarney made first on a wide throw.

Peterboro was dangerous in the fourth and sixth, with two men on bases each time, but Chambers was unbeatable in the pinches and retired the side.

Bowmanville played a fighting game right from the start. Stark made a double in the first inning and went to third on Moine's fly to deep right, but retired the side, attempting to steal home. In the fourth, Moine was safe at first when McCarney fumbled his grounder, and went to second on Corder's hit to right. Heckman fanned the next three men up with two on bases.

Bowmanville was rewarded with victory in the ninth, when Corden made first on McCarney's error, Bates got a hit to left and went to second on an overthrow. Will none out and Corden and Bates on third Piper made himself the hero of the day by landing on the ball for two passe, which brought in two runs.

The excitement was too great for the spectators to contain themselves as they rushed the diamond and carried some of the players off the field in glorious triumph. Line-up:

Bowmanville—Stark, 3b.; Moine, 2b; Corder 1b; Bates, c; F. Piper, r.f.; A. Piper, s.s.; Mills, l.f.; Chambers, p; Minayard, c.f.

Peterboro—McCarney, s.s.; Johnston, 2b; Swanston, c; Heckman, p; Wolfe, c.f.; King, r.f.; Collins, 3b; Shaughnessy, l.f.; Holyman, 1b.

Port Hope routed Leaside at Leaside, although no history of the game is at hand.

BELLEVILLE is now in second place in the running for the second schedule.

NEW SCOREBOARD IS ERECTED

Belleville may not have the smoothest ball park in the Central League, but she certainly can now boast of the most up-to-date score board, as the new board, supplied by Mr. Mac Robertson is now in position, sound and secure.

It is anchored on six big posts and measures 12 feet from the sand floor. The board which is 10 x 40 feet, It is situated just behind right fielder's position, so that anyone on the ball park may read it at once. It certainly got a healthy decorating on Wednesday too.

At the top of the board are the words: "Courtesy of Belleville Enterprise". Then "The team we hope to beat—and THE Team—Belleville, At the bottom—"Better Believe Baseball and "Belleville Better Butter."

SUES COLBORNE COUNCIL

At the regular meeting of the Colborne Council notice was received from Carman A Dolman, Barristers, Belleville, of injuries sustained by Mrs. Leon Smith, of Woonsocket, N. J., and of damages to automobile of Mrs. Leonidas Chagnon, of Marble, Massachusetts, U.S.A., on the 21st ult., at the intersection of July 10th, occasioned by the car skidding on the main street in East Colborne.

The accident happened near the Baptist Church on the day the toll was being put on the Provincial Highway. We understand the car had stopped waiting to get through the detour at East Colborne bridge which the Highway Department are building, and in getting under motion skidded into the ditch, which the car was being driven close to in order to escape as much as possible the oil on the road, which had not then been sanded.

The accident happening on that part of King street taken over by the Provincial Highway Department, the council does not consider that the Corporation of Colborne is liable.

The by-law fixing the tax rate for 1922 was passed by the Colborne Council this week. The rate is 47 mills—3 more than last year. The extra mills are taken up by the school and county levies. The formula asking for over $700 above last year—$7,031 in all; and the estimates levying $2,816.03, which is over $200 above last year. Thus having the rates for the village purposes the same as before.

Skirts Too Short?—A jury will decide whether Miss Lavina Bleaser of Middletown, Pa., wears her skirts too short. William Bedger, her next-door neighbor, says she does, and swore out a warrant charging her with common indecency because the skirts just touched her knees and exposed too much hosiery.

Will in Shorthand—A will written in shorthand on a telegraph blank was admitted to probate in London, England, its validity upheld by the Probate Court.

CHURCH PICNIC WELL ATTENDED

St. Michael's Congregation Hold Successful Annual Event

Despite counter attractions there was a good attendance at the St. Michael's church picnic held on Wednesday afternoon at the church's grove, just west of the city limits. The severe storm shortly after dinner had the effect of disarranging the grounds to a considerable extent owing to so many trees being blown down, carrying with them wires. It also had an effect upon the attendance at this particular time. Fortunately all who were present upon the grounds were sheltered in the dancing pavilion and no person was injured, but women and children were much frightened. During the afternoon a fine program of sports was carried out including an interesting game of baseball between the Red Sox of Belleville and a Deseronto team. In the evening dancing was indulged in by many. The sporting events and the successful competitors were as follows:

Girls' race, 7 to 9 years—Laura Kelly, Emma Sager, Evelyn Ehlier.

Girls' Race, 10 to 12 years—Stella Lynch, Hilda Bradton, Kathleen Quinn.

Boys' Race, 7 to 9 years—Gordon Branton, Nelson Murphy, Walter Asselstine.

Boys' Race, 10 to 14 years—Arthur Greenwood, Jack Darlington, John Fisher.

BASEBALL.

The baseball game between the Red Sox team of this city and the Deseronto team resulted in a win for Deseronto by a score of 10 to 7. Fairly good ball was played by both teams. The lineup of the teams was as follows:

Red Sox—Walsh, 1.f.; Cummings, lb.; Joss, s.s.; Cook, c.; Wardhaugh, lb.; Townsley, 3b.; Miles, l.f.; Asbury, r.f.; Hunter, p.; C. Mott, p.

Deseronto—Joyce, s.s.; J. Roach, l.f.; M. Green, l.f.; E. Roach, c.f.; Gaulin, p.; Brant, 1b.; Naphin, 3b.; Dellor, c.; R. Green, 3b.

Red Sox ..... 0 1 2 0 4 0 0 0 0— 7

Two tug-of-war took place and were stubbornly contested. The first pull was between members of the Knights of Columbus and all comers. The latter won. The second pull, between teams of married men and single men, resulted in a draw both teams having a pull to their credit. A box of cigars as a prize was divided between the pullers.

Car Ran Into Ditch.

An auto occupied by two persons last evening from some cause left the highway near what is known as Gibson's Crossing, Kingston Road, and landed in the ditch. Fortunately the parties in the car were not injured and no particular damage resulted to the car. Other autoists assisted in getting the car back on the highway.

WEDDING BELLS

ANDERSON — CORNELL

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the residence of George W. Cornell, Point Anne, on Wednesday last, when his youngest daughter, Margaret Lottie, was united in marriage to Earl Anderson, youngest son of W. J. Anderson, Centreville. Rev. Totten of Shannonville, performed the ceremony in the presence of over one hundred invited guests in the spacious drawing-room beneath an arch of white asters and carnations.

The bride was given away by her father. Mr. Will Anderson ably assisted the groom, while Miss Mae Thompson, of Picton, acted as bridesmaid. The bride looked charming in a dress of Georgette crepe over white satin with a sweep of lily of the valley and carried a bouquet of pink roses and ferns. The bridesmaid was attired in a dress of Chiu Chiu crepe over white silk, and also carried a bouquet of roses and ferns. The wedding march was rendered by Miss Carl Suttleby, Point Anne.

IN MEMORIAM.

HASLIP—In and sad loving memory of our dear wife, little daughter Annie Haslip, who left us to be with Jesus, Aug. 16, 1921.

No stain was on her little heart,
Sin had not entered there,
And innocence slept sweetly on
Her pale white brow so fair.
She was too pure for this cold world,
Too beautiful to stay,
And so God's holy angels bore
Our darling Annie away.

Sadly missed by Father, Mother, Sister and Brother. a17-1d

DRURY WANTS NO DICTATION

Will Not Be Dictated To.

"Mr. Morrison has his work to do. I have not one word to say slighting his the courteship courtesy shown Mr. Morrison. I know he is a seasoned and efficient worker. But as Leader of the Government I must not take the course that is dictated to me. I have been charged with the political direction of what has become the Progressive party. I have to carry on the Government according to certain policies agreeable and thankfull fain policies which were laid down, and which the people who elected us have been given to expect to see fulfilled. I must do that according to the best of my judgment and ability."

"I am not going to say as I see it. We can carry on the organization as a class organization, and a class organization has its place. But we cannot carry on a Government, a House or a Legislature as a class Government or a class Legislature. We must have citizenship, the very best which you can give us, thinking in terms of the whole country. If we do anything else, we produce chaos. We set class against class, locality against locality. We get brother co-operation nor progress. We get confusion, rivalry, jealousies and in the end, we find ourselves in a condition not far from that of Russia."

RETIRED TO TORONTO.

Scrap of Political History Recalled

Tupper and Macdonald.

Toronto is a haven for many politicians out of office, as instanced by the de cision of Hon. Robert Rogers to move to the capital of Ontario, as out a new idea. It had, perhaps, its most storied history in the case of Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper. In the middle 70's, after the defeat arising from the Pacific Scandal, Sir John moved to Toronto and in 1874, and lived at what has been known as the "Premier House," at 93 St. George street, now occupied by the Royal Canadian College of Science. The name came from additional and later associations, through the fact that Sir Oliver Mowat, and, later, Hon. A. S. Hardy, lived there, while, respectively, Premier of Ontario. Sir Charles (then plain Doctor) Tupper lived at the northwest corner of Jarvis and Carlton from late in 1874, Sir John and he moving back to Ottawa after their success in the elections of September, 1878.

Sir John nominally practiced law and Dr. Tupper resumed medicine while in Toronto, but politics was not long forgotten. After the defeat of 1874 Sir John was despondent and wrote that he was "done for." But a rest and new opportunities in the political field caused his attitude, and the party wants not hear of his proposed retirement. A series of political picnics in Ontario in the summer of 1878, and again in the following summer, aided in restoring the party morale. The tariff was taking shape as an issue, and it was not long before Sir John became an advocate of high duties. He knew later as the National Policy. Hon. James Young, then a member of the House, gives a circumstantial account of the scene and conversation at the budget of 1876, which appears to show that Tupper came to the House prepared for Sir Richard Cartwright to announce tariff increase, and he would do the other tack; but, after the low-tariff leader came out, one of high duties. The Tupper policy appealed to the country in its hard times and a big Tory victory occurred at the elections.

A short time before the vote Lady Macdonald desired to know, for domestic reasons, if the Macdonalds would be leaving Toronto in the fall. "If we do not, we shall have a majority of sixty," Sir John broke his silence to answer. "If badly thirty." The majority was 16. Mrs. Tupper heard the news of the election with some regret. "It is more than it is worth to leave Toronto," she told her husband. Sir John, in writing from Ottawa late in October to the British Minister at Washington, spoke in airy fashion. You will probably have learned that I am at work again here in my old position."

Sealing the Silo.

Several methods of sealing the silo after filling have been devised by their use. What is wanted is a heavy blanket of material on top as near airtight as possible. A Minnesota writer says:

Some times weeds or heavy green grass are run through the cutter as a finishing layer. Hope prefer to jerk the ears from the last two or three loads of corn used as one grain is lost, and allow the corn itself to make an air-tight layer needed to preserve the silage below. At any rate, it is a good practice to tramp the silage around the edges at intervals of three or four days for about two weeks. This helps to prevent the settling away from the wall, often of occurs.

Spoiling at the surface may be prevented entirely by covering the top of the silage when filling is completed with a layer of tar paper cut to fit snugly around the walls and overlapping between the strips. If this is used, it is advisable to weight it with some green material of some kind or with boards. Most farmers, however, think the use of corn likely with the ears removed and with proper tramping is more economical than the use of paper.

In filling the silo the usual recommendation is to keep the surface higher at the sides than in the center and to do most of the tramping near the wall. The last two feet had best be kept about level with the same amount of tramping in all parts of the silo.

Mines Flooding While Masters and Men Squabbling

Starve First, Say Strikers, While Owners Prefer Ruin to Yielding—More Soldiers are Sent—Nova Scotia Colliery Dispute Reaches a Complete Deadlock

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Sydney, N.S., Aug. 18.—Hon. G. H. Murray, Premier of Nova Scotia, this morning arrived and went into conference with Colonel Gordon Harrington, legal advisor of the United Mineworkers, President Dan Livingston, Secretary J. B. McLachlan and others on the United Mine Workers' Executive in an effort to secure a settlement of the miners' strike.

Toronto, Aug. 18.—It was announced to-day that the detachment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police will leave Toronto to-night for the disturbed mining district in Nova Scotia. It will be under the command of Major G. Garion.

Sydney, N.S., Aug. 18.—Interviews with the heads of the disputing factions of the Nova Scotia coal strike to-day yielded a mass of conflicting testimony. District Secretary J. B. McLachlan of the United Mine Workers definitely stated that the miners would stick to their decision even if it meant starving, while H. J. McCormick, assistant General Manager of the Dominion Coal Company, gave a no less firm statement that the company could not yield to the demands of the strikers, even though refusal meant destruction to all the collieries.

No general outbreak of disorder had occurred at an early hour this evening. According to Secretary McLachlan there is not likely to be any "It takes two to make a quarrel," he said, "and unless the company brings in strikebreaking there will be no trouble."

Strikers Parade.

This afternoon thousands of striking miners and members of the Great War Veterans' Association paraded from the United Mine Workers' local quarters at Glace Bay to No. 2 colliery, at New Aberdeen, where soldiers from Halifax are encamped. There they met a new Waterford contingent of veterans, the Governor of whom were United Mine Workers, and to the music of four bands the two bodies marched back to Victoria Athletic Field, where a mass meeting was held.

Meanwhile water is pouring steadily into the pits of all the mines in the Glace Bay area, while officials at the Scotia Colliery are being allowed to operate maintenance machinery there. One company official stated to-day that if the present state of affairs continued for three more days every mine would be rendered unproductive for six months.

MILLION AND HALF TONS COAL SHORT

Canada's Shortage is 50 Per Cent. Says McGrath—Conference Opens at Queen's Park

MAYOR HANNA RETURNS

Mayor Hanna has returned home from Toronto where yesterday he attended a conference called by Mr. Ellis, Fuel Controller, of mayors and coal dealers of the Province, to consider the coal situation. About 150 were in attendance and the meeting was held in the assembly room of the Parliament building. The government was there represented by none other than Sir Lomer Gouin, Premier of Quebec, and half million tons whereas upwards of three millions of tons are consumed during the fall and winter months. This means that about 50 per cent will be the shortage. The Welsh coal his Worship states is about 1-3 less valuable as a fuel commodity than anthracite coal. The latest quotation for Welsh coal is $10.50 F.O.B. Montreal. There is a considerable quantity of Pocahontas coal available which is a first class coal for furnaces and ranges but not so good, it is said for feeders. It is a fine grade of soft coal. From this it is apparent that hard coal will be somewhat scarce wood is available and even at the present time a considerable quantity is being delivered in the city at a fairly reasonable price. There are many in the city who have a number of cords of wood and these may be reserved for distribution to meet the demands. Mayor Hanna is alive to the situation and will do all in his power to help secure either coal or wood for t he citizens.

Toronto, August 18.—The coal situation is "none too rosy at the present time," said C. A. Magrath, of the Federal Fuel Advisory Board, to the meeting of provincial coal men and municipal representatives at the Parliament Buildings yesterday afternoon. He pointed to the strikes

SERIOUS FIRE AT WELLINGTON

Mr. Leslie Smith's Barn and Walter Young's Threshing Outfit Burn

On Monday afternoon the barn owned by Mr. Leslie Smith, Wellington, was burned to the ground together with contents, Mr. Walter Young's threshing machine being burned at the same time.

Fire threshing was in progress at the Smith barn during the afternoon when suddenly flames burst forth and the separator and blower, and the entire building and contents were ablaze in a few moments. The men in the mows had all they could do to escape with their lives from the burning building. There was no possibility of saving the barn or any of the contents, including the separator.

The loss includes a quantity of oats, barley, peas, hay and straw. Fortunately the peas were being bagged and drawn away as fast as threshed and these threshed were saved.

The loss on barn, contents, and separator will be heavy, only partially covered by insurance. The insurance carried is said to be $1,000 on barn and $300 on contest.

U.S. RAILWAY LINE DYNAMITED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Buffalo, N.Y., Aug. 18.—The International Railway Company today offered a reward of $10,000 for the arrest and conviction of the persons who dynamited the high speed line of the company north of the city shortly after midnight and caused the wreck of a three-car train, resulting in the slight injury of more than a dozen of Front street, the gun pour-dozen others serious enough to require ing down its rays of heat unrelentlingly treatment.

SHOOTING MYSTERY IS CLEARED UP

Peterboro, Aug. 18.—The mystery concerning the disappearance of Mrs. Edwards, nine years of age, on the Lakefield road last Thursday was cleared up yesterday, when in a written confession to Provincial Officer George Coolman the boy admitted he was not shot from a car as first the story of the case had it, but had previously stated, but was injured when he exploded a detonator. He said he found the cap on a box inside the fence and placed on on a stone and hit it with another stone. Last Saturday Provincial Officer Coolman found one of the caps on the side of the road, and was led to suspect that the wounds had been self-inflicted. Inspector Joseph Stewart, who was with him, came to the same conclusion. The boy's condition is considerably improved and he will leave the hospital in about a week.

CLEAN UP IN NORTH COUNTRY

Provincial Officers Net Seven Stills and Eight Bootleggers

Counties of Victoria and Haliburton Have Been Well Combed

Victoria and Haliburton counties have been well combed for bootleggers and illicit stills, so The Intelligencer was informed today by District Inspector E. E. Adams, of the Provincial Police here.

Mr. Adams personally went through these counties recently by motor car and gathered together considerable information. On his return, he reported to headquarters his findings, and asked that special help be supplied, to clean out that district. After some delay the Department supplied the help, and the matter was then left entirely in Inspector Adams' hands.

The crusade into the wilds of Haliburton then commenced. License Inspector Wm. Thornbury of Lindsay, was given some valuable information, and two special men were sent to the county of Haliburton. From the information supplied to Inspector Thornbury, he netted three bootleggers and five stills. The bootleggers were each fined $200 and costs, and the still owners were also fined $200 and costs. The special officers in Haliburton convicted five bootleggers and seized one still. The first mentioned convictions were all secured in Victoria county. The total fines for the O.T.A. were $1,200, and $200 for the Inland Revenue Department, from Haliburton county alone.

The total of the investigation was 7 stills, making aggregate fines of $1,400; 8 bootleggers, whose fines aggregated $1,200, with one case still pending; making a total of $3,300 in fines.

All the persons convicted paid their fines, and all seemed to be quite prosperous. One Italian in the north country who was operating a miniature distillery had the liquor cached, all over the woods in bins. He paid his fine and had some $900 in cash. No difficulty was experienced in making arrests, there being no gun play or roughhouse tactics.

Referring to the special detectives used, Inspector Adams stated that the

REMOVED HIS SOCKS TO GET RELIEF

Passers by Suffer From the Effects

Montreal, Aug. 18.—George Smith, 25 years of age, address unknown, sitting on his valise which sagged down under his 150 pounds weight, perched himself in the middle of the sidewalk and, complaining of the attacks of "Hay Fever," removed his boots and socks, much to the disgust of many passers by, before a policeman changing to come along interrupted the proceedings and induced the weary traveller to continue his journey up the hill.

This was but one of the many spectacles which happened on the hot and dusty metropolitan streets of Montreal, where the temperature was greater than that stated by the McGill Observatory of 86. Along the water front more than one weary sailor was seen to seek relief by taking a nap not only in cool sheltered nooks, but also on the bare cobble stones of Front street, the sun pour-

Forests Aflame Towns Wiped Out

Twelve Lives So Far Lost in Forest Fire Area Near Duluth, Minn.—Hundreds Homeless—2,000 Men Fighting Flames

PEOPLE FLEEING BEFORE FLAMES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Duluth, Minn., August 18.—Fears that the death toll in the forest fire would go beyond the reported total of 12 when additional advices were received to-day from the flame swept areas, were expressed by scores of refugees who were arriving hourly from all sections of the north woods.

National Guardsmen are succoring refugees and more than two thousand forest rangers, settlers and others are re-doubling their efforts in fighting the flames which have already destroyed the small towns of Cotton, Central Lakes and White Face.

Duluth, Minn., Aug. 17.—Six known dead, hundreds homeless, at least two towns wiped out and a dozen others in imminent danger, was the apparent toll tonight of a series of forest fires which swept northeastern Minnesota today, causing the worst conflagration since 1918, when 400 persons lost their lives.

Drouth conditions have increased the menace to alarming proportions and tonight more than 2,000 men were fighting the fires in various sections.

Official reports tonight were that the villages of Fairlanks, Silver Creek and Pimio, in Lake county, all small settlements, had been destroyed, the citizens fleeing mainly to Two Harbors.

Cullen Lake and Central Lake, in Lake county, were also reported destroyed.

Fires were reported in Wisconsin, where it was said the city of Drummond was menaced.

"REAL GOOD SERVICE"

Neighbors Complain of the Noisey Religious Meetings—Shrieks Heard Were Not Shrieks of Terror, but of Ecstacy

Toronto, Aug. 18.—Complaints from neighbors as to noisey behavior at the services at the Free Methodist Church at 107 Edmiston avenue caused the police of No. 13 station to attend a gathering there Sunday night. The police declared they could find nothing out of the way.

Complaints were made by neighbors that the conduct of the congregation was both noisy and unbecoming. One resident stated that they were shouting in the fog of their voices and even dancing in the church.

Rev. G. H. Bray, the pastor of the church, denies that there was any disorder. "It was what I call a real good meeting. Over 300 people were present and there was a great display of emotion, but only a few of them were moved by the spirit to any great extent."

He admitted that there was loud talking. Regarding the shrieks the people heard, the pastor said that were not shrieks of terror, but of ecstasy.

MONKEY RUNS AMUCK IN NEW YORK

Breaks Loose and Puts Hotel Guests in a Near Panic

New York, Aug. 17.—A young panic was started at about ten o'clock yesterday morning and kept up for some hours in the region of the Chelsea Hotel by a fair-sized monkey which ran amuck after having broken loose from his moorings in the establishment of W. Simmons & Company, bird and animal store at 256 West 23rd Street.

The frisky animal gave no end of trouble to residents in the hotel and the neighboring houses; jumping in and out of windows; throwing bird cages and other missiles out into the street; banging things about generally and yet eluding all efforts at capture. He is nearly three feet in height and has prodigious strength.

TAKE CAR WHILE OWNER INSIDE LOCAL THEATRE

Col. O'Flynn's Car Was Stolen Last Evening—No Track of Thief

At 10 o'clock last night Col. Ed O'Flynn reported the theft of his automobile to the police who have been searching the city all night, with no results, as yet.

Col. O'Flynn, who was attending the show at the Griffin theatre, left the machine, a four cylinder McLaughlin tourister, standing near the theatre. The car was not locked and it was an easy matter to make a getaway with it.

After the show when the car was missed, the police were notified and the night force were out all night on the trail. Surrounding towns and cities were warned of the theft, and requested to be on the lookout for the stolen car. This morning, Mr. O'Flynn and police officers again scoured the city and the outskirts but found no trace of it. The officers are on the case to-day and it is thought that before long the guilty party will be apprehended.

EMMANUEL CHURCH ANNUAL PICNIC

Large Crowd Take in Enjoyable Day at Twelve O'Clock Point

Emmanuel Church annual Sunday School picnic to Twelve O'Clock Point and Presqu'ile yesterday by the steamboat Brockville was the most successful for many years. The fine, warm weather, splendid harbors, splendid patronage and last but least, the care and courtesy of the captain, officers and crew of the boat made the occasion a very enjoyable one to all. 490 agreeable and appreciative passengers took in the trip to Twelve O'clock Point, 100 enjoyed the run to Presqu'ile. Messrs. Richard Hubbard, J. Lane and Miss Dora Bowen were in charge, and it is largely due to their unceasing attention and watchfulness that there was not the slightest accident or confusion. The Rector of the church and the Sunday School teachers are all very gratified by the results. The last boat was home at 11 o'clock.

DROP OF MARK MAY HAVE DIRE CONSEQUENCES

FAMINE & RIOT IN BERLIN

Drop of Mark May Have Dire Consequences, Is Berlin Belief

Berlin, Aug. 18.—Famine and hunger riots among the masses, and the undermining of the authority of the Ebert government will be the direct consequence of the unbelievable drop in the value of the German mark as compared with the dollar. Heaven knows when the bottom will be reached now that the 1,000 marks to the dollar point has been passed.

These are the gloomy comments of the Berlin Vossiche Zeitung, which heretofore has been optimistic and always ready in support of the Ebert-Wirth government. Tuesday the government made a payment on the reparations account of 1,500,000 and on account of the rapid drop in the value of the mark amounted to 2,400,000,000 paper marks instead of 1,500,000,000, as would have been the day before. As the German people are now accustomed to figure in paper marks, this difference of 900,000,000 marks had a most depressing effect on their morale.

Bewailing headlines in all the newspapers remind Germans every other day that the dollar, which before the war was equivalent to about four marks, is now worth more than 1,000 marks. All feel that personally they are affected as much as the big bankers, industrialists and even the government itself. There is a general demand on the part of working men in every branch of industry for higher wages and a readjustment of the conditions of living. The communistic Rothe Fahne (Red Flag) blames the present financial crisis on the private warfare among the country's great capitalists which was brought to a head by the assassination of Walter Rathenau, leader of a powerful group opposed to the Hugo Stinnes group.

"The workingmen themselves are to blame for their present plight," days the Rothe Fahne, "because they refused to rise up in arms against the present system after the Rathenau murder."

NEVER GO BACK TO OLD PARTIES SAYS MORRISON

U.F.O. Secretary Criticizes Latest Effort of Premier to Broaden Out

WILL FIGHT NEW PLAN

Service is 'Vicious' Farmers' Sun Renews Its Allegiance to the Farmers' Movement

Delta, Aug. 17.—Following the example of Premier Drury, J. J. Morrison has burned his bridges behind him so far as a reconstruction on the breadcrumbs-cat controversy is concerned. The U. F. O. Secretary definately outlined his position—rather the position of the U. F. O.—at a largely attended picnic here this afternoon. He made it quite plain that he would fight the Premier's latest move with all the strength at his disposal. He intimated that if th Premier succeeded there would no longer be any need for a Secretary of the Farmers' movement in Ontario.

Though there was nothing of an inflammatory nature in Mr. Morrison's remarks, he took the Premier severely to task for statements made yesterday at Grand Forks. His challenged Mr. Drury to refer to one single instance of distortion on his part. "Mr. Drury is trying to dictate to the present time, while we are merely standing by," he added

Doesn't Fear Beviet.

Mr. Morrison read a paragraph from the Premier's speech in which it was intimated that class government might result in a condition similar to that prevailing in Russia to-day. "What do you think of that?" he asked his audience. "It sounds like Arthur Meighen. I really think it must be a mistake. Surely Premier Drury has a better opinion of Ontario farmers than that.

"I want you to understand," Mr. Morrison stated, "that this is not a controversy between Drury and Morrison, but between Drury and the U. F. O. I must carry out the principles of the U. F. O. whether they your orders now or gut-out. I have had to come back for election every year for eight years. Every year I have been elected without opposition and without criticism. I take that as a sign that in what I have done I have been following closely the wishes of the farmers of the Province."

Very briefly Mr. Morrison referred to the attempt "on foot now to wrest The Farmers' Sun from the hands of the U. F. O. and put it somewhere else." He expressed the opinion that this move would succeed.

The Secretary spoke for nearly an hour, but it was only during the last few minutes that he dealt with the political controversy.

The Agricultural Park on the shores of Delta Lake was filled with farmers who had left the harvest fields to hear details of what is now openly spoken of as the split in the break between the two chiefs.

Never Back to His Old Position.

Right from the early days when it was first decided to go into politics, the U. F. O. Secretary traced the political growth of the U. F. O. "We had good reasons for breaking with both old parties, ersonally, I will never go back to the old allegiance, even if I am the last man to stay out."

RUSSIAN TREASURES BEING MELTED DOWN

Moscow, Aug. 18.—The work of melting down the treasures confiscated from the Russian church by the Soviet Government has begun at the smelting works at Ekaterinburg, in the Ural mountains.

Up to the 25th of June there had been requisitioned, according to The Pravda, from all parts of Russia, 687 pounds of gold; 718,776 pounds of silver; 25,055 diamonds; 8,091 pearls; 26 garments embroidered with seed pearls to the total weight of 330 pounds of pearls; 59,287 rubies, emeralds and other precious stones; 2,100 pounds of gold and silver articles ornamented with diamonds and other precious stones; 743 other articles of fine workmanship but of unspecifications metals; silver coins to the amount of 17,128 rubles, and gold coins amounting to 1,946 rubles.

The largest diamond secured is said to have been something over 25 carats discovered at Petrograd. Most of the diamonds, however, are small and of doubtful value.

Moscow churches furnished about 25 per cent of the total secured up to June 25.

M. Kalenin, president of the All-Russian Central Executive Committee, says the government had hoped to realize one hundred million gold rubles from the treasures seized, but the actual value of the articles in hand at present is probably only about one-fourth of this amount. The most precious of church treasures, located in some of the historic monasteries and considered of museum value, were not seized. Also many valuable articles were secreted by the priests, or stolen before the requisitioners arrived.

'ROPE' IN 'DOPE' VENDORS

Toronto Police Wage Aggressive War Against Purveyors of Subtle Drugs

Toronto, Aug. 17.—The police net spread over a certain section of The Ward in an endeavor to break up the "dope ring" was drawn last night, resulting in two arrests. Both prisoners are charged with selling drugs, and quantities of morphine and cocaine were seized by the police. Inspector Bond stated last night that there had been recently a heavy traffic in drugs, and that he was putting forth every effort to rid the city of those selling "dope."

George White (colored) was arrested by Inspector Bond on Centre avenue last night on a charge of selling. White is said by the police to have sold a package, known as a "deck," of the drug to a police operative for $1. White, according to the police, conducted all sales from a window in the front of his house at 108 Centre avenue. To make a purchase, it was stated, the purchaser would walk up to the window and, after talking to White for a few minutes, would hand in the money and receive the cocaine.

Following the arrest of White Plainclothesmen Skinner and Mulholland searched the house for two hours, and on opening an old mattress in one of the rooms discovered the "hide" and confiscated a quantity of cocaine. White had $161 in cash on him when arrested.

4TH LINE SIDNEY

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Bell entertained company on Sunday last.

Miss Ida Scott has returned to Toronto after spending her vacation at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lott motored to the Sandbanks on Sunday.

A number of friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Bell on Monday evening last and presented their daughter, Miss Myrtle, with a miscellaneous shower. When all had gathered the following address was read by Ida Scott:

Dear Myrtle,—The custom is old, yet new, and times have changed very little in some respects, and we still find our girls doing as Mothers and Grandmothers did: changing their names and leaving the parental roof for homes of their own; and we find others doing as the men and women, boys and girls, did in Bible history: rejoicing and making merry with the bride to be.

This is why we have met here tonight, that we might spend another pleasant hour with you before you leave us to go to your new home.

Your bright young life has been a blessing to all your young associates, and both old and young have been better by knowing you.

You will marry and go to your new home. As the many duties and obligations present themselves we know that you will still be governed by the same high ideals.

We have brought gifts tonight and ask you to accept them as a more substantial expression of our love and esteem for you than mere words can convey. And as you assign them to their various uses we trust that you will be reminded of us all. We greet you tonight with kindest thoughts and best wishes for a happy future, and hope that both you and your husband may long live to sustain and comfort each other, and that your lives might be a blessing and comfort to all those who come in contact with you. And we know that you both strive to live the glad life that the Father's smile will shine on you.

Signed on behalf of Scott's neighborhood.

Bessie Scott.

Nature Gave You Good Teeth

This is how she protects them— make this FREE test

THERE is not a doubt that you want clean teeth. Here is a safe and efficient way to obtain them. A soluble, grit-free dentifrice with a natural fruit flavor can now be obtained in Calsodent.

Why a fruit flavor?

Because all strong, unusual flavors are wrong and unwise.

Acid Fruits cause the saliva to form freely.

And a copious saliva is "

Nature's only tooth bath

Nothing can replace it.

It helps us to swallow our food—but it does far more. It acts on the food, making necessary changes before swallowing.

Even this is not all.

Normal saliva is indispensable to clean teeth. It should flow freely over the surface—it should enter every crevice flushing out the food particles.

It is a well established fact that some substances lessen the flow of saliva whilst others increase it.

Teeth may thus be injured because of a scanty and impoverished saliva.

Calsodent—because it supplies the necessary salivary stimulant—promotes a rich and highly efficient saliva. There is no other like protection for your teeth.

Here is the way Calsodent works on saliva

It increases the amount.

It increases its power to rid the teeth of soft, sticky foods—the starches.

It renders the saliva highly fluid, thus it can easily flow in between the teeth —the places hardest to clean.

It instantly precipitates mucinous films.

Use Calsodent three times daily, and always before retiring.

Glistening teeth will be the result.

Here is the way to use Calsodent

Use one half inch on a dry brush. The instant rush of saliva will sufficiently moisten the brush—also—the temperature is suitable to the mouth.

Roll the brush from the gums downward on upper teeth and from gums upward on lower teeth.

Never brush across your teeth because it may cause injury to your gums.

Brush the inside surfaces carefully.

Special care should be given the back teeth —you know they are difficult to clean. Two minutes given to each brushing will repay you with lasting results. Rinse the mouth well—using tepid water. Thoroughly clean your brush.

These results follow brushing

Note them. Pass the tongue over the teeth —back and front. How easily it glides over the moist wholesome surface. What a wonderful flow of saliva. What an exquisite feeling of cleanliness is produced, and how long it lasts.

This is our message. We want your verdict. We present you with a

FREE Dental Tube!

Then you may prove these statements. The effort is small. The results are gratifying. You will enjoy a new sensation of mouth comfort through this modern-day dentifrice. The slip—with name and address—will be honored by the dealer here mentioned.

GAOLER HUYCK RETIRES AT 83

Many Years of Efficient Service Rendered by Aged Official

After 15 years of efficient service as keeper of the County goal, at Picton, Mr. "Abe" Huyck will turn over his duties on October 1st to the appointee of the Drury Government, Mr. Earl Cecil.

Visiting the goal on Monday, the writer found Mr. Huyck keen of mind and action of body at the ripe old age of 82 years. Born in Hillier Township, Aug. 23rd., 1839, he will reach his 83rd birthday in a few days' time. In view of the unfavorable findings of the Grand Jury at the recent County Court sessions, it was a pleasure to find the goal clean and well kept.

Mr. Huyck is still remarkably strong physically and proves this by going upstairs two steps at a time and also by the remarkably fine goal garden of about 3-4 acres. Of late years he has been somewhat handicapped in his duties by his growing leaf age.

During the 15 years tenure of office, 730 prisoners have been lodged in the goal for various terms. In the following comparitive statement it will be noted that 1915 with 71 prisoners and 1916 with 79 were the biggest years from the gaoler's standpoint. This year 53 prisoners have already been committed for various offences. The yearly record is as follows:

1907, 61; 1908, 55; 1909, 40; 1910, 59; 1911, 54; 1912, 48; 1913, 62; 1914, 44; 1915, 91; 1916, 79; 1917, 35; 1918, 17; 1919, 25; 1920, 28; 1921, 36; 1922, 51.

Infantile Paralysis Victim Tries Out Long Disused Muscles After Operation

New York, July 13.—Frederick C. Birge, the fifty-three year-old man who has not walked since he was stricken with infantile paralysis at the age of 14, took five faltering steps yesterday. Aided by crutches and with two nurses of the Hospital for the Ruptured and Crippled, where he has been a patient since last December, Birge stood upright for the first time in 39 years and hobbled down a flight of thirty-nine years and hobbled forward on limbs that he had long regarded as useless.

"I am mighty weak, but feel no pain," he said smilingly as they lowered him back in his invalid chair. "I can hardly remember what it feels like to walk as other men, but I believe I am going to learn again."

Birge's case has attracted attention all over the country, both among doctors and laymen. He was a boy in Middlebury, Vt., when he was attacked by infantile paralysis. His was the first case in Vermont, and doctors told him there was no hope of recovery from the effects. His family had a farm near Middlebury, and young Birge got himself a wheel chair and with his sister managed the place for years.

A year ago the United Hospital Fund of New York learned of his case and he was brought here and placed under the care of Dr. Armitage Whitman, assistant surgeon of the Hospital for Ruptured and Crippled.

Dr. Whitman's examination disclosed that the big leg muscles had contracted, so that it was necessary to perform several operations, relating the tendons. The patient's limbs were in a plaster cast for more than thirty weeks. They chose yesterday, the thirty-ninth anniversary of his being stricken, to take the casts off.

Dr. Virgil P. Gilbney, surgeon-in-chief of the hospital, said that Birge would have electric treatments and a course of massage.

"STOP READING NEWSPAPERS"

Preaching from the text "Launch out into the deep", Rev. LeRoy Rice, of Kingston, warned his congregation to stop reading the newspapers and 'do their own thinking.

He said that in these strenuous times existence was almost entirely in the shallows. He believed it would be a good thing to stop reading the newspapers for a time and get the deeper in order to come to the waters and get the world in which God had placed us.

The preacher went on to say that the trouble in the world at present was not that people were wicked and sinful, but shallow. He had no prejudice against the press, but he said that people would continue to live shallow lives just so long as they allowed newspapers editors, sitting at their desks, to do the thinking for the remainder of the world.

There is a good deal of sound doctrine in this preacher's sermon, and we are ready to admit that his criticism of the economics of the newspapers is justified to a large extent. But if the average man will not think for himself that can scarcely be blamed upon the editors of newspapers. Most editors are only too happy to get hold of original thought, for it is the one thing they lack themselves.

The truth is very few editors really think their own thoughts, or if they do, they have not always the temerity to express them. As a rule the editor strives to give expression to the aggregate thinking of his constituency. There are so many issues and side issues presented to him for consideration that it is practically impossible for him to give absolutely his own personal views on every subject he has to deal with. In some respects an editor has his thinking dictated to him by the public generally. A successful journalist in Toronto once said that he regarded the Press as the wife of the Public—and most wives follow the thinking of their husbands—not all, we hasten to add!

A very good case could be made out for the opposite view to that expressed by this preacher. We could preach a very powerful sermon on the necessity for more freedom of thought among editors, whom the public will not allow to think for themselves. They as a rule seek to provide what the public wants and think what they think the public wants to think. There are other considerations and limitations that tend to narrow the average editor's range of thinking, and there are many editorial writers who are like retained lawyers who could easily plead on both sides of a case.

Have we not been told that we ponder too much for the public? It would have been more to the point if the reverend gentleman had pleaded for the freedom of editors from the thraldom of a autocratic public. It is the public that makes the demand, and it is the duty of the editor to supply what is demanded, at least that is the generally accepted doctrine among newspaper men—we do not say it is ours.

As for murders and divorces, many journalists have no particular liking for that sort of reading, but what are they to do? If this sort of stuff is not presented in one paper the public will buy the other paper in which it is presented.

We never entirely relish the Kingston preacher in regard to the shallowness of present-day thinking; this, however, is not confined to editors. There is very little depth in the general run of preaching in these days.

THE PONTON POPLARS

We knew that such a stream as that which broke upon the city the other day would not pass without inspiring some one to apostrophize it in poetry. The following brief ode was hatched after considerable brooding and labor by the office band. It should be explained that a row of thirteen poplar trees on Col. Ponton's farm on Trent road were uprooted by the storm. Here is the ode:

THE LUCKLESS POPLARS

Kind Col. Ponton's poplars
Once pointed to the skies serene!
But when the storm struck, they were toppers—
Because their number was thirteen!

A VETERAN OF THE PRESS

The Colborne Express says—"Congratulations to Bert M. A. James on having completed his 44th year as editor of the Bowmanville Statesman. Among the weekly journals the Statesman has always been one of the leaders, due largely to the ability and energy of its veteran editor, who has in his writings ably discussed various questions, especially showing deep interest in the religious, moral and educational life of the country. While The Express has not always agreed with his party politics, yet we have given Bert James credit for honestly expressing his convictions. We hope Bert James may long be spared in health and vigor to continue his activities as an editor."

We beg to second that, and to add that we regard Mr. James as one of the most generous-minded journalists in this country. He is ever ready to give deserved credit and praise to a fellow-newspaper man no matter what shade of politics he be. He does not regard political or journalistic criticism as a personal slight upon himself, but takes it all as part of the game. May he long remain with us, and may his breed multiply.

"Big rush for the bathing beaches", is the heading of a Port Hope news item. They are lucky to have a place to bathe. When will the Corby Bathe be finished?

Mayor Hanna should have enough wood to provide his with fuel for the winter after he has collected all the trees that were felled by the storm on Wednesday. We must try and keep friends with his Worship.

PRESS OPINIONS

MR. DRURY AND THE GLOBE.

(Toronto Star.)

The objection which was raised by Premier Drury to broaden out his party by holding a convention of Progress in which would be invited supporters from cities and towns as well as from the farm do not appear to meet with the approval of the Globe.

The objection which that journal took to the Drury government's formation was been that it was an administration set up on a class movement, but now that Mr. Drury proposes to broaden out the movement to include progressive citizens of every class, he still has to encounter the censure of the Globe.

The Liberal Leader at Ottawa is with the full approval of our contemporary, endeavoring to bring about a fusion of the Liberals and Progressives. But when Mr. Drury in his province attempts the same task of bringing all who are politically like-minded into one camp, the Globe for some reason resents it.

There is little if anything in the Drury policy which the Liberal party could not subscribe to, and the limit of liability to Mr. Drury can only be attributed to one of two reasons. It either objects to the Hydro Power, to his refusal to abolish every old swallow whatever flies, Adam Beck knows out for him to do, in which instead the public opinion of the province overwhelmingly approves the course of the premier, or the Globe objects to Mr. Drury's broadening the Liberal office he lose not do so as a Liberal premier with the party label on him.

Once, for a short time, for a year or so, the Globe supported a non-party United Union Government at Ottawa and found itself away from its cosy corner beside the party hearth. It did not like it. It had an uncomfortable time of it. Perhaps, like Charles L. it had such an experience that it resolved "not to go upon its travels again."

Wife (with book)—It says in this medical work that a man requires eight hours' sleep and a woman ten.

Change No Advantage

A Missourian from the Ozarks recently went to the city to see the sights. He had never been in a big city before. He walked down the streets looking in the windows and enjoying himself hugely. At one place he saw a sign reading "Woman's Exchange."

He hurried into the store, which was filled with various specimens of feminine handicraft.

"Is this the Woman's Exchange?" he asked.

"It is," answered a very tall, very stout and very spectacular person behind the counter.

"Be you the woman?" and he eyed her keenly.

"I guess I am."

"Well, I guess I'll keep Pal," he said and hurried out.

Revenge

They lie upon my desk in disarray,
With letters—bills—grist of my busy day,
The picture post cards that my friends have sent
From places where vacation days are spent.
Here's one from Panama and two from Maine and one from Banff; perchance
They think my day will be a bit less drear
If I'm assured that to them I am dear
Enough to be upon their list for cards
Bearing a picture and their best regards.
Am I a child to be amused with toys,
The while my friends have more substantial joys?
Cheer up! Next month I'm free and then I'll send Nothing but post cards to each desk-bound friend!

Who He Was

The judge was new and somewhat irascible. The scene was laid in a court house down South.

"You there," shouted the judge, pointing to the old negro in front of him, "Are you the defendant?"

"Oh, yas honor, I 'clah," said the negro, "I ain't done nothing to be called names like dat. I've got a lawyer man to do the defending."

"Then, who are you?" demanded his honor.

"I 'spects I'se de complainin' feller," was the reply.

Naturally Endowed

The woman said she wanted a book to give her little boy on his birthday, something useful and instructive.

"Here's an excellent one on 'Self-Help'," said the clerk.

"Self help!" she exclaimed. "He doesn't need any instruction in that line—you ought to see him at a party."

"RADIO CHAPEL"

Broadcasting Church Services, Prayers, Hymns, Sermons—No Chance for a Collection.

"Radio Chapel" is not some obscure Bethel with an unusual dedication; it is the very latest, the "it" of up-to-date religion," says The Church Times.

"Wireless broadcasting, that is, the translation of speech or music by means of powerful radio stations, is already thoroughly established in the United States, and to a less extent in Canada. Now we are threatened with it in this country, and it seems likely that in a very few months there will be no home in the kingdom out of range of some broadcasting centre. An enthusiastic article in a Canadian newspaper refers to the dissemination of 'music, speeches, sermons, and other k' do of entertainment', and 'Radio Chapel' is a regular part of the Sunday programme in America.

"Putting aside fantastic forecasts it is perfectly true that if the scheme now under consideration is carried out, there will shortly be in operation some eight broadcasting stations in England and Scotland, from which will issue music and speech every evening between 5 and 11, and at intervals throughout the day on Sundays, and it will be easily possible for anyone to receive, or, more strictly, reproduce, the sounds with instruments, at prices running over the same range as the usual talking machines. Moreover, the reproduction will almost certainly be clearer than the ordinary telephone, and will not have to develop out of the usual range of the early phonographs. Further, for dwellers within ten or twenty miles of the broadcasting centres there will be no need for the erection of outside aerial wires. The whole thing can be contained in a room, and packed away when out of use.

"Shall we have 'Radio Chapel,' and, if so, what is the Church going to do about it? No doubt members of those bodies which regard church going merely as an occasion to hear sermons and feel good will consider they have fulfilled all obligations when they have spent half an hour in a sofa at home, or possibly under a tree in the country with an 'aerial' slung over a convenient branch, listening to an address by some well-advertised preacher, with perhaps a rendering of a popular hymn by a 'soloist' to follow. It will not do for the Church merely to ignore what the public does at no interest or no concern to her.

"Here is the possibility of a tremendous opportunity. The preacher will find himself addressing an invisible audience of unknown extent, but art will arise in public speaking and preaching; the art of gripping by the voice alone, without such adventitious aids as pulpit thumping or dramatic gesture. What a chance to preach plain and righteous sermons, and just, without embarrassment, to appeal—perhaps quite—they may be persuaded to become Christians, and Christians too in the only full sense, such Catholic Christians as those who had heart and responded to the eloquence of Paul."

When a man is invited to express his opinion of a new baby's looks all he can do is strangle his consciousness and lie like a gentleman.

Life's short enough without making it shorter by skallyhooting a car forward a railroad crossing.—Pittsburgh Post.

HERE AND THERE

WHAT AMAZED HERODOTUS

It was to the Phoenicians that one of the astonishing feats of antiquity was done. About 600 B. C. the Phoenicians supplied a fleet to Pharaoh Necho, King of Egypt. This Pharaoh is doubly interesting, for he is a point at which the history of several nations touch; you can read of his exploits both in the Second Book of the Jewish Kings and in the Fourth Book of the Greek Herodotus. An ally of that Assyrian empire once famous for the gleaming colours of Semiramis, he extended the northern boundaries of his kingdom by defeating Josiah, King of Judah, at Megiddo; seeking fresh words to conquer, he ordered his Phoenician fleet to find out if it were possible to circumnavigate Africa—and the stout Phoenicians anticipated Vasco da Gama by two thousand years. We have a curious proof of their success, for Herodotus tells us that after sailing many months down the East Coast of Africa they found that the sun rose on their right instead of their left. Herodotus thought this quite incredible, but to us it is almost proof positive of the circumnavigation, for if you sail southward past Zanzibar the sun will rise on the port side of the ship; but sailing northward after doubling the Cape of Good Hope, you will find the sun rising the starboard side.—John O'London's Weekly.

NURSERY RHYMES UP TO DATE

Dear Red Patch—It seems to me high time that the old nursery rhymes were revised somewhat, for the benefit of the home training of the rising generation of Canada. I baby therefore lend my hand at a couple. Perhaps your readers can supply more?

Yours truly,
"REFUGEE."

Three sightless, vermin.
Mark how their speed accelerates.
Individually and collectively, they are engaged in pursuit of the essence of the agriculturist, who invariably amputates their spinal extremities with a household utensil, customarily reserved for the dissection of viands.

NOT HEART-EASY.

Some feckless body is going about soothing the flaxen tendency that is, owing thesis words on English soil. His latest experiment is the word "horse," which means heave or thereabouts. It sounds more promising than "cacophony" or "heave" for "cough" about it. Hearts-heave, for example, means the opposite of heartsease, which is a characteristic old English plant. Those transplanted words remind us of some of the creations in the shorter catechism of a future day. "Should a chicken be toasted on both sides?", "Where is the Pibroch?" and "What King let the bannock burn?" When it is remembered that heave rhymes with sieve and nerve "heave," you rush for a poetic lexicon and then—"She sees the sea's heave," saying promise of a rhythmic breeze. Now we will be good.—Montreal Gazette.

LITTLE JACK HORNER

James Horner, still youthful, and of diminutive stature was executed in an alcove, refreshing himself with a pastry concoction, especially prepared in connection with the Christmas celebrations.

Into the delectable composition, he inserted his digits extracted one of the fruits therein contained, and consumed upon the fact that his juvenile reputation was stainless.—Montreal Herald.

SPANIARDS GOOD AT TENNIS

The Spaniards, who have done so well in the hard court tennis championships, are by no means novices in lawn tennis. Though comparatively new to international contests the game has long been played in Spain. As a matter of fact, the annual tournaments are a great attraction of the season in Madrid, and many important matches are decided at the Real Club de la Puerta, which is well-known to sportsmen for golf and polo as well as tennis. The Spanish temperament seems peculiarly well suited to tennis.—Montreal Gazette.

A LITTLE BREEZE

A little breeze came over the hill,
Moving the valley lanes,
The valley hamlets hot and still
Grew grey refreshed and fair.

The soil wind carried a little rain,
Blessing the dusty street,—
It washed the bedgrown green again
And made the gardens sweet.

Then sunshine came with a rainbow glow—
And promises are of old—
It flashed on roof-tops far below,
And touched the hills with gold.

Woman's Sphere

A SAXON SONG.

(By V. Sackville-West, in the Observer, London.)

Teale with the comely semese
Mistook and scythe and spade.
Comth, and bitter as flamen,
Clean, and bowed in the blade.—
A man and his tools make a man and his blade.

Sight of the English shires
Hammock and kame and wead,
Teag of the rocking byres,
Land of the English bread,—
A man and his land make a man and his creed.

Leisurely flocks and herds,
Cool-eyed cattle that come
Mildly to meet words,
Swine that in orchards roam—
A man and his beasts make a man and his home.

Children sturdy and flaxen
Shooting in brotherly strife.
Like the land they are Saxon,
Sons of a man and his wife,—
For a man and his loves make a man and his life.

WOMAN WANT WORK AS ENGINEER

Liverpool, Eng., Aug. 18.—Victoria Drummond, granddaughter of the late Lord Amherst of Hackney, is seeking a job as engineer on a seagoing steamer. She is a graduate of the Institute of Marine Engineers, and is hopeful of convincing the conservative members of the Board of Examiners that there is no real reason why a woman, because of her sex, should be debarred from spending eight hours daily amid clanking connecting rods in the depths of an ocean liner, if this is her strong desire.

LIFE NO JOY WITH A QUEEN ON BOARD

London, Aug. 18.—The woman who was Queen of Spain in 1893 spent 16 days out board a British fleet at Flushing. Here is the frank letter Admiral Russell, in command, wrote to London about her. The communication has been given out by the distorted Manchester Guardian.

"I have on board the Queen of Spain and the Infanta Isabella this afternoon and have as well as I could, discussed of a numerous lengthy matter on board the several men of ware. There are about 230 persons, all very proud, few sheetlin, and no grocery ... I have hived three weeks under water and in a hole of the pandemonium, but long and not two yards broad; it is not great a burden to me since I am used to living, and shall be not, till I am blessed with a safe return from the Groine to England."

HOW TO SELECT LAMB FOR THE TABLE.

"Selection of Lamb Cuts" is a useful addition to the series entitled "Foods now being issued by the Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. Besides giving advice on selection of cuts, which are illustrated, and directions for cooking, it contains a number of recipes for the preparation of tasty dishes, which the housewife will appreciate.

The statement is made that Canada consumes only 10½ pounds per annum per capita of lamb, while Great Britain consumes 36 pounds per capita. The conclusion drawn is that we do not properly appreciate the extent to which lamb could be used in the daily menu. The committee is reminded that Canadian lamb is always developed during the spring and summer months on the aftermath and tastiest of home pastures. Consequently, the Canadian article is always tender, juicy and highly palatable. Nevertheless, cold storage lamb of foreign origin is sometimes sold in this country.

CHILDREN OBEY YOUR PARENTS

(By Dorothy E. Steiner)

The life of every individual is largely made up of habits. The time when habits are most easily formed is during the early years of life. It is therefore most important not only that habits are formed which will develop the best children today and the most useful citizens in the future but that the formation of all good habits begin very early in life.

Everyone interested in the children of today desires to see them develop into good boys and girls and later into the right kind of citizens. Good habits are, however, essential in the child's life if he is to become a good citizen.

There are many ideals and standards to be desired, many good habits that should be formed in early childhood—truthfulness, honesty, justice, cleanliness, service, courtesy and obedience. In this brief article we desire to consider but one, obedience to the laws of home, school, state and country.

The lack of respect for and obedience to the laws of the group is both adults and children is one of the greatest problems of our country today. If we are to have law-abiding citizens, we must have obedient children in the home and school.

It is a common criticism today that children do not obey. If the boy is justly criticized, the fault is with the adult, not the child. It is often too much trouble to insist upon obedience, but this course will lead only to greater trouble in the future. Sometimes it is the right of the child to be told to do some act rather than a command, but there are times when prompt and unquestioning obedience is essential. If a child is in danger, there may be no time to reason, argue or explain—in such a case prompt obedience may be necessary to save him from serious injury. The habit of obedience will never be able or unjust demands, but a demand once made should be followed by the prompt obedience.

There is no place in society where the lawbreaker is welcome—there is no place or occupation in child life in which the child is wanted who does not respect the law of the group. The child who does not obey will develop into a citizen having little or no respect for the laws of the community.

A few country is not a place where every individual does as he pleases, regardless of the rights of his neighbor, but a place where every individual has a right to the enjoyment of the land and the privilege of making the most of them, provided he does not interfere with the rights of other members of society.

It is the duty of each to obey the laws of the group, and the place in which this respect for law, order and the rights of others should be inculcated is the home.—Presbyterian Witness.

LLOYD GEORGE'S BOOK

French Papers Do Not Wholly Approve of Venture

Paris, August 16.—Several prominent Continental newspapers agree with certain British papers in objecting to Premier Lloyd George's proposed publication of his memoirs.

Certain French journals never approved of the tendency among ex-premiers prominently identified with the prosecution of the war to rush into print, holding that this plethora of explanations, apologies, vindications and condemnation merely clouds popular judgment, which at the present period, it is claimed, cannot possibly gain a true perspective of the events of the last ten years.

The Daily Gaulois, discussing Lloyd George's excursion into war authorship, rejects any idea that he is after monetary gain and thinks this departure is largely due to his desire to glean a majority of his contemporaries without troubling about the verdict of posterity.

THE BANDBOX

By Louise Joseph Vance

"Look here!" said Shaft in a quarrelsome voice. "I've been asleep!"

"You've got nothing on me, then," retorted Ilf with pardonable asperity. "All the same—congratulations. Good night."

He attempted to turn over again, but was restrained by Staff's imperative voice.

"It's four o'clock, and after!"

"I admit it. You might be good enough to leave a call for me for eleven."

"But—damn it, man!—that cuts hasn't come—"

"I can't help that, can I—"

"I'm afraid something has happened to that girl."

"Well, it's too late to prevent it now, if so."

"Good God! Have you no heart, man?" Staff began to strike distractedly up and down the room. "What am I to do?" he groaned aloud.

"Take unkle's advice and go bye-bye," suggested Ilf. "Otherwise I'd be obliged if you'd rehearse that turn in the other room. I'm going to sleep if I have to brain you to get quiet."

Staff stopped as if somebody had slapped him in the telephone ball was ringing again.

He flung himself across the room, dropped heavily into the chair and snatched up the receiver.

A man's voice stammered dropsily his number.

"Yes," in almost shouted. "Yes—Mr. Staff at the 'phone. Who wants me?"

"Hold the wire, sir."

He heard a buzzing, a click; then silence; a prolonged hermp and another click.

"Hello?" he called. "Hello?"

His heart jumped: the voice was Miss Searle's.

"Mr. Staff?"

It seemed to him that he could detect a tremor in her accents, as if she were both weary and frightened.

"Yes, Miss Searle. What is it?"

"I wanted to reassure you—I've had a terrible experience, but I'm all right now—safe. I started—"

Her voice ceased in vibrate over the wires as suddenly as if those same wires had been cut.

"Yes?" he cried after an instant "Yes, Miss Searle? Hello, hello!"

There was no answer. Listening with every faculty at high tension, he fancied that he detected a faint abrupt sound, like a muffled sob. On the heels of it came a click and the connection was broken.

In his anxiety and consternation he swore violently.

"Well, what's the trouble?"

Ilf stood at his side, now wide-awake and quick with interest. Hastily Staff explained what had happened.

"Yes," nodded the little man. "Yes, that'd be the way of it. She had trouble, but managed to get to the telephone; then somebody grabbed her—"

"Somebody? Who?" Staff demanded unreasonably.

"I don't really know—honest Injun! But there's a smell of garlic about it, just the same."

"Smell of garlic! Are you mad?"

"Truth'd and Mr. Ilf contemptuously. referred poetically to the fine Italian hand of Cousin Arbuthnot Jimmy. Now if were you,I'd agitate that book social directory matter, and then ask for the manager and see if he can trace that call back to its source. It oughtn't to be difficult at this hour, when the telephone service is at its slackest."

DEAD O' NIGHT.

Beneath a nature so superficially shallow that it shone only with the reflected lustre of the more brilliant personalities to which it was attracted, Mrs. Hlington possessed a heart—sentiment and a capacity for sympathetic affection. She had mistaken herself an enviable reputation for kindness of heart in Paris, and knew a trifle more than thirty years, the highest quality of tea and never varying from the level of the operatic stage. She had managed to discover that she had no reliability has built the greatest tea close friends in New York, and provided business in North America. REPUTATION.

Reputation is a guide to the future, because it is a record of the past. The Salada Tea Company has earned for itself an enviable reputation for a result of supplying to the public, for more than thirty years, the highest quality tea and never varying from the level of the operatic stage. She that standard. This reputation for reliability has built the greatest tea business in North America. Her own with munitions of war—in the shape of ruby that "SALADA" is always pure money—for her contemplated campaign and delicious. Ask for it today.

THE SIGNS IN A BOY

By BYRON STAUFFER

What did you say you intend to make of that boy of ours? Ambitious to see him hang his shingle as a doctor or a lawyer, are you?

Well, he may upset the cart and launch out for himself in a line you never dreamed of. And if he does, he will, and that you won't have much more to do with the choice than did Alfred Harmsworth or Thomas A. Edison. A recorded today, wanted Alf to be a lawyer; the boy chose journalism, became an editor and Viscount and died the king of all publishers.

All you can possibly do for your lad is to see that he gets a good, childhood, die did in his scholars. Let him be thrown in various atmospheres of callings and there will doubtless be symptoms as to his predilections.

A man of twenty-nine, whose experiments with various callings was about as long as the events of that period, came to say that he was not the right, by convinced that journalism was his forte, would give him a letter to a managing editor and thus open the door of what he knew was the chance of his life?

Of course, I had no earthly right to bother a hard-working brother, will such a minute without more of proof as prima facie evidence sufficient to send the case to the grant jury, as Colonel Dreiston would have said, so I responded to rat 'em though the letter ter catechism for such cases made and provided. I asked him whether he kept a scrap book. Not that any well-seasoned journalist long persists in maintaining such a thing, but a budding Harmsworth usually clings to his early effusions against the glorious day coming, when the eyes of an admiring world will feast on the meritorious juvenile productions of the rival of Benjamin Franklin and George Brown.

The young chap fessed up that he had never really written anything that protruded into the light of the reporting room day. Never had been stirred to write up a football match nor a village wedding; never saw two locomotives trying to jam each other on the same track and rushed to a newspaper office and begged leave to write up the catastrophe; never even called up a city editor to tell him that Perkunitter's store was afire. No, no; he wasn't in the least like that.

There in an eight-year-old boy of my acquaintance in a boy's camp up in the Algonquin Park. Apart from being a wide-awake lad overflowing with vigor and a natural love of the play ground, he had her one outstanding accomplishment, which was the possession of the correct answer to sum in mental arithmetic with lightning speed. As for fingers and plants, his parents had never noticed that he had any. The matter of say, fortnightly they were amazed and delighted to receive the announcement that, in a letter to the editor of the Times, he was a gatherer and classifier of wild flowers and shrubs. He had samples of fifty-odd different species. Those are the signs to watch for.

A veteran school principal pointed to a four-looking young man who was at the moment crawling out from under a big touring car in front of a garage and condemning to the plutocratic tourist, who had found out and remedied the engine trouble. "Ten years ago, that boy was in my school" said the principal. "Every few days he was reported by his teacher for truancy. He was bigger than the others, in his class, one of those lads who dislike school partly because they are ashamed of being beaten in their exams by smaller and younger boys. His parents repeatedly consulted with me about him, plainly disappointed at his lack of application. 'Where does he go when he plays truant?' I asked. They didn't know, but promised to watch. They soon reported that he was always found at the nearby auto repair shop. I persuaded them to put him to work as a machinist apprentice and he is more than diligent and ripe with the best of them." His forte was discovered in his very delinquency.

A favored few are able to bravely choose their life callings and make adequate preparations. The vast majority are forced by grim necessity to seize a passing opportunity to win a livelihood. Even so, a study of that boy's taste and a bit of well-directed guidance of his preparations for his life work will prevent a misfit in the making. When the day comes to plunge into the breadwinning arena he will at least have some notion what he can and wants to do. And if he has developed a real passion for doing some one thing, look out! He may become—at least in miniature—a Harmsworth or a Timothy Eaton, an Edison or a Henry Ford.

A LASTING LESSON TO MARRIED FOLKS IN THE FORM OF "WHEN HUSBAND'S TRADEMARK."

The large audience at Griffin's last night, learned in a most forceful manner just what constitutes the solution of that most enigmatic phrase, "How Husband's Trademark," this being the title of Gloria Swanson's latest Paramount picture.

The trademark in this case, is a gorgeously-dressed wife. The husband is not wealthy, but wishes to attain wealth by making a show of wealth. However, a mutual friend of both husband and wife, returns after gaining wealth and fame, and in a very short while, the end the husband, to promote selfish, financial ends rather encouraging the extravagance. This situation culminates in a very powerful climax in Mexico which to reveal further here would tend to spoil the spectators enjoyment of the picture.

Stuart Holmes plays the husband with all his old-time brilliancy, and with fine finesse. Richard Wayne is leading man in the role of the friend and the other characters are well portrayed by Lucien Littlefield, Clarence Burton, Charles Ogle and Edythe Chapman.

Baby Peggy, the famous child screen star appears in a short comedy program in a humorous comedy offering "Little Miss Mischief," "From Colds to Cash" a very interesting educational subject, and a new chapter of the adventure play "With Stanley in Africa" were also exhibited during the evening.

GREYBIRDS HERE ON SATURDAY

First Saturday Game at Home in Second Half at 3 p.m.

Belleville Grays Trunks have set their minds upon a certain goal, and, up to the present they are doing famously in their honest endeavor to reach said goal. Their ambition is to win the game against the Lindsay Greybirds here on Saturday afternoon (To-morrow), and the game against the Peterboro squad here on Wednesday next. Of course the Cobourg squad were included, but after Wednesday's battle, that aggregation should feel honored if they qualified to carry the water to the Trunks.

Belleville team did have a streak of hard luck, and also did not play as snappy a game of ball in the first half as they might, but those days are history now, and there is no time like the present. The Trunks ARE certainly without a shadow of doubt turning in gilt edged games since the fatal trip to Lindsay on August 2nd. There is not a baseball team in the Central Ontario League could have beaten Belleville, on Wednesday, and if anyone is skeptical, we refer them to Cobourg.

The fielders are Pep personified and every man on the team is hitting the ball hard and safely.

Lindsay Greybirds are here on Saturday afternoon, (To-morrow) at 3 p.m.; and we simply have to take a fall out of this formidable team. If the team works like they did on the holiday, then there is not the slightest doubt of the outcome, because they will be unbeatable. On the other hand, Lindsay have a snappy squad, with a strong pitching staff, and much training, and they are always prepared to give a hard battle away from home.

Wednesday's gate was the record breaker of this season. Now Saturday is generally a half holiday, and a bumper crowd is requested and expected. The team had tough luck financially and otherwise in the first half, and now that they are fighting from the bottom to the top of the league, every patriotic Belleville should be "Johnny on the spot" for the big game Saturday afternoon.

CUBAN BOXING RULES SHOW NEW FEATURES

Havana, Cuba, Aug. 18.—Identification cards, embellished with all the war-time passport trimmings, for promoters down to lowly towel swingers constitute one of the features of the new regulations under which the National Boxing Commission will govern the ankly-ed fisticuffs in Cuba. There is little left to the imagination in the 32 sections of these regulations, just approved by the secretary of government, even the fee to be paid to the timekeeper announcer being fixed: $15 for each performance. The government, however, has not insisted with the prudence of the mitt slingers in the ring, that being left to the Marquis of Queensberry, as translated by a competent authority.

Interesting features of the regulations include bonds which must be deposited with the boxing commissioner, from which fines imposed by said commission will be deducted. Promoters must put up $5,000, referees $500, managers $300, timekeepers and announcers $100. Fighters are seconds are exempt.

To secure an identification card, however, which means recognition in the boxing commission, the scale of fees runs from $500 for Havana promoters and $100 for those outside the capital, to $5 for seconds. Managers must pay $10 for each boxer in their stable, and the fighters themselves $10 for cards. These cards are arranged as to permit the filing of a great deal of personal information concerning the bearer, even down to his finger prints.

Still other provisions of the regulations prohibit betting in the place where fights are staged; appearance in the ring of pugilists less than 18 years old, staging of return fights within a period of less than 60 days, and more than one fight per week for any industrious leather pusher.

Promulgation of these regulations was made necessary by the extraordinary spread of boxing in Cuba during the last year. Creation of the National Boxing Commission, headed by Senator Rosendo Collazo, was the first step taken to regulate the sport. The commission, however, found itself handicapped in its attempt to protect the public from unscrupulous promoters and managers and appealed for more authority, which was given it by the secretary of government. The commission now is arranging to ally itself with similar bodies in the United States.

Lawyers in Council Say System of Making Judges as Reward for Political

Vancouver, B. HERE'S A NICE LITTLE HOME

Two Spinsters Have a Taste for Cats and Dogs, Dead and Alive—Weird Discovery by Firemen

(By Canadian Press)

Milwaukee, Aug. 18.—In a home crowded with living dogs and cats and with the skeletons of dead pets, amid the odor of decaying flesh and the dust and cobwebs of a neglected house, Jane and Margaret Mellen have been living with their brother for fourteen years.

With the shades drawn, the two spinsters, fifty and fortyfive years old, seemingly devoted their lives to the living and dead animals. And most of this care seems to have been given the dead.

In the basement and on the ground floor the bodies and bones of a score of dead pets were laid out carefully in their coffins, while the living beasts were gaunt and emaciated, whining as they slunk into corners and cages and obviously starving.

The existence of this weird house was discovered by firemen responding to the call of a passerby who saw smoke coming from the basement window of the Mellen home. The younger Miss Mellen attempted to bar the door and vehemently refused firemen permission to enter.

With the smoke still issuing, however, they broke in the door, brushed the woman aside and extinguished the blaze, believed due to spontaneous combustion in a can of phosphorous.

Then the fire fighters had time to look around. Dogs seemed everywhere. Their cages and kennels were abundant. They shrank from the newcomers fearfully.

The dead animals were scattered about the rooms on the lower floors, all laid out with the greatest care. One in the parlor was typical of the rest. Here, flanked on either side by another body, the stiff body of a shaggy dog was lying in a small coffin such as is used for babies. The grinning head rested on a dainty pillow, ivy coverings draped the sides of the casket and body.

On the walls hung oil paintings covered with the dust and mold of years. The once luxurious furniture was dirty and shabby. The rooms were in perpetual dust, the blinds closely drawn. The closed windows accentuated the heavy, nauseating smell of decomposing flesh.

For years the Mellen sisters have been considered "queer" by their neighbors. But they were never annoying, and were left strictly alone. Despite the number of dogs and cats in the house, no one ever complained of noise.

Police summoned by the firemen removed the sisters to the Emergency Hospital for observation. Dr. Harry Bradley, who examined them, surprisedly pronounced them normal, "in fact unusually intelligent."

POISON GOT MIXED WITH PEPPERMINTS

Round Lake Man Eats Candies on Way Home and Puts His Hand in the Wrong Package

Havelock, Aug. 17.—Mr. David Seabrooke, of Round Lake, is ill in bed and in critical condition as a result of eating poison in mistake for candy.

It appears that while in town here on Saturday evening with his wife doing their usual Saturday shopping, Seabrooke purchased some stuff at the drug store, with which to spray his cattle, and which was of a poisonous nature. He also purchased a supply of peppermint candies, and putting both packages in the same pocket, he ate of the candy on the way home. Subsequent investigation, however, disclosed that the package containing the poison was torn, and its contents in some way had become mixed with the peppermints of which Seabrooke had been partaking.

On reaching his home, he became violently ill, and medical advice was at once sought. The doctor pronounced the case to be one of poisoning, and for some time Seabrooke's death was feared.

The last report says that Seabrooke is improving.

He is in a bad condition, as his throat, mouth, and stomach are all seriously burned from the poison that he cannot swallow.

Mr. Seabrooke is married, about 40 years of age, and has a family of six, four girls and two boys.

WORLD'S CRADLE WAS IN ASIA

Theory That Asia Was the "Mother of Continents"

(By The Associated Press.)

New York, Aug. 18.—Proof of the paleontological yet theory that Asia was the "mother of continents" and the cradle of life on this globe—carrying with it great promise of the discovery in the wastes of the Gobi desert of the long-sought "missing link" in the evolution of mankind—has been found by the Third Asiatic Expedition led by Roy Chapman Andrews for the American Museum of Natural History, Henry Fairfield Osborn, the Museum's director, announced today.

The "proof," to the uninitiate, would appear to be just a heap of fossilized bones, dug up by a band of curious men in the frozen wastelands of Mongolia. But to the geologist trained in prying back through hundreds of thousands of years for history of the days when man was not, these fossilized remains of dinosaurs and other prehistoric beasts and reptiles furnish a conclusion simple and inevitable as "two times two."

WHO POISONED FOX PUPPIES?

Enquiry Into Poisoning of Young Foxes on Ranch At Kingston

Kingston, August 17.—After being in session all Wednesday afternoon the inquest into the poisoning of twenty fox puppies on the Catarqui Silver Fox Farm last May was adjourned by Inspector Rogers till August 25th without fixing the blame on any person.

An important development during the afternoon concerned the finding of a partly used bottle and a tin of "Common Sense" rat poison, containing phosphorus, the latter being the one tested by Dr. Nevin Yeager day morning, in the kitchen of the home of Mrs. Aylesworth, Sr., with whom Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Aylesworth, and Mr. and Mrs. Norman Eastman, the latter a daughter of Mrs. Aylesworth, lived. They were found by Inspector Hammond, the detective working on the case, who had searched the kitchen two days before in vain. In the meantime t he women members of the family had been warned.

Wilfred Aylesworth.

Wilfred Aylesworth, a member of the Catarqui Fox firm, described the formation of the syndicate, the purchase of 8 foxes at $1,200 a pair, the building of the kennels and the management of the farm. Charles Randall, who was a member of the syndicate looked after the foxes.

Six hundred yards from the kennels was his mother's, Mrs. Aylesworth's house, where lived Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Aylesworth and Norman Eastman and his wife, who was Mrs. Aylesworth's daughter. The witness lived about 300 yards up the road.

Twenty Puppies Dead.

He then described the loss of the pups. Twenty of the 21 pups had died, all of which he believed were poisoned, though only 3 of the five batch had been examined at Queen's. The first five died on Sunday, May 22nd. When another died the following Saturday the pens were cleaned out, but on the next Tuesday and day and six of seven of the youngest pups during the next week. Six others were removed to another pen in the hope that there would be no poison there, but all died except one. The mothers were fed porridge and meat before the pups came but no meat afterwards, their diet consisting of oat meal, milk and porridge. He did not think the old foxes would touch poisoned meat. The youngest pups were still suckling their mothers and were too young to eat other food, but nevertheless six of seven of them died.

Cured Put On.

For two weeks after May 23rd a guard of two men had been put on the pen, but without results.

Asked by Hr. Whiting if one pup from No. 7 pen had not been found in No. 9 pen, witness said he had been told so. A watch had been kept as usual the night before.

Mr. Aylesworth had no reason to suspect any particular person. Asked if Mr. Randall had accused anyone, witness said he blamed Norman Eastman. He had spoken to witness about finding Eastman around the pens and asked witness to tell him to keep away.

Inspector Hammond.

Inspector Hammond, the last witness, first told of examining two dead puppies not taken to Queen's. The lining of their organs were covered with brown patches as if burned by an irritant. There were oat grains in one.

Ottawa said it was worms, added Mr. Randall, regarding the dead foxes which had been sent there for analysis.

The enquiry was adjourned until the 25th inst.

MILLION AND HALF TONS OF COAL SHORT

in the States, in Nova Scotia and in the west. "But," he added, "we are a hopeful people."

Mr. Meighen averred that from investigation of all facts there is a real crisis, the responsibility for meeting which should not be placed entirely on the shoulders of the coal dealers. He said several American authorities state the anthracite aborsize will be fully to the extent of 50 per cent.

"But," he added, "if we have a mild winter, American producers will overcome the shortage, although this is too cold a country to take chances."

Canada's anthracite shortage today is one and one-half million tons. There is also a 50 per cent bituminous shortage. The coal strike makes supplies from the States doubtful, so the only thing to do is to look for reserves of supplies from wherever possible. If that is done we will get through the winter all right, but it will not be as pleasant as in former years.

LOCAL MAN BADLY INJURED

Abraham Safe, Junk Dealer Injured in Locks at Healey Falls

Abraham Safe, junk dealer, Station street, was seriously injured at Healey Falls on Wednesday last, while collecting the junk of the old power house there, which he has purchased.

After his day's work he went down to the locks to wash his hands, reaching down from the dock gates which were slightly opened. While engaged in this position, it is believed that an approaching boat caused sufficient swell in the canal to close the gates, and they closed on Safe, squeezing him badly and injuring him internally.

The unfortunate man was carried into the lock master's office, and Lockmaster Merrett did all he could for him as he was suffering from internal injuries. He was kept there for some hours and then the police ambulance of this city was summoned.

Chief Kidd and Sergeant Boyd left last evening at 6 o'clock for Healey Falls with the ambulance, and returned to Belleville, bringing along Safe, who was taken to his home. It is forty miles to Healey Falls from this city.

No bones are broken but he is injured internally.

THE SILVER YATAGHAN

By LILY WARDELL

Alcina thoughtfully cheered the end of her pencil into Mrs. Haverson's grey therapy. She sat off in a corner with her typewriter and letters, but she was not at all busy at work. Dorothy was a holiday and in the evening there was to be a fancy dress ball. Phil, her brother, in a rare burst of brotherly interest had promised to take her to the festivity. "You're going to be a regular little mouse and I'm going to take you out among people," he had said patronizingly. "Now, don't worry and be bashful; I'll scare 'em, so few fellows to dance with you, but, of course you can't expect to be the belle of the evening and all that sort of thing. Get yourself a costume —something that suits you; be a Quakeress or a schoolmarm."

She had nodded and thanked him, but he inwardly resolved to throw all her little mousie cloak and be somebody else for one evening. "I'm sick and tired of being the sedate private secretary; I'm just as feminine as any other girl if I'd have half a chance. And I'm going to have it, too. A masquerade ball is just the thing!". And then and there she decided to go as a Turkish woman.

At home in a locked bureau drawer lay the costume quite handy—pale pink silk trousers, crimson bolero jacket and white bellette chemise, red turban and beading, flimsy veil, even trimmed up Turkish slippers and a wonderful little yataghan pistol with a pearl handle and silver scabbard. Why should she not look like a Turkish woman, but she wanted to be a vamp! Something that was bedecked, a little touch—she did not know what. So she continued to idle with her typewriting pencil and stare with wrinkled forehead at the high Victorian mantelpiece and the mirrors that decorated the somber walls. Right above the little typewriter table hung a most queer looking thing, a dagger or knife, thought Alcina idly. Very black and ferocious as to odd handle, too, the usual crossbar missing and the blade more than a foot long, fluted in a graceful double curve. On the handle were inlaid some queer Oriental characters—she rose to see it better—why —that must be a Turkish inscription. Why not have that for her costume? A Turkish yataghan! Suppose it were polished and a new scabbard, or a new sash; then she would look like a vamp—a real Turkish vamp!

She was in touch that time! That her costume needed. The only trouble was: Would Mrs. Haverson lend her for the ball? She doubted it, for the old lady had recently retired to bed her back from the well-stocked library. There was another way. Mrs. Haverson never remarked the gloomy room. Alcina always went to her employer's parlor or sleeping room for dictation or instructions. If she took the yataghan home with her tonight and returned it the day after tomorrow no one would know the difference.

When five o'clock came, Alcina, a bit conscience stricken, took down the dagger, and wrapping it quickly in a piece of newspaper, stuck it in her muff, and without looking right or left hurried from the house.

At home, in the privacy of her room, she rubbed and polished it, and behold, the black metal was a real beautiful, gleaming silver came to view! Her queerly shaped knife dagger as she now herself to her pretty Turkish suit with a silver yataghan stuck in her sash. It was bound to attract the attention of everybody.

When they left the dance a long cloak covered her up completely so that not even Phil had an inkling of her costume. He was not even curious, for he thought he would know her in any kind of dress.

She lingered in the dressing room, and then conscious that she looked very pretty and attractive, took the plunge into the ballroom just in time to see Phil benevolently take the hand of a demure little shepherdess from Arcadia and partner off with her under the impression he was doing his duty to Alcina.

Alcina was surrounded at once. Everybody was sure they knew her. Knights and clowns, sailors and Roman soldiers, all were highly interested in the Turkish vamp with the glittering silver yataghan. Alcina had not known that any one could have such a glorious time. By and by she realized that she had fanned those items in succession with a certain fascinating tovedear, and decided it was time to change, but he couldn't find her to tell her a dance. Laughing they found a little nook for a tete-a-tete.

"That silver yataghan, it attracted me at once when I entered the room. I know no one on earth did you find anything so wonderful?" he asked.

Alcina flushed under her veil at how for an answer, when a rather heavy fingered gentleman had pulled her off for a fox trot. She gave a little sigh of relief; the invasion was over, but the questioning about the yataghan was embarrassing. She bestowed the delight she was to next twelve, almost time to unmask. She rattle tongue to see the Spaniard's face. And then the joy of Phil's amazement when he saw who the Turkish vamp was!

The fox trot over, Alcina put her hand to her mask—it felt a trifle loose. The yataghan must have slipped a little—how was it? It was gone—she had lost it!! Then began a frantic search, but it was not to be found. Disconsolate she gave up, regretful of the chances, and then, in a last resort, began to do dreadful room to asked the maid. No one had seen the yataghan. It had vanished, it seemed. Years or bright hours to Alcina's dark eyes; she sank to a chair in the cloakroom, absolutely, utterly unhappy. The evening was over for her. She could not return to the festivities. In a moment or two, enveloped in her long cloak, she was speeding home in a taxi alone, sad and full of the wonderful evening.

At breakfast Phil was not even concerned about how she had reached home alone. He was under the impression that she had been the shepherdess and somebody had informed him that she had left with an escort. Alcina did not explain, she was miserable, and there was nothing except how she would explain the loss of the yataghan to Mrs. Mawson.

A very pale, quiet social secretary crept into the great gloomy library for work that morning. She raised two worried eyes to the busy spot where the yataghan had hung—but —was she dreaming—she rubbed her eyes, for there in the exact place hung the Turkish dagger, polished like new, Alcina drew back, actually frightened, then hesitated to touch it to see if it was real and not an optical illusion. Yes, it was the silver yataghan, there was no possible mistake.

"I don't understand it," she said aloud; "it's the most remarkable thing that ever happened."

Not really so very remarkable, considering that I put it there," said a voice strangely familiar. Alcina swung around to see a tall young man quite unknown to her.

"Don't you remember your devoted toreador?" he questioned, coming nearer.

Alcina gasped. "How on earth did you get here and how do you know of your yataghan?"

"I think I would recognize the dark eyes of my Turkish vamp anywhere, but seriously I owe you an apology. I was rather rude last night—you see, it happened to be my yataghan. I recognized it immediately. But I was mad at him for that it would make you leave I arrived and how to get to the ballroom. When I could not find you anywhere, then I left.

Alcina, overcome by breath recovering fast, answered, very disturbed, "Why, you are Mrs. Mawson's youngest son!"

He nodded. "I am very much afraid of myself for causing you an anxious moment over that old knife, and trying to cheat further further. When I came home night before last I found it on the floor in the library, and lo and behold a very charming young woman was taking down my yataghan yataghan and parting it in her muff. I wondered what you intended to do to a fancy dress ball. Then and there I decided that I was going to the ball, too, but it was not the silver yataghan that I intended to wear. Please forgive me, and let's be friends!" He held out both hands beseechingly, and before Alcina knew what was happening she had laid her hands in his! It was a silent but very promise of future partnership in the silver yataghan!

Union Will Allow Mine Officials To Save Mines

Fifth Day of Coal Strike in Nova Scotia Sees Mines Flooding and Some May Never be Opened Again—Union Leaders Agree to Let Mine Officials to do Work of Protection but Will Not Allow Any Coal to be Mined

MUST NOT CALL IN THE POLICE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Sydney, N.S., Aug. 19.—The end of the fourth day of the Nova Scotia coal mine strike saw the collieries in Southern Cape Breton County being invaded more and more by water and gas. Company officials reported grave damage and stated that some of the mines worked out colliories would never be opened again. The Nova Scotia government, according to Hon. E. H. Armstrong, Minister of Mines, will man pumps under the protection of special provincial police.

Springhill, N.S., Aug. 19.—At the conference yesterday between the United Mine Workers and the Dominion Coal Company it was agreed that company officials and staff be allowed the required mine protection work, the miners' committee to have access to mines at all times, the company to make no request for military or other outside protection, no coal to be mined and thirty days' notice given of intention to terminate this agreement.

TROOPING THE COLORS

Picturesque ceremony of trooping the colors of the Horse Guards, is still observed.

NEED SIGNED ORDER TO OBTAIN U.S. COAL

Provincial Government Will Take up Question of Reduction of Transportation Rates

Toronto, Aug. 19.—Coal can only be brought into Ontario from the United States on a signed order from the fuel controller and then only fuel that is absolutely necessary for immediate consumption. None can be obtained at present for storage purposes or household use, but only for use in hospitals and other similar public institutions and for manufacturers who have quantities of perishable goods on hand. Mr. J. A. Ellis made this quite plain when discussing the statements of W. C. Cox, president of the local wholesalers, who said that there was any amount of American bituminous coal available. Mr. Ellis stated that he had been informed from Washington that any misuse of fuel orders might result in a cutting off of the supply from across the border.

Information which he had at hand seemed to prove conclusively that Mr. Cox's statements were wrong. There might be small leakages of a car or so, but it seemed improbable that any dealer could provide 100 cars on short notice.

Mr. Ellis is going to Ottawa to-night to confer with the federal committee and it is expected that a joint statement will be issued within a few days.

It is understood that the provincial government will be asked to take up with Ottawa the question of a reduction on freight rates for wood fuel and the matter of duty on Welsh coal coming in

Law Must Govern And Strikes Cease Says Pres. Harding

The War to Crush Labor Unionism Must Come to an End —Proposals to Maintain Transportation and Rights of Men to Work

COAL STOCK NEAR EXHAUSTION

Washington, Aug. 19.—Pledging himself to "use all the power of the government to maintain transportation and sustain the right of men to work," President Harding yesterday in an address to a joint session of congress submitted a specific program of immediate legislation to help deal with the strike situation.

As to coal, Mr. Harding, after warning that fuel stocks are near exhaustion, asked:

Authority to create a commission, empowered to investigate the coal industry, obtain all facts concerning the production and distribution of fuel, in the hope of securing permanent peace in the industry.

Government by Law

Government "by law must and will be sustained," the President said, "no matter what clouds may gather, no matter what storms may ensue; no matter what hardships may attend or what sacrifice may be necessary."

The President also deplored what he termed "warfare on the unions of labor."

The President declared a national investigation for constructive reconsideration as to the conduct of the coal industry to be imperative, and recommended a Government commission to advise as to fair wages and conditions.

National Coal Agency

Immediate legislation to establish temporarily a "national coal agency" itself necessary capital to purchase, sell and distribute coal also was urged by Mr. Harding.

State of Lawlessness

Asserting that the striking unions in some instances had not held their forces to law abeyance, Mr. Harding said: "There is a state of lawlessness shocking to every conception of American law and order," and announced his intention to invoke laws, civil and criminal, forbidding conspiracies hindering interstate commerce and requiring safety in railway service.

Stating that sympathetic railroad strikes had developed and impaired interstate commerce seriously, the President said that trains deserted in the western desert had "revealed the fire-cruelty and contempt for life on the part of some railway employes who have conspired to paralyze transportation."

In declaring positively for the right of men to work, the President said that in both the coal and railstrikes this right had been "denied by assault and violence," and in some case winked at by local authorities. He added: "It is fair to say that the great mass of organized workmen do not approve, but they seem helpless to hinder. These conditions cannot remain in free America."

We have no word correspondingly to "laden," as a laden horse, which will describe a horse so "dressed" a load. Language seems to have been petrified before the wheel was devised.

TOY BALLOON BURSTS, CHILD BADLY BURNT

Toronto, August 19.—Vera Schildroth, ten years of age, lies at her home, 27 Teeler ave., with a very badly burned face, the result of an explosion of a toy balloon when a lighted match in the hands of a playmate came in contact with it.

The little Schildroth girl screamed as the flash covered her face and her hands, eyes and hair as well as her face were badly scorched. A physician had to treat the swollen burns.

The Compressed Gas and Supply Co. state that the balloons at Sunnyside are filled with pure hydrogen supplied by them.

SKIRTS THE STORM WITH AIRPLANE

Washington, Aug. 19.—Brigadier-General William Mitchell, assistant chief of the Army Air Service, who has returned to Washington from an inspection trip via airplane covering approximately three thousand miles, while flying from Chicago to Selfridge Field, Mount Clemens, Michigan, encountered the worst thunderstorm he has ever seen.

In order to get around the storm General Mitchell flew for fifty miles along its edge, hitting in from time to time to see whether he could negotiate it with his plane. Having managed to get around the storm and finding himself far off his course by reason of the aerial detour, he turned and came back toward Lake Michigan at an altitude of 10,000 feet. The general flew for 35 miles straight across Lake Michigan at this high altitude.

FORTUNE TELLER TAKES MONEY

A Trenton Man Loses $50 But Recovers Same After Arrest of His Victimizer

Richard Westlake, of Trenton, went to a fortune teller who goes by the name of Annie Stokes to have his fortune told and also to have his money blessed by her. Westlake produced his money which the woman proceeded to bless it. She then folded it up, and put it in Westlake's purse. Westlake opened his purse and counted his roll before leaving, finding about $50 short. He promptly had Annie arrested and in the Police Court she was fined $25 and costs for telling fortunes, and $25 and costs for stealing money, and ordered to leave town, besides having to make restitution. On account of her youth the case was held, "in camera", and she was let off without a jail sentence. Crown Attorney Carney prosecuted, H. J. Smith for defendant.

SUCCESSFUL YEAR FOR HYDRO

Operation for 1921 Most Successful in History — Adam Says

Toronto, Aug. 19.—In presenting the 1921 annual report of the Hydro-electric Power Commission of Ontario, Sir Adam Beck states, in a preface: "Despite the continued commercial depression which prevailed throughout the year and the continued high cost of material and labor the commission is again able to state that this year's operation is the most successful in its history. This is especially true of the Wasdell system, the Ahuntsic system and the Niagara system."

Exhaustive Report

The report itself, which is a mass of statistics and Hydro information, deals exhaustively with each unit in the widespread Hydro system. It clearly states its financial position. Throughout the voluminous book are interesting photographic portrayals of plant operation and equipment, laboratory work and Hydro engineering devices.

Remarkable Growth

An interesting comparative table in the consolidated operating report shows the remarkable growth of the Hydro municipalities since the year 1912. The number of municipalities has just jumped from 45 to 215 and their total assets from 19 to 40 millions, while in the same period total liabilities jumped from 10 to only 25 millions. Reserves have increased from $478,000 to $6,292,197. Total surplus has increased from $761,000 to $8,585,613, and the percentage of net debt to total assets has decreased from 88 per cent. to 63.3 per cent.

RAILWAY RUNS ON BALL-BEARINGS NEW CAR NEEDS LITTLE POWER

London, Aug. 18.—A railroad car so easily moved that its brakes must be kept applied lest the wind start it off is to be tried out on the Great Eastern Railway.

It has six wheels fitted with a new ball-bearing device, and it is to have tests for some months on a branch line. Railroad engineers have no doubt of the saving in power it will effect if it passes its trials, but they are not certain it can stand the wear and tear of actual use. It can stand up, its inventors claim.

It is constructed of steel specially hardened by a method discovered in the war, which will be able to meet the strain of regular railroad service.

ENVER PASHA SLAIN IN FIGHT

Former Turkish Minister of War Killed in Battle With Red Troops

Moscow, Aug. 18.—Enver Pasha met his death in a desperate battle against rebels in Southeastern Bokhara territory, between Khorkhiandan and Barljuan, on August 4.

The Turkish leader had been pressed eastward by Soviet troops during the past months, until he was virtually surrounded with a small body of rebels and seven or eight ashers. At the beginning of August, when Enver saw Red troops closing in on every side, he determined to attempt to break through. Reports stated that he divided his force into two sections, one of which appeared for a time to overcome the Russians opposed to it. Enver seized this advantage for a charge toward freedom. But the Russians rallied, and in a hand-to-hand combat Enver fell.

His body was identified after the fight by documents, seals, etc., beyond possibility of doubt. The majority of his partisans surrendered and the insurrectionary movement is now considered as an end.

MATRIMONIAL MIX-UP Local Trio Arrested and Man is Charged With Bigamy

David Frederick, Mrs. Frederick, South George street, and a young woman who has been residing at the Frederick home for some time, having come there from Harrowsmith, were all taken arrested on Friday by the city police and are now in the county jail here awaiting trial.

Frederick is charged with bigamy and the two women are charged with being prostitutes.

It is believed that a third woman, residing near Port Hope, is also involved in this intricate matrimonial puzzle, which may be solved on Monday morning next, when they appear in police court here for trial.

TORONTO GIRLS SELL TICKETS FOR RAFFLE

Police Interfere and "Hikers" Are Now Out on Bail Until Their Trial

Possibly never before has the popular summer pastime of "Hiking" come to the fore as it has this season, especially among the fair sex. It has been a common occurrence to see adventuresome maidens in the khaki outfit of the professional hiker this summer.

Lake most everything else, however, the Hiking game is being commercialized, so to speak, in a manner which occurred in this city on Friday.

Two fair maidens from Toronto the Good were hustled off by the police while busily engaged selling tickets for a raffle, the lucky ticket proving to be a ring in the shape of a lizzy. It thought that the girls had canvassed the factories and industrial places.

They were taken to the police station, but were allowed out on bail, pending their trial.

GASOLINE EXPLODES BURNING ELEVATOR

$25,000 Damage Done to U.F.O. Building at Leamington

Leamington, Ont., Aug. 18.—Fire which followed an explosion of gasoline totally destroyed the elevator of the United Farmers Co-operative Society here yesterday. Alfred Seekington, manager of the elevator, who was in the basement of the elevator when gasoline escaped from an engine exploded, was burned about the head and arms while fighting his way out of the building. Seventy-five hundred bushels of wheat and other grains were in the elevator awaiting shipment. One ton of sugar was also destroyed. The damage is estimated at $25,000.

Spoiled by heat and water from stil streams, the grain bulged out the concrete walls until they fell, showering debris and burning brands over other buildings. Damage to these was slight.

TWO RED CROSS WORKERS SHOT AT KILLARNEY

While Viewing Lake Scenery From Boat Were Fired at by Rebels and Killed

BUDGET OF NEWS

Activities in North and South Ireland—Catholic Weekly Banned in Belfast

(Canadian Press Despatches)

Dublin, Aug. 19.—Two Red Cross Workers attached to the National Army have been killed in Killarney district, according to a Tralee report. They were viewing the picturesque scenery from a small boat on Lough Leane, and were fired upon as they were disembarking on Innisfallen Island.

A motor car occupied by four National Army officers was fired upon in Aungier street last night and later subjected to bomb attack. The officers were not injured, but a pedestrian was killed.

Belfast, Aug. 19.—A spirited fight of four hours' duration occurred early to-day between National troops and Republican irregulars at Dungooley, on the South Armagh border. The Republicans finally fled across the border with the Free State in pursuit. No details of casualties were reported up to this afternoon.

Belfast, Aug. 19.—The Northern Government has prohibited the circulation of the Irish Catholic, a Dublin weekly, throughout Ulster for one month, as a result of attacks on the judiciary.

Dublin, Aug. 19.—The National forces are advancing on the irregulars from both north and south in County Cork and an official bulletin announces the capture of Macroom and the important centre in Western part of the county.

Belfast, Aug. 19.—The Curry Cane House in County Longford, Ireland, the birth place of the late Field Marshal Sir Henry Wilson was destroyed by fire of incendiary origin yesterday. The house lately has been the home of the Field Marshal's brother, James Mackay Wilson.

REBELS AND TROOPS IN SEVERE BATTLE AT BEGGAR'S BUSH

Dublin, Aug. 19.—An engagement lasting two hours occurred early today between National army troops and irregulars at the Beggars' Bush barracks, on the outskirts of Dublin.

The irregulars attacked from the roofs of houses from the railway line and other positions. The Free Staters replied from within the barracks, but beyond alarming the civilian inhabitants, nothing serious was reported. No details of casualties were available this afternoon.

Electricity is easily insulated because, as compared with brass, an electric charge is a mere trifle compared with a heat-content.

NOVA SCOTIA COAL COMING TO ONTARIO

Scheme to Place N.S. Coal on Ontario Market by British Capitalists

SHIP IT BY WATER

Will Exploit Fields at Present Undeveloped

Ottawa, Aug. 18.—To enlist support for a scheme to place Nova Scotia coal in the future on the market in Ontario, W. F. O'Connor, K. C., left here for Toronto. Mr. O'Connor represents British and other interests which propose to exploit coal fields at present undeveloped, in Inverness County, N. S., in the northwestern portion of Cape Breton Island, and to

Mr. O'Conner and his associates state that in this undeveloped field there are large quantities of highgrade coal, almost approaching anthracite in hardness.

Nova Scotia coal has never, up to the present time, been shipped to Ontario. The great corporations operating in the Cape Breton field have consumed a large portion of their coal output in their own iron and steel plants, have sold coal for consumption in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and have shipped varying quantities by sea to Quebec and Montreal. Nova Scotia coal shipped by rail has not hitherto been able to compete in Ontario with coal from the less distant fields in the United States. The interests represented by Mr. O'Connor believe in view of the increase in the cost of United States coal and in freight rates, that Nova Scotia coal transported by water could compete with the American product in Ontario.

They say that it should be mined at a moderate cost, comparatively, in the undeveloped field, shipped to Toronto in the season of inland navigation, and there stored for distribution. They believe that Nova Scotia coal might to some extent replace the high-priced anthracite from the Pennsylvania fields, and furnish a purely Canadian supply for industrial needs.

Mr. O'Connor said that two-thirds of the capital required for development of the project was already in sight in Great Britain. He was formerly Out of Living Commissioner for Canada and later a member of the now defunct Board of Commerce.

PROTESTANTS PLAN FOR PEACE

People in Nations Engaged on Both Sides of Great War Join Hands in Effort to Arouse Sentiment Against War

New York, Aug. 17.—A federation of Protestantism throughout the world for the preservation of peace was effected at Copenhagen, Denmark, at the conference of the World Alliance for International Friendship, it became known here today in a cablegram sent by Rev. Dr. H. A. Atkinson to the Church Peace Union, No. 70 Fifth Avenue. The conference, attended by the most eminent Protestant clergymen of all of the nations engaged on both sides of the Great War, closed August 12, after six days of meeting.

A proposal made jointly by the French and German delegates, was adopted "that the churches of the world should strive together for the attainment of universal peace, which cannot be successfully reached without both mental and spiritual disarmament."

Another, presented by the American delegation, and adopted by the conference, embodied a provision summoning the national councils of the World Alliance to arouse public sentiment wherever Christians foregathered in "favor of another and greater international conference (than the recent Washington Disarmament Conference) meeting in an atmosphere of Christian brotherhood, to cope with the grave problems now harassing the peace of mankind."

Probably one of the most direct acts of the conference was the appointment of an International Committee to "use the contents of school and other works of an educational character in order that "no racial or nationalistic prejudice, provocative of war, may be instilled in the consciousness of young people."

His Only Thought.

An old couple came in from the country wit a big basket of lunch to see the circus. The lunch was heavy. The old wife was carrying it. As they crossed a crowded street the husband held out his hand and said, "Gimme that basket, Hannah." The poor old woman surrendered the basket with a grateful look. "That's real kind o' ye, Joshua," she, quavered. "Kindi" grented the old man. "I was plagued, yu'd get lost."

CARELESS HUSBAND HANDS WIFE'S JEWELS OVER TO THE POLICE

Toronto, Aug. 18.—A special to the Globe from Bradley Beach, N. J., says Robert Herman a wealthy cotton planter of Greenwood, Miss., admits he never cared for jewelry, and so paid little attention to his wife's gems.

The phantasm owner and Mrs. Herman are sojourning here and Herman yesterday, without asking, borrowed his wife's bathing robe to wear down to the beach. He tossed the garment on the sand while he had his dip in the surf, and, when he finished his swim, shook the garment to rid it of sand.

As he donned the robe again to return to his hotel he noticed a chamois bag on the sand. He picked it up and discovered it contained jewels. He turned the bag over to the police before the jewels were appraised at $8,000.

At luncheon he casually mentioned his "find" to his wife. She fainted. When she was revived she convinced him that the jewels were her own, which he had given her at one time or another in years gone by and had forgotten.

MAN JUMPED TO AVOID ROBBERS

Victor Coddington 'Rolled' For $40 in St. Felix St. House, He Says

Montreal, Aug. 18.—Victor Coddington, of Graniteville, who is at the Royal Victoria Hospital with a broken ankle, and who claims that he was compelled to jump from the third storey window of a house at 88 St. Felix street Tuesday afternoon is still under treatment for injuries. He has a broken ankle and internal injuries due to his drop to the sidewalk.

Coddington has told the police a story which the detectives are investigating.He claims that a man and a woman got next to his wad and "rolled" him for $40. He was being pursued by the couple in a further attempt to rob him, and claims that in order to avoid them he had to get out of the house by the window on the third flat.

Detectives on the case expect to make an arrest in a few days, claiming to know who committed the alleged robbery and where the suspects are now in hiding.

CHASING SKEETERS RAISES ALARM

Hamilton, Aug. 17.—John Saley, 262 Beach Road, has discovered a new way of ridding his house of mosquitoes. Last night John placed a tub in the front room of his home and filled it up with old rags. He then lighted the rags and let them smoulder in order to chase the skeeters from the house. The smoke pouring from the windows and doors of the house, however, caused neighbors to believe that the place was on fire and an alarm was turned into the fire department. John readily explained to the fire chief the reason for all the smoke and was left undisturbed.

NORTHCLIFFE WAS HENRY FORD OF BRITISH ISLES.

(Toronto Telegram.)

A happier, braver and more useful life would have crowned and benefitted the days of Lord Northcliffe, philosopher if Northcliffe had proved himself content to work inside the limits of his own special genius.

Friends of Lo I Northcliffe in newspaper production was akin to the genius of Henry Ford in automobile production. All the workers employed on Northcliffe newspapers were blessed with higher wages and better working conditions than were ever previously known in the newspaper industry. Workers employed in Ford motor plant were paid higher wages than were ever before paid to labor in any form of industry.

Northcliffe showed that high wages and good working conditions did not impair the profits of the newspaper business. Henry Ford showed that Ford wages and Ford conditions increased the profits of the automobile business.

The further Lord Northcliffe travelled away from the newspaper centres of his genius the more Lord Northcliffe diminished his own special merits and removed the foundations from underneath his own fame. Henry Ford was and is a big man so long as Mr. Ford stuck close to his automobile works. But Mr. Ford shrank visibly in the estimate of his partners when beyond the range of his own great industrial genius.

Mr. Ford was no match for Henry Ford. When Mr. Ford failed to get the boys out of the trenches before Christmas, 1916, Mr. Ford returned to his life work of getting motor cars out of his shops before next spring.

Mr. Fred Muscloe of Montague pulled a stalk of clover from a field on his farm lot 22, con. 2, which measured 5 ft. 10 inches in length. The clover is of the late Mammouth variety and is to show that with proper cultivation of the land and a favorable season, there is no reason why there should be a feed famine in the north year after year.

CHURCH UNION QUESTION UP

Interesting Features of the Methodist General Conference in September

Toronto, Ont., Aug. 19.—A strongly interesting feature of the Church Union question which will probably be discussed during the sessions of the Methodist Conference in Toronto in September is the fact that already the children and young people of both Methodist and Presbyterian churches are reading the same religious periodicals. For the past three or four years there has been an effort in the publishing departments of both churches toward co-operation with the result that at present, out of some twenty-five periodicals supplied for Methodist and Presbyterian Sunday Schools, twenty are published cooperatively, and are, with one or two exceptions, identical in contents for both denominations. The editorial work on these periodicals is supervised by a joint committee of editors, but in actuality the matter for any one paper is provided altogether by one editor, the work, naturally, being evenly divided as to the several papers.

This means it will be appreciated, that from Sunday to Sunday, the same periodicals, three being illustrated papers of the magazine type, are going into Methodist, Presbyterian and some Congregational Sunday Schools in every section of Canada.

Incidentally the circulation of some of those papers for Canada alone is surprising. It ranks above most of the Canadian magazines, and with one or two exceptions, any metropolitan daily. Onward, for instance, the Methodist paper for young people, circulates 130,000 co-operatively, has a circulation of 50,0000 and Kings Own, the corresponding paper for boys, has 76,000. Playmate, the children's paper, goes to 63,000 weekly, and Jewels, for little tots in the Sunday Schools, is handed out to at least 85,000 little kiddies every Sunday. Those papers, as well as being highly moral in tone, are also thoroughly Canadian, representing Canada's history and resources in a most appealing way, as is appreciated by the circulations.

Ordinarily the increase of space utilized for offices and general business may be taken an an index of the growth of any institution. Many years ago, when the then extensive building was erected at the corner of Queen and John streets, Toronto, by the publishing department of the Methodist Church, there was question in the minds of many of the church leaders as to whether the whole building would be ever utilized for the work of the church. It may not be generally known that while the major part of the building known familiarly as the "Methodist Book Room" is occupied by the offices and printing plant of the publishing department it also houses the general offices of the other church departments. Since the building was first occupied there have been several tenants ousted in commercial business but within the last week the last of these moved their offices elsewhere so that the building is now "Methodist" in toto. Aside from any difficulty in occupying the building there has been at a premium for two years or more and serious consideration has been given to the suggestion of adding a sixth story, as was provided for originally.

A feature of the visit of many of the delegates to the General Conference will be a tour of the Book Room Bldg. where not only will the publishing activities of the church be in evidence butwhere other church offices may be most conveniently inspected.

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

WITH HIS OVERALLS ON.

The dancen"s a pillar—the country is blest
With men such as he—he'll be missed when he's gone—
On Sundays he's dressed in a suit of the best,
But the Lord likes him most with his overalls on.

On Sundays he's different. I can't find a word,
T express the big change that comes over John,
He talks through his nose which is very absurd,
He doesn't do that with his overalls on.

When he speaks out in church I feel it again,
His voice is a whine and his features are drawn,
He talks as if somewhere a sufferer a pain,
He don't act like that with his overalls on.

On week days he's hearty and cheery and blythe,
He's happy and gay and up with the dawn,
As-sayin' a grace or swingin' a scythe,
Big John's at his best with his overalls on.

For once on a time he was reckless and bad,
The Lord in His mercy released him from paws,
Is that anercuse for to frown and be sad
And stern—when he aint got his overalls on?

On week days his bosom's overflowin' with glee,
But dressed in his church clothes the smiles are all gone;
Though he's good all the time I've got an idea—
The Lord loves him best with his overalls on!

SAFETY FIRST.

"Safety first" is a good maxim in most things, but particularly so in relation to the investment of money. The rich may afford to speculate and to take the risks attendant on high rates of interest. Those whose means are moderate must be careful to see that there is absolute security in their investments. For such people there is no other form of investment which takes such a high rank, combining security with liberal interest, as the bonds of the Dominion of Canada. Holders of Dominion bonds bearing five and a-half per cent. maturing December 1, 1922, can re-invest their money at the same rate of interest by exchanging the old bonds for new ones running for either five years or ten years, as the bondholder may prefer. Arrangements for carrying out this exchange can be made through all the chartered banks.

MR. KING, THE PEACEMAKER

Mr. Mackenzie King recently took a trip to Washington to discuss the abstract question of battleship and guns on the Great Lakes, and The Globe at the time announced that the premier had saved the Dominion from the horrors of war for the next thousand years—or less. That was a promising move on the part of our Mr. King to get the United States Government to renew a treaty to keep the battleships of the lakes, especially following the scrapping of the Canadian Navy.

Under the Government of Mr. King there would be no Canadian battleships or guns to put on the lakes, and it was a case rare on the part of the Premier to ensure that no American war-craft would ever endanger the independence of a defenceless country. It was like making a compact with a well-armed enemy never to shoot him when you have nothing to shoot him with. The treaty was not a new one. It was made originally by men who believed in adequate naval protection and had confidence in the British navy. Mr. King is ready to accept protection for Canada's shores from Britain at the expense of British taxpayers, and so far as the inland waters are concerned he would have an equally cheap defence.

Canadians are not such a race of cowards or weaklings as Mr. King would have them appear to be. While other nations are paying for self-defence the people of this Dominion are told that they do not need to protect themselves, as they are quite immune from invasion—why?

Canada is immune from invasion today only because of the existence of the British Navy, toward which she does not pay one cent. And she is safe on the Great Lakes because of the existence of the British Navy. The United States would not, here bothered to sign a treaty to keep Canadian battleships off the lakes, for she knows that there are no such battleships.

A CORRECTION

Our office bard, like most great poets, is a very sensitive soul, and he was deeply grieved at a printer's error that appeared in one of the lines of his poem on The Ponton Poplars yesterday. He was particularly proud of having coined a new word and a new rhyme to the word "poplars," namely "topplers". This was a very great feat in itself, apart from the production of so fine a piece of verse, particularly the first line which is so lithely alliterative, and will bear comparison with the immortal line—

Peter Piper picked a peck of pickled peppers.

Here is the poem as it should have appeared:

Kind God, bless these poplars

Once pointed to the skies serene;

But when the storm struck, they were topplers—

Because their number was thirteen!

The printer changed the word "topplers" to "toppers"—which our hard believers goes to prove that printers have no sense or rhyme and no soul for poesy.

TWO ANGLES OF VISION

The averse Canadian finds it difficult to assimilate the divergent accounts which he hears of conditions in Newfoundland. On the one hand Dr. Grenfell describes the fishermen as starving, while on the other the Premier, now in England, writes fagnet immigrants and says conditions are good.

It must be remembered that both the position and the point of view of the two men are the directantithesis of each other. Dr. Grenfell's habitat and the centre of his activities is in the extreme northern end of Newfoundland, close to the Straits of Belle Isle, and his work is among some of the poorest of the Newfoundland fishermen. Premier Squires comes from St. John's where the centre of the whole commercial life of the colony is situated.

Again, the objects of the two men are the antipodes of each other. Dr. Grenfell paints conditions at their worst the way not exaggerate but he does not mitigate in order that he may appeal to the sympathies of wealthy Americans and Canadians to whom he looks for gifts to finance his undertakings. Premier Squires is out to advertise his country's resources and it is his business to paint things in their most glowing colors.

Neither is entirely right nor entirely wrong; both present matters from their own particular angle of view, and if the circumstances are taken into consideration the reason for the apparent discrepancy is readily seen.

The Woodstock Sentinel-Review runs very good editorial columns, but the editor is away on his holidays, and his columns are filled with editorials clipped from other papers. At the head of his first column he announces that he will clip other people's property and gives credit to the papers from which they are clipped—there is an honest editor for you!

HERE AND THERE

DUAL CONTROL

"My husband does not worry; he does his best, and leaves the rest to Providence."—Mrs. Lloyd George.

"The secret's out 'midst all the din,
The bustle and the hurry,
There's one remains quite calm within—
L. G. declines to worry!

"He simply does his level best
And with a faith intense
He confidently 'leaves the rest'
To gracious Providence!

"As an excuse we must confess
This sounds extremely funny,
For things are in an awful mess,
And someone is to blame.

"Yes, Mrs. G., we'd like to know,
Pray gratify our whim,
To Providence what else we owe
And what is due to him?"

WAY TO WRITE A SHORT STORY

The collar-button jumped from his hands and fell with a metallic, half-earthy sound. He paused, with no inclination to sweat, only to wonder. Well, perhaps it wanted to be free, after all . . . jolly little beggar it looked, too, leaping across that floor. So thought. It smiled across a long space of sunlight, and, for a perceptible instant, dazzled him. Then the shadow took it. Under the dressing-table was it? Well, it should stop soon now, by drev! He stooped, and still good humouredly; no need to be harsh. One acted within that something or other—what if Isabel would say? Oh, bother, he couldn't be clear-cut in his thoughts with the sun shining in that jolly way on his hair-tonic, and the sky as blue as blue—and Isabel—ah, that was the meaning of things! The collar-button, subdued now but twinkling still, lay in his hand. Hard, bright, round it looked, like a note of music.

"This is the way to write a short story in England, now," says the Times Literary Supplement. "Not a new way, since it derives from Henry James, and is diluted according to the strength acquired but much in fashion. The idea is to concentrate on the trivial—which is alleged to be difficult—and show it to be the significant thing in art. Everyone to do some it, with varying degrees of success."

HOW MANY LETTERS DO YOU WRITE?

Have you ever given any thought as to the number of letters the average person writes per year. Some remarkable figures have recently been published in this connection It does not surprise one to learn that the two great English-speaking countries lead the way in this respect. In actual figures it works out at one hundred and twelve letters per year for each person in the United States and eighty-four letters per person in England and the Dominions. The figures may not seem big at first sight, but when it is realized that in the United States eleven and a half billion letters were handled last year, a slight idea of the tremendous development of the Postal service will be arrived at.—Montreal Gazette.

THE CHINA CUPBOARD

(Ida Graves, in the Nation and the Athenaeum, London.)

The China Cupboard's gray
And cool this shining day;
A board of sgo-old shadows steep
The narrow room in sunless sleep.
In flow-ered cups and dishes stain
In rows upon the shelf, with plate
And jug of blue design
And homely jam-jars in a line.
And wide, pale bowls where flowers spread
Their tracery of blue and red.
Here Sally comes in working gown
And spoon; here she washes down
A lolloing pitcher, rough and brown,
Into the starlight then she speeds
To draw the water that she needs.

So Sally's self enfolds me round
With shadowless shadow and mute sound,
And it is very joy to find
The clear, coy flowers of her mind.
Then she will spread this mood and be
Grey light and windy gaiety,
When all her thoughts will be as keen
As water, and as swift and clean.

SOME KITCHENER STORIES

(From John O'London's Weekly)

There are some deeply interesting chapters about Lord Kitchener in "Under Ten Viceroys," by Major General Nivel Woodyatt, C.B. (Jenkins, 18s), which throw new light on the mysterious personality of the great soldier. Says the author, who knew Kitchener very well:

"I think it is Mr. Winston Churchill who dubs Kitchener 'a Duster,' in his 'Mirrors of Downing Street,' who tells us that although Lord Kitchener had had a good education he was liked by few, and it is doubtful whether anyone loved him.

"Shades of Hubert Hamilton, Flis Gerald and Frankie Maxwell, do you hear this? Loved and faithful 'Bud' (General Sir William Birdwood) do these words make you squirm with indignation?"

What Queen Victoria Said.

General Woolyatt, dealing with Lord Kitchener's shyness where the female sex was concerned, says—

"It is most strange how this rumper emanating from Buckingham Palace was very charming guest and most easy to please. Still, there is no doubt it was extremely believed by her. Indeed, we are told it was even mentioned to Queen Victoria, who remarked: 'He was always very nice to me.'

"Kitchener was not in the least shy with ladies, nor did he dislike them. Some of his undoubtedly were liked by them, while others, owing to their the limits were very promptly put on. It was not at all an unpleasing thing to be him in ladies' company, enjoying himself immensely.

"At the 1911 Durbar at Delhi, my wife and I were sitting close behind him at the investiture ceremony. During the long time that the Duke placed Curzon chanced his robes from one order to another, K. talking to Lady Poe and to my wife, distributed first to her hair was coming out.

"'Push it in for me, please,' said Lady Poore.

"K. was taken aback, but certainly didn't look shy. Now the thing started handling, but, after some hesitation, he simply made a sudden dart at it with his fingers, and missed it altogether. Then they both roared with laughter, and K., refusing to have anything more to do with it, Lady Poore had to arrange it herself."

A Witty Retort.

"A well-known lady," says the author, "who was a great friend of Kitchener's, was twitting him one day on the fact that he disliked women, when he interrupted her by saying he did not dislike them at all.

"'Another,' said his friend, 'you must confess you always keep them at a distance.'

"'Perhaps,' answered K., 'but you know the old proverb, "Familiarity breeds contempt."'

"'Well, Lord Kitchener,' remarked the lady, it takes a certain amount of familiarity to breed anything!'

"There were rumours of bad accidents at flights and travellers and friend of the Chiefs (Kitchener's) at the Grand Hotel Simla, in very short lately was reported seriously injured. He told his staff the morning he set out for Almora to write condolences and ask for details. The reply came at tea-time, saying the lady was quite uninjured, but the floor had given way, and she and the bed had gone each through the ceiling into the room below. Handing it to his military secretary, the Chief said: 'Send an answer simply saying, "Poor bed!"'

PRESS OPINIONS

BRITAIN'S FIRST LINE.

(London Morning Post.)

The navy and the army are the first line of defence between the forces of humanity and the enemies of the evolution of human nature. The penalty of weakness and cowardice is rapid retrogression. So perished the ancient civilizations. Afflicted with weak and cowardly rulers, the people were led into a helpless apathy and presently their great cities fell into ruin and their name was scorned among men. It is possible to remark the beginning of the same disease today.

WHISKEY AS A FUEL

(Buffalo Express.)

With a certain degree of complacency we very here can sit on the sidelines and listen to the assertion that in England they have discovered that whiskey, mix with certain vegetables, can be turned into a fine motor fuel. It is asserted that a certain big distilling company has been remarkably supplying this new motor fuel to a limited number of customers.

It is stated that the fuel has been tested with most satisfactory results. An Edinburgh correspondent says that it has been known for two years that the company has been pursuing elaborate experiments with whiskey and vegetables, and that success means the new fuel at a price probably 50 per cent. below the current petrol prices. The vegetable from which the extract is secured for combining with whiskey is of Indian and Ceylon growth.

About this time we have a suspicion. Is the vegetable referred to banana? Somewhere of that kind? Is the whole thing a dream, the product of a distorted and perverted mind? Can it be that there is so much whiskey anywhere in the world that they would even think of using it for such purposes? And if it were so used, would it have the same effect on the motor-driving machine as it sometimes has on the driver?

If so, clear the way!

The Culprit.

One evening in the city of Manchester, when a waiter inspector was going his round, he stopped at one of the trains in a busy street to turn off the water owing to some repairs. He had just put the handle on the top and begun turning, when a hand was placed on his shoulder by a tipsy gentleman, who said in a drunken tone: "So I have found you at last, have I? It's you that's turning the street 'round, is it?"

Woman's Sphere

SUMMER'S END.

(By Louise Driscoll, in The Times, New York.)

My garden's very gay;
Vines and flowers all
In a plaid array . . .
Play at carnival.

But if you will come
You'll hear the cricket cry,
Telling Summertime,
"Good-bye! Good-bye!"

I see the first red leaves,
And brown leaves fall;
The birds now come in flocks—
They do not sing at all!

Grapes have a pleasant smell,
And I know a place
Where they hang white and sweet
Against the leaves like lace!

Cocoonib, like the cry
Of a wounded thing
Lifts its red head high,
A late blossoming.

Beloved of honeybees,
The orange marigold,
Aromatic, sprouda
Fold on starry fold.

In the vivid throng
Here limned asters are,
Each one with a heart
Like a friendly star.

Sometimes, now, it seems
That the garden tries
To give all she can
For me before she dies.

If you will visit me
You'll hear the cricket cry,
Telling Summertime,
"Good-bye! Good-bye!"

THE SAFETY PIN.

Always keep a few large safety-pins in the kitchen drawer, the dressing table, and last, but not least, in the handbag. They save many a disaster.

Pin your rings together inside your vanity box when washing in a restaurant cloak room.

Pin the sash bills together and hang the safety-pin on a hook of the kitchen dresser.

Use a safety-pin to thread ribbon through lingerie, etc., by pinning the ribbon and pushing the safety pin through the slide or runner.

When crocheting, slip a safety-pin through the last stitch and fasten it, so when the work is taken up again there is no chance of the stitch having slipped and the previous work wasted.

FASHION FANCIES

THE RETURN OF THE WHITE DRESS

At last the problem of hot weather dresses for evening and formal after noon wear is solved. One of the most fashionable fabrics for clothes that a woman ever makes is when she looks for dresses of this character.

The solution of the problem of what to wear in midsummer never was very far away. It lay in a return to the simple, old-fashioned white dress. For many years women were inclined to eschew the simple white frocks that played such an important part in our grandmothers' days. They sought something more important looking something more sophisticated.

There is considerable diversity of opinion as to whether women dress for men's approval or to compete with other women. If it is true that it is the masculine eye that women are trying to attract they had better pin their faith to the simple, effective and youthful gowns.

The old-fashioned white dress has come back with variations. In outline it is simple, simpler than it ever was. It may be only a straight chemise frock, but the note of color which in the old days appeared in a sash now spreads itself over a large part of the dress in the form of embroideries. While the embroidery is profuse the designs are very simple and usually in brilliant colors.

Red is a favorite color for the evening note on white dresses.

HIKERS DANCE WAY THROUGH COUNTRIES

With no other baggage or equipment than two small handbags, Miss Jessica McManus and her sister, Mrs. Cox, arrived in Toronto Friday morning on their way to New York, after hiking from their home in San Jose, California.

During the entire route they have been paying all their expenses by putting on performances of Scotch songs and dances in the towns through which they past.

This fall one of the sisters is entering Columbia University, in New York, while the other intends taking up a course of play writing in the same city.

The Daily Recipe

FRESH VEGETABLE SALAD.

During the summer fresh vegetables should be eaten every day. Sometimes they taste better cold, and what is more attractive than a pleasing arrangement of bright-colored vegetables with a little green lettuce or romaine or some salad plant and a good salad dressing?

Just a few things are well to avoid —for instance, a combination of beets and tomatoes, or carrots and tomatoes. Try the following:

1 cup cooked green string beans, cut in pieces.
1 cup cooked carrots, cut in cubes or strips.
1 cup potatoes, cut in cubes.
1 cucumber, thinly sliced.
1 cup shaved raw cabbage.
Few lettuce.
½ cup French dressing.

Hand cooked veg- . . .

It is well to serve such a salad arranging each vegetable by itself. Then if there is any one which some member of the family does not like, that vegetable can be avoided.

Chop the veg- and add to the French dressing. Either put a slice or two of onion in the salad itself or chop it finely and add to the dressing.

If possible, arrange these vegetables on a platter. Place first the lettuce, then the cabbage, on this arrange the piles of vegetables, and over all pour the dressing.

GLORIOUS DAYS ON GREAT LAKES

All Kinds of Entertainment on Board "Floating Hotels"

With the steady popularity of golf and other games and sports an increased number of people owning their own motor cars, boat trips for a vacation have largely receded into the background. This should not be so. Anyone who has been fortunate enough to take a cruise on Canada's Great Lakes can never regret the experience. It would almost seem useless to try to explain all the delightful features of such a trip. One naturally thinks of the booklets got out by the agents and steamship lines, written just to entice the uninformed and to be carried away. To one who has just returned from the trip, however, the inadequacy of these descriptions is startlingly apparent.

To begin with the accommodation on the Northern Navigation Companies steamers from Detroit to Duluth is all that could be desired. Nothing is left undone to make the trip pleasant, and the steamers are veritable floating hotels, magnificently fitted, with promenade decks, glassed-in hall room on top deck where an orchestra plays during lunch and dinner and for dancing each evening, with broad decks for those preferring the dream picture. The cuisine is excellent and the waiters are mostly stewards from ocean liners who are putting themselves through college, and they know how to wait.

No Dull Moments

Everything is done, so that there will be no dull moments. While making to the next island on the promenade deck take place both morning and afternoon. While making such participate in a game of meter golf, which is good practice for their swing, and they may even be keen to form a tournament, the Scotchmen winning, of course. Masqueraders are arranged for the hall-room of the ship assist the flappers to prepare their costumes of crepe paper, and the boys are also assisted by the fool's caps and masks till-the ship is almost spooky with characters of every period.

Rewards Good Dancers

What perhaps would be better not told is that many of the passengers feel that some good dancers are really being wasted as writers, and they arrange a dance competition that will discuise sufficiently, and before the evening's dance is over the staff are well mingled among the passengers "unknown".

A most interesting feature is the continual change of passengers which helps to break the monotony. On the whole a pleasant holiday of a week's boat trip can be contented on Canada's great water way.—Montreal Herald.

ROMANTIC CITY OF MANDALAY

Kipling Made an Error About its Location in His Song

Mandalay, Burma, Aug. 19.—With its thousand pagodas, its deserted palaces and its picturesque ruins, the city of Mandalay continues to be a place of chief attraction for the European or American visitor to Burma. The palace ground, surrounded by a wall and moat, are about a mile and a half square. The buildings have a cheap gaudiness about them which compares in many ways to those of an American street carnival. Still preserved are the throne rooms and the apartments of the king and queen and numerous junior queens. Mindon Min, the next to the last king of Burma, married 37 wives—seeking, evidently, to discover what the "37 varieties" are like.

From the palace grounds an American taxi takes the visitor to the foot of Mandalay hill, one of the holy places of Burma Buddhism. Here those who are adherents of the Buddhist religion and are willing to remove their footwear may obtain great merit by climbing the nearly 400 steps which lead to the summit.

The temples (not houses) built at the foot of the hill are interesting chiefly on account of the pictures which adorn the walls. Most of these depict supposed incidents in the life of Gautama Buddha, and provide good instance of an inconsistency which is typical of Burmans. Though Buddha was an Indian, he is always pictured in Burmese clothes, and though he lived about 500 years before the time of Christ, electric lights and electric fans are to be seen in the same room with him.

Arakan pagoda, on the other side of the city, presents a striking appearance by its being plastered over with gold leaf. The many bonzes here are stolen and carried away from Arakan by the Burmans in the 18th or early part of the 19th century. Whether they were stolen of a king who succeeded to the throne of Arakan in the year A.D. 146. The old Burmese method to try to please Buddha by making war on their neighbors, carrying off as many captives as they could find.

Mandalay has been dwindling in population since it ceased to be the capital of Burma. People say that every other man in town is a monk, and one out, in the streets daily in the year would almost believe that this is true. There are usually yellow robes over black or bareshoulders for each block. Although there are already more than 1,000 pagodas in and about the city many new ones are now in process of construction.

Many Americans have been confused as the exact location of Mandalay by a couple of geographical errors that occur in Kipling's well-known song. It could hardly be "where the flying fishes play," when the sea is over a hundred miles distant. And China isn't "just across the bay," but is just across the mountains instead. Just across the bay is India.

Mrs. Ernest Laing and two sons have returned home from Niagara Falls and St. Catharines.

LONGEVITY INCREASING IN GREAT BRITAIN.

There is at present time in England and Wales 600,000 persons over 70 years of age, and 40,000 persons over 92 years of age.

In 1920, 200,000 deaths occurred in the case of persons under the age of 5, or 44 percent of the total number of deaths. The chief causes of the high mortality rate bronchitis, pneumonia, tuberculosis and diseases of the nervous system. Cancer also standsbigh in the.

THE BANDBOX

By Louis Joseph Vance

Against her protests, then, Eleanor was rushed out in full dress when what she really wanted to do was to eat a light and simple meal and go early to bed. In most unnatural consequence, she found herself, when they got home after one in the morning, in a state of nervous disquiet caused by the strain of keeping herself keyed up to the pitch of an animated party.

Insomnia stared her in the face with its blind, blank eyes. In the privacy of her own room, she expressed a free opinion of her companions, conceiving them all in the guise of fevered, unquiet souls cast in the mould of Mrs. Iliking.

Diverting herself of her dinner-gown, she slipped into a negligee and looked around for a book, meaning to read herself sleepy. In the course of her search she happened to recognize her handbag and conceive a desire to reassure herself as to the becomingness of its contents.

The hat she found therein was becoming enough, even if it wasn't new. The mistake was easily apparent and excusable, considering the confusion that had obtained on the peer at the time of their departure.

She wondered when Staff would learn the secret of his bneeting mystery, and wondered too why Alonzo had wished to make a mystery of it. The joke was hardly apparent—though one's sense of American humour might well have become dulled in several years of residence abroad.

Meanwhile, instinctively, Eleanor was trying on the hat before the long mirror set in the door of the closet. She submitted to herself that she looked astonishingly well in it. She was a nine and sensible young woman, who knew that she was exceedingly good looking and had to find a hat better suited to set off the handsome, tall and slightly pale girl that confronted Eleanor in the mirror.

It seemed surprisingly heavy, even for a hat of its tremendous size. She was of the opinion that it would make her head ache to wear it for many hours in a time. She was puzzled by its weight and speculated vaguely about it until, lifting it carefully off, her fingers encountered something hard, heavy and unyielding between the lining and the crown. After that it didn't take her long to discover that the lining had been ripped open and its cavern with every indication of careless haste. Human curiosity did the rest. Within a very few minutes the dishpan collar lay in her hands and she was marvelling over its—and hardly surmising the truth: Staff had been used as a blind agent to get the pearls into the country duty-free.

Quick thoughts ran riot in Eleanor's mind. Alison booked Landis certainly not delay longer than a few hours before demanding her hat of Mr. Staff. The substitution would then be discovered and she, Eleanor Searle, would fall under suspicion—at least, unless she took immediate steps to restore the jewels.

She acted hastily, on impulse. One minute she was at the telephone, ordering a taxicab, the next she was hurriedly consulting the list of names in the address and her telephone number. But before she could call up, her cab was announced. Nevertheless she delayed long enough to warn him hastily of her coming. Then she snatched up the necklace, dropped it into her handbag, replaced the hat in its bandbox and ran for the elevator.

It was almost half-past one by the clock behind the desk, when she passed through the office. She had really not thought it necessary to announce one of the surprised looks of the clerks and pages. The porter at the door, too, had a stare for her as long and frank as to approach impertinence. None the less he was quick enough to take her bandbox from the bellboy who carried it and place it in the waiting taxi, and hustled her in after it with civil care. Having repeated to the operator the address she gave him, the porter shut the door and went back to his post as the vehicle darted out from the curb.

Eleanor knew little of New York geography. Her previous visits to the city had been very few and of short duration. With the shopping district she was tolerably familiar, and she knew something of the district round about the fifth Avenue Hotel and the vanished Everett House. But with those exceptions she was entirely ignorant of the lay of the land; just as she was too inexperienced to realize that it isn't considered wholly well-advised for a young woman alone to take, in the middle of the night, a taxicab whose chauffeur carries a revolver on the front seat. If she had stopped to consider this circumstance at all, she would have felt comforted by the presence of the ugly-looking gun, on the general principle that two protectors are better than one: but the plain truth is that she didn't stop to consider it, her thoughts being fully engaged with what seemed more important matters.

WILL HOLD "OCEAN DERBY"

Great Liners Compete for Atlantic Blue Riband This Year

London, Aug. 18.—"An Ocean Derby" will be held on the Atlantic this summer to determine the fastest of the great liners on the Southampton-New York run. The position of the vessels in this contest for the Atlantic blue riband is as follows, the figures denoting the best speed for a whole voyage during the current season:

1. Mauretania . . . . . 26.59 knots
2. Majestic . . . . . 24.08 knots
3. Berengaria . . . . . 23.93 knots
4. Aquitania . . . . . 23.26 knots
5. Olympic . . . . . 23.16 knots
6. Homeric . . . . . 19.99 knots

All these vessels, with the exception of the Homeric, burn oil fuel. Thus, as well as settling the speed championship, the race will provide useful data for comparing the new method of making steam by oil with the old method of using coal.

The contest has progressed far enough to reveal that the race now lies between the Mauretania and the Majestic. Can the latter deprive the former of her proud and long-held position as the "Atlantic Speed Queen"? This is the great topic in ocean shipping circles. There is much argument and heavy betting.

The Majestic, like the Berengaria, is German built. She was designed to capture from Britain size and speed records. Her backers point out that she has shown qualities in the latter respect by doing a recent sprint at 27.82 knots, and that as she is only beginning to "feel her engines", she will make things hum for her British-built competitors.

The Mauretania's backers reply that she, too, has not yet settled down since her conversion to oil-burning; that if spurting counts for anything she has a 26.5 knots spurt to her credit, and that with a former whole voyage achievement of over 26 knots she will, if needed, still show all comers a clean pair of heels.

With all this keen but good-natured rivalry among the "greyhounds of the ocean," new records may be looked for before long. The new Berengaria may produce some surprises, now that she has taken to oil fuel, and she is looked upon as "the dark horse" of the Atlantic.

FINE HARVEST THIS YEAR WILL CPEAPEN RAW MATERIALS

Harvest and Pasturage Costs Are Much Below the Average Everywhere

In order to arrive at an estimate of present financial conditions and future prospects on Ontario farms a mere survey of returns on this year's harvest is not sufficient. Apples, of course, are a finished product of an Ontario farm, but corn, hay, grain and roots are, for the most part, simply raw material, meat animals and dairy products being the finished output. The really important question to be considered, therefore, is how do costs of production and the final returns from live stock and dairying for 1922 compare with the figures for previous years and what are the prospects for the balance of the farm year which will end with the spring of 1923?

A Phenomenal Pasture Season.

So far as dairying is concerned, it is doubtful if Ontario has ever experienced a more favorable condition for the production of milk as in the season now approaching a close. As a result thing pastures begin to dry up about the middle of August and yet never once has grass lost the color of spring, and at the present time cattle are up to their knees in pasture. In addition to that, cool weather has kept the fly pest in check. What effect these conditions have had on production in one section was made clear by Agricultural Representative Birrell. The biggest output in a single month for one creamery in Northumberland was 20,000 pounds, and still today the output of that creamery is running at 19,00 pounds per month," Mr. Birrell said. When it is remembered that most of the cows supplying cream to the factory in question are now well advanced in their lactation period, and that we have reached a time in the year when pastures are usually at their worst, a drop of only one-fifth in production from the high point in the year is certainly remarkable.

What of the Future?

Speculation in regard to prospective future prices for meat animals and dairy products is idle. One is, however, on reasonably safe ground in dealing with costs of production in this case. The week will see practically the end of the grain harvest, save buckwheat, in older Ontario, and that harvest is undoubtedly one of the best ever garnered in this Province—best in yield and best in quality.

The same statement applies also as regards quality and quantity in hay, roots and corn when lumped together. This means an abundance of home-produced feed for the winter, and the present state of pastures is an assurance that live stock will enter winter quarters in prime condition.

This, again, spells unusually low production costs, taking the whole year through. If, therefore, the market for the finished products in milk, cream and meat animals holds steady, the results of Ontario farm operations for the farm year of 1922-3 will be vastly more profitable than for the previous year. It is doubtful, indeed, if net profits, when computative living costs are taken into account, will be much below those of the war years.—The Globe.

GREAT LAKES TOUR

In a letter to headquarters of the Grand Trunk from a prominent Australian travelling through Canada, he refers to his trip through the Great Lakes via the Northern Navigation Co's steamer "Noronic" (Canadian National-Grand Trunk Route) as follows: "The trip through the lakes is to be strongly recommended. There is no doubt that the Navigation Companies of the Pacific and the Atlantic have much to learn in catering to the comfort of passengers from the Northern Navigation Co." This tribute to one of our inland Canadian Navigation Companies is gratifying coming from one who has travelled through all parts of the world.

KINGSTON CURLERS WILL ERECT NEW RINK

Kingston, Aug. 17.—At a special meeting of the Kingston Curlers, Limited, the question of building the rink was finally settled and the board of directors were given authority to erect a six sheet rink on the property recently purchased by the company from Bruton estate, using the Clergy street west frontage for the building which is to be concrete blocks with steel arches and trusses. The building will have a frontage of 97 feet by a depth of 174 feet and a height of 18 feet on the sides and 30 feet in front and back ends.

The list shows that the club is truly representative of the citizens. One hundred and forty-four are now shareholders in the company, the largest number of curlers who have belonged to the local club. Tenders for the building will be announced in a few days. It is hoped that the building will be completed by December.

1922 SESSION OF PARLIAMENT

Over Fifty Per cent. of Bills Presented Were For Divorce

Ottawa, Ont., Aug. 19.—One hundred and ninety bills, of which 102 were bills for divorces, came before the Senate for consideration during the session of 1922, the completed records of that House show. Ten years ago the divorce applications numbered 36 and the steady increase has led to a renewed interest in the question divorce courts for the province of Ontario.

The session of 1922 brought before the Senate legislation of marked importance, necessitating careful consideration and scrutiny resulting in the rejection of and material alteration in other measures.

The Senate as a revising body does its work with great care and thoroughness. It is comprised of men of long experience, and the alterations they made greatly amplified and improved the measures before Parliament.

That the changes proposed were essential improvements was evidenced by their almost invariable confirmation on the part of the Bills to the House of Commons.

The Senate considered 190 Bills. Of these, 114 were Bills originating in the Senate, and 76 in the Commons. 181 Bills became law, and 9 were either withdrawn or rejected.

Three Bills introduced in the Senate did not reach the third readings, namely, Bill A, promoted by the Hon. Mr. McKeans, with respect to the right of appeal from convictions for indictable offences. This Bill was referred to a Special Committee of the Senate, several meetings were held and the views of the Attorneys-General of the various provinces were obtained, and the Committee were favored with opinions from some of the Judiciary. Information is now being obtained as to the wording of a similar Act in Great Britain. That information will be available at the next session of Parliament when it is expected the Bill will again be introduced embodying some changes as a result of the work of the Committee.

Another Bill dealing with Explosives was presented by the Hon. Mr. Boyer. This Bill was carefully considered on the motion for its second reading, and at the suggestion of the Government it was withdrawn.

IRRITABLE PEOPLE
ARE USUALLY VICTIMS OF POOR BLOOD AND WEAK NERVES.
Irritability is one of the manifestations of nervousness, and it becomes worse as nerves become more unstrung and approach a state of exhaustion. No one is irritable from preference, and this state is often only the outward representation of a great deal of physical suffering which friends do not realize. It is accompanied by headache, sleeplessness, nervous indigestion and despondency. Unless it is promptly checked more serious trouble develops.
The treatment for the earlier stages of nervousness as well as the more advanced conditions is a restoration of the nerve cells, requiring a tonic. As the nerves get their nourishment from the blood, the treatment must be directed towards building up the blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills act directly on the blood, and the patient of the greatest benefit in a great many cases of this kind. A tendency to anaemia or bloodlessness is shown by most nervous people as also corrected by these tonic pills. This is shown by the case of Mr. Kenneth D. McDonald, Tarbot, P. E., who says: "For a long time I was a severe sufferer from nervous trouble, with the result that I grew pale and weak, lost weight, slept poorly and always felt tired out. Various medicines I tried had no beneficial effect, until finally I was persuaded to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I found these just what I needed, as after taking them a couple of months I not only gained in weight, but felt stronger, more cheerful and better in every way. I feel that I cannot praise these pills too highly for what they have done for me."
You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

NOVELTY DANCE WAS SUCCESS

The Novelty Dance held at the Massassaga dancing pavilion last night was a decided success. Large number, from the city attended, thus being boat and bus service to the park. Good prizes were offered for the novelty dances, and they were keenly contested. The music for the dancing was supplied by the Eastern Dance Trio, of Toronto, and was all that could be desired.

TO GIVE AN ACCOUNTING.

Ex-Warden Griffith, of Peterborough County, who was Reeve of Belmont township last year, will appear before Judge Hayden in Peterboro' Sept. 5th, to give an accounting of the expenditure of certain grants made to Belmont and Methven township and which it is claimed were not expended on the roads, although they were grants for that purpose.

AUTOMOBILE AFIRE.

The Fire Department received a call last evening about 7.30 p.m. to a fire which had started in a farmer's motor car as a result of a short circuit in the wiring. The car, at the time the fire started was standing near Cooper's Flour Mill. The fire was quickly extinguished before it gained much headway.

YANKEE MONEY PLENTIFUL.

Much American money is in circulation in the city and it is decided contrast to the amount in circulation last summer when there was a high premium on it. No premium is now being paid for currency and it is therefore difficult for American tourists to convert it into Canadian currency.

BODY OF UNKNOWN YOUTH TAKEN FROM NIAGARA RIVER

Niagara Falls, Ont., Aug. 18.—The body of a youth, about eighteen years old, was taken from the Niagara River at the Maid of the Mist landing yesterday. The body, while in a good state of preservation, had evidently been in the water two or three days. When recovered the body was clothed in a navy blue bathing suit trimmed with a wide red stripe and a narrow yellow stripe. At the same time several parts of a boat and a cushion were picked up.

SUMMER HEAT HARD ON BABY
No season of the year is so dangerous to the life of little ones as is the summer. The excessive heat throws the little stomach out of order so quickly that unless prompt aid is at hand the baby may be beyond all hope before the mother realizes he is ill. Summer is the season when diarrhoea, cholera infantum, dysentry and colic are most prevalent. Any of these troubles may prove deadly if not promptly treated. During the summer mother's best friend is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and keep baby healthy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"HER HUSBAND'S TRADEMARK" A HIT

Gloria Swanson's new Paramount picture, "Her Husband's Trademark," has scored a decided hit at Griffin's where it is receiving its final exhibition tonight. It is a vivid, colorful screen drama of supreme interest and appeal. Miss Swanson has a delightful role in which her art is displayed to the best advantage, and affords the star abundant opportunity to display some handsome gowns to advantage. Her leading man is Richard Wayne, and in the supporting cast are Stuart Holmes and Clarence Burton, not to speak of many other well, known screen players.

An amusing Baby Peggy comedy, a Travelogue, and a gripping chapter of "With Stanley in Africa," featuring George Walsh, age being exhibited on the same program.

THE REX STOCK COMPANY

"Our Rex Steelgrove", manager of the justly famous Rex Stock Company, was in Belleville today looking things over prior to the opening of his company at Griffin's on Monday, September 4th (Fair Day). He expressed delight at the newly painted and decorated appearance of the theatre and stated that the scenic department of the Rex Company was making a special effort also for the fall opening.

Zana Vaughn (Mrs. Rex Steelgrove) will be with the company at home this week, to allow herself plenty of time to make the trip, as she rather expects delays, owing to the rail-road strike. Florence Winters wrote Mr. Steelgrove that she was going to spend her weeks of her holidays in Belleville visiting friends, just before the opening of the company.

The Rex Stock Company will be a more expensive organization this season, as many extra innovations will be introduced from time to time, but Rex and Manager Forhan informed the writer that the same prices that prevailed last season will be again in effect this season as they appreciate the liberal patronage accorded the company during their sixteen weeks' engagement here last season.

HAROLD LLOYD, MAY McAVOY AND "HOOT" GIBSON HERE MONDAY.

As famous in the field of romantic comedy as "The Merry Widow" was in the field of operetta, Eugene Presbry's stage hit of twenty years ago, "A Virginian Courtship," has now been brought to the screen of 1922, and will be shown here on the big triple bill at Griffin's this Monday to Wednesday, with May McAvoy, newest of Realart stars, in the stellar role.

"A Virginia Courtship" tells three love stories, though it chiefly concerns the adventures of Prudence Fairfax, the pearl of kindly old Colonel Fairfax, owner of a run-down and heavily mortgaged plantation which would once have been the pride of the countryside.

Casson Ferguson is leading man, and others who will be seen in the picture are Kathlyn Williams, Alec B. Francis, Jane Keeley, Richard Purbey, Judy Oliver, Washington Blue and Verne Winters.

Hoot (Hoot) Gibson couldn't get enough thrills for himself by winning world championship diamond belts in rodeo stunts, so he went into auto-racing. When that failed to give him a thrill, he went into pictures, and his latest example of his daredevilry may be seen in "The Bearcat," a successively titled five-reel Universal special attraction which is the second feature offering on the same program.

It's a story of that part of the west where cow punchers are still popular by killing snakes and bedeviling neighbors.

Harold Lloyd is also appearing on the same program in a new and highly amusing three-reel comedy titled "A Sailor-Made Man."

The annoying thing about sophisticated folk is that they always make us ashamed of our inferiority when they say anything.

By request of Mayor Hanna the address beautifully etched in pen and ink by a young artist of the High School, presented to Grand Master Col. W. N. Ponton by Port Arthur and Fort William, and the hope of the two cities uniting the "freedom" thereof, adorned with Masonic blue and valued highly by the recipient, are exhibited in the window of the Walker Hardware Company in a tasteful setting of squares and compasses. With them is a rare piece of stone from the Temple Quarries of Jerusalem where the first Grand Lodge was held—the dee King Solomon, presented by Mr. D. V. Sinclair, who personally secured it.—Sun.

"AND I HEARD A GREAT VOICE"

Saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" (Rev. 21:3). What a glorious summary of Heaven is contained in these words; how soon to be fulfilled. Let us join Him to understand why the message "the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand," and how long living we shall be in hearing precisely about the coming world. Then send 50c to I.B. Belleville's Coal Commandeered by U.S. Railways

Pea Coal Ordered by Mayor Hanna For Sale o Citizens Of Belleville Has Been Seized for Use on American Railroads

HOUSEHOLDERS MUST WAIT

Mayor Hanna received a letter this morning from Cleveland, Ohio, informing him that all the pea coal in the United States had been commandeered by the Railways of the United States. Two weeks ago His Worship announced that he had been able to secure a quantity of pea coal and was open to receive orders at $13.60 per ton. A large numbers of orders have come in and the money will now have to be returned as the orders cannot be filled.

The following is a copy of the letter explaining the situation:

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 16, 1922.

City of Belleville,
Belleville, Ontario.

Gentlemen,—

We are in receipt of the following wire from the Mines, which is entirely self-explanatory:

"Railroad has commandeered entire stock pile. We will therefore be unable to make any shipments until operations are resumed."

In view of the above it will be impossible for us to make shipments at this time on your order for Pea Coal. This is a great disappointment to us, but on account of the coal having been confiscated, we have no other alternative but to wait until the strike is settled. Present indications are that this will be in a few days, and I am going to keep this correspondence in an open file and get in touch with you immediately after operations are resumed.

I hope that at that time things will so shape themselves that we will have the pleasure of doing further business with you.

At your service,

The J. P. Burton Coal Company.

TO KEEP ORDER IN NOVA SCOTIA

MEN RESUME PUMPING WORK AT N.S. MINES

Unions Allow Men to Return on Pledge of New Wage Conference

Sydney, N.S., Aug. 20—Midnight tonight, and the commencement of the seventh day of the Nova Scotia coal strike, found the pumps and maintenance machinery fully manned at all of the important collieries in Cape Breton county south. In accordance with the decision of Saturday's subsidiaries convention at Dominion, engineers and pumpmen began reporting on Saturday evening for work, and all day Sunday dense masses of black smoke rolling from lofty stacks served notice that one of the most dangerous phases of the strike had been ended.

During the day pumps were taken over and manned by the United Mine Workers at Dominion No. 1, Caledon, in No. 4, Birch Grove No. 21, No. 22, Reserve No. 5, the three New Waterford collieries and other scattered pumping and power stations.

Town Has Light.

At 5 o'clock this afternoon United Mines fired the boilers in Waterford Lake power station, with the result that the town of North Waterford tonight has light, power and water service for the first time in six days.

The last men to return to work were the engineers and engineers at No. 2, New Aberdeen, the starting point and centre of the strike. It is here that the military garrison is posted.

Opinions and statements as to the damage caused by flooding of the mines during the six days the pumps were practically idle differ, according to their source.

Say Mine Ruined.

On the company side it is stated that No. 10 at Reserve is ruined beyond redemption, and other mines seriously damaged.

TROOPS OFF TO EASTERN MINES

SLEEP-WALKER JUMPS DOWN CHIMNEY

Trenton, N. J., Aug. 21.—When Samuel Giron, 37 years old, of Trenton, near here, jumped down a chimney of his home while dreaming, it required a whole company of Trenton firemen to rescue him.

Giron recently was released from the asylum and last night dreamed that the hospital guards were trying to capture him. He fled from his bed to the roof and then leaped into the flue, falling to a point near the ground. He became fast and remained of the family sent word to the Trenton Fire Department. After trying unsuccessfully to pull the man out with ropes, the firemen had to cut a hole in the wall. Giron was nearly suffocated, but was revived.

D. V. SINCLAIR PASSES AWAY

Was Leading Business Man and Influential Citizen

DIED SUNDAY MORNING

Citizens of this city and surrounding district were shocked on Sunday morning, when it became known that one of Belleville's Big men had passed away, in the person of the late David Volume Sinclair.

The late Mr. Sinclair entered the Belleville General Hospital a week ago on Sunday and the following day underwent an operation, performed by Dr. Jones of Toronto. Throughout the week, very encouraging reports were given out, stating that his health was improving. On Saturday, however, a very sudden turn for the worse came, and at 7 p.m. the members of the family were summoned, owing to the seriousness of the change. Death came very peacefully on Sunday morning at 8 a.m.

In the death of David Sinclair, Belleville loses one of her leading citizens. A resident of this city for more than forty years, deceased was actively associated with any movement that meant advancement for the city, its inhabitants, and the country at large. Actively natured and an excellent conversationalist, deceased met and made many fast friends, who appreciated their respect for him, by placing him in such honorable positions as he filled during his lifetime.

Possibly above all, his service to his church and kindred bodies came first, the late Mr. Sinclair having been a most devoted Presbyterian, and one of the best friends of the Y.M.C.A. here.

Any movement that tended towards the uplift or advancement of humanity, Mr. Sinclair was behind it to the day of his death.

The late David Sinclair was the eldest son of Mr. Peter Sinclair of Madoc, his mother, Mrs. Agnes Sinclair having predeceased him about two years ago. Born at Madoc on June 10th, 1864, deceased came to Belleville as a youth, and has lived here for more than forty years.

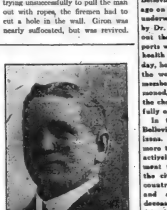

His first position in this city was a clerk at the Rinkle Co. store, where he remained for twelve years. He then went into business for himself for a few months, with a partner, the partnership being known as Sinclair & Ostrom. The partnership was dissolved, and the late Mr. Sinclair then went into business alone, where he has continued up until the present. In May of 1920, the 25th anniversary of the present business was celebrated.

As stated previously deceased's greatest interest in a public way was in the Y.M.C.A., and during his life he had held many offices on the board, from the President down, and was a member of the board of directors at the time of his death.

A member of School Board for many years, and until his death deceased was also a member of the City Council for many years, was chairman one year, and once a candidate for Mayoralty. In June, 1914, he contested West Hastings for the Legislature, having been brought out by the Temperance Organization. He was not successful, however, Mr. Johnston having been elected.

Deceased was a devoted member of John Street Presbyterian church, was Clerk of the Session, Representative Elder and Superintendent of the Sunday School until his death, having been Superintendent for many years. He has been a member of the Board of Managers, and is a delegate to the General Assembly. An active leader of the Forward Movement, deceased also visited the United States in the interests of the Temperance Campaign in 1919, and had been President of the Dominion Alliance for the past two years.

Mr. Justice Riddell, of Toronto, is presiding at a civil case which is being tried at the court house here this afternoon.

TRAVELS 130 MILES WITH FIFTY CENTS

Albany, Aug. 18—Edith Greenbush, 12 years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Greenberg, of 720 Riverside Drive, New York, was reported missing from East Greenbush, near Albany, this morning. The family had been passing a vacation there.

Some time after the girl was missed a note was found which said:

"Don't worry. Have 50 cents. Have gone home."

The State police were notified and began a search. The father's stenographer in New York was asked to watch the Riverside Drive home, and the entire family set out to overtake the girl if possible.

Last night word was received from New York that the little girl had arrived safely at home, quite unperturbed, having made the 130-mile journey in the course of the day. She had received lifts from automobilists most of the way.

SHACKLETON'S LAST DAYS

I have flouted the Wild, I have followed its lure
Fearless, familiar, alone.
But a day must come when the Wild will win
And I shall be overthrown.

Captain Hussey, meteorologist of the Quest, who is now in London, gives some unpublished details of the last moments of Sir Ernest Shackleton, the Quest's commander.

"The Boss," as Sir Ernest was called, repeated Service's lines given above the day before his death. "The more hopeless the situation appeared," Captain Hussey writes, "the calmer and more self-reliant he seemed."

During the terrible storms at Christmas, 1921, the "Boss" remained on the bridge of the Quest for days without rest, deaf to all entreaties to go to his cabin and sleep. "His only reply was," says Captain Hussey, "I am all right. Go below and sleep yourself." He said later that never before in nearly forty years' experience of the sea had he been in such a storm.

"About 1 p. m. on January 5," Captain Hussey says, "Dr. Macklin, the Quest's surgeon, heard a low whistle coming from the Boss's cabin. He went in, and the Boss said: 'I have a bad pain in the back. Can you give me anything for it?' Dr. Macklin prepared some medicine, and as the Boss was drinking it he collapsed. . . . Later, among the tributes, there arrived at the whaling station of South Georgia, where the explorer lies buried, a sprig of rosemary with the inscription:

"Rosemary—for remembrance.
From a Suffolk garden."

POINCARE SPEAKS OUT ON GERMAN GUILT

Impassioned Speech by French Premier on Need For Punishment of Authors of Outrage Against Civilization

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Thiacourt, France, August 21.—France knows how to make Germany pay for the destruction she caused during the war and every German will be held to strict account for the repair of the damage, Premier Poincare told the assembled population of Thiacourt yesterday at the dedication of a monument to soldiers who fell in the Great War.

After reviewing the part-played by citizens when Germans invaded the town in 1914, he exclaimed "You citizens who witnessed these horrors committed by Germany, you who have seen your parents, wives, children and friends fall before your eyes because of German barbarism can you comprehend that after our hard fought victory, there are certain people in this world blind enough to leave unpunished the authors of this outrage against civilization?"

LOCAL MAN FINED ON O.T.A. CHARGE

This Case Dates Back to July 1st Last

One O.T.A. case in police court this morning dated back to the celebration of July 1st, when a young man was charged with drinking in a public place.

The offence was committed in a wood near this city, after a party had been arranged, and a car chartered. A pint of alcohol and several bottles of beer caused the trouble.

One member of the party told of the experience when called on a fight, after the alcohol had worked on them.

Another member of the party also gave evidence. As a result accused was found guilty of drinking in a public place and fined $100 and costs or 3 months. Mr. C. A. Payne appeared for the accused.

STRANGE CRIME AT THOROLD

(Canadian Press Despatch)

St. Catharines, Aug. 21. — Adam Sulton was shot to death on the way to his home at Thorold late last night and his brother Tom is in hospital here badly wounded.

The police are so far unable to place the responsibility for the murder. It is said the Sulton brothers were talking on the verandah when three men stopped and began arguing, when several shots rang out and Sulton fell from bullet wounds.

BOY KEEPS VIGIL FOR DROWNED DAD

Refuses to Leave the Spot Whence Parent Dived Until Body is Found

New York, Aug. 19.—With the discovery of the body of Charles Orancio, 38, of 314 East Forty-fifth Street, in the East River yesterday it was learned that his nine-year-old son Nicholas, who had gone swimming with the father last Thursday in Bowery Bay, Long Island City, had waited for nine hours on the bench, confident in his father's prowess as a swimmer and reluctant to believe him drowned.

Passersby found Nicholas guarding his father's clothes at midnight Thursday night and took him to the Astoria police station. The boy's mother was summoned and took him home. The next time yesterday morning Nicholas was back at his post again, watching for his father.

At 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, just twenty-four hours after Orancio disappeared from his little boy's sight in what Nicholas thought a new kind of dive, some men swimming near Ehret Ave., a mile away, found a body in the water. The boy was called and identified the remains. The body was taken to the police station, where a medical examiner said death was due to drowning.

R. J. GRAHAM SPEAKS AT ROTARY CLUB

Mr. R. J. Graham was the speaker at the Rotary Club luncheon today when he delivered an address on China as he saw it during his recent visit to the East. Mr. Graham stated that China was supremely an agricultural country, and that there was no machinery used either on the land or in the native silk factories.

"I began to wonder whether machinery is a good or a bad thing for the people," said Mr. Graham.

There was a good attendance at the luncheon, and among the guests were Mr. VanDusen, of Brockville, Mr. J. Pringle, of Buffalo, and Mr. Fred Deacon.

DE VALERA SAYS REBELS MAY GO HOME NOW

Insurgents Returning to Civil Life — National Army Forces Capture Rebel Strongholds

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Dublin, Aug. 21.—National army forces have captured Brandon and Dingmanway, two of the remaining rebel strongholds in Southern Ireland and the rebels are hastily retreating.

The advice said to have been given by De Valera to the insurgents that they were free to return to their homes seems to have had its effect as many have resumed civil life.

HIKE TO LONDON OF UNEMPLOYED

Birmingham's Workless Men March to Metropolis —Interview Minister

London, Aug. 21.—The unemployed men of Birmingham marched to London and interviewed the minister of Labor, Right Hon. T. J. Macnamara, yesterday with reference to the question of employment. The minister expressed the hope that the experts' credit scheme, under which the expenditure of £16,000,000 has been sanctioned by the government, would do something towards getting trade moving again and improving conditions generally.

Similar marches to London from other parts of England are rumored to the organized unemployed, who believe that this would be good propaganda. The Birmingham hikers signed on at every labor exchange which they passed on their journey to the metropolis, this being partly by way of maintaining their contentions that the exchanges are useless.

The Welsh Miners' Choir is meeting with a favorable reception in London where the choir is singing for the purpose of relieving the distress among the children of over 200,000 workless Welsh miners. The choir itself has suffered much privation during its journey through the country. Last week the members had only one meal daily.

LEAGUE REJECTION WAS A SERIOU SBLOW

Williamstown, Mass., Aug. 21.—Accusing the victims of the world of self-blindness for their preoccupation over their own problems before the war, Philip Kerr, former secretary of Lloyd George, told the Institute of Politics at Williams College, that the world war could have been avoided if the right kind of appeal had been made to Germany before it was too late.

Kerr lauded America for her attempt to have the after-war problem discussed from a world angle, but said that the rapid degeneration of affairs too selfish national basis was our fault for withdrawing from the councils of the nations.

This withdrawal, and not our rejection of the League of Nations, was the most serious blow the United States dealt Europe, he stated.

Railway News

Port Coquitlam, B.C.—On July 29 the city treasurer received $16,000, the C. P. R. taxes, which were not really payable until August 31. There is jubilation in the City Hall for these taxes are the first paid since the expiry of the by-law fixing the flat rate.

St. John, N.B.—All the C. P. R. employees now living who served in the recent war will have a token to commemorate their sacrifice in the shape of a scroll which is a fine piece of work and is almost a copy of the large bronze tablet unveiled by the C. P. R. here on April 23, 1922. The scroll is signed by E. W. Beatty, President C. P. R., and E. Alexander, Secretary. The inscription on the scroll reads:

"In honor of duty nobly done. This scroll serves to commemorate that, while in the service of the Canadian Pacific Railway (the recipient's name appears here), relinquished his position in response to the call of King and country and served during the Great War 1914-1918."

The base of the scroll is set off by the names of the following battles: Ypres, Festubert, the Somme, Vimy, Hill 70, Passchendaele, Amiens, Cambrai, Drocourt-Queant and Mons.

Regina.—The Saskatchewan better farming train brought its highly successful tour to a gratifying conclusion recently, and Mr. Williams, agricultural agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, expressed his belief that this train, the biggest yet operated, with the biggest attendance, also got bigger and better result than any of its predecessors.

"Many cities," said Professor Waters, of the Animal Husbandry Department of the College of Agriculture, who was on the train through the whole trip, "will be built as a result of the visit of the better farming train."

Professor Potts, who was lecturing on dairying and who was in charge of the dairy exhibit, also stated that in the southern and eastern parts of the province there is a very noticeable increase in the interest taken in cow testing work, and one result of the tour of the train, he was convinced, will be that a very large number of dairymen will now adopt this method and many others, formerly doubters, are now convinced of the value of this system.

Lubrication, ignition and carburetor troubles were the chief matters upon which farmers sought the assistance of Mr. Josephson in the fac- mechanics car, and he believed that an unprecedented number of power users benefitted by bringing their problems for solution to the better farming train.

Both the household science and the forestry sections were very busy throughout the trip.

In the field husbandry are Miss Brayford's bees attracted considerable attention. This lady has kept bees for many years near Warren, and last year her output of honey reached well over 900 pounds.

J. K. Pinkerton, who was in charge of the poultry car, also considers part of the trip, states there seems to be a good deal of doubt regarding the often treated poultry houses, some complaining that the birds "sweat" their combs. This, he said, was because the house was overcrowded and the more hens there are the more moisture comes from the condensing breath. A hen's temperature is 106, and she can stand a cold perfectly well, so long as the air is dry. The often treated poultry house with insulated walls and properly ventilated, has been found absolutely satisfactory at the College of Agriculture.

The total attendance for the tour was 32,501, and surpassed the former best attempt by 107. The difference between this year and last year would have been many years had it not been for the fact that heavy rain spoiled the last day's attendance when three meetings were scheduled. The average daily attendance was 1,061, and the total attendance was committed of 2,775 men; 6,332 women; 13,971 boys and girls; and 9,508 babies.

ATTEMPT TO REVIVE TURKISH INDUSTRY

The Press Sounds Warning of Industrial Decay of Nation

Constantinople, Aug. 21.—A campaign for the revival of industrial activity in Turkey has been started by the Turkish press. The influential "Heri," a moderate newspaper, says:

"The slow extinction of Moslem economic activity has been going on now for several years. This can only serve the interests of our enemies, who observe our hands becoming in such a state and can the idea that the day will soon come when the Turkish nation will die out automatically.

"We must arouse ourselves to this danger from day by day our commerce and industry are declining as farewell. We are selling to strangers our house properties and our real estate, and very soon we shall begin selling them our furniture and movable property. Turks must awake from their slumber; they must link their private life to the national needs. They must be economic and save and work. By numbering that to waste a single piaster is an attack upon the national destiny."

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

THE OTHER FELLOW.

I like to sit and talk to myself
On walk with myself in the shady wood,
I am a rather erratic elf,
But my other self's inclined to be good

And as we walk I argue and plead,
He hath much horse sense—nothing can more it,
And when for sympathy I'm in need,
He calls me a fool and—proceeds to prove it!

Together we walk when no one's by,
Impatient he hears my plaint, I wis,
To tell him secrets I do not fear,
So often, I talk to myself like this:

The other night when out with the boys,
I busted my last ten-dollar bill,
And how it irks with unseemly noise.
Now, why were you silent—what kept you still?
Why didn't you give me a hint and nudge me,
Why didn't you run away with my bat?
You say that nothing on earth could budge me,
When out with a daredevil crowd like that!

You never spoke, and you let me sliver,
A ten-dollar bill into splinters quiver,
That's not exactly what makes me shiver,
I met with the girl I love! That's all!

I saw her face in the white light, blankly,
I saw her pause for a moment still,
Then pass me by—and I tell you frankly,
I've lost my girl and a ten-spot bill!

I stood a moment as weak as water,
I felt the anguish and know the woe
Of Shylock wailing his ducats and daughter,
One were enough, but oh! Oh! \ tortured thought fills my soul with cares,
Sure death shall part us I know it well,
Which of us two shall climb the stairs?
Which of us two go down to hell?

Alone together I talk to you,
To make confession my soul is loath,
You know it's true—I know it's true,
The blessed Jesus can't save us both!

As true as five and two make seven,
Here is a fact we two must face,
Both of us can't go to Heaven,
Nor both go down to the Other Place!

His Neighbor's Hen

By H. L. RAYBOLD

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Slowly a thunderstorm gathered on the western horizon as George Davis, seated on the edge of the wheelbarrow in the vegetable garden, hoed his rows. Then came again, stopping ever an instantly held breaded unmistakably for the past appearing row of beans and peas, and sprouts, first fruits of his planting. That confounded white hen!

He had supposed that at last he had stopped every gap in the fence where she might gain access—yet here she was, panicked and voracious as usual.

Was he to be pestered to death by neighbors who kept hens and let them roam unrestrained? He hated to live in untruthfulness with those around him. Already he had a grudge against the neighbor in his rear, who happened to be his landlord and who, exercising the prerogatives thereof, had jumped his rent an absurdly unreasonable $10 a month.

And now these people on his left were forcing him to become unpleasant by ignoring his contentatious bantering of the wire fence with dare and his tersely uttered shooing of their troublesome fowl.

Thunderation! She was scratching his beans just where the soil was broken with the sharp hoe, and her flings to reach the light. "Too much is enough," he cried, and started in pursuit. The hens had him in the circles around his garden and in diagonals across it and ended in a mass of tangled shoots at the base of the white lilac hedge which was the pride of the house. He caught the intruder and, for temporary safekeeping, stowed her away in a tattered bag, just emptied of seed potatoes.

Then, after considerable mopping of his brow, he searched in his pocket for a card and pencil and, after a momentous deliberation, wrote very plainly the following sentiment:

"Regret to state that next time I return this bird will feel called to do so on a platter."

Attaching a cord about the hen's neck with a piece of twine he had been using to straighten his rows, George dropped the hen over the fence and returned to his hoeing.

The white lilac hedge concealed from him the greater part of his neighbor's yard, and when, some time later, he heard voices the other side of the bushes, he at first paid no heed. Then, gradually, a certain rising inflection and several ejaculations caught his attention, and he became, in spite of himself, aware of their words. In fact, he at length quite shamefacedly ceased hoeing and inclined his ear very definitely in the direction of the hedge.

"Well—of all things!"

"Did you ever?"

"I suppose he thinks—"

"Every one is mad—odd and this proves it. But he doesn't mean it. He wouldn't dare!"

The last three words really settled the fate of the hen. Wouldn't dare kill that old hen! Not that was really his garden faster than he could plant it? But, hark, what were they saying?

"Go right along back and dig up his old garden!" Laughter.

Two days later, after discovering the nibbled remains of the first sprouts of his second planting, Burleon corn, George made a neat job of it, down to the pricking and drowning and shooting of the hen—without question of premeditation. It would never do to throw the bird under the fence, for always it is be discovered.

That would be equivalent to providing a banquet for all the cats in the neighborhood. No, he must be more subtle. Accordingly and now that the moment of his revenge had actually arrived, George, who was not by nature vindictive, shrank from making the most of it. However, he was not to see to get his hand to the plow, to use a seasoned metaphor, and there back.

Shortly after dusk, strengthening his resolution with memories of his wrongs, his arms bordered with a plaster (as promised in the note) on which stained the remains lustfully ready for the oven, George peered through the hedge. Yes, some one, indistinct in the twilight, was watering down a garden. Great! Into that—keeping one's own garden intact by another one's pet hen into somebody else's garden.

"Ahem," he quietly invited attention. "I'm sorry, but I had to keep my word. Here she is!" His deposited the platter and turned quickly away. He had seen the hose drop suddenly at the sound of his voice and he had gathered an incoherent: "What—why —who—" Then silence, unbroken and deep.

Two meetings later George seemed in his wicker box and contemplated his two-inch peas with satisfaction. Peas by the middle of July were going to be a tradition. His beans were doing well, too. He must put in a row of cantaloupes and some watermelons also some bush limas. He hoped his neighbor was prospering. He must ask Mr. Chalks Early Jewel tomato plants.

He sang your pardon, Mr. Davis, but I'm returning your platter. And the hen was simply delicious."

She had a wonderful voice. Even in his embarrassment George was aware of that. In fact, if he had known the owner of that perfidious hen was the possessor of such a voice, of such eyes and bright brown golden hair and such delicious cheeks and—

He was blushing awkwardly. "It was an unpardonable thing to do," he began humbly, "and it's quite too late to apologize."

"Oh, don't bother about that," said the girl with the sweetest of smiles. "But tell me, Mr. Davis, why are your peas so much taller than ours?"

From that moment dated many long discussions on peas and other vegetables and the weather and the peace treaty and our national parks and how much it cost to furnish a home. And the transition from one topic to another, it was evident, was entirely naturally that neither realized just how it came about. Even Elaine Chandler herself afterward that the whole thing seemed "preordained," considering the hen and all.

George himself gave due credit to the hen.

"Darling," he murmured, just after the last kiss, "I always vowed I'd be good enough to make a garden with him every spring for the rest of their lives, but I had never had when I was stepping about my garden was to bring me you, she would now be living in a golden cage, fed with distilled water and ambrosial chick feed.

"But, old dear, dear," he went on, "any other woman would have been furious at my insolent cheek. Why weren't you?"

"Why should it have been?" said Elaine coolly. Then, after a little pause: "If I want to tell you," she added, "that your hen—whose name was Irene, I believe—"

"Well, hasn't you noticed that our boys are tightly named after famous theatre Wintry Rocks, and this was a Wyandotte—case comb, you know?"

"In my poultry fancier," returned George, "and I don't know anything about combs. But I thought I overheard you when you found the hen with the card—"

"Yes," said Elaine, "and the card you used was the advertising card of the local dentist who lives in back of you. He owns our house as well as yours. We supposed he thought it was one of our cards. They could get from our place to his through your yard. But after you scattered the goods we knew it was you, and in the meantime I had learned—" she giggled.

"What?" cried George.

"That the only person in the neighborhood who kept white Wyandottes is our landlord!"

George threw back his head and laughed. "So I tilled the hen of the man who dumped me up. But tell me, dear, were you so willing to shet me in my little game boy and guided me to ambition. His beans were doing well, too. He must put in a row of cantaloupes and some bush limas. He hoped his neighbor was prospering. He must send off his Chalks Early Jewel tomato plants.

"I sang your pardon, Mr. Davis, but I'm returning your platter. And the hen was simply delicious."

She had a wonderful voice. Even in his embarrassment George was aware of that. In fact, if he had known the owner of that perfidious hen was the possessor of such a voice, of such eyes and bright brown golden hair and such delicious cheeks and—

Music and Drama

BIG THREE STAR BILL AT GRIFFIN'S TONIGHT.

An excellent program of screen entertainment has been arranged for exhibition at Griffin's Tonight to Wednesday, when three selected screen offerings introducing three famous stars will be introduced.

"Virginia Courtship" is the first feature offering and is adapted from the famous old play by Eugene Presbury, but it has been modernized and brought down to the twentieth century. Miss May McAvoy, as Prudence Carfax, has opportunities which allow her emotional powers full range: first as a tomboy kind of a little white slave boy, running wild over the Virginia plantation, and later as a young woman, having her first and only romance with the "plane of her guardian, and being saved by him from a band of criminals into whose hands she has fallen. Miss McAvoy's leading role in this picture is Casson Ferguson, further supports includes, Richard Tucker, Kathlyn Williams, and Alec B. Francis. As a tenspun "bad man" "The Bearcat," stars "The Singin' Kid," turned out to be an awful old cuss! He couldn't sing, but he could. He said so himself. Loudly. Melodiously. With rhyming verses and plenty of feeling. He was never a showdown, he always shot the right man and never the wrong one. Which was—Hoyle's words—seems for a bad man's regular conduct.

Starring with that and including a lot more, "The Bearcat," the second big reel Triangle-Ince feature, is the same program starring "Hoot" Gibson will present both comedy and drama. Gibson will be seen in a role which the situation of a man singing about how mean he was and failing to live up to his song.

Lillian Rich, that fascinating British musical comedy star plays opposite the star.

Harold Lloyd is appearing on the same program in an original three reel comedy titled "A Sailor-Made Man."

She could not help smiling and wondering at his embarrassment and tried to help him out.

"Just say it right out," she said, "I'll agree it's not quite so bad."

"Well, well, would it be any harm for a fellow to ask you what you're doing to the movies tonight?"

"I don't think it would be a bit of harm," he laughed, "and I hope the 'what' will do it because I know Billy and I would enjoy it."

"Great! he exclaimed, throwing his hat in the air. "Let's go."

"You've made a 'date,'" she told him her eyes scathing.

"Ten thousand years old the fourth of August, possess one Master's degree in architecture, one degree in sewed-hand typewriter and contracts for five different buildings," he told her in injured tones.

"That's quite a wonderful record," she admitted, "and I believe it. I take it all back. Now I'll run and find Billy and my hat and we'll go."

"Sorry I can't accompany you," a hilarious sound of movies, came ridin from the next room and all the while Mantell knew that he was getting to deeper and deeper water. Mrs. Franklin must be wondering what the people at the hotel were thinking of her, but he couldn't help it. He was in a pinch. It wasn't any harm going out with him and Billy and often Mr. Mantell would be with them. Surely without her. He was evidently very fond of the child.

The night before they left, Mrs. Franklin put her little charge to bed, and, dressed downstairs in time to go to the lawn to take a last look at the place that had been home to her. In the half light she saw a familiar figure coming toward her and was delighted to recognize Arthur Mantell.

"I'm so glad to have this chance to tell you two things," she said.

"Would to heaven I had the chance to tell you one!" he almost groaned.

"You mustn't talk so tragically," she reproved gently. "There's no necessity for it now, that I wanted to tell you," she went on, "was, first, how much your kindness has meant to Billy and me, and, second—but this is a dreadful secret and, you must promise not to give it away."

"I promise," he said, listlessly.

"Well, I'm not Mrs. Franklin at all. I never was married," she confessed.

"What?" he gasped, jumping up in front of her.

"No," she answered breathlessly, catching his excitement.

"Well, well! Oh, heavens! How do you explain it anyway?" he stammered.

"I never did it," said the girl demurely.

An hour later he confided solemnly to Billy: "You needn't call me uncle, Alice. Why did you lead me such a dance?"

"That's easily explained. You see, Billy's mother has two other children, but she has to stay home and care for them and her husband, but the doctor insisted that Billy have a summer of this wonderful air. I was the only one to take him and, unmarried, I could never have stayed here without a chaperon, so I decided to be—married!"

"So you shall," he said to ruptured tones. "I'll get the license and the preacher now if you'll let me—"

"The settire is ideal," she replied fervently, "the moon and the stars and those big wonderful trees, but I guess we'd better wait a while, dear."

"Carefully, dear, and don't put your tongue out when you go write."

The young woman sat on the grass with her baby boy and guided his unsteady hand.

"That's it!" she said a moment later. "You're done it beautifully. Now, if you want to play a little you may."

With a squeal of delight the boy threw down the pencil and crawled off, then ran away to chase the dancing butterflies.

"Mary, I join the party, Mrs. Franklin!" said a pleasant voice beside her as the owner dropped gracefully on the ground at her feet.

"What would you do if I were to say 'no?'" she laughed.

"Too late now—besides, I knew you wouldn't."

"Talk about the vanity of women! How about the conceit of men?" she teased.

"That nephew of yours is one nice kid," he said, changing the subject adroitly that neither realized just how it came about. Even Elaine Chandler herself afterward that the whole thing seemed "preordained," considering the hen and all.

George himself gave due credit to the hen.

"Darling," he murmured, just after the last kiss, "I always vowed I'd be good enough to make a garden with him every spring for the rest of their lives, but I had never had when I was stepping about my garden was to bring me you, she would now be living in a golden cage, fed with distilled water and ambrosial chick feed.

Developing Canada's Oriental Trade

With its fleet of fast-moving, short-lived fleet of passenger and commercial express train services, and chained palatial hotels, the Canadian Pacific Company have laid an easy highway around the world, and another link between West and East has been established by the Empress of Russia," which recently joined the Empress of Asia and Empress of Japan at Yokohama, Kobe, Nagasaki, Shanghai, Manila and Hong Kong.

The "Empress of Russia" and "Empress of Asia" are already well known on the Pacific Ocean, and become almost as famous as the Empress of Britain and Empress of Australia," sailings from Vancouver will now be as frequent as to provide in connection with the Canadian Pacific Atlantic Express a fortnightly through service from Europe.

It is now recognized that the Canadian Pacific route to the Orient is quite as easy for the traveller as the all-rail route, and of course much shorter. Yokohama is reached from Britain in less than three weeks, and Hong Kong in four weeks.

The "Empress of Australia" is the biggest commercial vessel to pass through the Panama Canal. The vessel is 588 feet in length, 75 feet in breadth, 46 feet 3 inches in depth up to upper deck, and of about 21,500 tons Railway and the Canadian Pacific Steamships have been making record after record on the Pacific and are now many miles in the lead of other steamship and transportation concerns operating on the Pacific.

The year 1922 saw the establishment of a regular trans-Pacific service, with three chartered steamships, the Britania, the Pacific, and the Abyssinia. The latter's first outbound cargo consisted of 40 tons of freight. Three years later, in July, 1990, the Canadian Pacific controlled a contract with the British Government providing for a small subsidy, of 440,000 a year, with the services of three twin-screw steamships between Vancouver, Japan, and China. To fulfil the terms of this contract, the Empress of India, the Empress of China, and the Empress of Japan were specially built. These steamers were of about the same size as the Empress register, and began their work in 1891.

With the arrival of the Empress of Australia, the company inaugurates a service whereby a steamer will leave Vancouver every two weeks for the Orient.

Some of the Canadian Pacific ships on the Pacific now are:

	Tons.
Empress of Canada	22,500
Empress of Australia	21,400
Empress of Asia	16,907
Empress of Russia	16,810
Empress of Japan	5,940
Monteagle	6,163

To Reach the High-Class Trade

"Very kind of you to notify me by Long Distance of this sale of gowns. I expect to be in town to-morrow, and will call and ask for you, personally."

Out-of-town women show a strong tendency to trade where they feel they are known. Get one of them to visit your store—and soon your's will become one of "her" stores.

No letter or advertisement will convey to them the kind of welcome you can extend by Long Distance. Because you are talking, the invitation becomes more unconventional. It suggests the friendly relation you would like to see established. Distance does indeed seem to "lend enchantment" to opportunities offered in such a personal way.

The method of presentation is three-quarters of any sale—what you say, and how you say it. The customers are right at your elbow. Don't call on them—call them up. It will not be the telephone's fault if you don't sell them.

Every Bell Telephone is a Long Distance Station

Montreal Board of Trade Perpetuates Maisonneuve

There is a striking resemblance as between Maisonneuve, founder of Montreal, and Sir Henry Pellatt, the big man who thoughts were of the West, so does the resemblance to man and to-day's Montreal, the spirit of the West is the adventurous pioneer in the pulse of the body, and the head, vision, courage, determination and the clear-sightedness and understanding mind.

Maisonneuve was one of the "best" of gallant "men" and noble women who laid the foundations of the Canada of to-day, long ages embarked upon the perilous adventure, with their faith in the new land lasts a living flame in the hearts of their descendants. They were moved by their knowledge geography and nature, a link between East and West, and a steadily growing population of 1,000 miles across the prairie. To know that it is endowed with a richness of natural resources beyond the power of man to calculate. Above all they were precise in its attainment to a place and a voice in the councils of the nations.

Retrospect is often pleasant. The true Canadian has little time for that. His heart and mind are on the present and the future. He knows that if his country is to come to full fruition it cannot be by any effort of the people alone on the part of its people individually, and collectively. No single province which is not dependent on its neighbors can afford to disregard another. Each must be in sympathy with all the rest. The East must share in the problems of the West as well as in the joys and prosperity of the West. The West must look to the East. Bound by an invisible but unbreakable chain of mutual affection and goodwill they can and will go forward to the glorious destiny in store for the world's great nations.

The development of the national spirit has been fostered in many an hour of peril, difficulty, and struggle. It is beginning to blossom at times and seasons of peace. Canada has been greatly advanced of late years by the action of progressive organizations in sending delegations to many sections of the country, so that their members may add to their fund of knowledge of their own land. Such an organization, the Montreal Board of Trade which will celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of its founding by beginning on September 1, ushers days' tour of the Dominion. The members will see only one side of the country, but they will see its most beautiful scenic settings, but the journey will be so arranged as to give them a new perspective of its wealth of soil, forests, mines and waters, and impressions of its industrial and commercial growth, that, would be impossible of visualizing in any other way.

From Montreal the party will travel westward via Toronto and the Great Lakes, thence from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, the greatest primary grain centre on the continent, across the vast prairie lands and through the Rockies to Vancouver and Victoria.

On the return journey they will make the 330-mile cruise up the north Pacific Coast from Vancouver to Prince Rupert, on one of the palatial Canadian National Railways steamers. This part of the journey will give the party a splendid idea of the development in the mining, fishing, lumber and pulp and paper industries of British Columbia, with all their future possibilities. At Prince Rupert, Canada's most northerly Pacific port, lewn out of the solid rock of Kaien Island, there will be every opportunity to gain an insight into the necessity of the harbor and salmon industry of the province. From Prince Rupert eastward the party will be accompanied with the Skeena River, with its historic and romantic traditions, its arresting grandeur, and its fame as one of the most prolific salmon streams in the world. They will see too, some of the Bulkley and Nechako River valley country, one of the newest fields of settlement opened up in the west. Unknown to the vast majority of Canadians, the fertile valleys that lay between the mountain ranges in this area, are suitable for mixed farming, dairying, fruit growing and cattle raising. In the years to come their productivity, now a matter of knowledge to comparatively few, will offer opportunities for settlement open to thousands of new people.

Leaving Prince George, the party will pass through Mount Robson Park. This is a veritable wonderland of mountains, rising to 650 square miles in extent and set aside by the government of British Columbia as a national playground and wild life sanctuary. Here will be obtained an excellent view of Mount Robson, with an altitude of 13,068 feet. It towers above the surrounding peaks, sublime, majestic, with green glistening glaciers and pure white snow fields at its summit. Sometimes its own sublimity is lost amid the mists and clouds, quite often the summit is the centre of raging storms. Trout on Mount Robson they beat in vain.

Next Jasper Park, another mountain kingdom, but of greater extent, embracing 4,400 square miles of sublime mountain scenery, a wonderful lake and valley well spend a day at Jasper Lodge, the new Alpine chalet built on the shores of Lac Beauvert by Canadian National Railways, and the first of a series to be built throughout these Northern Canadian Rockies. At night they will leave for Edmonton.

From Edmonton the homeward route will be through the rich farm lands of the northern part of the prairie provinces to Winnipeg following the tram-continental line of Canadian National Railways through the rich pulp forests and new farm lands of Northern Ontario to Cochrane, down through the Clay Belt and the mining districts over the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway to North Bay, thence to Ottawa, and back to Montreal.

THE LATE D. V. SINCLAIR

The city of Belleville has lost a valued public spirited citizen in the passing of the late Mr. D. V. Sinclair. From a modest beginning, he built up one of the largest and most successful business houses in the city. His interests, however, were not confined to commercial matters; he was an enthusiastic church worker, and took an active part in public affairs generally. For some years he served the city as alderman, but it was in connection with Y. M. C. A. and temperance work that he made his largest contribution to the social life of the city. He was the leader of the temperance forces in the community, and travelled considerably throughout Ontario and the United States addressing meetings in behalf of temperance. He also was the prime leader in the Chautauqua movement, and this year bore the entire risk of bringing it to the city.

His death came unexpectedly, as he was reported to be progressing favorably after the operation. One week ago he walked down to business and declared that he had never felt better in his life, but that he had decided to undergo the operation for an internal weakness which caused him periodical spells of severe suffering. It seems scarcely possible that a man of such apparent good health and such vigor and alertness of mind could pass out so suddenly, and his influential presence will be missed in his house of business and in the community.

A few months ago Mr. Sinclair took a trip to Palestine, and his mind at the end was filled with pictures of the Holy Land, of which he was never tired of talking. He has now passed out to that country whose bourne no traveller returns". We offer our sincere sympathy to the family in the great loss they have sustained.

SHALL WE FREEZE?

President Harding has his hands full of strikers just now, and all the load threatenings indulged in a few weeks ago have died down and have apparently had no real effect upon the situation. The men were practically ordered by the Government to get back to work at once or the mines would be operated without them. So far the men have not gone back to work and the mines are not being operated. It is true that the soft coal miners in some districts have turned in, but the anthracite miners are still out and may remain out indefinitely.

To make things worse the men in our own coal fields in Nova Scotia have struck work, and a bitter dispute has been started between the masters and men. Well might the average citizen cry out to both mine owners and workers "a plague on both your houses!"

Have labor leaders absolutely no consideration for the public that they should ruthlessly throw a whole continent into a state of commercial chaos and endanger the lives of millions of people who have no part in their dispute? Have the miners no sufferings hardships and injustices to such an extent that it is necessary to penalize the nation—especially the poor of the nation—to the extent of depriving them of the means of protecting themselves from the rigors of a semi-arctic winter?

The Ottawa Journal, while urging the Government to action in securing coal, says that, of course, "no one will really freeze to death." The Journal may have some special inside information to sustain this supposition—we sincerely hope so, but we are by no means sure, and we doubt if the editor of that paper knows anything more about the possibilities of securing coal than we do.

The fact of the matter is no one seems to know anything at all about it. Even President Harding and Mr. Hoover vary their prognostications from time to time. As for our own Governors they are excellent talkers, and are adepts at appointing committees, controllers and sub-controllers. Fuel Controller J. A. Ellis on Friday contradicted a statement by W. C. Cox, President of the Toronto Coal Merchants Association, to the effect that there was any amount of bituminous coal available. Mr. Ellis stated that he had been "informed" from Washington that the misuse of fuel orders might result in a cutting off of the supply from across the border.

We were also told that Mr. Ellis had gone to Ottawa on Friday night. It may be that there are some undeveloped coal resources beneath the House of Commons or on the golf links around the capital city, but it would seem more to the point if Mr. Ellis had taken a trip to Washington—or, better still to Pittsburg or even to Nova Scotia—to discover for himself at first hand what are the actual possibilities for supplying the people of Canada with coal during the coming winter months.

Those who have experienced coal famines in the past declare that they never want to go through such a terrible ordeal again. They will certainly do so if the indications as to the amount of coal in store are to be relied upon.

A GREAT TIME IN DUBLIN

The Globe sometimes tries to be humorous and fails; but occasionally it accomplishes a good witticism quite unintentionally. The other day it published a big headline announcing "Seven" fighting in Dublin—"Sniping from House-tops continues all night—Garrison answers with Machine guns—Damage to Windows and Buildings". The heading finished with words

"BUT NO CASUALTIES"

THAT'S THE COUNTER"

There is a lot of subtle humor in these last lines, which we do not accuse the editor of, as we believe it to have been quite accidental. It is the same as saying that the Irish men had a great time in Dublin, bullets and brick-bats were flying around everywhere, but nothing occured to mar the enjoyment of the melee.

PASSING COMMENT

An American aviator is reported to have skirted a thunder-storm. A sort of modern Ajax defying the lightening.

It was a kindly concession on the part of the miners union representatives to permit the officials of the mines in Nova Scotia to work at the pumps to prevent flooding.

HERE AND THERE

LONG NOVELS.

The longest novels of recent years are pygmies compared with some that enjoyed great popularity in the 7th century. Mlle. de Sandey's "Le Grand Cyrus," for instance, as "Englished by a Person of Honour" filled five folio volumes of over 500 pages each, whilst another novelist of the period, La Calprenede, was even more diffuse, one of his works, "Cleopatre" running into 23 volumes folio! That the length did not appal the novel readers of their day is apparent from the fact that the Paris publishers of "Le Grand Cyrus" made 100,000 crowns out of the first edition alone.—Montreal Gazette.

WHY THE WISE SOMETIMES ARE CREDULOUS.

Dr. Maurice de Fleury writing in Le Figaro, offers an elaborate solution of the problem that is presented when a man of more than ordinary intelligence shows in one particular domain, credulity that would be astonishing in an ignorant peasant. The text of the article is a recently published "Traite de Metapsychique"—the word as used means what we commonly called "spiritualism"—by the really very eminent Professor Charles Richet, whose contributions to medicine have earned for him international fame. Yet in this book the professor avows his belief in clairvoyance, in divining rods, in the speaking of unknown tongues by mediums, in premonitions, in table tipping and rapping, in ectoplasm, in levitation and hauntings.

And he goes even further, declaring that all these he has proved to be scientific reality, but that many more which he has not proved probably also are real.

Dr. De Fleury, reading the book with a warm admiration of the writer's achievements, expresses his amazement at the slightness of the evidence to which Professor Richet trusts, and at the absurd inadequacy of the precautions against fraud taken at the seances he attended. To explain why such a man should be astonishingly credulous he offers two theories.

The first of them is that judgment—the power to weigh evidence—may be wanting in men of perfect honesty and high attainments. The second is that men like Professor Richet assume that people with whom they have dealings are honest and have an unconquerable reluctance for charging or admitting that they are either mistaken or fraudulent. These two theories are plausible enough, and they may be the beginning of a solution of Dr. De Fleury's problem but they are far from clearing up the mystery completely —New York Times.

HUNG OR HANGED!

A correspondent has taken someone to task for the use of the phrase "hung for murder," but the alleged offender remains stoically "unpenitent." 'Cause why? Because the law retains the old-archaic form of the past tense of hang (there is no obligation on the part of modern newspapers to remain old-fashioned. If there is no distinction between hanging a man and hanging a sheep, or a picture in the present tense, why insist on it in the past tense? Many words are lawful but not expedient—as for instance, the word "bangability," a sound dictionary word, the use of which would procure us over a strait jacket.

THE MOON LADY.

Sing a song of sunbeam,
Twilight and dew.
I sat nodding on a stile
And the moon came through

The moon, she was a lady
With floating silver hair,
Garments all of gossamer
And pearl chains to wear.

She made a sum of silence,
Lips with finger pressed
For all the little wood-things
Were cuddled on her breast.

Field-mouse and chipmunk,
Bird and butterfly,
She never said a word because
Each sobery did lie.

I got up on tippy-toe
And let down the bars;
And the lady moon went through,
Out to join the stars.

NORTHCLIFFE AS PICTURED IN MIRRORS OF DOWNING STREET

The personality of Lord Northcliffe, which appears to the British and Canadian publics in so many different lights, is the subject of one of the most striking essays in "The Mirrors of Downing Street," a book written by a man who signs himself "A Gentleman With a Duster." A great surgeon, notes the writer, has said that Carlyle suffered all his life from an internal ulcer, and "one may speculate on the difference there would have been in his writings if he had undergone an operation which to-day is quite common." This remark occurs to him when he thinks about Lord Northcliffe. The writer goes on:

"There is something wrong with his health. For a season he is almost boyish in his spirits, and not only a charming and a most considerate host, but a spirit animated by the kindliest, broadest and cheerfullest sympathies. Then comes a period of darkness. He seems to imagine that he may be libelled, declares that he cannot eat this and that, shuts himself up from his friends, and feels the whole burden of the world pressing on his soul.

His Evanescent Quality.

"It is impossible to judge him as one would judge a perfectly healthy man.

"The most conspicuous thing in his character is its translucence. One is aware in him of an anaesthetic quality, as if his mind suddenly stopped leaping in one direction to begin jumping in a quite contrary direction. It cannot be said that his mind works in any direction. It is not a trained mind. It does not know how to think and cannot support the burden of trying to think. It springs at ideas and goes off with them in haste for great far reflection. He drops these ideas when he sees an excuse for another leap. Sequence in Lord Northcliffe is a synonym for monotony. He has no spirit de suite. But he has leaps of real genius. As admirable title for his biography would be "The Fits and Starts of a Discontinuous Soul." There is something of St. Vitus in his psychology. You might call him the Spring-Heeled Jack of Journalism.

No Telling What Next.

"A story told of one of his journalists illustrates the difficulty of dealing with so unquiet an agency. Lord Northcliffe invented this journalist, let his call him Mr. H., to luncheon. They approached the lift of Carlton House and Lord Northcliffe drew back to let his guest enter before him—he had excellent manners, and when he is a host is scrupulously polite to the best of his people in his employment. Mr. H. approached the lift, and, raising what you say S.S."

His hat and making a profound bow to the boy in charge of it, passed in before Lord Northcliffe. Nothing was said during the descent. On leaving the lift, Mr. H. again raised his hat and bowed low to the boy. When they were out of earshot Lord Northcliffe remonstrated with him on his behaviour. 'You shouldn't joke,' he said, 'with those boys; it makes discipline difficult.' 'Joke!' exclaimed Mr. H. 'Good heavens, I wasn't joking; how do I know that to-morrow he will not be the editor of The Daily Mail?'

Romantic Quality of Mind.

"This story has a real importance. It emphasises a remarkable characteristic of Lord Northcliffe's variability. It emphasises the romantic quality of his mind. Nothing would please him more than to discover in one of his office boys an editor for The Times. His own life has given him almost a novelette's passion for romance. He lives in that atmosphere. Few men I have known are so free from snobbishness or so indifferent to the petty conventions of society. The dull life of the world is hateful to him. He would make mad havoc of formalism of the suburbia sensational, he would rush the history of mankind a fair story.

"I am disposed to think that it is the romantic quality of his mind which is the source of his power. All the men about him have a touch of the prosaic. He is the artist in command of the commercial mind, the poet flogging dull words into a kind of wild magic. Born at Chapelizod, Ireland, July 15, 1865, Alfred Charles Harmsworth Viscount Northcliffe, started his career as a subordinate editor in a publishing house, writing answers to correspondents. This suggested to him the newspaper idea which he realized later by publication of a weekly magazine called "Answers," which was started in 1888.

WIT AND HUMOR

A Good Reason.

Little Teddy was very full of questions. Approaching the aged nurse on the pier again, he said

"What time does the tide come in, Mr. Fisherman?"

The aged man looked at him wearily. He had told several times already "six times, lassie! he said "At 5.55."

Little Teddy explained:

"You see, I heard you the first time, but I like to see you whiskers wobble when you talk."

That's Quite Different.

A small boy stood in front of a grocery store one day looking at a display of apples and pears. He moved toward the fruit, then back again several times.

At last father went outside and said to the youngster: "Are you trying to steal something, son?"

"No, mister, I ain't trying to steal anything. I'm trying not to."

He Nearly Guessed.

"I'm improving in drawing, mother," said the little girl.

"Are you, dear? That's good!"

"Yes. I drawed a cake on my slate and brother guessed it was an apple. He knew it was something to eat anyway, didn't he?"

Flashlights.

The important man always has too much on his mind to bother about his own importance.

"If I knew anything else either fellow who would you blame when things go wrong?

Knowing when to talk is even better than knowing how.

What a world it would have been if everything had been born with the gift of speech-making!

Word to the Wise.

"I'm sure we shall be on good terms," said the man who had just moved into the neighborhood to the grocer on the corner.

"No doubt of it, sir. Especially," he added, as an afterthought, "if items are cash."

Safety First.

"Mr. Reizes," said the workman, "I should like to ask you for a rise in my wages. I have just been married."

"Sorry I can't help you," said the employer; "for accidents which happen outside the factory the company is not responsible."

No Harm Done.

"Don't you think it's wrong to fish on Sunday, Brudder Jones?"

"Not for me, deacon, 'cause ah does it reliciously." Ah allus prays for a nibble an' give thanks when ah lands a fish."

A Poor Scout.

Wife—Did you notice the chinchilla coat on the woman sitting in front of us at church this morning?

Husband—Um, I'm afraid I was losing most of the time.

Wife—Um! A lot of good the service did you.

Amiable Birds.

"Bobby, dear, run out and shut the chicken house door for mother."

The little fellow went willingly, and when he got back she asked: What did the chickens say?"

"Oh, they didn't say anything—they just kinda smiled," said Bobby.

PRESS OPINIONS

THE COAL SITUATION.

(The Ottawa Journal.)

There is a good deal of criticism of the lateness of action by the Governments at Ottawa and Toronto looking to relief for the public in the prospective fuel shortage. This criticism will be intensified by the statements appearing in the press of Saturday in which the Advisory Fuel Committee appointed by the Dominion Government and the Fuel Administrator, appointed by the Ontario Government, Mr. J. A. Ellis, expressed the situation as being very serious. Both the Dominion and the Provincial Governments were slow to move in the matter. It is pointed out now that a five months' suspension of coal production cannot be overtaken in time to prevent a severe scarcity of coal next winter even should mining be resumed at once. Obviously, then, even a three months' suspension was certain to to have serious consequences, and so by everything but justification for governmental intervention at least a month or six weeks ago.

However, it is just apparent that the earlier appointment of fuel committees and fuel administrators cannot increase the production of coal. The statements made by the Dominion committee and the Ontario administrator at the end of the week indicate that their efforts will be devoted to securing allotments of coal for Canada and to the regulation of distribution here. Little could have been done in these matters before that cannot be done in ample time now. Allotments of American coal are of no use until the coal is being produced and rationing regulations will not help until there is coal to ration.

Apparently dependence is being placed very largely on soft coal. The Federal Fuel Committee states that all the anthracite produced in Great Britain goes through regular channels to British and European consumers. It is not expected that any considerable quantity will be available for Canada. Soft coal, as much of it as can be procured, must be employed to keep our homes warm next winter.

"The best criticism of a doctrine is its history."—Goldwin Smith.

God makes geniuses; all that man can do is to give them a chance.

I need no books to make me wise,

To them I turn when comes my need
Reflect and ponder as I read.

When anyone holds me 'neath its sway
"Beer and forebear", I hear them say;
Where'er I go, whate'er I do,
I see it; then I hear them chide.

When the hard path at last I take,
I read, "You did it for my sake."
Oh, charts that guide and chide and

LONG-DISTANCE FORECASTS FOR WINTER

A style does not spring full-grown from the heads of the creators of fashion, as many may believe. It takes longer, much longer to grow than for a spring seed to become a sunflower.

Next winter's fashions landed on our shores in June, some of them in May. They were looked and viewed and copied first in the wholesale houses; they are now creeping into the retail stores, and there they will be seen by those who will eventually wear them.

But long before June they were being designed and made up in the workrooms of the French dressmaker—daveyan and Worth in the month of April, almost before the spring mud was off the books; and long before that the creators of fabrics were deciding what the winter fashions were to be as they wove their winter materials and designed their embroideries and trimmings.

Fashion has been for some time "passe filly" this winter it will grow up—come out of its flapperhood into a glittering maturity and become decidedly "femme du monde." Already an unwonted air of sophistication has crept into it—more fluid lines, longer skirts, drapery, trains, beaded and brocaded fabrics; psychologically, it means more character, distinction and worldliness in dress. The new fashions will make the simple little chem ise frock of today look like a nursery apron. The type of woman who is essentially French—worldly, perfect ly groomed, versed in every trick and shading of the art of dress—is to be the fashionable woman of the winter.

The new sophistication creeps into the mode in the many details which before a fashion is completely formed give it to us piecemeal. Such details show clearly how the styles will develop.

Always there are "influences." This season there is more talk of Orest and of Russian than of anything else, and both foretell a mode of much sophistication and elaboration. The classic Greek draperies, though simple, are certainly not naive; the length and flow presume a certain dignity if not grandeur of carriage. The Russian influence means glowing color, elaborate embroidery, rich detail and fabric.—Harper's Bazaar.

"MADE IN GERMANY"

The remark is heard frequently in these days, sometimes in mere meditation, sometimes in bitterness: "How we seem to have forgotten the war!"

This reflection is not in accordance with the facts, except for the most frivolous among us, to whom it matters not what flag is flying, what nations are going down, so long as the frivolous ones can wear the latest "creations" in crepe and enjoy an afternoon bridge. It seems a fair cry from the trifles which bestrew the Dressing Table to the memories of a ghastly war; yet it was of the great struggle which two women were talking as they surveyed a certain pile of soap and a tempting hand of toilet water.

"You surely aren't going to buy any of it," said the Lady in Blue, regarding the soap as if it were perfumed with prussic acid.

"English magazines are advertising it," was the reply of the Matron in Brown ..." I saw a whole page in a woman's magazine from London that was devoted to these things."

"All the more shame to it," said the Lady in Blue. "Aren't there any decent soaps in England, France or Canada that we must buy stuff made by those people who destroyed French towns by the score and killed millions of British boys? The English who are using their advertisements must be softer than any soap that ever was made. I would not use it. If there's one other soap in the world."

"That's all very well," said the Matron in Brown, "but how is Germany going to pay her indemnity if the other nations are not going to trade with her? And look at the trouble she's been having with the mark!"

"I don't care what becomes of her," said the Lady in Blue with emphasis. "Go over to Flanders and see those trees and rows of little crosses, I don't think you'll feel like coming home and buying German soap or perfume. It would take a mountain of soap and an ocean of that perfume to make the name of that country bearable."

I don't think the matron in Brown bought the soap, but I must admit that my sympathies were with the Lady in Blue. Post-war political economy is all very well, but it will take more than German soap to wash away the memory of Hun infamies. Whether it be possible or desirable to wash away the memory of Hun infamies is another question. Cover the pan and let the corn cook 10 or 15 minutes. It will then be tender and have very little liquid to serve with it.

JOHN SOUTHERN STYLE.

Many persons do not enjoy eating corn from the cob. The following method is good and will prove a pleasant change:

3 cups corn, cut from uncooked cobs.
2 teaspoons sugar.
1 teaspoon salt.
1 teaspoon paprika.
3 tablespoons butter.
Water to cover.

Cook the corn in the butter for five minutes, add seasonings and water. Cover the pan and let the corn cook 10 or 15 minutes. It will then be tender and have very little liquid to serve with it.

THE BANDBOX

By Louis Joseph Vance

The cab bounced across Amsterdam Avenue, slid smoothly over to Columbus, ran for a block or so beneath the elevated structure and swung into Seventy-seventh Street, through which it pelted eastward and into Central Park.

Then for some moments it turned and twisted through the devious driveways, in a fashion so erratic that the passenger lost all grasp of her whereabouts, retaining no more than a confused impression of serpentine, tree-lined vistas, chequered with lamplight and the soft, dense shadows of foliage, and regularly spaced with starting electric arcs.

The night had fallen black beneath an overcast sky; the air that fanned her face was warm and heavy with humidity; what little breeze there was, aside from that created by the motion of the cab, bore on its leaden wings the scent of rain.

A vague uneasiness began to colour the girl's consciousness. She grew impressionably sensitive to the ominous quiet of the hour and place: the stark, dark stillness of the shrouded coppices and thickets, the emptiness of the paths. Once only she caught sight of a civilian, strolling in his shirt-sleeves, coat over his arm, hat in hand; and once only she detected, at a distance, the glow of a policeman's lamp, half blotted out by the shadow in which its wearer lounged at ease.

And that was far behind when, abruptly, with a grinding crash of brakes, the cab came from full headlong tilt to a dead halt within twice its length. She pitched forward from the seat with a cry of alarm, only saving herself a serious plunge through the instant that she had to thrust out her hands and catch the frame of the forward window.

Before she could recover, the chauffeur's companion had jumped out and run ahead, pausing in front of the hood to stoop and stare. In smaller moments he was back with a report couched in a technical jargon unintelligible to her understanding. She caught the words "stripped the gears" and from them inferred the irremediable.

"What is the matter?" she asked anxiously, bending forward.

The chauffeur turned his head and replied in a surly tone: "We've broken down, ma'm. You can't go no farther in this cab. I'll have to get another to take back to the garage."

"Oh," she cried in dismay, "how unfortunate! What am I to do?"

"Guess you'll have to get one'r walk back to Central Park West," was the answer. "You c'n get a car there to Columbus Circle. You'll find a-plenty taxis down there."

"You're quite sure—" she began to protest.

"Ah, they ain't no chanst of this car going another foot under its own power —cost until it's been a week 'r two in hospital. The only thing for you to do 's to hoof it, like I said."

"That's dead right," averred the other man. He was standing beside the body of the cab and now skimmed the door and held it open for her. "You might as well get down, if you're in any great hurry, ma'm."

Eleanor rose, eyeing the man distrustfully. His accent wasn't that of the kind of man who is accustomed to employ "ma'm." His back was toward the nearest lamp post, his face in shadow. She gained no more than a dim impression of a short, slender figure masked in a grey duster buttoned to the throat, and, above it, a face rendered indefinite by a short, pointed beard and a greasy motor-cap pulled well down over the eyes.

But there was nothing to de-but accept the situation. An accident was an accident—emphasis but irreparable. There was no alternative; she could do nothing but adopt the chauffeur's suggestion. She stepped out, turning back to get her bandbox.

"Bey pardon, ma'm. I'll get that for you."

The man by the door interposed an arm between Eleanor and the bandbox. She said, "Oh no!" and attempted to push past his arm.

Immediately he caught her by the shoulder and thrust her away with staggering violence. She reeled back half a dozen feet. Simultaneously she heard the fellow say, sharply: "All right—go ahead!" and saw him jump upon the step. On the instant, the cab shot away through the shadows, the door swinging wide while Eleanor's assailant scrambled into the body.

Before she could collect herself the car had disappeared round a curve in the roadway.

By her natural impulse was to scream, to start a hue-and-cry: "Stop thief!" But the strong element of common-sense in her make-up counselled her to, hold her tongue. In a trice she comprehended precisely the meaning of the masquerade—they—somebody aside from herself, Staff and Alison Landis—knew the secret of the bandbox and the compact necklace, and with astonishing intuition had planned this trap to gain possession of it. She was amazed to contemplate the penetrating powers of inference and deduction, the cunning and resource which had led simply in a short a time fathomed the mystery of the vanished necklace, but had discovered the accessory of blackmail and traced the right one to her hotel and possession, had divined and taken advantage of her impulse to return the property to its rightful owner without an instant's loss of time. And with this thought came another, more alarming in a brace of minutes the thieves would discover that the necklace had been abstracted from the hat and—out of such boldness wouldn't hesitate about turning back to run her down and take their booty by force.

To be continued.

THE FACE WONDERFUL

By BYRON STAUFFER, In Toronto Star

Have you seen him—the Man will be Wonderful Face?

I cannot tell you just where h ires, but he keeps bobbing up ever here, every now and then. Some mes he is tall; other times, pigmy. Broad-faced or narrow, rosy-cheeke r pale; it is all the same as to coun nance; that is, always wonderfo to look upon.

I have seen him as a Jew, a Pe rsotant and a Catholic; met him i ntario, speaking English, and i bubec, chattering in French; but a ays does he cause me to turn an ave one more look, for it is onl once in a while, sometimes quite ong while, that one sees a face which a Rembrandt would seize upon as subject for a study in majesty o untenance.

What is there about his face tha makes it wonderful?

Well, it is certainly not beauti wrow nor length of chin nor withs ge of nose or eye. I think I wil all it Expression, and it has to do supply with environs of the eyes an mouth. That is as far as I can n describing the mechanism of th hing; I can only say that there s something noble about it. Perhap can describe what it tells me.

First, it proclaims self-confidence The man is strong and knows it. It ves I miss my guess, he has don hings and is conscious that he ca repeat his achievements. That fac s a map of battles fought—a few lost bouldless, but more won. So ever h youth must have the beginnings o he could slay the giant. He told the boasting monarch how he slew a ion and a bear that robbed the sheep fold; therefore he was confident con erning the Philistine Goliath.

Next, firm resolve is written on that face. Somewhere I saw the head of Julius Caesar cast in bronze. His eyes had a far-away look, his brow was knit, his lips were firmly set. Underneath was written, "The die is cast!" He knew the obstacles, he had taken inventory of his advantages and his strength; now he had come to the grand decision; he crossed the Rubicon, with grim determination to achieve. The moment of decision, of thoughts had put certain curves about the eye and mouth. Mind makes a man; mind heredity, not manner, but mind! Memory of past triumphs, consciousness of present strength and prescience as to the future.

The Man with the Wonderful Face constantly shows knowledge in it. Not that he wears a perpetual smile, but just the faintest suspicion of a smile. You feel as if a word of greeting or an apt remark would instantly light up that countenance in brotherly fashion. For it seems to spell good will. I am sure he has no time for hate and spite; is not suspicious of another's motives, counts all men his allies.

He has the face one imagines a janitor should possess. I would not

Every Home Needs A "Keepsweet" Herd

IT is hard to judge how much milk and cream to buy from the milkman every day.

Sometimes you buy too much and it spoils before you can use it up. Other days you run short of milk or cream just when you need it most.

You can avoid all this costly waste of milk and cream—all the annoyance of running short—by buying your milk and cream from the grocer or fruit store in Keepsweet cans instead of from the milkman in bottles.

You can buy a whole week's or month's supply at a time. You can have a Keepsweet Herd on the pantry shelf ready at all times to supply you with rich, thick cream or pure, undiluted milk.

Just open a can as you need it. Keepsweet Milk and Cream will keep sweet, fresh and pure in the unopened can without ice or care or trouble.

It's the wonderful Keepsweet process that does it. By this process Keepsweet Milk and Cream are sterilized in a way that retains their purity, freshness and quality without condensing, evaporating, powdering or medicating—without depriving that strong, cooked taste. TRUNKS DEFEAT LINSDAY ARE NOW LEAGUE LEADERS

Win by 4-1 in Hardest Fought Game Here This Season—Williams Outpitched Ouelette—Trunks Outhit Birds—Fielding on Par

In quite the hardest fought baseball exhibition, staged on the local diamond this season, the Grand Trunk team outclassed and out played the Lindsay Greybirds on Saturday afternoon winning one of the most important games in the second schedule of the C.O.B.L. by the score of 4 to 1.

The game was the first Saturday game played in this city this season, and an excellent crowd was in attendance.

The Lindsay club motored down on Friday night, and were well prepared for the big battle, which they knew was ahead of them. They went down to defeat but proved to be one of the very hardest nuts to crack on the circuit. They fought hard and long, and until No. 3 was down in the last inning, the close scored game was in constant doubt.

In comparing the teams, the locals and the visitors were almost on a par in so far as fielding went. They each had three errors to their credit. Jack Williams, who twirled the whole game for the Trunks, however, out pitched Lindsay's speed artist, Jack Ouelette, who also pitched the whole game for the Birds. Williams struck out 11 as against Ouelette's 8, and issued no passes, while Ouelette passed two. Ouelette hit one batsman and Williams hit two, it being an unusual game for batsmen being struck. In the first innings Pennie Mills went down, when he was hit on the left elbow by one of Ouelette's smoky balls. Art Carew in turn got one of Williams' fast ones on the back of the head, and B. Cummins got another in the small of the back. All three men will feel the effects for some days no doubt. The Trunks also out hit the visitors getting eight safties to the Birds' six. One of the eight was a three-bagger by Weir in the seventh, and one two-bagger by Casey in the sixth when he scored two runs. So that it certainly looked like a case of "the best team won."

Rather a steady north-west breeze made it chilly for baseball, fans and players alike, bothered both catcher in getting the pay to second, and swerved fly balls quite noticeably. Nothing was dropped in the outfield, however, by either squad, Hagerman and Ross of the locals swooping them off at will. Casey had rather an easy day of it in right garden.

Each team pulled one snappy double play, but probably the neatest and nerviest play of the day, was pulled by Pennie Mills. McMahon was on third base and another baserunner on first. When Williams shot one over, the man on first beat it for second. Absolutely cool and collected Pennie whipped it right down to second and Meagher tagged the man out, McMahon holding third; whether the coach went dead, or whether they expected the short throw trick, is not known, but it was a lovely bone; McMahon would have had a good chance of getting home, a possible explanation would be that the play is so unusual with most catchers, that baserunners unaccustomed to it are apt to think it is built for some trap.

Lindsay got their only tally in the second inning, when B. Cummings got a hit past second, and Ashton stouted another hit to left garden, scoring him.

The Trunks got 1 in the second, 1 in the fifth and 2 in the sixth.

In the second, Ross got on when Brownscombe fumbled his grounder and on going to second, Cummins made a wild throw out into the outfield, Ross scoring. In the fifth, 2 clean hits and 1 error netted the locals another counter, and in the sixth, with two men on, Casey pounded out the two-bagger, scoring both men.

Chuck Allen and Jack Ouelette, pitchers and reputed heavy hitters, were pie for Williams. He struck both of them out three times each, Allen getting on once, on an error, out of four times up.

TRUNKS ARE LEAGUE LEADERS

Peterboro in Second Place and Cobourg Third—Petes Here Wednesday

All things certainly worked together for good on Saturday in the Central Ontario Baseball League from a Bay of Quinte standpoint, for following Saturday's happenings BELLEVILLE GRAND TRUNKS are now leaders in the league with 5 wins and 2 loses to their credit.

Peterboro very kindly took a fall out of "Punch" Derry, "Spring" Piper & Co. at Peterboro, and put them down to third place in the race, with the strong Peterboro team close seconds to Belleville.

Lindsay went down from third to fourth place with her lone Saturday, now showing four wins and four losses. Bowmanville stands steady in fifth place, but tied Lindsay. Oshawa stands place, and Leaside and Port Hope switch for tail end positions, Port Hope going into the "hold" for a time at least.

It is truly a wonderful race.

OLD BRIDGE DOWN AT PORT HOPE

Was Shaky For Some Time and Collapses Suddenly

Port Hope, Aug. 21.—The Ontario street bridge is down and out and is now a crumpled mass resting in the bed of the Canaraska river. Men had been working at the condemned structure all day and it was expected that the bridge would be opened for traffic on Friday evening. Shortly after four o'clock however, the west side sagged and the big structure came tumbling down into the river. And there was a reason which is apparent to every person to-day and that is, that this wooden structure built on an old fashioned plan thirty-odd years ago had out-lived its usefulness. The timbers had rotted out complete and it is fortunate for the Council as also for the users of the bridge that Mr. Spiers noticed the trouble. Automobile traffic across daily; hundreds of persons use the foot bridge and push up the old girders would shake and bend last much weaker.

The big Provincial Highway traversed the bridge a few hours before it was closed. And after the closed traffic signs had been set up pedestrians continued to cross the bridge. Two minutes before the collapse men and women had gone over it so we are fortunate that a serious accident did not result.

The Street and Bridge Committee will confer with the Council and decide what action is to be taken. The Guide.

DROP RETALIATION AGAINST CANADA

Washington, Aug. 19.—Retaliatory provisions in the paragraph that provides for two pulp wood and newsprint were eliminated by the United States Senate during the tariff debate yesterday.

These proposed that where a country or Province imposed any restrictions on the exportation of such materials to the United States, a duty of 10 per cent. should be imposed upon importations from such country or Province.

These retaliatory provisions were aimed directly at importations from Canada.

TO SAVE GAS IN FRENCH CARS

Economy Tests Being Carried Out for Better Carburetor

Paris, Aug. 19.—Gasoline consumption for automobiles is such a serious question here, with gas costing from 35 to 60 cents a gallon, that recent French tests to develop better carburetion are being continued.

Cars smaller and lighter than those generally used in the United States, recently have averaged about 60 miles to the gallon of gasoline in official public contests. The winner in the principal competition of this sort made 61 miles to the gallon.

Large cars, weighing more than 4,000 pounds, averaged close to 16 miles to the gallon in the recent Strasburg race of 440 miles over the Grand Prix course and under the same regulations. This was the first race of 440 miles organized by the Grand Prix officials, and it proved such a success that a similar contest is announced for next year.

These results, however, were under the special conditions that govern all such affairs, and admittedly are not attainable by the average driver, particularly in the United States.

Several cars of a popular American make competed in the LeMans test for light cars, and their showing illustrates the progress made in economizing fuel. Equipped with the same carburetor as the winner that made 61 miles on a gallon, they did 46 miles on a gallon, and another made only 36 miles.

These economy tests, according to official manufacturers' statements, teach lessons that will show next year in improved design, but so far there has been no application of engineering that is applicable to automobiles in general.

Racing tests, however, give a misleading idea of results, for the cars that there average 60 miles to the gallon operate normally at about 35 miles to the gallon. The difference is explained as due to six factors: the use of a special gasoline equipment; with the best carburetor; carburetor adjustment to get a weak mixture that would not serve in ordinary driving; expert driving; perfect mechanical condition of the car and special adjustment of the motor for high compression, and pronounced advance of the spark.

The reasons for the better results obtained by French cars over their American engineers are attributed to several things. The American cars were heavier and it was mathematically certain that it would take more fuel to drive the greater weight, particularly as the American cars travelled 20 per cent faster. The American cars also started higher from the ground and met greater wind resistance, also the American cars had much larger motors which turned over at a much slower speed, so that greater consumption was inevitable.

When the different conditions to be met by the French and the American manufacturers are considered, experts do not generally feel that there is any remarkable superiority in the French car. These differences grow out of costs of operation and the temperament of the public. Gasoline costs nearly twice as much in France as in the United States, and French makers, therefore, find it profitable to spend more money to produce an economical motor. This is done in several ways, but principally by having a well-finished, small motor, with relatively high compression, turning over at a high speed. Some small motors make 4,000 revolutions per minute, and French racing cars approach 5,000 R.P.M. The French are educated to look more to gasoline consumption than to speed and acceleration. They prefer a small motor with four speeds, and they are content to shift gears constantly so as to save gasoline.

Americans over here sometimes wonder whether the higher original cost of French cars really offsets the saving in gasoline. French cars corresponding in size, power, appearance and ability to travel fast seem much more than their American rivals. American quantity production accounts for much difference in price, although Citroen, called the "Ford of France", by far the numerical leader among French cars, still suffers greatly when compared with American cars in price.

St. Mary's, Ont., Aug. 19.—"The Bells of St. Mary's" do not always ring when wanted, largely because many citizens, including pastors of the several churches, are holidaying at various lake resorts. A young couple were in town and after spending hours looking in vain for a minister to marry them, had to return to London as there was not a clergyman in town that day.

Have You Seen the NEW 1923 McLAUGHLIN -BUICK

BANFF Indian Day—always the third Monday in July, was this year the most successful of its kind ever held in the thirty-two years since its inauguration. An atmosphere of festivity prevailed the two days the tribe of six hundred Stoney Indians were in Banff, the centre of that most beautiful part of the Canadian Pacific Rockies.

No place in the world could have a more perfect setting for an event such as this, and what could be more picturesque than the Tschantoga Indians "people of the woods," in their native costumes amid their Great Hills. There is a dignity and poise to these people of the woods — calm, strong faces with character written in every line and seam of their countenances.

The parade started at nine thirty, and circled around the main street twice before going to the Banff Springs Hotel. The streets en route to the hotel were thronged with residents and tourists, and the steps of the hotel and court were densely packed with onlookers, for the distribution of prizes for the best native costumes took place here. The Governor General and Lady Byng, who were on their way west over the C.P.R., were among those who viewed the proceedings. Lady Margaret Boscawen, sister of Baron Byng, presented the prizes won.

The parade was most spectacular, and combined with the sports it was well worth travelling hundreds of miles to see. The chiefs rode at the head of the procession and looked picturesque in their costumes of buckskin and bead work, and gay head-pieces of feathers and ermine. Not only were the natives decked out in their gala attire, but the horses also shared in the pomp and splendour. Their trappings were made of buckskin, with patterns worked in beads, the colorings and designs of superb workmanship. Skins were also used, and trappings of bead work and ermine. A few horses were painted in symmetrical designs of various colors. The higher the rank of their rider the more beautiful and costly the trappings.

The sports were held in the encampment grounds on one side of which the Indians had erected their picturesque wigwams. The grand stand was packed and thousands were present, and never in the history of Banff was this event so well attended. Cars were lined up in all directions, and hundreds of tourists, and many residents were on horse-back, which added in the varied scene.

The sports consisted of foot races, ladies' race; two mile, one mile and half mile dash. There was wrestling on horseback, bow and arrow contest, pitching tepee and a bucking contest. Three money prizes were given for each race. The Governor General, Lady Byng and party attended, and later left for Lake Louise. The cowboy race was the most spectacular. There was a pole at each end of the course, which the horses had to go around, and as they appeared to get there almost simultaneously, it was a wild jumble of horses and riders apparently on top of one another.

The setting for this scene was perfect. Hills well timbered with dark spruce and pine, and behind them the mountains in a half grey haze—to the distant forest fires. Against this setting the tepees stood, white with the top a cinnamon brown, smoked from camp fires within. Many were of brilliant colors, beautifying the encampment grounds still further. The excitement of the afternoon over, the Indian families returned to their wigwams, and the little played on the green grass in front of their tepees. Some of the men and women reclined on rugs or blankets in the cool of the early evening. Squaws went to the brook for water, others came from the woods with armfuls of faggots, and soon fires were started for supper, and their flames leapt into the air, adding more colour to this already brilliant scene.

The Indian Day Committee are to be congratulated on giving Canada this annual event, which is so typical of primal days, and the beauty of which is in keeping with these great hills which were theirs till the white man came. Many of the officials of the day were Indians, who very efficiently did their share toward making Indian Day the success it undoubtedly proved to be.

PRICE OF COAL SHOULD NOT GO UP

National Waterways Association Man Takes Issue With Ontario Fuel Controller—Wages Same as Last Year—Says Shortage Danger Thing of Past for This Season

Toronto, Aug. 22.—J. Hunter Dyble, of the National Waterways Association, issued the following statement yesterday:

The miners have resumed work in most of the bituminous coal fields and the danger of a shortage of that grade is a thing of the past for this season.

Work will undoubtedly be resumed in the anthracite fields not later than September 1, and the coal produced will be distributed in a way that will keep the fires burning in all sections of the country.

In both fields the miners will receive the same wages as were paid last year, consequently there is no excuse for higher prices at the mines than those prevailing in 1921, and with the United States government watching closely, it is unlikely that the operators will attempt to make any serious advance in price.

Based on last year's mine prices, anthracite coal should be sold in Ontario at lower prices than in 1921. During April, May and June of the present year Ontario dealers could have bought sufficient hard coal to meet all requirements for the coming winter at prices that would have enabled them to make a material reduction in last year's figures. They refused to buy and say attempt on their part to continue making war-time profits during the coming winter should be resented by the people.

The fact that anthracite coal will be somewhat scarce during the next few months will not justify them in raising the price to the consumer; their failure to buy coal when coal was available makes them a party to any shortage that may occur next winter.

The Fuel Controller.

The newly appointed fuel controller for this province of Ontario is evidently satisfied that he was appointed to regulate the coal industry and protect the consumer from the public enemies, the people had an idea that the first duty of this official was to get coal and see that prices were kept within a reasonable limit.

At Ottawa he is reported to have told the dealers that we must expect to pay higher prices for coal. Who told him that prices at the mines would be advanced. That would be the only excuse for making such a statement and, so far, neither the fuel controller nor anyone else knows what figures the operators will demand. Why should he intimate to the dealers that, so far as he is concerned, there would be no objection offered to an increase in price?

At the Toronto conference by statement that no coal would be shipped into Ontario except on a permit placed through him. Does he really believe that to be the case because if he does, there will be a rude awakening for the fuel controller. Shippers in the United States will continue to sell coal to Ontario buyers, and Mr. Ellis undertakes to stop any shipments made on orders received from Ontario, he will make a nice mess of affairs.

U. F. O. PICNIC AT KINGSTON

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Kingston, Aug. 23.—Despite threatening weather here crowds assembled at Cleinburnie for the annual U. F. O. and U.-F. W. O. picnic to-day. The chief attraction is J. J. Morrison, secretary of United Farmers, D. C. Reagan, Frontenac County, director of U.F.O will preside.

Great interest is being taken in the gathering as it is believed Mr. Morrison will pay considerable attention to the broadening out policy of Premier Drury which threatens to cause dissension in U. F. O. ranks.

GUARANTEES ARE "IMPOSSIBLE"

Reports State That Settlement of Hard Coal Men's Strike May Take Place At To-day's Confab.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin, Aug. 22.—The Minister of Finance Hermes was reported to-day to have left no doubt in yesterday's deliberations with members of the Reparations Commission that the pledging of State forests on the left bank of the Rhine and the State mines in the Ruhr district as guarantees for the payment of German reparations was impossible.

STOLE AUTO, ARE REMANDED

Percy Bowen and Stewart Meeks Arrested, Charged With Theft of Car

After a rough ride over the rocky roads and high hills of the north country, on Monday, Plainclothesman J. Truiasch and Col. E. D. O'Flynn captured the two youths who stole Col. O'Flynn's car on Friday night last, and recovered the car. Four and a half miles north of Tamworth the youths arrested are Percy Bowen, aged 18, Point Anne, and Stewart Meeks, aged 19, of Kingston.

On receiving some information, the two men hurriedly departed for the north country early yesterday morning, word having been received that a car answering the description of the stolen car, had been seen going through Marlbank.

Officer Truiasch had a good description of the two youths on Sunday evening.

On arrival at Tamworth, some 13 residents volunteered their service and the use of their cars to help in the capture of the thieves, and their kindness was certainly appreciated by the two Belleville men. The residents knew the roads well, and soon found that the boys had run out of gas near Norway Lake, about 8 or 9 miles north of Tamworth. One boy went for some coal oil which they intended using as fuel until they reached a gas station, but all gas stations had been notified not to sell gasoline to anyone suspected.

When learned the license number on the car was changed from 173-613 to 178-618, it being quite convenient to alter both 3's to 8's.

The youths left Belleville for Kingston, and remained there until Sunday evening, touring about the streets all day Sunday. In that city, they sold the bumper and a spare tire to the Artificial Ice Co., on Montreal Street, and bought 13 gallons of gasoline.

The car is slightly damaged, but in good running order. Meeks being a motor mechanic, kept it in good running order.

The car had been abandoned and the boys had taken to the woods, but were captured without any difficulty. They were remanded to jail for one week this morning.

Col. O'Flynn is very grateful for the excellent work of the police and the kind assistance of the citizens of Tamworth.

LIGHT SIDE TO CUBAN POLITICS

(Associated Press)

Havana, Cuba, Aug. 6.—(By Mail).—Credit is given President Alfredo Zayas for the only humorous sidelight that marked the recent reform upheaval in the Cuban administration, in which the disposal of public funds has figured to a considerable degree.

Asked by a personal friend how he replied to certain pertinent questions regarding Cuban affairs asked by the special American representative, Major-General E. H. Crowder, the president is quoted as saying: "Oh, I have adopted the principle embodied in the XYZ Method of teaching languages." Pressed for further explanation, he added: "For example, if I am asked 'Have you your brother's umbrella?' I reply, 'No, but I have my grandmother's galoshes'."

FISH TO EAT "SKEETERS" IN HOLY LAND

Two Dozen Being Sent to Fight Against Infectious Insects

New York, Aug. 22.—Two dozen plain, ordinary fish, caught in the waters of Jamaica Bay by James N. Rogers, acting chairman of the Jewish Joint Distribution Commission, are being consigned in sealed containers to Palestine, where they will be used in a campaign against infectious mosquitoes.

The plan is to send fish to devour disease-spreading mosquitoes now mastered by the recent announcement of the Rockefeller Foundation that good results had been obtained in a similar campaign in South America. Rosenberg read the announcement and went fishing.

A NEW SEWER ON GEDDES ST.

City Council Passes By-law to This Effect in Response to Petition

At a special meeting of the City Council held last night several recommendations, two resolutions, and one by-law were passed and carried Sewer for Geddes Street.

By-Law No. 2627.

A by-law to authorize the construction of a sanitary sewer on Geddes street from Evans street to College street with private drain connections on each side of the said sewer, as a local improvement under the provisions of the Local Improvement Act, was passed.

A largely signed petition had been submitted to the Clerk, urging that this sewer be constructed, and the idea has been approved by the Provincial Board of Health, according to the certificate of August 16th.

The sewer pipe will be salt glazed vitrified clay pipe.

And whereas the Council has determined that the total cost of the sewer and connections shall be equally assessed upon the lands directly abutting on the said work, with the exception of corner lots at the junctions of two sewers, cost of which shall be charged two-thirds to the property and one-third to the corporation at large.

The following recommendations were carried:

"That a concrete walk be built on Warham street from Richland avenue to the present concrete walk, under Section 9 of the Local Improvement Act. (Carried.)

That a concrete walk be built on Parker street from Richland avenue to Wellington street.

"That Mr. Geo. Benitord be given the use of lots 16, 17, 18 and 19 on Norfolk street for a rental of $5 per year for a period of three years, providing said lots are not wanted for civic or industrial purposes. (Carried).

DEAF MUTE WHO SHOT PRIEST COMES OUT OF HIS LAIR

Priest's Assailant Arrested and Taken to Owen Sound Jail—Wound is Dangerous—Toronto Physician Called to Attend Father Clohecy at Proton

Owen Sound, Aug. 21.—John Cosgrave, the deafmute, who shot and dangerously wounded Father T. J. Clohecy at Proton Station, was arrested to-day as he went to his brother's farm, by High Constable Major H. E. Pembroke and Constable Cronin, and brought to Owen Sound. Hunger had driven him from his hiding place. He was locked in the police cells until 8 o'clock and brought up before the Police Magistrate, who remanded him to jail until August 30.

Cosgrave was arrested on the spring on a warrant charging him with an assault on his father, occasioning actual bodily harm. Two constables from Dundalk attempted to arrest him at the time the warrant was issued, but he slipped through their fingers." They did not make another attempt, in spite of the fact that he did not leave the neighborhood.

Made Show of Resistance.

When arrested today by Major Pembroke and Constable Cronin he resisted the placing of handcuffs on him, but when this operation was completed he came up to Owen Sound quietly enough.

Father Clohecy, the victim of the assault, is in a very serious condition and slight hope is held out for his recovery. Late last night he had a severe hemorrhage but rallied somewhat lately.

This morning Dr. Gedeon Silverthorn of Toronto was called into consultation by Dr. T. P. Carter, of Dundalk, who is in charge of the case. Dr. Carter stated tonight that Father Clohecy was in no immediate danger. The bullet pierced his right lung.

Priest Makes Statement.

Father Clohecy gave a signed statement to Major Pembroke to the effect that John Cosgrave shot and wounded me at the entrance to St. Patrick's Church, Proton Station, on the night of Sunday, August 19, 1922, about the hour of 8.20 o'clock."

It is said at Proton that Cosgrave had threatened to shoot Father Clohecy, and two men are said to have seen Cosgrave going toward the bush on Saturday night from the church at the same time as Father Clohecy was staggering to a neighboring house about 30 rods away.

All yesterday a posse of county constables searched the neighborhood for Cosgrave. At night the search was given up and the constables decided to wait until hunger forced the man to leave the woods.

All farmers in the district were asked to keep a close watch for his appearance in the morning. Early today word came that he had been seen proceeding in the direction of his brother's homestead.

Previous Threat Made?

Beyond the fact that Cosgrave is said to have threatened some time ago to shoot the priest, little information is forthcoming as to the reason for the assault. Father Clohecy is said to have seen Cosgrave approaching St. Patrick's Church with a rifle and locked himself in. A few minutes later he looked out to see if the man had gone and almost immediately the weapon was discharged.

As Cosgrave is a Catholic, no religious question is involved in the shooting. Father Clohecy was on intimate terms with the deaf-mute's father, who some time ago had a dispute with his son.

Cosgrave was arrested on the old warrant issued for an alleged assault on his father.

MEIGHEN GIVEN BIG OVATION

Conservative Convention Opens at Vancouver—Hyphenated Name of Party is Subject of Dispute

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Vancouver, August 22—Right Hon. Arthur Meighen evoked an ovation in the proceedings of the Provincial Conservative Convention which were resumed to-day to formulate a new platform. He advocated the adoption of name "Liberal Conservative Party" as the official name of the party and a formal resolution to this effect was introduced by Senator Taylor.

It met with some opposition, however, because of hyphenated character of name, and delegates not having been officially seated the resolution had to be held over until to-day as a contentious one.

MILITIA COUNCIL TO BE ABOLISHED

Ottawa, Aug. 22.—It is estimated that in the process of consolidating the Militia Department, the air force and the naval service department, upwards of one thousand employees have been deprived of their positions. When the consolidation is complete there will not be positions enough left to accommodate the permanent staffs.

It is anticipated that with the completion of the amalgamation, the militia council will be abolished.

COOL DAYS SOON

"Perfect August Days" to Be Succeeded by Too Much Coolness

Toronto, Aug. 21.—"These days of perfect weather are too good to last", said Prohs to-day. "There's rainy weather ahead for this week, beginning to-morrow or even to-night."

Moreover, the cool wave is going to become still cooler, until we may wonder why we ever fussed at the tropical heat of a week ago.

The temperature at noon yesterday was an agreeable 71, with the sun shining in a hazy autumn sky. It had been up to 73, but will probably come down still further. Yesterday the range was practically the same, the lowest being 54. It was an ideal Sunday, perhaps not for the bathers, but for strollers and hikers and long-distance cyclists.

All over the west there was ideal weather, with the thermometer at Moose Jaw at 83. Up in northern Ontario they got a cold snap, with frost in some places. White River, where the mercury in always low if it is anywhere in Canada, had it at 26. From Ottawa east it never came up above 70. It was what the weatherman called "fair and cool" all over Canada, as far as the hay harvest is concerned, "them days" may be gone forever.

VALERA'S FUNDS IN U.S. BANKS TO BE TIED UP

Injunction Against Paying Out Funds Collected for Irish Republican Cause

FREE STATE REQUEST

Contention is That Dail Leader is Rebel Against Nation of Ireland

New York, Aug. 22.—A temporary injunction restraining local banks in which are deposited moneys collected for the Irish Republic cause from releasing them to Eamonn deValera or any of his agents was signed yesterday by Supreme Court Justice Bare on application of attorneys representing Michael Collins and other officers of the Irish Free State forces.

It was announced that approximately $3,300,000 was tied up by the order.

Service of complaint on de Valera and the other defendents was ordered to be made through the insertion of advertisements in papers in Dublin and Ireland. Most of the funds involved are said to be deposited with the Guaranty Trust Company and the Harriman National Bank.

Argument for Injunction.

The main contention argued against the de Valera custody of the Irish funds, the application for an injunction said, was that Ireland is now a nation; that de Valera is against the present Government and is a fugitive, and that he is not entitled to the money.

If de Valera or his forces were arrested for treason fund in the United States Banks, the Free State representatives contend, it would be diverted to the carrying on of further revolution against the present Government and prolong needless and unjustifiable war in a country which has expressed by the ballot its preference for the Irish Free State form of government.

It is further stated in the application that the Irish Free State is prepared to make good the bonds of that nation, and that the quickest way to end the present result is to deprive de Valera and his aides of funds from this country.

SLEEPING SICKNESS OF UNUSUAL FORM.

New York, Aug. 21.—Physicians at Bellevue Hospital today were fighting to save the life of Dominick Accurso, aged 24, victim of a rare form of sleeping sickness.

Accurso, shipyard worker, with eyes open, sleeps, dreams and shouts demands to his fellow-workers. He was brought to the hospital a week ago yesterday. Those at Bellevue say the case is the first of its kind ever brought to their attention. The patient is in a critical condition.

"NEITHER NEROS NOR BISMARCKS"

French Premier Officially Announces His Reparations Policy

NOT IMPERIALIST

Replies to British Publicists —Declares That Germany Must Pay

Paris, Aug. 22.—"Despite what certain British publicists are pleased to say, we are neither Neros nor even Bismarcks," said Premier Poincare in a speech delivered at Bar-le-Duc, his home town, on the occasion of his re-election to the presidency of the General Council of the Meuse Department.

The three main points of the address were the disingenuous ness of Germany, the blindness of Great Britain and the determination of France to get her just dues.

Refusing to place inter-Allied indebtedness on the same level as claims against the German obligation to repair the damage done in the war, the Premier insisted on the need for a conference of "All allied states interested" to deal with the subject of debts.

There was no mention of the United States in this or any other connection throughout the speech. Neither was Mr. Lloyd George referred to by name.

"We have no intention whatever of dunning our Allied debtors," M. Poincare declared, and with this backhand slap at the British he went on to say that all he desired was to receive from Germany

"The Reich," he charged, "has opposed 'the force of inertia' to all demands for fiscal reforms and supervision. Consequently," he declared, "there was nothing for it to refuse Germany a moratorium, or grant it only in return for positive guarantees, 'among them in the last analysis the states situated on the Rohr and the forests of the German states.'"

The French Premier concluded his address with a defence of his country's imperialist designs.

MAY END STRIKE TO-DAY

So Says German Finance Minister—Forests and Mines Cannot be Given as Guarantees of Reparation Payments.

Philadelphia, Aug. 21.—Although prospects of the anthracite strike settlement still hung fire tonight after a late adjournment of miners' and operators' conference, a meeting of the conference for about two hours, rumors were current about the offices of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Co., where the meeting was held, that possible settlement would be reported tomorrow. The conference will be resumed tomorrow at 3 p.m.

While no official word was given out, it was understood that the operators insisted still upon a resumption of mining at the old wage scale until April 1, 1923, and the miners want a so-called "long-term" contract—probably two or three years—at the scale in effect when the suspension was called last April.

Both national and State Government influences are being exerted upon the owners and operators to make any concession possible. Railroad interests which have been losing the profitable haulage of coal have added their voices.

HIS FIRST DEATH SENTENCE

(Associated Press)

Belfast, Aug. 4.—(By Mail).—Lord Justice Andrews, brother of Thomas Andrews, "the designer of the ill-fated liner Titanic, and also a victim when the ship was wrecked, nearly swooned when passing his first death sentence on a prisoner here.

When he was nearing the end of the death sentence his words were inaudible and he was so overcome that he rushed from the court as he finished.

The prisoner, whom the judge was addressing and who had murdered a little girl under brutal circumstances, stood as if petrified until the warders seized him and took him to the cells.

FORTUNE PLAYS HAND FOR PREMIER HUGHES

Crisis After Crisis in Australian Government Is Surmounted

London, Aug. 22.—The Saturday Review says the luck of Premier W. M. Hughes of the Australian Commonwealth has passed into a proverb in Australia. During the present session of the Federal Parliament he has triumphantly surmounted crisis after crisis. The Saturday Review says, though on several occasions this was accomplished by no more than one vote.

The Opposition consists of the Country party and the Labor party, and there is trace of disaffection in Premier Hughes' own party, but the Country party is not keen to see the fall of Premier Hughes, which might result in a Laborite victory. The Country party and labor party have little in common.

The Saturday Review asserts that Premier Hughes, who is extremely able seems to be fairly safe in the saddle, but adds that he can scarcely escape having anxious moments.

AIR PILOT GOES ASTRAY.

B. A. Atkinson, of Whitby, appeared in Coboorg Court on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences and was remanded. Atkinson was going through the country selling atlases to rural school boards, on the pretence that if they did not buy one they would lose their government grant, he alleged himself to be a departmental inspector from the department of education. He is an ex-pilot of the Royal Air Force, and is in bad shape physically and mentally as the result of a fall of 900 feet from an aeroplane while overseas.

Washington Officials Optimistic of Approach of Industrial Peace

Washington, Aug. 20.—Administration officials today were more optimistic than they have been for many days that peace is at hand in the industrial situation.

The President and his advisers are convinced that this week will see the mines opened and production resumed on a basis approximating normal, with a general reopening of the mines by next week at the latest.

They also firmly believe that the mediation conference between the leaders of the railroad brotherhood organizations and the railroad Executives in New York will result in a settlement of the nation-wide shopmen's strike within a few days.

So confident are they that there will be a compromise settlement of the seniority issue which has been preventing an agreement that they are beginning to revive their spirits, which have been additedly very low for some time. The President himself, his friends say, is most expectant that the dawn of peace is at hand and that it will not be necessary to make the struggle for supremacy between the Government on the one hand and organized Labor and organized Capital on the other.

The President realizes that his message to Congress on Friday must nothing if it did not mean that the time has come in this industrial crisis for a showdown on the ability of the Government to prevent deliberate defiance of its laws. He was prepared for the struggle, but hoped that it would not be necessary and that the railroad Executives and employees would compose their differences.

PRIEST IS SHOT BY DEAF MUTE

Assailant Has Evaded the Searchers by Taking Refuge in Bush

Dundalk, Aug. 20.—As he was locking up the little St. Patrick's Mission Church at Proton, a few miles from here, last night, Rev. Father Doherty of Dundalk was shot and wounded by Thomas Cosgrine, a deaf mute who, it is said, had previously threatened him.

Immediately after the shooting Cosgrine fled into the bush, and a search is being made for him by the police, who feel confident that he will not try to range far and will soon be captured.

Father Doherty was shot through the left breast, the bullet coming out under his left arm. He was taken to the home of Michael Connolly at Proton, with whom he stayed during week-ends when he went from Dundalk to hold confession and services at St. Patrick's Mission.

Priest Out of Danger.

Dr. Carter of Dundalk was summoned to attend the injured priest, who today is reported out of danger and in charge of Dr. Carter and a nurse.

Cosgrine is about 30 years of age. Some time ago an attempt was made to place him in an institution, but the officers called at the home to take him he ran away into the bush and evaded the capture. After he returned home no further action was taken to put him under restraint.

Had Expressed Fears.

It is said that he has a violent temper, and that Rev. Father Doherty had expressed fear of him. Cosgrine lived with his parents on the town line of Proton and Keadbetter until quite recently, when he went to live with his brother on the fourth concession farm land.

Constables engaged in the search expect that Cosgrine will come out of the bush when he gets hungry just as he did at the time he ran away previously.

TRAIN CRASHES INTO REAR OF WORK TRAIN

Seven Workmen Killed and One Hundred Are Injured

Chicago, Aug. 21.—Two men were killed, two others seriously injured and an engine and half a dozen baggage cars were demolished early yesterday morning, when an express train on the Michigan Central Railway, carrying no passengers, was wrecked one mile east of Gary, Ind. Officials of the road charge that the spikes had been drawn from the rails, causing them to spread and ditch the train.

The two men killed were: Edward Coy, of Kalamazoo, Mich., and E. Lubbs, of Niles, Mich., engineer and fireman of the train, whose bodies were buried in the wreckage of the engine. The injured were Charles H. Stockard, of Niagara Falls, and A. B. Heath, of Buffalo, express messengers.

Five Cars Demolished.

The train, composed entirely of baggage cars, was speeding 60 miles an hour when the wreck occurred. Suddenly the engine left the rails, plowed along the ties for fifty yards and then turned over into the mud. The first baggage car, carried along by the momentum of the other cars behind it, went 200 feet beyond the engine before it toppled over the ditch, a mass of wreckage. Five cars were smashed and ten ditched.

Immediately after the crash special agents of the road swarmed to the scene from Gary, and it was from these agents that the officials obtained the evidence purporting to show that the wreck was the work of strikers or their sympathizers. According to Captain Martin Quinn, Chief Special Agent, his men found that the spikes which held the rails to the ties, had been pulled from a long section of track.

Idea Catches on Elsewhere —Welsh Choir Aids Miners' Children

Thousands of bushmen are in demand in the Province of Quebec, and hundreds of farmers in the Eastern Townships are losing sons and hired men as a result of the exodus of 30,000 harvesters en route to the Western grain fields, according to information given by the local employment bureau yesterday afternoon.

Local labor offices are urging all capable applicants to fill the vacancies in the Ontario and Northern Quebec forests, caused partly by the lure of the prairie spirit and partly by the offer of $4 per day in contrast to the English rate of $35 per month. Signs outside these offices advertising "200 bushmen wanted immediately" are a common sight.

The Hudson Employment Bureau, on Craig street, have received word from the G. Beck Lumber Company of Little Current, Ont., and the firm of Greene and Sherwood, Dean Lake, offering $30 to $35 per month for bushmen, whom they can handle by the hundreds.

Quebec Farmers Affected.

Now that the eastern grains are ripening and the fruit crops ready to be picked and packed, Quebec farmers are sadly missing the helpers who have gone west both for the love of travel and experience, and also to take advantage of the financial inducements offered in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Although the shortage of the eastern farmers is not felt to any great extent, yet the inconvenience resulting from the loss of experienced farmhands is keenly realized in many quarters, these agents state.

CUBA TURNS AGAIN TO SPAIN FOR POPULATION

Havana, Cuba, Aug. 21.—Increase in the population of Cuba from 2,000,000 to 10,000,000, mainly through Spanish immigrants, is one of the purposes of the new Secretary of State, Carlos Manuel de Cespedes, former Cuban Minister at Washington.

The Secretary believes that Spanish immigrants, for numerous reasons, will make the most desirable additions to Cuba's population, and is holding conferences with his colleagues in the Cabinet with a view to bringing these elements to the island. The necessity of checking the flow of workers from Cuban cane fields to Spain, caused by unfavorable financial conditions, and the advisability of encouraging the flood of Chinese, Jamaicans and Haitians is being stressed by Dr. de Cespedes.

EXCELLENT THREE STAR BILL WELL RECEIVED AT GRIFFIN'S

May McAvoy scores again, this time in "A Virginia Courtship," which is exhibited at Griffin's last evening. Whoever made a star of this little lass had the right idea, for she combines brains, soul and beauty in exactly the proportions which spell success.

She's a corking good story, too, a nearly modernized scenario from the 3-known play of two decades ago, Eugene Presbrey.

There is action a-plenty, clever characterizations aplenty and an abundance of humor. To return to Miss McAvoy—whether one's thoughts are pretty stray, she depicts in a most fetching manner the change that's about in the little girl whose parents have been a freckled-faced younger than herself, even the big man of the house comes home to dinner. This part of the young lass is played in finished manner by Helen Ferguson, other prominent members among the large supporting cast are, Richard Tucker, Kathlyn Williams and Alec B. Francis.

The (finest) direct in "The Bearcat" the second feature offering on the new program. Those who have seen Douglas Fairbanks' most recent picture will find much to enjoy in his newest, which is a whirlwind story of the West. Others portrays the type of role which has won him fame-just-enough will admit it.

Never real comedy is a very scarce article but this is what "A Sailor-Made Man," Harold Lloyd's new comedy is and it offers forty five minutes of wholesome laughter.

With such an excellent program arranged no doubt the popular playhouse will be favored with large patronage on Tuesday and Wednesday.

ENORMOUS DEATH DUTIES ON NORTHCLIFFE'S ESTATE

London, Aug. 22.—The News of the World, Lord Riddell's paper, reiterates that Lord Northcliffe left a fortune of probably £4,000,000. On that basis the death duties on the estate amount to about £1,750,000.

It is understood that even members of the family had no knowledge at the time of Lord Northcliffe's death of the dispositions made in the will.

Brighton Man Has Become Penniless of Own Free Will—Will Live on Bread and Water

(Associated Press Service.)

Brighton, Eng., Aug. 22.—"Money is a curse and the root of all evil. I will never touch another penny as long as I live."

This was the extraordinary resolution made by a Brighton man, who, of his own free will, has become penniless and is determined to live without money.

He is Henry Mitchell, who until recently was a commercial traveller employed by a well known firm, and was earning £300, or about $1,700 a year and commission.

When Mitchell came to his decision he gave up his job, drew £200 commission due him and gave it to his wife. He had £20 10s. left. This he gave to the local poor, and with his last penny he bought a newspaper.

Referring to his action, Mitchell, who is a middle-aged man, said: "I have come to the conclusion that money is the cause of all the unhappiness in the world. Three weeks ago I decided I would never touch it again. In future I shall endeavor to lead the life of Christ on modern lines.

"I believe I possess gifts that the ordinary man does not, and as the result of my experience I shall be able to give advice to people with business or personal worries. In return for my services I shall be willing to accept only food, drink and lodging.

THEATRICAL RELICS ON EXHIBITION

Costumes and Treasures of Jennie Lind and Christina Nilsson

(Associated Press)

Stockholm, Aug. 1 (By Mail).—Costumes and other relics of the two Swedish nightingales, Jenny Lind and Christina Nilsson, will be displayed along with a collection of other treasures of theatrical history in Sweden's first Dramatic Museum, which will be opened during the latter part of August. The collection is to be installed in the historical old Royal Theatre in the Castle of Drottningholm, which was patronized nearly 200 years ago by King Gustav III., a famous protector of drama and the arts.

Among the interesting stage "properties" that delighted the gallery gods of the 18th century, and have been stored away ever since in the mouldy vaults of the castle, are a dust-covered set of ocean waves and a couple of chariots, with clouds attached, for the exclusive use of the gods of Olympus. The picture collection, which includes stage settings, costume plates, portraits, etc., covers the theatrical history of various countries, and with respect to certain periods of French history is the most complete in the world. The theater itself and the stage machinery will be restored to its original character.

Jenny Lind, it will be remembered, is the singer who gave music in America its first great impetus when she appeared at Castle Garden, New York, in 1850, under the management of P. Barnum.

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

THE PADDED CELL.

In which the Khan discusses pads, duelling particularly on padded speechifications at U. F. O. picnics which he doesn't enjoy.

When the Last Man hath perished and the earth is given to flames, this old world will go roarin' through space its smelling like a rag warehouse on fire.

It will be the biggest bonfire of pads and padding ever pulled off in the universe. The Martians have never been able to hear us, but they will most certainly smell us some day.

Ever since our Mother Eve talloed the fig leaves down to the present time, we have been, engaged in pad, pad, paddling.

I'll tell you what started us thinking along this intellectual colonization road. I went to a political picnic the other day and I didn't enjoy myself—no one did. But I learned something. I learned that it is a wise thing to sit down when you get through. One of the speakers proceeded to sit down, started up like a whirlwind, and I have seldom heard anything much better. But he was a fire-curious horse, if you get me. He was a short distance skate. He was supposed to speak for half an hour, and he hadn't been away like a house afire for twelve minutes, and then he had oratus trochi. He glanced at his wrist watch. Horrors! He still had seventeen awful minutes ahead of him. An earnfty! But he was mine. He started off

THE QUALIFICATIONS OF JUDGES

A member in a local pulpit contended that all judges should undergo actual experiences of prison life in order to qualify them for the position of judge. This strikes us as an original idea, and one that might well have been considered by the Bar Association at its meetings in Victoria last week; but it is late now.

That body condemned the appointing of judges as a reward for political services and suggested that all such appointments be made by lawyers on the basis of legal knowledge and experience—we might add, also prison experience.

It might be necessary for a candidate for a judgeship to commit some crime in order to give a touch of reality to his experiences, so that he can enter into the feelings of the culprits who come before him.

In regard to the duty of passing the death sentence upon a man convicted of murder, we could scarcely permit a would-be judge to practice homicide, but he might at least go through a formal process of hanging, in order to fully appreciate the position in which he is placing the condemned man.

THE TWO RALEIGHS

The standing of His Majesty's Ship Raleigh on the coast of Labrador recalls the coincident historical fact that Sir Walter Raleigh, after whom the ship was named, came ashore for the first time on the American Continent at Newfoundland. Thus history repeats itself.

The life and exploits of Sir Walter Raleigh are of peculiar interest at the present time, for he dealt even at that early date with the rebels in Ireland. His rule was a very harsh one and he had no mercy upon the insurgents. Munster, where he was stationed for some years. He was to some extent responsible for the bitter hatred that has been engendered in the hearts of some Irishmen against England. Ireland, on account of his turn of face. But, strangely enough, the Irish owe to him one of their most prolific vegetables—the potato—introduced, it is said, by Raleigh.

"On that day Edward Irving preached for the last time as incumbent of the Caledonian Church, Cross street, Hatton Garden. It was an unattractive little chapel belonging to the Church of Scotland and emblazoned with the ecclesiological barbarity of the age. Attached to a charity institution, it stood, in drab obscurity of the beaten and fashionable tracts, on the rickety fen of financial infirmity. A congregation which had dwindled to a mere handful of seventeen pews filled to the chin to its pathetic remnant—with that grim dogged devotion for neglected causes which is so characteristic of the race. Irving had arrested this entirely undesirable charge as the last resort of an unsuccessful proselytiser who, convinced that he had a message for his generation, could nevertheless secure for himself in Scotland no pulpit of his own from which to deliver it.

Then, suddenly, a new era dawned. Irving caught on. He became the rage, the lion of the hour.

"On Sundays the building was simply besieged. Chalmers in his greatest days never attracted such a den crowd like that which week by week packed and elbowed towards the wealthy Mr. Lane. Lane, the Cross Street the Sabbatical calm was transformed by scenes only to be witnessed in Lane. Lane, the Kensals and Edmund Kean were no greater than them Edward Irving. Tickets were bought by the dozen by the Rothschilds, only to prevent accident among the masses of humanity that thronged to Cross Street on the Lord's Day; and Irving climbed into his pulpit up stairs on which were erected boxes for the highest social strata in the land. Amid the eerie roar of rage lights could be seen indistinctly the dusky of the Duke of York and other members of the Royal House. They were followed by Macklewrath, sailing together, and of ten Cunning with them.

"While the lesser leaders from the front benches at 81 Stephen's crown Liverpool was drawn, though he

SCHOOL AND HOME

Schooling is a good thing for our young people, but education takes the place of the home, according to Canadian Bar Association at a luncheon in Victoria, B. C., last week Lord Shaw, of Dunfermline, emphasized the binding forces of justice in the community. His words are worth emphasizing, they were as follows:

"What an influence on life is the home! You may teach your young men and your young women all the learning that their minds can hold and yet shrink and shrivel up the hearts within. But if to the learning that may be acquired at the university, you add character and faith and add the influence of home, you add the most precious treasure of treasure far greater than intellect, the endowment of scientific knowledge and the appreciation of art, far greater than business success. It is treasure that cannot be measured, and yet its force may mould character from generation to generation.

HERE AND THERE

THE BUILDER OF ST. PAUL'S

On February 25, 1723, Sir Christopher Wren, architect, scientist, and astronomer, died. His work still stands in London and in Oxford, and his memory survives not only among those who follow Wren's profession, but also with the man in the street.

The Royal Institute of British Architects are making arrangements for a Commemoration Week, beginning on Monday, February 19, 1923, and have formed a special committee, on which representatives of appropriate Government departments, the great artistic, scientific and archæological societies, and the great municipalities of London are invited to serve. A program has already been arranged, and will be submitted to the committee for approval. It is proposed to organize a procession from the Mansion House to St. Paul's, which will be followed by a memorial service at the Cathedral and a visit to the Crypt, where the president of the Royal Institute will lay a wreath on the tomb of Wren. It is also hoped to hold an exhibition of Wren drawings, manuscripts, and other relics in the R.I.B.A. Galleries at 9 Conduit street, during several days. Owners of such relics have been asked to lend their treasures for this exhibition, and there has been a generous response.

The architectural schools in London have been invited to produce a pageant illustrating the period of Wren, and preparations for this are already under way. Visits to Wren's buildings will also take place, and it is hoped by this means to draw attention to some beautiful examples, so long unheeded except by the few, of the work of a great architect, and to stimulate still further the already increasing interest in architecture displayed by the general public.

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH.

It is not generally known that Great Britain possesses the oldest agricultural research institution in the world. Over eighty years ago a number of British agriculturists set aside an extensive site for experiments in the growing of wheat and other crops. The work was carried through its early stages by the liberality and enthusiasm of private individuals, and it was so successful that ultimately it was recognized and aided by the State. Many valuable results have been achieved, particularly with regard to the use of manures, the general treatment of the soil, and the control of the various pests which trouble the farmer and often bring his labor to nought. Recently the Royal Agricultural Society invited the co-operation of landowners and farmers in testing the results which have been worked out at this centre; and it is significant that more offers of land and helpers have been received than can be entertained.

THE HOOPSKIRT OF OUR MOTHERS

As to the insinuation that the hoopskirt of our grandmother's day was open to the charge of immodesty those of us who were living sixty years ago knew that it was worn far more universally, by both old and young, than any of these modern styles, so universally indeed, that the woman who did not wear one made herself conspicuous by not doing so her sisters did. I distinctly remember that one Boston woman, Mrs. Bartol, wife of the then eminent pastor of the old West Church there, Cyrus A. Bartol, attracted much attention and comment by her refusal to follow the prevailing fashion. I also remember that my own mother, who was no hasty follower of fashion's changes, adopted the hoop only a very early day, and that my father, who was very critical of many of the new fashions, characterized this as the most needless innovation in women's dress that had appeared in his lifetime. About the modesty or immodesty of present-day styles doubtless there may be more than two opinions.

PERQUISITES OF OFFICE

Some curious perquisites fall to the lot of the Lord Great Chamberlain of England. That office is held alternately, years by years, by the Marquis of Cholmondeley, the Marquis of Lincolnshire and the Earl of Ancaster, and as first action in history occurs about the time of Henry I. At a coronation, one of his duties is to serve the King with water for washing his hands before the banquet, and he receives forty ells of crimson velvet for his own robes besides the gilt basin and towels for the service. Nowadays, the King's handwashing is commuted to £300 in lieu of the furniture of the King's bedroom, which was formerly his by right.—Montreal Gazette.

ON CRUSHING A CATERPILLAR

As men must break and bend when gods
Their narrow walks pass through,
So have you tasted Death too young
Through me, a worm like you.
For we were brothers, you and I,
With hands outstretched to grope
Our ways our perilous ascents
In search of fleeting hope.

Like you, I, too, have harbored dreams
Of wings to bear me far;
I mouthed high boasts, my sacred vaunt
To ride the farthest star,
But ill-minds flew and tempests raged
Ore field and crested mere;
My budding wings are one with a dim
Remembered yesteryear.

But Life at least was kind to you
In granting quick surcease;
From feet that err like those of mine
You have eternal peace.
When breaks the tender chrysalis,
When Summer dreams are told,
And fairy patterned arabesques
Embalm wide of gold.

When comrades dear whose stars gleam now,
Whose limbs are firm and strong,
Sweep by to taste the unknown joy
With raillery and song,
You, little one, in Lethean sleep,
Serenely calm will lie;
You will not see your friends don wings
And heedless pass you by.

EDWARD IRVING IN LONDON

The Story of the remarkable rise of a Scottish probationer.

mightily scandalised Lord Eldon by his capitulation to the popular enthusiasm—judges and barristers, fashionable physicians, theatrical stars, duchesses and court beauties, city magnates, together with that mob of ineffectual hangers-on, who flock in vapid imbecility in the train of any rad cavy popular movement, thronged the doors and stood contentedly for more than a couple of hours in the congested aisles and stifling atmosphere to listen to that young Scotsman who, a failure in his own country, had a few months before come south to London unknown by any and knowing none.

"These amazing scenes were nevertheless not the evidence of a unanimous admiration. While many expressed themselves impressed by the unaffected nature of his style, a multitude declared that his utterances were rubbish; his personal appearance repellent. Only that as a speaker he was wrestling and powerful none dared deny. So to this motley assemblage Irving stood and preached with all the enthusiasm of his perfervid soul, admonishing the world of fashion, reserving the landed aristocracy to the neglect of their hereditary responsibilities; dwelling with passionate earnestness on the relationships of masters and servants on the duties of patriotism and social and domestic life; on the degeneracy of religious fervour and literature; on clerical neglect and peasant pauperism; on the nature of Christian prayer, or direct piety towards God, on man's estrangement from his Maker, and the divine remedy to return.

"The influence of his life cannot be estimated here; but at least it may be said that he was one of those stainless children of light whose destiny is persecution, and whose fervent zeal only carries them towards a cross. Yet, to follow truth as his soul conceives it, is the highest activity of man, and to prefer to the meat of the world that bread which cometh from from heaven is surely to lay hold on everlasting life."

PRESS OPINIONS

THE COAL BIN

Montreal Gazette

The acuteness of the situation will be brought home to householders with the advent of cold weather. Remedies may be found—they generally are—and no one is likely to freeze to death. None the less the crisis may demand a government action. Steps to ameliorate the threatened distress have already been taken in the appointment of a Federal Fuel Control Board, which is to be supplemented by similar provincial organizations. These bodies can render service to securing from the United States as large an allotment as possible of anthracite for Canada, but their functions should not end there. A pro rata distribution of supplies should be made, upon some such basis as previous consumption in various cities and towns; and there should be price regulation. Twenty years ago when a coal shortage existed, retail prices were multiplied three-fold, coal selling as high as $20 a ton. If the famine of today produced a similar exorbitant rise in price, anthracite coal would cost $50 a ton. Such a price is prohibitive to the majority of householders. If conditions become as acute as threatened; if di the best coal becomes obtainable only in small quantities throughout the winter, then the duty of the Government will be to step in between the consumer and the profiteer. At the last extremity the Government should commandeer the supply of coal, and distribute the fuel through local dealers, giving the latter their normal commission and no more.

WHY ARE CANADA'S OWN SHIPS LYING IDLE?

Toronto Telegram

Charters for carrying coal to Canadian and American ports have advanced from seven shillings to 14 shillings a ton.

Meanwhile vessels of the Canadian merchant marine are lying idle up at the dock or helping to pile up the annual deficits by plying on unprofitable trips.

There is no longer any doubt that Canada will suffer from a coal shortage this winter. There is a strong probability that the shortage will amount to famine.

Welsh coal must be imported into Canada in large quantities. It must reach Montreal before November 15 —before the ice interferes.

Why are the ships of the Canadian merchant marine idle?

MURDER IN EGYPT OF BRITISH SUBJECTS

The 16th Case of Murderous Assault by Nationalists

Alexandria, Egypt, Aug. 22—The latest attack in this country on Europeans, Colonel Arthur Frederick Hamilton Pogson was the automobile case in the series of murderous assaults upon British subjects in Egypt. It called to mind the threat of the nationalists that an Englishman would be shot daily until the return of Said Zaghul Pasha, the Nationalist leader who was deported by the British last December, and it is the latest addition to the extended chain of anti-British political outrages

Lieutenant-Colonel Pogson, of the Royal Army Pay Corps, was shot and gravely wounded in Kadi el Fadl street, one of the principal streets while walking to his office. He was taken immediately into the house of an Egyptian friend, Ali Mehmidi, at No. 1 Kadi el Fadl street, and was given first aid, being afterwards transported to the officers' Hospital in Abbassieh where one of the three bullets which had hit him was extracted.

Hopes are entertained of his recovery, but this case has caused great indignation among the European population in Egypt.

WILL FLY TO POLES

Chicago, Aug. 22—Battleships have not been rendered obsolete by the building of bombing planes, but the ships must be built differently in the future, Rear-Admiral Wm. A. Moffett chief of the division of aeronautics of the United States navy, said in an address at the Pageant of Progress yesterday.

He asserted that a dirigible is being built now at Philadelphia that will be larger than the one destroyed in England a few months ago. A transcontinental flight and flights to the north and south Poles and around the world are being planned, he said.

MY HOME.
(By Margaret E. Sangster.)

The room is pleasant, the shadows grey,
In a silent, friendly way,
It is my home—for my hands have
At the close of a busy day;
But, even as it is growing dark,
I know where the tables stand,
And that's exactly a comfy chair,
If I stretch out a careful hand.
I know where the books that I love
are placed,
Where the pictures hang out the walls,
For it is my home, and I sit in peace
As the summer twilight falls.

It is my home—I say my hands have made
The curtains that softly sway,
And I have seen that the rugs are laid
In a soft and comfy way.
The big blue bowl with its pansy blooms,
The shelf with its water lilies wave,
The mirror that hangs serenely high
Just over the fireplace,—
I know it all, and I love it all,
Though it's simple as it can be;
For it is my home, and I think it holds
Just a little bit of me

NO LOW HEELS IN PARIS, SAYS MARION DAVIES

Marion Davies, the motion picture star, recently returned from Paris with a whole wardrobe of new clothes and the very latest thing in gloves—short ones of black kid and a fringed gauntlet cuff of white. They are to be worn with short sleeves or sleeveless gowns, leaving the arms bare.

She said she liked low heels until she went to Paris. Then, she says, she wondered why the Parisienne stared at her. Also, it was her long heeled American shoes, all the rage in Paris, says Miss Davies, are high heels. The smartest shoes are of black satin studded across the toe to give just a glimpse of silken stocking.

COUNTESS MARKIEVICZ

(The Daily Chronicle, London.)

The Countess Markievicz, reported fighting in the Republican cause in Dublin, is the stormy petrel of rebellion.

Sentenced to death for her share in the Easter rising of 1916, reprieved, and later released on the general amnesty, she was again court-martialled in 1920 for being associated in organizing the murder of police and soldiers and sent to prison; she was out again in time to be the bitterest opponent of the treaty.

Here is a pen-portrait by Mr. R. A. Scott-James, who heard her speak in the Dail in January:—

She rose, trembling with anger and excitement. Her little nervous, darting eyes flashed out on the assembly, her hands beat the table, and her words were rapped out jerkily, irritably, with no sort of petulant energy which stimulates passion.

Elder daughter of the late Sir William Gore-Booth, of Lissadell, Co. Sligo, and sister to Miss Eva Gore-Booth, she was, 35 years ago, a daring rider to hounds and an enthusiastic tennis-player. Keenly interested in literature and art, high-spirited and unconventional—she's scandalised a dozen countryside by being one of the first women to ride in a point-to-point race—her youth yet gave no hint of the share she was destined to take in the Irish struggle.

Art studies took this beautiful young Irish girl to Paris, and there she met and married Count de Markievicz, a polish artist. Later he retired down for a time in Dublin, attending Dublin Castle functions and living the ordinary life of Irish society.

The suffragette period marked her first venture into politics. Then came a great strike in Dublin, her debut as a Labor Leader, and her entry to the ranks of agitators.

When the Sinn Fein movement grew in strength she threw herself into it with all her fiery soul. When she was arrested during the 1916 rising she was dressed as a man, entirely in green—green tunic, green hat with green feather, green breeches and green puttees. Surrounded with a body of 120 Sinn Feiners, who were in possession of the Royal College of Surgeons in Dublin, she kissed her revolver before handing it over to a British officer.

She was the first woman elected to the House of Commons at Westminster, heading the poll for St. Patrick's, Dublin, in the general election of 1918. But as common with other Sinn Feiners she refused to take her seat in the British Parliament, and indeed, it was declared that as an alien by marriage she was entitled to do so.

Gunfire and the barricades in Dublin: they are a long way from her happy youth, when her time during sophisticated—riding, driving, swimming and venturing on the wild Atlantic of the West Coast in a frail canoe—were the light and delight of a well-contrived life.

Where will her wild enthusiasms lead her next? People who have known her at different stages of her varied career will be asking that question in Dublin and London and Paris today.—E. B.

The Daily Recipe

CORN SOUP.

1 can or pint corn.
1 small onion (grated).
A very small piece bay leaf.
1 teaspoon salt.
¼ teaspoon pepper.
2 tablespoons butter.
2 tablespoons flour.
1 quart milk.

If canned corn is used rub it through a coarse sieve and add it to the milk with the onion and seasonings. Cook 20 minutes in a double boiler, or over a boiling water. Cream the butter and flour together and add to milk.

Cook ten minutes, season to taste and serve. Toasted crackers are a good accompaniment. In winter pop ped corn is nice, either added as each plate is filled or passed.

If green corn, cut from cob, is used add to one cup of water and cook ten minutes. Then proceed as with canned corn. The corn left after straining the soup may be used for fritters.

ENGLISH GIRLS HAVE CHANGED

Modern Practice of Smoking is Deplored by Canadian Woman

Toronto, Aug. 19.—"I used to think that I was a modern woman," said Mrs. W. T. Hallam, on her return from the old country, "but from what I saw of modern women in England, I am very glad to be old-fashioned."

Mrs. Hallam has just returned from a trip to England and the continent. She went to Paris with the Canadian delegation of university women, to attend the Conference of University Women's Clubs, held there in July. Mrs. Hallam expressed herself as deeply disappointed with the whole conference.

"Many of the English women at the conference—women in professions, teachers, writers, doctors, educated women of all kinds—smoked continuously. They smoked in restaurants, public places and private houses, lighting one cigaret from another," she continued.

"Many of the educated women in England appear to be extraordinarily masculine," she said, "and not only the educated women. You see the same spirit almost everywhere. They smoke in street cars, they ride motorcycles and wear knee breeches. I have sometimes seen the men look at each other and smile when they see a woman in knickerbockers throw her leg over a motorcycle in typically masculine fashion. They seem to be very much depressed and changed. Their attitude appears to be, 'Well I've the same right as a man, and if I want to smoke and put my feet up on the table, I am entitled to do it.'"

Even At Conference.

This attitude, Mrs. Hallam felt, was particularly deplorable when encountered at the University women's conference.

"These women were supposed to be educational and social leaders," said Mrs. Hallam, 'I suggested that they would discuss educational ideas in their broadest and highest sense. Instead of that they talked about the place of married men in the professions, and equal salaries for women and men. The whole thing was a stirring up of sex antagonism. They felt that if a professional woman married and had children, she should give her children the minimum of attention, turn them over to some other agency—presumably the state—as soon as possible, and return to her work. There was no talk of the educated woman as a home maker and child bearer."

War Responsible.

Mrs. Hallam felt that the war was responsible for much of this attitude. During the war women had occupied positions in civil life never taken by them before, and at the expiration of hostilities, they had been called on to surrender their positions to men, and this had occasioned some bitter feeling.

"A good many of the women at the conference were older women—the real heroes of anti-bellum suffrage movement," she said. "They talked and smoked incessantly. Many of them seem'd to feel that it was impossible for a woman to enter a profession hitherto occupied by men without adopting an entirely masculine point of view."

"Some of the women whom I met spoke very lightly of Lady Astor when I mentioned her," said Mrs. Hallam. "They felt that she lacked intellectuality. They would not recognise the splendid service she had rendered along social lines because she was not academic in her methods."

Liked American and French.

The American college women were of a very different type.

"They were charming, cultivated women," said Mrs. Hallam. "I did not see any of the leaders smoking. The French representatives were also very attractive women and womanly, and very often brilliant intellectually.

"I am not making a sweeping generalization about the whole body of Englishwomen, however," Mrs. Hallam concluded. "I was in the homes of many cultured, Christian women, who deplored modern social habits very deeply. One of them said to me, 'The cigaret habit is simply a form of self-indulgence. The worst aspect of it is that young girls develop the habit, and are unable to stop doing without it.'"

THE BANDBOX

By
Louis Joseph Vance

It was this consideration that bade her refrain from crying out. Conceivably, she would get herself into no end of bother if she were to scream and run; but, on the other hand, she was not going to run screaming through—lay a broad meadow, glimmering faintly in the glow of late reflected from the bosom of low, slow-moving clouds. A line of trees bordered it at a considerable distance; beneath these were visible patches of earth, pale, shining coldly under electric arcs.

Having absolutely no notion whatever of where she was in the Park, after some little hesitation she decided against attempting to cross the lawn and turned, instead, at random, to her right, shambling away in the kindly penumbra of trees.

She thanked her stars that she had chosen to wear this dark, short-skirted suit that gave her so much freedom of action and at the same time blended so well with the shadows wherein she must skulk.

Before many minutes she received confirmation of her fears in the drone of a distant motor humming in the stillness and gaining volume with every beat of her heart. Presently it was strident and near at hand; and then, standing like a frozen thing, not daring to stir, indeed, half petrified with fear, she saw the surrounding woods wheel slowly past, the chauffeur scrutinizing one side of the way, the man in the gray duster standing up in the body and holding the door half open while he raked with sweeping glances the copper wherein she stood hidden.

But it did not stop. Inevitable though it seemed, she was not detected. Abruptly the car gave the lie direct to Obviously the men at a loss, unable to a dozen ways of course. The taxicab drifted on at a smart pace for some distance up the drive, then swung round and came back at a good speed. As it passed her for the second time she could hear one of its crew swearing angrily.

Again the song of the motor died in the distance, and again she found courage to move. But which way? How sooner to win out of this strange, bewildering maze of drives and paths, crossing and recrossing melting together and diverging without apparent motive or design?

She advanced to the edge of the drive, paused, listening with every faculty alert. There was no sound but the muted soughing of the night wind in the trees—not a footfall, not the clap of a hand or the echo of a muted whistle. She moved on a yard or two, and found herself suddenly in the harsh glare of an arc-lamp. This decided her; she made no well go forward as retreat, now that she had shown herself. She darted in a run across the road and gained the paved path, paused an instant, heard nothing, and ran on until forced to stop for breath.

And still no sign of pursuit. She began to feel a little reassured, and after a brief rest went on aimlessly, with the single intention of sticking to one walk as far as it might lead her, in the hope that it might lead her to the outskirts of the Park.

Vain hope! Within a short time she found herself crossing over paths, back and forth, over and over again, in what seemed a hopeless maze of shrubbery, contained against the sky ahead. This stiffly could be for the park. She stumbled on, herself, half stumbled and half fell down another path, which led her nowhere. (Though she had no means of knowing this). In time it crossed one of the main drives, then resumed. She followed it with patient, hoping, but desperately weary.

Now and again she passed benches upon which most unlikely couples, in weary attitudes, as a rule snoring noisily. She dared not ask her way of them. Once one roused in the misty lighting of her heels, stared insolently and, as she passed, spoke to her in a thick, hoarse voice. She did not understand what he said, but quickened her pace and held on bravely, with her head high and her heart in her mouth. Mercifully, she was not followed.

Again—and not once but a number of times—the sound of a motor drove her from the path to the safe obscurity of the trees and undergrowth. Not in every such instance, her apprehensions were without foundation; the machines were mostly touring-cars or limousines bearing homeward from some belated festivity. And twice she thought to decry at a distance the grey-coated figure of a policeman; but each time, when she had gained the spot, the man had vanished—or else some phenomenon of light and shadow had misled her.

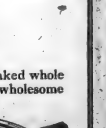

To be continued.

PETES HERE WEDNESDAY

Very Important Game With Trunks at 3 p.m. on Holiday

Over one week ago, the Grand Trunks baseball team stoled their annulment, which was to defeat the Cobourg, Lindsay and Peterboro baseball squads upon their respective visits to this city.

Cobourg met their Waterloo the day of the big wind (both eventsshould be forgotten), and Lindsay in turn went down to defeat on Saturday last by the score of 4-1. Tomorrow afternoon, Jake Solomon will present "Al" Heckman and Swanston ("Swanie") supported by their capable caste, in the big setto exhibition with the Trunks.

The question naturally arises then will the third game, which will fully complete the Railroaders' ambition, be a realization? The Trunks are working out each evening on the ball grounds and fully realize what they are up against tomorrow. No doubt Jack Heck & Co. are counting ready for the battle for they will go up head of the class if they win. On the other hand, if the locals win, they are well away out in front.

The game tomorrow afternoon is at 3 p.m. sharp, and a bumper crowd is expected on the ball holiday. Let all fans be present and let them have something to say about the argument.

PETES REALIZE THEIR POSITION

Predict Tough Argument Here Wednesday and Home on Saturday

Regarding Wednesday's game with the Trunks, the Peterboro Examiner says:

The Petes will go to Belleville Wednesday and are faced with a heavy task. After defeating Cobourg last Saturday and sending that team out of the lead they must repeat the performance on Wednesday and send Belleville from the top with a defeat if they are to remain in the running themselves. A victory will send the Petes into the lead and a defeat may send them into third place, while if the Trunks are successful the fans will see matters somewhat clearer. The locals have a big game on Saturday when Cobourg will be here and Lindsay will be met at home to Lindsay, making two stiff games scheduled for the locals this week. Cobourg have also proven themselves difficult boys to handle.

Though well down in the league the visitors are not to be accepted as foe on the occasion of their first meeting they have on the year. The locals shut out scored against them this season and as Jake Solomon's boys are out to wipe out the stigma of the defeat that stared them in the face at Lindsay, Saturday's game is sure to be one that will leave but little to be desired in the way of a fast ball game.

SPEED BOAT RACE A DEEP SEA TEST

Miami-Havana Motor Boat Race Takes Place in February

The conditions it is proposed fix in the 400 entries in the international motor boat races next February be tween Miami, Fla., and Havana, is that the owners of the craft must be aboard during the contests. Another is that the contestants engage in a 30 or 25 mile race off Havana in that the people of Cuba may have an opportunity to view the entry of the Havana Yacht Club, Miss Havana, in acting.

According to Rafael Posso, the Habana yachtsman who is representing Cuba in the negotiations for the race, prizes amounting to $40,000 have been reserved through the support given by the National Commission on Encouraging Tourist Travel. The sum will be divided in three prizes of $5,000, $3,000 and $2,000, while the winner of the race will receive a gold trophy, with $300 and $200 cups to those taking second and third places.

The Miami-Havana race will occupy a unique place in speed boating, according to Mr. Posso, who points out that while the boats will race in sheltered waters from Miami to the southernmost tip of Florida, in crossing the channel they must be prepared to meet open sea conditions which will test the mettle of the craft to the utmost and inject an element of personal danger for the contestants.

PORT HOPE OPINION

Well, it begins to look like Belleville for the second section. Their victory over Lindsay on Saturday gives them first place in the League and the board of ball they are playing they should not experience much difficulty in holding it.

HOODOO CHASES PORT HOPE

The hoodoo is bound to get on the Port Hope lineup some time during the game. On Saturday in the battle with Oshawa we kept him away until the seventh innings, when he managed to sneak in through some opening in the fence and upset things in general. Up to the seventh it was a hard fought contest with honors evenly divided, but in this frame old Jinks hooked up with the Oshawa team and before he could be chased, Oshawa had scored five runs and another ball game was lost.

* * *

As a result of the defeat referred to, Port Hope are now at the foot of the class. There is one consolation however, Sandy: They both the same color at the foot of the class as at the head. Your ball team is in busy company.

FAMOUS RACE HORSE REMAINS IN ENGLAND

"Sceptre" Was at First to Be Sent To Argentine

London, Aug. 22—Sceptre, the famous race horse whose sale to Count Landgren, an Argentine breeder, was announced a short time ago, is to remain in this country after all.

Lord Glanely sold her to Count Landgren recently for £500. It was the Count's intention to send her to his stud farm in Argentina. But the announcement that the wonderful mare was to go so far from the scenes of her victories on the turf provoked such an outburst of sentimental regret that a movement was started by influential supporters of horse racing to keep her in England. Lord Glanely and Count Landgren talked the matter over in a friendly spirit with the result that it was mutually agreed to call the sale off.

Sceptre is being presented to the national Stud with no other stipulation but that on her death Lady Norem Blase, wife of Sir William Blase, who gave £25,000 for Sceptre as a four year-old, and Mr. Bierier who gave £10,000 for her as a yearling, shall each get one of her heads when she dies, and Lord Glanely the other two.

In addition Lord Glanely joins Bonmerville Tattersall, another ex-owner of the mare, in giving £500 to the London Hospital for the establishment of a Sceptre ward.

Sceptre by many is considered the greatest race horse that ever raced on the British turf. In 1906 she won the 2,000 guineas, the 1,000 guineas the Oaks and the St. Leger.

ONE PROTEST DECIDED OTHER LAID OVER

Cobourg Win Protest From Port Hope and the Trunks For First Place

Oshawa, Aug. 21—The sub-committee of the Central Ontario Baseball League met at Port Hope this afternoon and heard the Lindsay protest against Cobourg, and Cobourg against the game at Port Hope in which the Hopers won 3-0. No decision was reached in the first, and it was laid over for further consideration. The Port Hope game was ordered to be replayed at a date to be set by the executive. Belleville and Oshawa are now on even terms for the top of the intermediate section, and the Quinte City team can get a stranglehold by defeating Peterboro in Belleville on Wednesday, and Cobourg in the Summer Town on Saturday. The standing of the league after the subcommittee's meeting today is:

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Belleville	8	3	.727
Cobourg	8	3	.715
Peterboro	7	3	.625
Brantonville	4	4	.500
Lindsay	4	4	.500
Oshawa	3	4	.429
Trunks	2	6	.250
Port Hope	0	6	.000

Games and umpires for Wednesday: Cobourg at Leaside, Rosevear and Butler; Port Hope at Oshawa, Glover and Macdonald; Bowmanville at Lindsay, Kay and Wilson; Peterboro at Belleville, Boundy and Barnes.

KEE-RECT SANDY

Mr. Lockington Speaking—

"The Belleville Creamery has presented the Belleville team with a large score board and the inscription in the bottom reads: "Better Belleville Baseball" and "Belleville Better Butter". There is also to be a gift of butter to help some of the local morals on the Belleville team slide home."

COLLINS MARKED FOR ASSASSIN

Assassination Planned to Remove Sole Outstanding Figure

London, Aug. 22—It is declared that the attempt to kill Michael Collins, Commander-in-Chief of the Free State army, was forecast in Ireland, and was planned, first, to secure the removal of the sole remaining outstanding figure in the Provisional Government and thereby weaken the Free State opposition, second, as a measure of reprisal against the shooting of Harry J. Boland by Free State soldiers.

"Travellers say that the Provisional Government policy of releasing captured republicans after entering a promise of loyalty to the Free State has resulted in an increasing number of Irregulars being recruited in Dublin, ready to continue the campaign of guerilla warfare, bombing and sniping. Under the existing terrorism there seems to be little idea of an early meeting of Parliament, which must set on the constitution. This Government policy is based on the conviction that peace and order can best be established in Ireland by resorting to diplomacy rather than to harsh extermination in battle or the severe punishment of captured rebels. Some Irishmen are reported as feeling that such a policy can only perpetuate the rebellion for an indefinite period and relegate to the far future peace in Ireland.

CANADIAN BONDS ARE GOOD SELLERS

Conversion of 1917 War Loan Will Be Nearly Unanimous, Ottawa Hears

Ottawa, Aug. 22—Projects for the successful conversion of the five-year bonds of the 1917 war loan, which fall due in December, are regarded here as very bright indeed. Returns are already being received by the department of finance from the banks which indicate that there is an almost unanimous demand on the part of holders of the bonds in question for the conversion thereof at the terms stipulated. The department reports that so favorable are these returns—85 per cent—that several financial firms have enquired whether or not they could be allowed to subscribe. This, however, will not be permitted, as the loan is purely a conversion one, designed primarily to place the patriotic securities of the Dominion bonds on a basis of equality with the holders of the 1937 maturities. Later a domestic loan will be floated.

It is regarded here as likely that not only the majority of individual holders will convert but that the great bulk of the bonds held by mercantile firms will be converted also.

NAPOLEON'S CHARGER FAST LOSING ITS TAIL

Paris, Aug. 21.—Tourists visiting the Museum of the Hotel des Invalides have been plucking hairs from the tail of the great Napoleon-a charger for souvenirs. So, lest the famous white horse, a triumph of the taxidermist's art, lose its tail, Minister of War Maginot will appoint a special keeper for him; indeed, the taxidermist's art, lose its tail, Minister of War Maginot will appoint a special keeper for him; indeed, the taxidermist's best quarters may be engloseed with bronze, a splendid specimen of the Arab, was a Sultan's gift to the "Little Corporal."

AWAKES, FINDS WIFE WITH SKULL BROKEN

Husband, Unable to Explain How Woman Had Been Injured, is Arrested

New York, Aug. 22.—Not until his wife failed to respond to his casual, waking observations did Edward Prancke, a waiter, at 234 East Thirty-eighth Street, discover that she lay beside him, a lifeless unconscious from a fractured skull and several broken ribs.

This is the story which Prancke told Detectives John McDonald and Edward McAuliffe of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station, who questioned him for two hours, and then arrested him on a charge of felonious assault. His wife, Mrs. Mamie Prancke, 42, is in Bellevue Hospital in a serious condition.

According to the detectives, Prancke said that when he awoke, shortly after 11 o'clock on Sunday morning, he addressed his usual morning pleasantry to his wife. When she did not respond he repeated his comments without receiving a reply. He then became suspicious and called in neighbors, who confirmed his observations as to traces of blood about Mrs. Prancke's head.

After neighbors had treated Mrs. Prancke unsuccessfully with tea bags for three hours it was decided to call an ambulance. Patrolman John Gallagher summoned Dr. Chipman from Bellevue Hospital, where it was said that her condition was critical.

Detectives said they learned that Prancke and his wife had been members of a drinking party which lasted until early Sunday morning. Neither Prancke nor his guests seemed to be able to tell the police exactly what happened, though a neighbor is reported to have informed the detectives that during the night she heard a woman scream for help.

GIRL CHAMPION MAIL HANDLER SORTS 20,610 LETTERS IN A DAY

Washington, Aug. 22.—A young woman is the champion mail handler of the postal service.

Miss Nina E. Holmes, 20 years old, of the Detroit Post Office, the Post Office Department announced, set a record for sorting letters recently by distributing 20,610 in eight hours.

OCEAN RATES TO REMAIN UP

Passengers To Pay Present Prices for First-class Passage

New York, Aug. 1.—Despite reports to the contrary, there will be no rate war among the larger transatlantic steamship companies this winter, and minimum rates for a first-class passage will remain at the present level, almost double what they were before the war. Agents of several of the larger companies said that the lines they represent had no intention of reducing the rates.

The reason given for the present high rates, which stand at $220 to $225 for ships of the class of the Mauretania, as against $150 on the same class before the war, is that the reduction in the immigrant traffic, resulting from the new immigration laws, has caused the profits of the lines to be greatly diminished.

The expense of operation also is given as a reason for the high rates by the steamship agents, who say that the costs of repairs, of fuel, of overhauling and loading and discharging of vessels, and the wages of the crews are still so high as they were when the present high rates were inaugurated during the war, and that it will be necessary to keep the rates up in order to cover these costs.

NEW GUINEA TO BE EXPLORED

London, Aug. 22.—A comprehensive scheme for the exploration of British New Guinea will be undertaken soon by the British Pacific Science Expedition. The plan is to go into the interior never before traversed by white men and to investigate the head-hunting pygmies and strange animals, as the tree-climbing kangaroo and the wild pigs that resemble miniature elephants. The more serious side of the expedition will endeavor to determine the economic value of Guinea to the Empire. The expedition has been organized by two young Australians, Neal McNeil and Lucius A. Connolly.

GLIDE O'ER THE SEA LIKE AN ALBATROSS

New York, Aug. 22.—An American motorless airplane, capable of rising from and alighting upon water, has been completed, and will shortly be put through a series of tests, which, if successful, will far outdo anything in the gliding line where the fliers start from mountain tops, Glenn H. Curtiss, pioneer in the flying world, said in an exclusive interview.

Praising German achievements at Gersfeld, where an airman remained aloft two hours and 360 seconds in a motorless plane, Curtiss said he expected shortly to demonstrate a glider in which the pilot literally "lifted himself up by the bootstraps" from the surface of the sea, instead of starting down a mountainside.

DAMAGE SUIT IS BEING HEARD

Jonothan Latta Sues Acme Cheese Co. For Damages Resulting From Alleged Wrongful Dismissal

The civil case of Latta versus Acme Cheese Co. was heard on Monday afternoon and will continue until evening today at the court-house here, Mr. E. Gus Porter, K.C., M.P., appearing for the defendants, Mr. F. E. O'Flynn for the plaintiff. His Lordship Mr. Justice Mowat is presiding, this being a case laid over from the June sessies.

The plaintiff, Jonathan Latta, who was employed by the Acme Cheese Co. as cheesemaker, was discharged before his time was up, and he sued the company for $5,000 damages.

Two of the principal witnesses were Mr. Howie, inspector of cheese factories in this district, and Mr. Walter P. Simmons, president of the Acme Cheese Company.

Mr. Howie told of his periodical visits to this factory in the capacity of inspector and of his finding that the interior was not kept sanitary, the ceiling and floor being dirty. He issued no certificate to the plaintiff in 1919 or 1920, but he did give him a temporary certificate for one year in 1921. Nevertheless, Latta was refused a certificate.

Simmons told of hiring Latta at a meeting of directors of the company in 1921. There were no written, but Latta agreed to make 31 cheese, keep the plant and thoroughly clean all whey cans, supply rennet and coloring, and make cheese on Saturday without additional charge. He in turn was to receive 4 cents per pound for the manufacture of the cheese and 10 cents per pound for the butter. He commenced duties on April 2nd, 1921, but according to witness, did not comply with these conditions.

Witnesses examined this morning were directors of the company and Mr. Herbert Morton, local cheese buyer.

MENACED BY DEATH, CRIPPLE DROPS CRUTCHES AND RUNS

Paris, Aug 22—A miracle for which Lourdes, in some quarters, is given credit, is reported from Macon.

A pilgrim train bound for Lourdes was waiting in the station at Dijon and several pilgrims had crossed the tracks to the refreshment room when the whistle called them back. Among them was a paralyzed man who could only move with difficulty even with the aid of two crutches. As he was between the rails on his way back an express train was seen to be entering the station. A cry of horror went up from those who saw his dangerous position, but the man who had hobbled half way across with his crutches now put them under his arm and ran for safety, escaping what seemed certain death.

RAIL DISPUTE STILL RAGES

Harding Draws Fire From Both Sides — Gompers Says Speech Was "Unfortunate"

New York, Aug. 21.—Evidences increased today that President Harding's effort to review before Congress the events of the rail and coal strikes had drawn fire from both sides in the former dispute.

President Loree of the Delaware & Hudson spoke of the efforts to have the seniority issue to the Labor Board as an effort of the politicians to sweep the table clean. W. W. Atterbury, Vice-President of the Pennsylvania Railroad declared: "Mr. Loree speaks for the bunch."

The Harding speech, which President Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor, has characterized as "unfortunate," because it would stiffen the opposition of the railroads to the mediation proposals of the operating brotherhoods, was attacked by Mr. Loree on a directly opposite ground.

Hinders Recruiting.

He asserted that it hindered the roads from getting more men into the shops and operated to delay the breaking of the strike.

"It hinders recruiting," was the way he put it, adding, "Nothing is worse than uncertainty in a case like this."

These "straws" were taken today to indicate the way that the east wind will blow when the conference of all the 148 high railroad officials is held here on Wednesday to decide on a reply to the proposals of the union leaders.

The attitude of the Eastern roads is clearly a desire that the President, Congress and all other public authority cease all efforts at mediation and let the roads deal with the situation as circumstances and their interests dictate.

'HINDY' ON HAND FOR ROYALIST CELEBRATION

Reaches Munich Day Before Expected and is Received With Enthusiasm

Munich, Aug. 21.—Field Marshal von Hindenburg arrived this morning for Hindenburg Day, which is to-morrow, and all Munich gave its favor to a monarchistic demonstration.

Consciously or unconsciously the Field Marshal played into the hands of the Monarchists by his arrival a day earlier than was necessary. The Bavarian Cabinet, under Premier Count Lerchenfeld, was meeting to decide whether to accept the Premier's compromises on the protection of the Republican law.

Meanwhile former Premier von Kahr, Count Lerchenfeld's political enemy, was in charge of the Hindenburg demonstration. General von Hindenburg, accompanied by Count Bothmer, who led the Bavarian troops in the war, headed a parade through Munich, which had all the spirit of an impromptu affair. At entrance to the Army Museum the Field Marshal met the old officers, corps and was greeted by Count Bothmer "in the name of the old army."

IRISH LEADER ASSASSINATED BY REBELS

COLLINS SLAIN BY IRISH REBELS

Head of Free State Government and Commander of Army is Shot in Rebel Ambush—Assassination Came on Heels of Republican Threat—Three Men Appointed to Succeed Dead Leader

WAS EXPECTING DEATH

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, August 23.—Michael Collins, head of the Provisional Government, Irish Free State and Commander-in-Chief of the Free State army was shot and killed by rebel ambush in Cork County.

ASSASSINATION WAS PLANNED

Dublin, August 23.—It was announced this morning that, in view of assassination of Michael Collins, the Dail Eireann will be summoned immediately, probably meeting on Saturday of the present week.

The assassination of Collins comes directly on the heels of the announcement by Irish Irregulars of a policy of ambushes and raids in their fight against the Free State Government. News of the outrage, only meagre details of which have been received here, came too late for publication in the morning newspapers, the majority of which comment on the breaking up of organized warfare in Southern Ireland.

THREATENED TO SUCCEED COLLINS

Dublin, August 23.—It is reported in some quarters that a tribune of three men will be appointed by the Dail Eireann to succeed Michael Collins, as head of the Government. The three names mentioned are, Liam Cosgrave, Chairman of the Cabinet, Richard Mulcahy, now Commandcr of the Army, and George Gavan Duffy, former envoy.

"SOME BLACKGUARD"

Chicago, August 23.—Patrick Collins, sergeant in the Chicago Police Force, brother of Michael Collins, the Irish leader killed yesterday, said recent letters indicated that Michael was expecting death. The place where he was killed was just 12 miles from Cloanakilty where he was born.

"If it were real Irishmen that killed Mike I would say the Irish race is discredited," said Sergeant Collins. "But I know it is not. It was some blackguard not fit to wipe his boots."

Two Great Losses.

With the passing of Arthur Griffith, who died August 12, and Collins, the Irish Free Staters have lost two men they will find hard to replace. When Mr. Griffith was buried, Collins, dressed in full uniform as Commander-in-Chief of the army, was the chief mourner for the Government. Although threats had been made against his life, and his friends intercepted his participating, Collins marched in the funeral procession to Glasnevin Cemetery.

Collins still was in his thirties. Last May it was announced that Miss Kitty Kiernan, who came of the leading families inLongford, was engaged to marry Collins.

Born of Humble Parents.

Little is known of the early life of Collins, except that he was said to have been born of humble parents in County Kerry. He was educated in the National School, and later worked with a brother in the grocery business, entered the postal service. At one time he was employed in the London postoffice.

Collins sprang into prominence in October, 1914, in connection with the Sinn Fein movement. In 1916 he commanded a section of the rebel army in Ireland, and when Patrick H. Pearce, who later was executed, was commander-in-chief. It was charged in a Government paper "that it pried named Michael Collins" as compatriot Sir Roger Casement, who later was executed for treason for connection with the Sinn Fein plot with Germany to visit Irish prisoners of war.

Although a member of the Imperial Parliament, Collins represented West minster. During the troubles time between the Sinn Feiners and the British forces, Collins was said to have made his headquarters in Dublin, although he was prepared to more hither and thither on the shortest notice. The Royal Irish Constabulary, the Black and Tans and the Auxiliaries frequently raided premises where Collins was supposed to be but he always managed to elude them. His boldness was a by-word for all Irishmen.

IRELAND'S LINCOLN

Dublin, Aug. 23.—The Managing Editor of The Freeman's Journal, himself on the verge of tears, hurried across the street on receipt of the news of the death of Michael Collins, to order the "rules turned" for the second time within two weeks.

"It means to Ireland what Abraham Lincoln's assassination meant to America," he said.

Then someone asked what Ireland would do now.

HARD COAL MEN STILL HOLD OUT

Attempt to End Strike Failed Yesterday—Miners Insist on the 1920 Wage Scale

Philadelphia, Aug. 22.—With the miners insisting on the 1920 wage scale until April 1, 1924, and the operators unwilling to contract for the old scale beyond April 1, 1923, unless provision be made for adjusting wages beyond that date, the attempt to end the anthracite strike ended in utter today.

The machinery for ending the strike, by joint committee of operators appointed at the New York City conference on March 18, remains in existence, its functions subject to the call of Secretary James A. Gorman, or request of either side, but the prospects that it will be called to meet much seem slender bit is, in the opinion of miners and operators, decidedly dim.

Meantime those individuals and interests of the Atlantic seaboard dependent upon the hard coal mines of Pennsylvania for fuel, will have to do without anthracite.

"Pasta," said Khayyam Pitz-Gerald, "is the feminine of genius."

STOWAWAYS PUT ASHORE

FISH ARE FRISKY AFTER A DEBAUCH

Jewett City, Conn., Aug. 22.—Here is a fish story, for which, in effect, the state police vouch:

Confiscated liquor valued at $15,000 was poured into the Assawanna River, with the fish suffering what in the old days, was known as a hang-over.

Pickerel and shiny minnows projected along side by side. Huge black bass floated down stream on their backs and were easily picked up by hand.

The Wauregan mill-race was so chocked with a drunken, conglomeration of finny creatures that they had to be scooped up by the hundreds before the power machine could function properly.

For the present the Reserve Bn. will not be required to perform any drills, but, individual members may if they so desire, drill with the 1st Battalion @ the annual training.

FIELDING DEPARTS FOR OLD COUNTRY

Quebec, Que., Aug. 22.—The Empress Scotland with over four hundred passengers, eight hundred tons of cargo and nine bags of mail, sailed for Southampton, Cherbourg and Hamburg this afternoon at 4.45 o'clock.

The departure of this big palatial Canadian liner was of more than usual interest this afternoon, owing to the fact that the Canadian Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Hon. W. G. Fielding and Hon. Ernest Lapointe were among the saloon passengers. The former was accompanied by his daughter, Miss F. M. Fielding and the latter by Mrs. Lapointe.

WELSH COAL HAS ARRIVED SAYS MAYOR HANNA

Mayor Hanna Will Negotiate for Purchase of Wood Supply on Thursday—Plenty of Soft Coal—Markets Flooded With Soft Coal But Hard Stuff is Still Very Scarce

Belleville is not suffering from the fuel situation, and is not likely to before other cities either, according to information gleaned by The Intelligencer this morning. Nevertheless the fuel situation in a big sense, not locally, remains very little changed.

The market is being flooded with soft coal, and the price of this commodity has dropped some $2 per ton during the past week. This coal can always be secured, however, and citizens have been advised not to decide too quickly upon stocking up their bins with soft coal, fearing their inability to purchase hard coal.

Welsh anthracite coal is coming into this country now, Mayor Hanna having received quotations on this coal this week from two different dealers. One quoted the coal at $17.50 per ton, and the other at $14.50. This coal is mine run, however, and must be screened and sorted. There are several cars of this coal on the Grand Trunk tracks here to-day.

Plenty of Hardwood

Mayor Hanna stated this morning that every fuel merchant in this city was well stocked with good supplies of hardwood slabs. The merchants do not bother with hard body wood because they must have about $14 per cord for it, and of course if coal can be purchased, the coal is the cheapest and best. One dealer here is retailing the very best hardwood slabs at $12 per cord, and another dealer who has hardwood slabs that he has stocked all summer, is sacrificing them at $9 per cord.

Judging by these facts, the situation locally is not so serious after all, up to the present.

Mayor Hanna will be out of the city to-morrow (Thursday) for the purpose of looking over a quantity of hard body wood, with a view of purchasing it for this city.

EVIDENCE IN LATTA CASE

At 10.45 a.m. today all evidence had been taken in the Latta versus Armstrong Co., civil case, at the court house here.

His Lordship Mr. Justice Mowatt who presided over the trial, will fix a date when he will hear the argument of counsel.

The trial which lasted more than 2 days, was a long, drawn out, technical case dealing with the manufacture of cheese in factory, many witnesses being called by both the defence and the reply. The case is a damage suit for $5,000.

LEAPED TO DEATH TO SAVE HIS DOG

Head River, Que., Aug. 22.—John Young, aged 18, son of (twen D. Young, farmer president of the General Electric Company of New York, died here today, having given his life to save a dog.

Young was employed as material checker in a construction camp of the Pacific Power and Light Company here.

youth's companion, ran in front of a moving locomotive, on the front of which Young was riding. The boy leaped from the engine and snatched at the dog in an effort to throw it to safety, but slipped and fell directly beneath the wheels of the moving train.

He died before help could reach him.

LAW TO CURB COAL PROFITEER

Legal Difficulties Hamper Attempt of U.S. to Regulate Prices—Cabinet at Work—Daugherty, Hoover and Davis Working on the Measure

Washington, Aug. 23.—A new law to curb coal profiteering is being framed by administration cabinet members.

At the suggestion of President Harding, several plans have been submitted to Attorney-General Daugherty, and he is expected to confer with Secretaries Hoover and Davis today in an effort to find a satisfactory measure.

Unexpected legal difficulties are besetting the attempt to provide federal supervision of fuel prices.

Daugherty is drawing up a bill providing for a federal coal agency to act as a "middle man" by buying huge quantities of coal for interstate shipments, thus holding down prices. Due to strong opposition to such a measure, despite its recommendation by President Harding other plans are also being considered.

Among these are said to be revival of the anti-profiteering section of the war time Lever law.

Meanwhile, action was being pushed in both Senate and house today on the President's suggestion for legislation creating a coal commission to make a complete investigation of the mining industry. It was to b considered by the house inter-state commerce committee and the Senate interstate committee with the probability that it would be taken up in the house to-morrow or Thursday.

If Daugherty, Hoover and Davis can reach an agreement promptly on the anti-coal profiteering bill, it probably will be introduced in Congress before the end of the week.

Reports continue to come to the government of profiteering in coal. This is expected to continue even should the coal strike be settled completely, due to the great shortages the country faces.

NEW POWER PLANT OPENED

Four thousand horse power was introduced into the veins of the Hydro Electric Power System here, with the first hum this morning of the new nine million dollar power plant, which was opened at Rankey Falls, 12m miles below Campbellford on the Trent River.

There are two machines in this plant, each of which are rated for about 5000 horse power, and when in conversation with Mr. Smith, superintendent of the Hydro Electric Co. here this morning, The Intelligencer was informed that the one machine which is operating is registering 4000 H. P. The second machine has not been put in operation as yet.

The machinery is installed in the fine and presentable stone building which has been under construction for one year, and a half, employing as many as 200 men, and is situated in close proximity to the power falls there,

No Power Shortage Now.

This power feeds into the whole system from Ontario to Hamilton and up to Lindsay, and Bellsville will experience NO MORE power shortage as she did for a short time this year, when the water in the lakes lowered.

"There will be no difficulties now from water troubles, and no more power shortage", said Mr. Smith in giving his interview.

Quite a number of Bellevillians attended the testing and opening of the plant yesterday, but there was no ceremony in connection.

OUTLOOK IS DARK IN RAIL STRIKE

Another Attempt at Settlement Will, However, Be Made To-day

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Aug. 23.—Efforts of the Big Five Brotherhoods acting as mediators in the shop crafts strike to surprised where others have failed will be put to the test today when the heads of 146 unions, meeting at the Yale Club will vote whether to accept the Brotherhoods peace proposals or continue their fight for what they term a "fight to the finish." The granting of a twenty per cent. increase to about three hundred thousand Shop Corporation employees was hailed upon this morning as a good omen for rail employees.

DELORME ABLE TO CONTROL HIS ESTATES

So Says Head of Asylum Where Priest is Lodged, Report is Prepared

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Montreal, Aug. 23—The entire question of the sanity of former Abbe Delorme who was charged with murdering his brother will be held in the superior court on August 30, as result of a report made by Dr. Brisbay, of St. Michel Asylum, made to-day that his patient is sane enough to administer his own affairs.

SYRIANS THREATEN FREEDOM OR DEATH

Arab Tribes Are Closing in on Damascus—French Commissioner Asks For Troops

Damascus, Aug. 23—Syria is again seriously disturbed. The agitation is against the French mandate recently approved by the Council of the League of Nations at London. The people of Damascus, Beirut, Haifa, Alexandretta, Homs and Hama have all closed their places of business, and are now spending their idle hours parading the streets and crying "Independence or death."

The "Iron Hand," an organization similar to the Sinn Fein in Ireland, has appeared in Damascus. Several of its members recently fired at and seriously wounded the commissioner of police here. Bombs were also thrown at several houses occupied by French officials, causing much material damage, but no casualties.

The Druze, under Sultan Pasha Attrash, and the Arab tribes in the north have also joined in the agitation, and are now threatening Damascus. Gen. Gouraur, the French High Commissioner, has telegraphed Premier poincare for additional troops.

LABOR MUST FIGHT WAR

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Montreal, Aug. 23—Samuel Gompers, American Federation of Labor, and W. Citrine, fraternal delegate from England, both made denouncement of war as the greatest curse the labor cause had to meet, in addressing the Trades and Labor Congress today. Their remarks were given an ovation.

Organized labor has a big greater problem to face than a mere fight for a proper adjustment of wages and conditions of labor. The great battle is to fight against war. Fighting for better conditions for the working class is brought to naught if that man upon reaching his maturity is torn from his family and thrown over the trenches to slaughter by his fellows. Thus did W. Carter, M.P., sum up his message to the Trades and Labor Congress form the British Trades Union Congress of which he is a fraternal delegate.

HOW TO BUY A HUSBAND

San Francisco, Cal., August 23.—An offer by Mrs. Edith Huntington Spreckels Wakefield, first wife of the late "Sugar" Spreckels, California millionaire, to sell herself possession in San Francisco realty, to "buy" another woman's husband from her for $100 a month for the rest of her life, came to light here to-day and is admitted by all persons involved.

The husband whom Mrs. Wakefield is credited with having offered to "buy" is Rodgey Kendrick, a newspaper artist. The wife, who is ill and admits she is "considering" the offer, said she already had given her wedding ring to Mrs. Wakefield. Mrs. Wakefield said she, too, planned a divorce.

A statement from Mrs. Wakefield said:

"It was a long time ago I told Mrs. Kendrick that I loved her husband and wanted to marry him. I proposed for she would have a home with Rodney and myself as long as she lived."

AUTUMN SOWN CROPS

Results of Experiments By Agricultural College at Guelph—Some Useful Hints

During the past year, experiments have been conducted at the College and throughout Ontario with Winter Wheat, Winter Rye, Winter Emmer, Winter Barley and Hairy Vetches.

More than three hundred varieties of winter wheat and many selections and crosses have been tested at the Agricultural College within the past thirty-two years. Fourteen varieties of winter wheat have been grown under test at the College for twenty-seven years with average results for the whole period as follows:—Yield of grain per acre, 42.2 bushels, yield of straw per acre, 2.6 tons, and weight per measured bushel 60.7 pounds. The percentage increase per acre in 1922 compared with the average for the whole period amounts to 12 in yield of grain, 13 in yield of straw, and 3 in weight of grain per measured bushel. It will, therefore, be seen that the winter wheat results at the College are considerably above the average this season. The winter crop throughout Ontario this year is, in most districts, a better than average crop.

The most prominent varieties of winter wheat in Ontario at the present time are the Dawson's Golden Chaff, the O.A.C. No. 104, the No. 6, and the Imperial Amber. The Dawson's Golden Chaff produces stiff straw of medium length, bearded, loss heads with red chaff, and white grain. The O.A.C. No. 104 was originated at the College by crossing the Dawson's Golden Chaff and the Bulgarian. It is a white wheat with white chaff similar to the Bulgarian and has a beardless head similar to the Dawson's Golden Chaff. It is a vigorous grower and has been less subject to winter-killing than either of its parents. The No. 6 resembles the Dawson's Golden Chaff but has a square head, the straw has a purplish tinge, and the crop seems less subject to injury from smut. The Imperial Amber is a bearded wheat with red chaff and red grain.

Experiments at the College have shown that the best results have been obtained from sowing large, plump, sound, well-matured winter wheat seed of strong vitality.

Five varieties of winter wheat have been grown in co-operative tests by farmers throughout Ontario in each of the past six years. The average results in yield of bushels per acre for the six year period are as follows:—O.A.C. No. 104, 37.5; Improved Dawson's Golden Chaff, 36.1; Improved Imperial Amber, 35.8; Khatyne, 32.5; Yaroslaf, 21.2. The O.A.C. No. 104 surpassed the Dawson's Golden Chaff and Imperial Amber varieties in yield per acre both at the College and throughout Ontario.

The Mammoth White, Rosen and Petkus varieties of winter rye have given the best results of all the ryes tested at Guelph.

Winter Barley is not quite as hardy as winter wheat but, when it survives the winter, it produces high yields.

Distribution of Material for Experiments in Autumn of 1922

As long as the supply lasts, material will be distributed free of charge in the order in which the applications are received from Ontario farmers wishing to experiment and reports the results of any one of the following tests:—

1. Three varieties of Winter Wheat.
2. One variety of Winter Rye and one of Winter Wheat.
3. Spring applications of five fertilizers with Winter Wheat.
4. Autumn and Spring applications of Nitrate of Soda and Common Salt with Winter Wheat.
5. Winter Emmer and Winter Barley.
6. Hairy Vetches and Winter Rye as fodder crops.
7. Mixtures of Winter Rye and Hairy Vetches for seed production.

The size of each plot is to be one rod wide by two rods long. Fertilizers will be sent by express for Experiment No. 4 this autumn, and for Experiment No. 3 next spring. All seed will be sent by mail except that for No. 4 which will accompany the fertilizers.

WOULD MAKE RAIN FOR THE POPE

London, Aug. 22.—A "rain-maker," who claims to have brought relief to drought-sufferers in Canada and the United States, has arrived at Naples, having been invited by the Italian government to try to bring rain to that vicinity, parched by a five months' drought, says a Central News despatch from Naples today.

If he is successful at Naples, the government will summon him to expel the process in other districts suffering from lack of rain. He was quoted to-day as saying he was anxious to explain his secret process to Pope Pius, and if the pontiff agreed he would try to induce rain to fall on the Vatican gardens, which for some time have been withered by the drought. The despatch does not give his name.

POSING FOR PICTURE, GIRL BATHER DROWNS

Swept Into Deep Water as Her Father Was About to Snap Camera

New York, Aug. 22.—While posing in her bathing suit for her father to take a snap shot photograph of her, Miss Elizabeth Mautner, 19 years old, of 1,317 Franklyn Avenue, the Bronx, fell in the Bronx River at 161 Railway, N. J., on Sunday and was drowned. The drowning occurred a block from the Italo Balbo Yacht Club pier, but the accident was so sudden that the girl could not be rescued.

Miss Mautner, who could not swim, was standing knee deep in the water. A sudden rush of the current is believed to have caused her to lose her footing. She slipped and fell almost within arm's length of her father, and was quickly carried out from the bank into deep water.

James Stevens, 19 years old, who was returning from fishing, jumped from the bank with his clothes on in an attempt to save the girl. She grabbed him about the neck as he approached. He broke her hold and started to swim with her ashore, when she seized him again, pulling him under water. Stevens broke her hold for the second time, but was so exhausted that he regained shore with difficulty.

In the meantime, Miss Mautner had sunk for the third time. Her body was recovered forty minutes later. Miss Mautner, Lawrence and Esther were visiting friends in Railway.

NEW ZEALAND BUSY ON NAVAL PROGRAM

Admiralty Offers Suggestions—Contribute Light Cruisers and Submarines

London, Aug. 22.—Premier W. F. Massey, of New Zealand, on Friday disclosed suggestions which he had just received from the Admiralty regarding New Zealand's naval development, according to a Reuter despatch from Wellington. Outlining the policy of the Dominion of New Zealand, he said that during the period of financial stringency the seagoing squadron was capable of rapid expansion, and when times improved this should consist of light cruisers and ocean-going submarines, and all the reserves should be supplied locally.

Financial assistance should be given in equipping the empire with naval bases, or New Zealand material should be supplied, Premier Massey continued. The bases, docks, depots, reserves of stores and fuel should be provided locally for the local squadron. Local protection of the trade routes, the storage of guns, the trained personnel for the merchant ships and their escorts should be provided. Mobile defense of ports, including a mine-sweeping organization, should be elaborated.

PROFIT OF 140 PER CENT. ON MOONSHINE WHISKEY

St. Thomas, Ont., Aug. 22.—Acknowledging that he bought moonshine liquor at $10 a gallon, and retailed it at $4 a quart, each gallon filling six quart bottles and enabling him to reap a profit of 140 per cent., Robert Brooks, a local man, appeared in police court here and pleaded guilty to charges of violating the Inland Revenue Act and the Ontario Temperance Act in having illicit whiskey in his possession and selling the liquor. Crown Attorney McCrimmon was not satisfied with the information produced, and asked for an adjournment until tomorrow.

HAND-SHAKES IN CHURCH

By BYRON STAUFFER, In Toronto Star

"It was the coldest congregation I ever saw. Not a soul shook hands with me during the whole six months I went to nearly every service." said a preacher in the wide world hasn't at one time or another had that sort of talk, either about others or some other church. Not a preacher who hasn't worried about and, very likely, gone into his pulpit the next Sunday to exhort his people "to be sociable in church and sure to greet strangers.

How this hand-shaking problem of two sides to it, as I discovered few years ago than I care to reckon if I had just assumed the position of Buffalo's coldest Methodist urch, once the pride of the artistry, but now a poor old tabernacle on the edge of the slums. I ught a book entitled, "Empty churches and How to Fill Them." of the recipes was labelled, Cordiality, and urged the appointment of a live social committee for the thematic welcoming of strangers.

If ever a church was harnessed for hand-shaking, ours certainly was. We had two portly officials and three or four meek-eyed women in the vestibule as appointed, so to speak. Their job turns at pulling each and every man through the portals, telling him, "It was a fine morning, whether or no, getting his name and bellow if it to the other committee folk as we did our territory hired-boy afternoon butter at their irons ten ten. Having by this time discovered somebody the inner enclosure, the guesst was handed over to the head usher who stood ready to shake his hand as it had never been squeezed before and pass him on to the aisle usher, who, in turn, was to shake hands and then hall a latest arrival until the pew usher turned from a previous expedition to shake hands. This very deferential gentleman shook hands of course and stood ahead of his convoy, looking back every other second for fear the stranger was clandestinely slipping over a back pew and leaving the premises. How to go through the motions of having an imaginary worshipper in a prominent place.

There we prided ourselves on going a text-book one better. For we had a member of the committee in charge of every three pews, thus having almost sixty-three greeters spread all over that auditorium,(to see that nobody got away from us by stealth this greeter handed the usher a hymn-book found the psalm of the day for him and then watched for his chance, after the benediction, to softly welcome, visit, pass around and invite back the newcomer.

Of course, we had organized for a stand as big as Spurgeon Tabernacle's, and the staff was sometimes as numerous as that of a summer inn

WILD BUFFALO ROAM IN NORTH

Sanctuary May be Established For the 5,000 Remaining Bison

Edmonton, Alta., Aug. 23—Unafraid of man, the last remaining herds of wild buffalo on the continent live a peaceful and unobstructed life on a range between the Peace and Slave rivers, and the Great Slave lake, and it is expected within a short time their territory will be turned into a sanctuary, closed to all trappers and hunters. They have inhabited this district for many years and are believed to be on the increase, the various herds probably numbering about 5,000 head now. The country in which they live is a mixture of prairie patches, wooded land and rolling hills, interspersed with brule; here the buffalo feed during the open season, returning to the low land during the winter where they live on the plentiful red top hay in the sloughs. As far as is known they never migrate beyond this range and as a general rule follow one line of sloughs travelling to "pasture new" as the grass gets eaten and trampled down.

J. M. Street, a trapper of Peace Point, upon his return from the north country recently brought the interesting reports from the bison the range, he travels this district all range. His trap lines are run through winter long and is therefore very well acquainted with the roaming of the buffalo.

Mr. Street states the buffalo range is a maze of heavily marked trails which run in all directions. Frequently a herd of 35 or 40 is met with and several times last season the trapper came on one band of bulls which numbered 50, and he is of the opinion that a large bull would dress 2,400 pounds.

The buffalo are not menaced by the Indians, one reason being that there are four buffalo guards who patrol the country and keep watch and ward over the remnant of the race. Neither do the wolves bother the bison as during the last year, Mr. Street has been trapping on their range he has only come across one dead animal and this might have died from natural causes. In general when met with the bison show no sign of fear, and are in no particular hurry to get away. On a number of occasions the trapper has left within 100 or 150 yards of the herd before they commenced to move and they do not appear to resent the intrusion of human beings.

Maxwell Grahame, of the department of the interior, is now in the north investigating the feasibility of establishing a buffalo sanctuary.

A protected herd of buffalo, numbering well over 6,000 head, is kept at Wainwright Park, Alta., by the federal government. The sanctuary which was stocked 12 years ago with 760 animals obtained in Colorado, comprises an area of 100,000 acres.

BATHER IS BITTEN

Schoolmaster's Death on Yorkshire Coast

Hull, Engr., July 30 (By Mail).—An inquest was held yesterday at Hornsea, on the East Yorkshire coast, on the body of Percy Harold Lee, aged thirty, a schoolmaster, who on Thursday afternoon, accompanied by his wife and a friend, went to the beach at Hornsea Burton to bathe.

While Mr. Lee and her friend were waiting, Mr. Lee, who was about fifty yards out, was seen to be in difficulties, and a alarm was raised, but no one could find no trace of the body at the time.

Miss Beatrice Alice Appleton, a bank clerk, of Birmingham, stated at the inquest that she was bathing with Mr. Le. They were returning when she heard him shout and saw him wave his hand. She imagined he was laughing, but suddenly Mrs. Lee called out, "He's gone."

Dr. Johns said there was a large lacerated wound on the sanatrine six inches by five behind the left shoulder, and the muscles had been particularly torn down to the bone. There were also six semi-circular tooth marks on the edge of the wound, and a deep bite on the chest, the shoulder wrench was the result of one operation, as though it had been caught by some powerful animal. He thought the wound had been inflicted during life, because the body was practically bloodless. Another reason for the belief was the retraction of the edges of the bite. Death during the war he had a similar case.

Harold Edward Hutchinson, who gave evidence that it was fixing a hole with the hands on the stomach and the kneed drawn up.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT AGAINST HANGING WOMAN MURDERER

London, Aug. 22.—The court of criminal appeals refused to hear the evidence of death passed here recently upon a man and woman who were finally convicted of murder in order to hold a public discussion as to whether the Home Secretary, Hon. Edward Shortt, K.C., will interfere on the woman's behalf. It is thirteen years since the last execution of a female in Great Britain. The prisoner at present exciting interest is only 22 years of age.

Apart from the youthfulness of the condemned woman, it is maintained that public opinion has become entirely against the execution of females.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 23, 1922.

THE BAD SAMARITAN

We are officially advised to use soft coal, coke and wood during the early winter months. It might be well for our Mayor to enquire into the possibilities of securing wood from the country to the north. We understand that the price of coal is rather high, and it will probably go higher the more it comes into demand.

Professors are not confined to war-time. It's a strange illustration of "man's inhumanity to man" that whenever hardship and privation come upon a community there are those who take advantage of the calamity to make more money and thus add to the suffering. The Good Samaritan endures the man who was down, but the profiteer strips him of the few remaining rags he has left on him.

STRAP THE EDITOR

"It is quite apparent that in our schools there is too much culture, too many fads and not enough strap", says Toronto Saturday Night in an editorial on "Bolshevism Among Children". The editor deplores the "yellow Sunday Sheet" with the "Katzenjammer Kids" and "Mrs. Jiggs" thieving brother and the remainder of the elevative pictures."

If it be true that the Bolshevism among boys in these days is in any way due to colored supplements in Sunday newspapers, what is the good of strapping the boys? Surely the people who should be strapped are the men who purvey such rubbish and make money out of the perversion of the mental and moral outlook of our children.

There is no doubt that the "pictures" referred to are decapitating, but the proprietors of the papers that publish them have no care for these things. There are editors that have been nicknamed "sexual splitters", who, when it comes to publishing picture seem to lose even their sense of what is decent.

Some of the photographs reproduced in a very "moral" Toronto paper are unfit for entrance into a decent home. This same paper had several articles and interviews recently on the subject of youthful delinquency. The delinquency is not all with youth, and all the strapping should not be confined to the schools.

DECLINE IN TUBERCULOSIS.

A medical correspondent of The London Times declares that tuberculosis is on the decline. He says that while figures are proverbially deceptive, yet it is worth noting that whereas the death-rate in 1851-1880 was 2,543 per million (all forms of tuberculosis), it was only 1,322 per million in 1921. During the war there was an increase, but in 1919 a sharp fall occurred to a figure lower than any previously recorded. This fall continued in 1920; in 1921, taking into consideration the increase of population, the position was again satisfactory, though a slight increase over 1920 was recorded.

This slight increase was almost negligible as it rose from 998 to 1,000 per million), but in London it was more appreciable (1,077 per million). Both the number of deaths and the death-rates for non-pulmonary tuberculosis were lower in 1921 than in 1920.

Sir George Newman says whether this slight check to the fall in the mortality of pulmonary tuberculosis bears any significance in the long account of unemployment in 1920. It may well do so, for tuberculosis flourishes in conditions of malnutrition and poverty. In Germany for example, the tuberculosis death-rate increased from 1,014 per million in 1918, to 1,402 in 1919, and to 1,799 per million in 1920. In 1917, it was still higher. In 1918 there were 40,000 more deaths in Germany from tuberculosis than in 1913.

A similar state of matters has been reported from Poland where the mortality from consumption increased from the date of the departure of the German army and the unsettling of food restrictions.

The writer regards the above facts as of great importance, as he says they tend to confirm the view that our gradual deliverance from this scourge is due to better living conditions. Happily, too, this is in fact better a great deal than told our fathers. Civilization, for all its faults, is the greatest enemy disease has ever encountered.

A USEFUL BULLETIN

The Ontario Department of Agriculture occasionally does something useful, and one of the most recent publications contains some interesting information and instruction for the carrying out of plays, debates, and community music in rural districts during the winter months. The bulletin has been prepared by Prof. G. J. Sherrington, M.A., D. Paed., and may be obtained from the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph. Full detailed instructions are given which should be of great assistance to societies and clubs that are preparing or thinking about their winter programs. The following are a few suggestions as to the character of the entertainments or of the programmes that may be provided, according to the time of the organization, the place of meeting, and the interests of its members:—

Charades.
Tableaux; shadowgraphs; "living pictures."
Spelling matches; geography matches.
Old-fashioned games.
Carpet balls, checkers, crokinole, and other games.
Singing contests; story-telling contests.
A Dickens' party; an historical party,—in costume.
Programmes for special days. Valentine Day, Hallowe'en, Thanksgiving Day.
A Canadian, Scotch, Irish or English Night.
Mixed programmes, with music and speeches. A good reader reads aloud at each meeting a chapter from an outstanding book such as "The Friendly Road," by David Grayson.
An Evening with the Stars. One or two short papers on some of the constellations, followed, if possible, by observation with field-glasses or telescope.
Study of an artist such as Turner or Reynolds, with reproductions of his pictures, slides, or of a composer, with phonograph records to illustrate.
A motion picture or lantern slide entertainment.
A Mock Trial.
A Debate
A Play.
Community Music.

The Packet Library, Ontario Agricultural College, will give assistance, where possible, in providing material for programmes; and will appreciate suggestions and information as to programmes and entertainments that have been successfully carried out by rural organizations.

THERE AND THERE

POISONED ARROWS.

Practically all Central and South American Indians (such as use poisoned arrows at all) use the same poison—the dried juice of a species of strychnos. Its physiological action is to paralyze the end-plates of motor nerves. Thus, without affecting the central nervous system at all, it causes complete paralysis of all muscles. Death is due to paralysis of heart and respiratory muscles. Curare, as it is called, has no other action; it does not affect consciousness nor is it anaesthetic. The important and interesting thing about curare is that it is inert unless introduced directly into the body fluids. It can be swallowed even in large quantities without ill effects, because it is broken up in the stomach by the digestive process. Introduced into the blood-stream, however, by hypodermic injection, or by a dart, knife or arrow-head smeared with it, curare is highly poisonous. A rats almost instantly, paralyzing all muscles, so that its victim drops at once, inert; and that victim may be eaten with impunity, because curare is broken up during digestion.—Adventure Magazine for August.

ELIZABETHAN STAGE COSTUMES

Costume on the Elizabethan and Jacobean stages was somewhat an advance of the scenic standards. There was always opportunity for the exercise of artistic ingenuity in the case of fanciful characters like "Humour painted full of tongues" in the Second Part of "Henry IV.", or "certain powers properly habited" in the masque of "The Tempest." But the actors in normal roles wore the ordinary costumes of the day, without precise reference to the period or place of action. Ancient Greeks and Romans were attired in doublet and hose or, if they were soldiers, in Tudor armour.

The contents of the theatrical wardrobe were often of rich material and in the height of current fashion. Many foreign visitors to London recorded in their diaries their admiration of the splendour of the leading actors' dress. False hair and beards, crowns and sceptres, mitres and crosiers, armour, helmets, shields, visors, and weapons of war, hoods, hands, and rosaries, were freely employed to indicate differences of age, rank, or profession. Towards the close of Shakespeare's career plays on English history were elaborately "costumed." In the summer of 1613 "Henry VIII." was set forth with many extraordinary circumstances of Pomp and Majesty even to the matting of the stage; the Knights of the Order, with their Georges and Garters, the Guards with their embroidered coats, and the like."—Sir Sydney Lee.

"DYING IN HARNESS."

The doctrine that it is good to "die in harness" has been preached widely in our time, and great examples of continuing old age are constantly being cited. Sir William Robertson, Nicoll thinks, and I strongly agree with him, that for ordinary men to follow these is a profound mistake. "The advice that the old should remain in harness till the last is plainly always bad advice. . . . We should learn gradually to die to a great many of our former pursuits. Old men are prone and their pride shows itself chiefly in their persuading that they are more efficient than ever. But it has been well said that the self-sacrifice which in youth is often required even by readiness to sacrifice pleasure for duty is in age oftenest represented by readiness to surrender what was once a duty but is a duty no longer." To me it has always seemed that to die in harness is to miss the complete life, which, as it began in helplessness, should end in inactivity. It is the way of Nature. The day has its evening, the week has its Sabbath, the year has its autumn, and life should have its sunset and its great calm.

THERE MAY BE SEA-SERPENTS

Scientists Admit That These Marine Monsters May Not All Have Been the Result of "Grog"

Of all funny notions about the Gulf Stream, the oddest was the theory published recently that the railway ballast connecting the mainland of Florida with Key West had so diverted the course of the great oceanic river as to chill the climate of the British Isles.

The United States Weather Bureau, according to the theory, by which science is at least half inclined to accept, accounts for the unaccustomed appearance of the sea serpent off our shores. That remarkable creature, whose normal habitat is the cold waters of the tropical ocean, now and then comes north in the Gulf Stream, perhaps following the shoals of fish that are lured northward by the warmth, too, that we fare better a great deal than cold our fathers. Civilization, for all its faults, is the greatest enemy disease has ever encountered.

Science knows very little about the animals that dwell in the depths of the ocean. A few, rarely very remarkable in one way or another, have been brought up with dredge nets, but the vast majority of fishes, oysters and chimeras dire" may not prowl in those dark and mysterious abysses.

It is not necessary to suppose that the sea serpent is a snake. Indeed, there is a deep-sea lizard, or a species of lizard, or some other zoological order. Or notes that whenever sea serpents are reported they always appear during the summer months or in early autumn, suggesting the idea that it is a migratory creature, wintering in the Northern latitudes in the warm season of the year.

DESCRIPTIONS TALLY

There is no more well-authenticated evidence in the sea serpent's behalf than one cannot throw it scornfully aside. Artificers of "Sea Serpent" companies—as in the case of that Dreadnaught, the Pauline and the Cachalot—cannot be regarded as witnesses. Furthermore, one is struck by the remarkable alikeness of descriptions given by observers. Details vary in different narratives, but the important characteristics of the animal are ever the same.

It has an enormously long neck and huge eyes; its tail is of great length and it seems to have four flippers or swimming paddles, by the aid of which it travels at high speed through the water. When viewed from near at hand it is observed to have a sort of mane that floats on the surface. It is dark above and light in color on its under side. Apparently it is at least 150 feet long.

At Table Bay, in the summer of 1876, an enormous monster was seen advancing into the harbor. It was about 100 feet long and travelled with an undulating snake-like movement. Its head was crowned with long hair, and long-sighted persons among the affrighted observers declared that they could see its eyes. The military were called out and a battle-fire was opened upon the creature at 500 yards. That it was hit and disabled by wounds became evident when it ceased to move. Boats were thereupon sent to examine it and it was found to be nothing but a mass of seaweed.

Undoubtedly there have been many similar cases of illusion when the sea serpent was concerned. In one instance a number of porpoises swimming in single file, their backs suggesting the undulations of a gigantic snake, gave rise to a mistake of the kind. Another supposed "monster" was in reality a stem of a giant kelp 300 feet long which had been torn loose from its bottom moorings by a storm presumably. It bore at one end a bulb the size of a barrel, crowned with a tuft of leaves forty feet long. Tossed by the waves in such a way as to suggest a snake swimming, the huge plant bore an aspect well calculated to deceive the casual and inexperienced observer.

Nevertheless, the sea serpent may exist; it would be a rash person who should deny the plausibility, or even the likelihood—though, as already said, if there be such an animal, it is presumably not a snake at all, nor a reptile of any kind. Some day perhaps, a dead individual of the mysterious species may be cast upon shore or be found floating on the sea. If that shall happen, it will afford a most interesting contribution to the knowledge of natural history and will solve a puzzle which for thousands of years has vexed mankind.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

PRESS OPINIONS

DROPPING THE PILOT.

The Globe.

One of the most famous cartoons ever published in Punch depicted the young Kaiser Wilhelm leaning over the rail of the ship Germania watching with ill-concealed satisfaction the dropping of the veteran pilot Bismark, whose duties as navigating officer the Kaiser himself had taken over. The Premier of Ontario has been dropping his pilot, too; whether for good or ill remains to be seen. For some months. The Globe has been trying to tell its U. F. O. readers—and it has thousands of them—that a breach between Mr. Drury and the Farmer members of the Legislature who stand with him for the broadening out of the Farmer movement in politics, on the one hand, and Mr. J. Morrison and the supporters of class representation and group government, on the other, was inevitable, and would probably take place before the general election. It was obvious that if Mr. Drury desired to retain the Premiership of Ontario he must appeal not only to the farmers, who represent only a third of the voting strength of the Province, but also to the people of cities, towns and villages. It was equally evident that Mr. Morrison and his friends must oppose this policy of broadening out and insist upon keeping the Cabinet composed solely of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits, should continue to nominate Farmer candidates and control the political organizations formed to promote their election.

THE U. F. O. BROADENER.

Mail and Empire.

Can Mr. Drury silence alone from Mr. Morrison the affections of the U. F. O. and bring that Amaryllis under his same roof with an urban divinity of politics. So far the runaway and the broadening out of Mr. Drury's political household are not apparent. The honeyed missive to the U. F. O. appears to have been dispatched and received. It seems to her both on the question of fleeing to his arms and on the question of getting along with his own party of which he is the head enough to think he has also made a conquest. He will find, we imagine, that he has over-estimated his fascinations, and that neither political flapper will fancy the arrangement.

AMERICAN WOMEN AWARDED BRITISH SCHOLARSHIP

(Associated Press)

Manchester, Aug. 4 (By Mail).—An American lass has been awarded the Harkness Pickles Post-Graduate Studentship in History at the Manchester University, which was founded in 1920 by Mr. Stephen Pickles in memory of his son who fell in the war.

Eight applications were received and the successful candidate is Miss Bertrade Ann Jacobsen, who is lecturer in history in Wooster College, Ohio. She has made a special study of recent British history, particularly of foreign policy, under the influence of Professor Wallace Notestein, of Cornell University.

CLICK O' THE LATCH.

The silence holds for it, taut and true;
The young moon stays for it, wistful shine;
Wrists that whimpered the almost through,
Sigh, for it, low and tight.

Click o' the latch, and he'll come bound
A stir in the dusk at the little gate.
Hush, my heart, and be still, my heart—
Surely, ity sweet to wait!

The tall skies lean for it, listening—
Never a star but lends an ear;
The passionate porch-flowers stop and cling.

It is step on the flags, a snatch of song.
Hurry, my heart, be swift, my heart—
How did we wait so long!

MODERN GIRLS.

In this age of so-called "sex equality" (writes Sir Herbert Morgan in the London Times,) I shall probably be accused of hopeless party Victorianism if I suggest that our girls should be more seriously trained for what, after all, is, and must be the vocation of the great majority of them—matrimony. I do not suggest a return to the intolerable dullness of the girls' schools of 30 or 30 years ago, where recreation and exercise were jointly represented by the daily walk in crocodile formation; but we have travelled too far in the opposite direction.

Are there no games which will provide our girls with healthy relaxation and at the same time develop that charm of carriage and grace of action which we unhistorically expect from their sex? If not, is it past human intelligence to invent them? We have the reputation of being the worst cooks, the worst launderers, and the worst needleworkers in the world, because, with notable exceptions, these are not the subjects which are considered of the greatest importance in our girls' schools. Yet these things are essential to the well-being and happiness of thousands of homes; and, whether a girl's future be herself to practise these gentle arts or to superviso them in others, a thorough knowledge of them is worth to her all the chemistry, the Latin and the different calculus in the world.

MAE MARSH AS SCULPTOR

It is not generally known that Miss Mae Marsh, the film actress, is also a sculptor. Indeed, her proficiency in this form of art has led to several suggestions being made to her to desert the screen and devote the whole of her time to modelling. She tells, however, that she has no intention of doing so.

FADS AND FASHIONS

London Times

Autumn and winter fashions are now being shown in Paris. The materials used for them are of the first importance, since the dressmakers' styles depend largely on what the manufacturers provide. Strong colors and bold designs demand styles of a dashing simplicity; neutral or soft colors, delicately patterned, call for fashions which are gently feminine.

A first review of the new materials leaves an impression that clothes during the autumn and winter months will be comfortable and durable. That they will be comfortable is certain, since women have decided that they will no longer suffer to be beautiful. Whether they will be durable is to be proved. In any case all the materials are of the soft and woolly order for daylight clothes. Many of them are old friends improved upon. That cody-looking material, perlaine, is just a little thicker and more cozy looking. Bevelyn is still softer and more velvety in texture than ever before. Corduroy is to be found not only in velvet but in velveteen, and in many woollen cloths with an astrachan surface. Cloky, or as one may describe it, crinkled silk or crepe is being made both plain and flowered, and there is a new gabardine called drapella which is likely to be very much worn.

Under such names as Tchinadrap, kashangora, frisalaine, burracotta, and effilets, one sees many materials of the passing season which have been adapted for cold weather. Many of the winter materials are of the agnella family. They imitate or replace fur, and will be used probably in the same way. One cannot but be pleased to see good woollen trimmings in the place of poor fur, which, however dextered and dressed up, never looked good style.

There is nothing strikingly new in colors. All shades of brown, from beige to deep chestnut, are to be seen. Flamingo and almond green are in favor. Certain Chinese blues, reds, and a green that is neither jade nor apple, but something which recalls both. A very bold plaid is being used by one or two dressmakers. An original and not unpleasant taste in the Boulevard red with grey plaids. A very thick perlaine is being made in heather mixture. This promises to be warm and substantial. Perlaine nacree is a striped astrachan in color. Kashatyke is successful in brown and almond green; drapella is quite good in dull old rose. Grey seems to be less popular than beige and worsted brown.

Suppose you try it!

Begin today with a dish of Grape-Nuts with cream or milk (fresh or preserved fruit, too, if you like) for breakfast or lunch. Keep up this crisp, delicious, strengthening food in place of heavy, ill-assorted, starchy breakfasts and lunches—and see if the old-time zest and speed on the old-time level path doesn't come back again.

Maybe that hill is not there, after all—

VERY often the hill we seem to be climbing, after the middle years, is made out of the common mistakes of diet which starve tissues and nerves and slow down energies with faulty nutrition and stored up food poisons.

How smooth and level the path seemed to be when we were young.

Simple, natural food may level that hill to a smooth path again.

The Daily Recipe

SCALLOPED FRESH TOMATOES.

There are certain meats which seem to need always a vegetable like the tomato, and fish is specially good in combination with tomatoes cooked or raw.

Scalloped tomatoes4 likel scallop-ed oysters, may be good, or equally poor, due to a careless use of the bread crumbs and too little seasoning. The following recipe is good:

6 tomatoes peeled and cut into thin slices

1 cup fine bread crumbs (soft stale bread is better than the overdry)

2 tablespoons chopped onion

2 tablespoons butter or bacon fat

1 tablespoon sugar

½ teaspoon salt

A little pepper

Fry the onion in the butter or bacon fat for five minutes, but do not let it brown. Add crumbs and mix until crumbs are well coated with fat.

In a buttered baking dish place a layer of tomatoes, sprinkle with sugar, salt and pepper. Cover with crumbs and repeat until material is used, having crumbs on top.

Bake twenty minutes.

HAROLD LLOYD, MOOT GIBBON AND MAY McAVOY AT GRIFFIN'S

There is always a halo of romance hovering around the South, and this romantic atmosphere is used to advantage in the picture production of that famous old stage hit, "A Virginia Courtship," which is being exhibited on the three-star bill at Griffin's tonight. As a heroine of the old South, Harold Lloyd's fiancee Realart star has a fine screen vehicle in this modern adaptation of the Eugene Presbrey play.

Moot Gibbon in a brand new characterization is being presented on the same program where he offers believable photoplay lovers his character-ization of "The Singin' Kid" in a Century comedy, "Reckless Romance." The story is of a new Western type, and has been cast exceedingly. Harold Goodwin and Lillian Rich are among those who support the star.

"A Sailor-Made Man," unquestionably the best comedy Harold Lloyd has ever appeared in, is the third of the series on the same program, this comedy which is in 4 reels offers forty-five minutes of wholesome laughter.

THE BANDBOX

By Louis Joseph Vance

The telephone instrument was fixed to the wall near the clothes-closet, the door of which framed it long enough. The dame, standing slightly ajar, called to her vision the hall door.

She had detected a movement in the mirror. The hall door was opening—slowly, gently, noiselessly, into by each. Fascinated, she watched, with terror, she mastered. She saw the hand that held the knob—a small hand, thin and delicate; then the wrist, then part of the arm. A head appeared in the opening, cautiously suggesting the head of a fowl, thinly hatched, with hair of a faded yellow; out of its face, small eyes watched her, steadfastly inquisitive.

Almost mechanically she inclined the receiver on the hook and turned from the wall, stretching forth her hands in a gesture of pitiful supplication.

THE COLD GREY DAWN

"Well?" snapped Jill irritably. "What're you staring at?"

"Why—" Staff replied, calmly. "I was thinking—"

"About me? What?"

"Merely that you are apparently as much cut up as if the necklace were yours—as if you were in danger of being robbed, instead of Miss Leslie—by the way of Miss Searle."

"And I am!" asserted Jill vigorously. "Aren't you, too, in? I'm in as much danger of losing my necklace; but if he gets away with the goods, that infernal scoundrel will manage some way to implicate me and rob me of my good name and my liberty as well. Hell!" he exploded—"seems to me I'm entitled to be excited!"

Staff's unspoken comment was that this explanation of the little man's agitation was something strained and inconclusive: unsatisfactory at best. It was not apparent how (even assuming Mr. Leslie's money to be at that moment stealing, the Cadogan collar from Miss Searle) the crime could be fastened on Mr. Jill in the face of the positive alibi Staff could furnish him. On the other hand, it was indubitable that Jill believed himself endangered in some mysterious way, or had some other and still more secret cause for chagrin. For his manner was no assistant, in such sharp contrast with his habitual, semi-cynical repose, that eyes he hadn't interrupted to deny it.

PRES. PARSONS GROWS ANGRY

Accuses Favoritism in C. O. League at Lively Protest Meeting at Port Hope

President Parsons of the Central Ontario League is known to every baseball fan as a real good sport, fair, broadminded and not easily peeved. He came down from Oshawa yesterday to preside at the meeting of the sub-committee and Ernie was carrying at least one hundred pounds steam pressure, something very unusual for the genial president. And as the business of the meeting proceeded the pressure rose and some care must have burned. The president accused Secretary Nott of playing favorites and pointed out that such work would mean the speedy collapse of the league.

At the opening game of May 24th Secretary Nott refused to sign certificates for two of the Oshawa players, Evans and Twigg, although applications for these certificates had been made in the regular way. Further Umpire Kay was instructed not to permit these players to take part in the game. Being deprived of these two players, Oshawa lost the game to Leaside and incidentally the championship of the first section. President Parsons at the time, offered no objection as he was under the impression that the Secretary must be in possession of good and sufficient evidence, otherwise he would not have withheld the certificates. But he did strenuously object to Secretary Nott being present at the Cobourg-Port Hope game of August 8th and permitting Fort Hope to openly violate the rules by playing Carter without a certificate. It was not Mr. Nott's desire to help Port Hope, but in Mr. Parsons's opinion, was a deliberate frame up to give Cobourg an opportunity to protest in case they should lose. And they did lose, and now they came asking the sub-committee to present them with the game on a silver tray. It was unfair to the other teams of the league who were fighting for the championship honors and he hoped that such unfair tactics would not receive the endorsation of the sub-committee.

Secretary Nott stated that no instructions were given to Umpire Kay regarding Evans and Twigg and he did not consider it his duty to stop Carter from playing with Port Hope.

Mr. Lowe, representing Port Hope explained that application had been made to the League for a permit for Carter but it had not been granted. After the accident to Alex. Hills, the regular first baseman, the management in order to put a team in the field, was obliged to use Carter. He was a resident of Port Hope, played with the team last year and the unfortunate part of it all was the oversight in not applying for a certificate before the time for granting the same had expired. After considering the evidence, the committee ordered the game replayed, provided it interfered with the standing of the teams.

Then the Lindsay delegation including Jack Oulette, Williamson and the Cummins brothers, told their tale of woe, attributing their defeat in Cobourg to Umpire Rosevear. The representatives claimed that Umpire Rosevear called time owing to their failure to catcher Cummins and when pitcher Oulette and the third baseman left their places to get Cummins' assistance, a Cobourg runner advanced from second to third and scored the winning run in a ten inning contest.

Umpire Rosevear was called and he explained that he did not call time, neither did he consider there was any occasion to call time. When he returned from third base he did stand at the side of the plate with his cane in his hand, and told Cummins he was not to go during a case of Oulette caught napping.

The sub-committee reserved its decision on this case.—Guide.

Sunday baseball, conducted by a league of semi-pro and fast amateur, pro-rating Biblical questions instead of curves and fadeaways, is being played by Y. M. C. A. boys in a camp near Tulsa, Okla., Rev. W. F. Gavin, director of religious education in the camp, originated the game. The Tulsa boys choose sides with nine on each team. As each ball goes to the bat the preacher leaves up a question based on the Bible lesson for the day. If the question is correctly answered the boy advances to first and the other team members on bases move ahead. All the baseball rules which are applicable are in force and Mr. Gavin reports that the game is a great success. One earnest friend of such unfair tactics would not receive the endorsation of the sub-committee.

Secretary Nott stated that no instructions were given to Umpire Kay regarding Evans and Twigg and he did not consider it his duty to stop Carter from playing with Port Hope.

Mr. Lowe, representing Port Hope explained that application had been made to the League for a permit for Carter but it had not been granted. After the accident to Alex. Hills, the regular first baseman, the management in order to put a team in the field, was obliged to use Carter. He was a resident of Port Hope, played with the team last year and the unfortunate part of it all was the oversight in not applying for a certificate before the time for granting the same had expired. After considering the evidence, the committee ordered the game replayed, provided it interfered with the standing of the teams.

Then the Lindsay delegation including Jack Oulette, Williamson and the Cummins brothers, told their tale of woe, attributing their defeat in Cobourg to Umpire Rosevear. The representatives claimed that Umpire Rosevear called time owing to their failure to catcher Cummins and when pitcher Oulette and the third baseman left their places to get Cummins' assistance, a Cobourg runner advanced from second to third and scored the winning run in a ten inning contest.

Umpire Rosevear was called and he explained that he did not call time, neither did he consider there was any occasion to call time. When he returned from third base he did stand at the side of the plate with his cane in his hand, and told Cummins he was not to go during a case of Oulette caught napping.

The sub-committee reserved its decision on this case.—Guide.

SUMMARY OF FARM REPORTS

Large Supply of Peaches But Number One Apples Are Scarce

Toronto, Aug. 23.—Following is a summary of reports made by the Agricultural Representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

Tobacco in Kent has been maturing rapidly of late, owing to the warm weather, and it is expected that some of it will be harvested next week.

Lincoln says: "Early St. John peaching are now appearing on the market and this crop constitutes the first of our high quality peaches. There is likely to be a large supply, and consumers can get good quality varieties from this on. A few Wyagening Red grapes are being offered. This is the first of the early grapes. There is a great demand for peach picking help, and as the season advances the demand is likely to become acute up until the end of September."

Halton, speaking of the apple crop, remarks: "Spies and Baldwins are rather scarce. There is a good crop of Kings, McIntosh Reds, Snows and most other varieties. Scab is very prevalent and considerable deformity in apples. Apples grading number one will be very scarce in the county."

Kent says that the dry, hot weather has brought corn along unduly, with a possibility of it not filling too well at the tips.

Grey calls attention to the following bumper yield at fall wheat: "In the Beaver Valley near Clarksburg, a sample of fall wheat taken from the machine weighed 63 pounds per measured bushel, and when cleaned at the mill it weighed 66 pounds per measured bushel."

In Kent, however, where over one-tenth of the entire fall wheat of the Province 'Ha been raised, the crop is not increasing in popularity, judging by the following statement of the Representative: "Fall wheat, comparatively poor yield of wheat in some sections but with the present prices of Hessian fly, coupled with the present price, have made farmers consider whether they are pursuing the best course in growing such large acreage of wheat in this county. My personal opinion is that a larger number of live stock, particularly cattle and hogs, will have to be introduced."

Peel says: "Fall crop alfalfa seed being harvested with a promise of large yields. There will be very little fall wheat sown, farmers keeping for seed. This is not pedding at all satisfactorily, probably due to the dry spell which is common in many fields."

Fort William reports that the annual alfalfa crop in the Shebandowan Valley is making wonderful growth.

Kent states that there are some 50 silos now in the county that should have been marketed earlier.

Leeds says: "Small cur lots of mixed stock are being loaded at the country points but there is hardly enough stock of any one kind to fill a car. Prices are lower if anything, with hogs at $12.25 a cwt., cows and bulls 3 cents a pound, good calves 6 cents, and lambs 8 cents."

Five thousand Irish-Americans paraded through Boston streets in memory of Harry Boland and Cathal Brugha, Republican leaders, killed in the recent Irish fighting. The "Loyal Coalition League" has protested against the use of the Stars and Stripes on the symbolic coffins used in the parade.

Dufferin states that farmers are shipping lambs earlier than usual this season, but that too many farmers are careless in the matter of supplying the weights best suited to market demands.

Dundas states that the buckwheat crop is looking well this year, and that three should be a good flow of dark honey.

Lennox and Addington says: "Cross plowing, shimming and double discing, especially on unseeded fields, are methods of after-harvest cultivation practised by farmers in this county, and no doubt will control many noxious weeds as well as better prepare the land for the 1923 crop."

Lambton says that Holland and Swiss laborers are being placed on farms in that county for fall and winter work.

Perth maintains that the harvest excursions to the West have had no serious effect upon local labor conditions.

Fall plowing is progressing satisfactorily in the Fort William district. Many farmers who heretofore did little or no fall plowing have already turned over several acres of old meadow.

Canadianizing Canada

TRAVEL is one of the great elements in education and one of the most delightful of good entertainments. The desire to know one's own country should be inculcated into the minds of every Canadian and to obtain any adequate knowledge, that is to be acquired better than by travel. "Canadians, See Canada," and "Seeing Is Believing," etc., have been adopted as slogans and phrases to create in the minds of all Canadians the advantages of national travel and the attractions which Canada has to offer.

The purport of this article is not only to give expression to the importance of Canadians seeing Canada, but that they may have a fuller appreciation of what their own country has to offer them in the way of scenery and interest, but to point out the necessity for a system of tourist travel to the nation, and the value of any endeavor to increase that feature of Canadian the advantages of national travel and the attractions which Canada has to offer.

The purport of this article is not only to give expression to the importance of Canadians seeing Canada, but that they may have a fuller appreciation of what their own country has to offer them in the way of scenery and interest, but to point out the necessity for a system of tourist travel to the nation, and the value of any endeavor to increase that feature of our tourist territory—so to speak—to capitalize the scenery. Possibly in no other country in the world given up to its people a greater area of territory for recreation purposes and these great playgrounds are not confined to any particular section but are spread from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Then again from the seashore resorts of the Atlantic and the lower St. Lawrence and the Pacific Coast the interests are so varied and so distinctly different from one another that our Canadian people may use their vacations for years and find new scenery and new interest annually. From the quiet beauty of the Maritime Provinces to the more rugged scenery of the Province of Quebec, the almost continuous lake and river country of northern Ontario, the Rocky Mountains so immense, beautiful, and wonderful, on to the Pacific Coast, with its climate imagine without personal vision and knowledge what a wonderful variety we have in our widespread playgrounds and national parks.

But to make the most of these wonderful heritages, to realize the fullest amount of profit, they must be developed. The Provincial and Dominion Governments must be keenly alive to what the possibilities are. Good roads to the wonder places and beauty spots are essential as also the way of getting may be made easy and attractive.

Much had been done by the railways to open up the tourist territory, which has resulted in millions of dollars being added to Canada annually, principally by our neighbors to the south of us. The Canadian Pacific Rockies have been touched. The Canadian National Railways have developed another great playground in Jasper Park, that largest and finest wonderland of all national parks, 4,400 square miles of magnificent mountain scenery, and the newly wild life and accommodated and thousands of tourists from all parts of the globe will readily assemble annually when the people are fully developed with good motor roads and the system of lodging and sustenance. The Canadian Pacific has not extended through the park. Jasper Park is but 184 miles from Edmonton and can be developed. Mount Robson Park, and the Yoho Park in the Rockies is another. Aside from Mount Robson, which is the highest peak in the Canadian Rockies (13,068 feet), the park which is known as Emerald Lake Park in British Columbia, is an Alpine kingdom in itself. Lake Louise and Banff are as it is, the glory and majesty of its scenery. It is the tourist who will have to come to ride a cayuse.

By way of comparison it has been stated that tourist traffic in California alone nets that State annually a handsome dollar's worth more than the entire northern European States, Washington, Oregon, add fully half that amount to the total cost, whereas it has been said that tourist traffic in Canada all told, did not net beyond one or twelve millions.

Again, the governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have all the advantages of tourist traffic but the disadvantage of little has been done to develop them. The Province of Quebec may present a measure can be expressed by the fact that Montreal alone reaped a harvest of over $40,000,000 in tourist business.

Our wonderful tourist territory is undoubtedly one of our largest assets, and greater care should be developed, and in the opinion of the writer Canada's greatness will be realized as Canada possesses the finest agricultural territory in the world.—Toronto Saturday Night.

SOFT COAL PRICES COMING DOWN

Quotation in Toronto Lowest They Have Been for Some Months

Toronto, Aug. 23.—It was thought yesterday that if an authentic settlement did not take place either today or tomorrow, the hard coal situation would be gloomy, indeed.

There is a temporary lull in the bituminous situation and prices at the present time are the lowest they have been in some months. The soft product is now selling at $11.50 on track, Toronto, as compared with $13 per ton, which it was worth only a short time ago. There is apparently no difficulty in procuring this class of coal, and shipments are moving much more freely. Dealers thought that prices would recover their decline at the beginning of next week for on Monday the Government's order comes into effect by which price fixity rights are given the lakes for 60 per cent. of the output of the Ohio mines, and as a result supplies will fall off for a while to this province.

It is presumed that the falling off will not be serious in any way, but will merely tend to stiffen prices for a short time.

Many wholesale dealers continue to advise the procuring of either coke or soft coal by the small consumer, which will act as an emergency fuel in the event that the anthracite product is not moving fairly soon. Prices are reasonable, while it is believed that when the anthracite is obtainable it will sell at an extremely high price. Many dealers consider the estimate given yesterday—namely, $20 per ton—at too low; in any case, it will retail at a price very much above that of last year.

MOSLEM FEAST AT JERUSALEM

Harvest Scenes in the Land of Ruth and Naomi

(Associated Press)

Jerusalem, July 23.—(By Mail).—This is the great Moslem feast of Bairam, and Palestine and Syria present scenes of unusual gaiety and animation. The two countries are really one. Only the artificial division to suit the views of British and French mandates makes them two. The people are the same. Aleppo, by the extraordinary French agreement, with Mustapha Kemal of Angora, is now deprived of all its Palestinian and all its trade, and it must either die or be returned to the Turk again.

The crops are being reaped, the barley out, and the fields are resplendent with flowers. One can see prototypes of Ruth and Naomi in every field, cutting the corn with the sickle and gleaning afterwards as they did in Biblical times, on the southward slopes of Bethlehem. This scene probably has been painted a hundred times by American and European artists, but they have never got it quite right. For the women of the East squat on their heels to reap, using the left hand to hold the wheat and the right to use the sickle. In pictures Ruth is always shown as gracefully bending but no Arab ever bends. In the East no one ever walks where he can ride, or stands where he may sit, or sits where he can lie down. This is the land of true repose.

The Arab custom is to have three great blocks of arable land, and to cultivate them, one every third year, leaving the other two great fields for fallow. They use the same primitive methods of cultivation as of old; a camel yoked with a donkey to pull the wooden plough, and the sickle as the only instrument, of husbandry.

Jerusalem is a perfect kaleidoscope of color. Jews with long side curls and brightly-colored robes, not yet accustomed to their new-found liberty, stalk along the pavement with downcast eye; young, bold, saber-like Zionist Jews in white shirts open at the throat; Russians in white Arabs, with their flowing white beards; dresses; Moslem women shrouded in black veils, and passing them the modern young women of Jerusalem in cheap silk stockings and high-heeled shoes.

Up and down the street the picturesque Palestine Gendarmerie ride upon their grey Arab ponies, or talk to the town police, in khaki and black sarakhan fez. It would be hard to find such a strange mixture of races even on the East side of New York. The sober British infantry or garrison artillery, smart and alert, take up positions along the Jaffa road, to see the pretty girls go by.

As usual Tommy Atkins is facetious, and it is difficult to believe that he alone allows all these warring races and orders to meet and pass in peace. He keeps the peace in all the time that now. Were it not for him, many lives would be in danger.

Not far distant from the ancient capital is a different picture. In the fields of Beersheba, Gaza and the Mount of Olives the traveller sees 10,000 crosses marking the graves of the Indian soldier dead, by whom the ardent races of the Holy Land owe their redemption.

LOCAL FALL FAIR IN SEPTEMBER

Everyone is Asked to Co-operate and Put the Fair Over Big

The dates for Belleville Fair are close at hand and the Directors are doing everything in their power to make it the best that Belleville has ever had in the history of Fairs. Their efforts, however, are fruitless if they do not get support from the people of Belleville and those of the surrounding community make it and if every one does show more interest and do some boosting the success of the Fair would be assured. It is an unfortunate fact that most of the work is left to the Directors the general public not showing the interest that should be shown by them. With the co-operation of the Citizens of Belleville and the surrounding rural community Belleville Fair should be the best and largest in Eastern Ontario, as the geographical location with the County of Prince Edward to the south of us and Hastings surpassed in the Province. A better agricultural district cannot be found and the entries along this line should be very large and they would be if every producer would take upon himself the obligation that he owes to the Fair.

Agricultural Fairs are educational and should bring out the best productions of the country for the benefit and welfare of both young and old. If a person attends a Fair and sees grains, seeds, roots, vegetables and live stock that is superior than what he is producing it is no incentive to put forth better efforts on his part because he immediately becomes endowed with the spirit that if the other person can meet with such excellence I must make he can. Then there is the other side of the question and that is the Community part of it. Fairs should and do bring together all classes of persons, old friends that have not seen each other for years meet and have a talk over old times and feel the better for the friendly hand shake. Agriculturists and stock men get together for the common good and the merchants fill the City get in close contact with their Rural Customers under the blue sky instead of meeting them under a roof. There is nothing like the fresh air and the blue sky to bring out the true character of a human being.

Our Farmers of this community should endeavor to make the entries the largest possible and we trust that they will exercise their influence over the Last and we feel sure that they will find a class therein in which they have some article or animal to entry. Give this your serious consideration and endeavor to do you part to make the Fair what it should be. The entries close on Wednesday, August 30th, so you have lots of time. The secretary reports that entries are coming fast and everything tends to success.

HAMILTON WILL DOLE OUT COAL

Does Not Favor City Going Into Coal Business—Would Discourage Dealers

Customers Will Only Be Allowed a Ton at a Time

Hamilton, Aug. 23.—Coal will be coming into Hamilton by the middle of September, Capt. George Guy stated yesterday, as a result of information secured by him when on a visit to the American coal fields recently.

Regarding the city's proposals that coal be rationed, Capt. Guy declared that it was not the intention of his firm to deliver more than one load to each customer at a time in any case. The proposed system by which householders would have to go to the city hall and secure a ticket to authorize them to get coal, would only help the situation in the least, he asserted.

If the city went into the wood or coal business on its own account, it would mean that the dealers in town would buy just that much less fuel, he continued.

"We have bought 1,200 cords of wood and have it piled up in our yards," Mr. Guy said. "Now, if the city is going to go ahead and buy and distribute wood to householders, that is going to stop me from buying any more."

Cause Damage.

The city should ascertain exactly what the coal dealers were doing in the way of bringing in fuel, he stated. If the municipality undertook to import coal and wood, the enterprise of the dealers might be lessened.

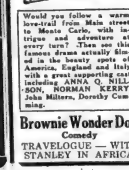

"There won't be the same incentive for dealers to go after coal if the city goes into the business," Mr. Guy said.

Abbe Roux warns us: "Say nothing one day against yourself or you will be distrusted; say nothing bad of yourself or you will be taken at your word."

LOTS OF FUN AT MOIRA LAKE

Leaves From a C. G. I. T.'s Diary at Community Camp

Camp Community, Moira Lake,
Camp Community,
Moira Lake, Aug. 20.

Well, here we are at Camp Community on Lake Moira! After hearing the boys talk about it for so long, it's a comfort to get our eyes on it. Not that we've seen much of it yet, for we have had all we could do to tidy up after the boys. They try to make us believe they can cook and wash dishes, if they want to, as well as girls can. "Look how well we get along at camp," they say. Well, we've looked, and one look is enough for this camp.

Mr. Gilbert, Mr. Davison and Mr. McIntosh motored us out and it was a lovely drive. We expected to be over an hour, but Mr. Gilbert only took forty minutes. We heard there was to be one of the best games of the season in the afternoon, which must have had something to do with it. Anyway, I hope he drives us home. Miss Yeomans and the boys and most of the cars and lorries were with Mr. Davison, who ran out of gas on the way. We thought we'd have to stay for dinner, but Mr. Gilbert opened the door like a professional, and a hurry trip to Madoc saved us from starvation.

We spent the afternoon getting our tents ship-shape and our mattresses filled anyway, if both were a success, it was quite an adventure. We tried a lot of places, but no one had threshed yet, so had to go to Madoc. It was quite a while before we could find any hay. I never knew hay and straw were different before. After a while we came to Blakely's. There are Leslie and Marjorie and Baby Herbert, besides their father and mother, and Duke and Diamond, the two fine horses, and that dog.

It was Marjorie's birthday and they asked us to stay for tea and make a party for them, which we did with delight, being very hungry by then. After tea we filled all the ticks with hay while Mr. Blakely put out his car and trailer. Then he loaded the mattresses in, and us on top, and we had a fine ride home. When we arrived, Mrs. Crowshaw had made a most scrumptious cake, so we had some more tea.

I never knew there were so many stars, though perhaps they looked more plentiful in Madoc. I had only started to look at them though, when I fell asleep, and in what seemed a very few minutes it was morning, bright and windy, but so cold I just burrowed my blankets. I dressed quick, and realized I was in trouble, but I suppose we won't be able to do that when Miss Merry comes to-morrow.

We hiked to Madoc for church this morning and tonight we're going to have a service of our own with some more campers and the Blakely family invited. We have a special hour for worship at Camp Community, but another saw us start out with Mr. Gilbert she'd be glad to know we arrived safely.

If I write this much every day I'll be able to write a book when I get home, and illustrate it with some snapshots, for nearly everyone seems to have a camera. But, maybe I won't have time. Molly, we call her—is a grand cook!

THE OLDEST LIVING NATIVE OF KINGSTON

Mrs. M. Beaupre Was Ninety-two Years Old Yesterday

Mrs. M. Beaupre celebrated the 92nd anniversary of her birth yesterday. She is probably the oldest living Kingstonian, as she was born in Kingston on the 22nd of August, 1830, and was baptized on the 28th of August by Vicar-General McDonell. Mrs. Beaupre is living with her niece, Miss Short, at 276 Earl street. The venerable lady is in fair health and reads the papers every day. Her maiden name was Ann Short, a daughter of Arthur Short and Hannah O'Brien. She was born on King street near Queen street.

When the elder Southern first conveyed the role of Armand, Salk, in the London Telegraph, said: "He has every characteristic of a poker except its occasional warmth."

ernest REeson tells us that sometimes fame comes from a prolonged patience in living.

SOFT COAL MINES NOW AT PEACE

Settlements in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa and Michigan Are Made

Chicago, Aug. 23.—Peace in the United States soft coal industry had spread today to Illinois and Iowa and Indiana. The recent Cleveland settlement plan, negotiated between the International Union of United Mine Workers and Operators from seven states, was the basis for agreements in Illinois yesterday.

The settlements in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa and Michigan, actual mining having started in the latter States, presented the basis for an estimate by the Department of Labor at Washington that within a week bituminous coal production would reach nine million tons weekly.

All agreements thus far reached have been predicated on the Cleveland agreement. The Cleveland settlement provided for renewal of the old contract which expired March 31 last to be effective until March 31, 1923, with provision for a Fact Finding Commission to negotiate the coal industry, the commission's personnel to be approved by President Harding, and the appointment of a subcommittee at a joint meeting of operators and miners at Cleveland October 2 next, to resolve methods of negotiating wage scales in future.

SPEED CLAIMS THREE VICTIMS

J. S. Hurst and E. B. Harris Are Dead as Result of Overturning of Motor Car on Foxboro Road Last Night—Russel Harker is in Critical Condition—Were Returning From Flashing Trip at High Speed

WAS CHASING A CHEVROLET

James S. Hurst, 43 Dunbar street, Insurance agent, and Edward B. Harris, of 98 Catharine street, Baker, were instantly killed last evening about 6.30, and Russel Harker, son-in-law of Hurst, was possibly fatally injured, when a new 6-cylinder Studebaker car in which they were driving, overturned on the Foxboro road, just this side of Marsh Hill school house.

The late Mr. Hurst has been in the insurance business here for many years with Mr. Sandy Burrows, on Front street. With Harris and Harker he had been on a fishing expedition back north. The yware returning to this city when the fatal accident occurred. Harris was driving the car, Hurst sitting in the front seat with him, and Harker alone in the rear seat. The car was recently purchased by Harris.

CHASING A CHEVROLET

Driving towards Belleville, where he was to pick up a load of people, whom,he was to have taken to Stirling, a man named Coates, driving a specialized touring car, was in a hurry to get to this city, and admits travelling rather fast. He passed the ill-fated car near Marsh Hill school house, and the occupants, evidently resenting the action, gave chase.

SHOT FOR THE DITCH

While proceeding down the road, the right front wheel ran into some loose gravel, and the big car shot for the ditch. The drived clapped on the emergency brake, and gave the wheel a sharp turn for the road, but the turn was too abrupt, and the car turned completely over, lighting on its wheels, facing east instead of west, the direction in which they had been driving. One front wheel was torn off.

It is thought that the men were thrown out of the car while it was turning, and that it alighted on them when it came to earth again. The engine was resting on Hurst's head when he was found.

A GRUESOME SIGHT

The car was badly damaged. One front wheel was off, and wind shield and steering apparatus shattered. The top was torn off and thrown across the road, over the fence and along into an apple tree, and the fishing rods, and other baggage was found at a great distance against another tree. One cushion was thrown 40 feet from the scene of the accident.

Both Hurst and Harris were terribly mangled about the head and face, especially Hurst, whose features cannot be recognised. The lower part of Harris's face is also badly crushed, but apart from a broken shoulder in the case of Hurst, no body injuries were suffered.

The police were notified immediately after the accident, and Sergeant D. T. Boyd, and Plainclothesman Truiasch hurried to the scene in the police car. Later P. C. Johnson, Provincial Officers Hughes, Davis, Nugent and Naphan motored out, and the police ambulance was also driven out.

RECENTLY MARRIED

Harker, the youngest of the three, and recently married to Hurst's daughter, was taken to the Hospital in the police ambulance. He was bleeding considerably, but regained consciousness before arriving in Belleville. He could not remember much of what had happened, however. This morning he lies in the General Hospital here in a critical condition, suffering from a fractured skull and hemorrhage of the lungs. He also has an abrasion on the forehead.

The dead men were quickly removed to the Tickell Undertaking rooms in their service car, and were prepared for burial.

Hurst is aged 55 years, Harris 57 years of age and Harker is in the twenties.

A jury was empanelled at the scene of the accident, and a short inquest held in a farm house there. The inquest proper, however, was set for Wednesday, next.

The following are the names of the jurymen who were selected by Coroner W. W. Boyce: Stephen Fluke, (foreman), Thomas Watt, Robert Campbell, Robert Wright, Fred Campbell, Cornelius Davis, Joseph Hollaway, Charles Aikins, and Jerry Marshall.

Officer Truiach and the provincial officer in charge of the case were the only two witnesses examined, principally for identification purposes, and the inquest was then laid over until August 30th when it will be held in Gerrard's Hall, Foxboro. Dr. W. W. Boyce will preside, and County Attorney, W. Carnew, will conduct the inquest.

Shortly after noon today the car which figured in the fatal accident was towed into the city and a large crowd of spectators congregated to see it at the St. Charles Carriage Shop, Front street. The car is not so badly damaged as would naturally be expected. The radiator is dented, front bumper bent, right fender crumpled, and top off steering wheel and wind shield tossed off. The engine and body are not badly damaged, however. Two wheels were also smashed, but were replaced for the trip to the city.

CITY AMBULANCE IS KEPT BUSY

That the City of Belleville Police Ambulance was certainly a most useful investment, may be gathered from the fact that on Wednesday, the ambulance was called and attended to six calls.

Five of the calls were for the removal of sick persons and the sixth was the occasion of the terrible automobile tragedy on the Foxboro road.

PURSUE PEACE IN COAL FIELDS

Efforts Still Being Made to Settle Strike in Hard Coal Mines

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 23.—Jarred into fresh activity by the breaking off in negotiations between the United Mine Workers and the anthracite coal operators yesterday, peacemakers today began new efforts to bring both sides together again. Up to this evening none of the several engaged in the attempt had made any progress.

It may be significant, however, that John L. Lewis, who yesterday announced his intention of leaving for the West to-day, is remaining in the city over night, that members of the operators' committee whose homes are elsewhere are still here and that James A. Gorman, of Hasbeton, secretary of the Anthracite Conciliation Commission, through whom any call for a renewal of negotiations must issue, remains within call.

DRURY IS BACKED BY HON. P. SMITH

"Broadening-out" Policy is Supported by Provincial Treasurer and F. G. Sandy, M.P.P.—Press Criticized

The Drury broadening-out policy was favored by Provincial Treasurer Peter Smith and F. G. Sandy, M.P.P., in speeches delivered at the U.F.O. picnic held at Plainfield yesterday afternoon.

The Provincial Treasurer stated that there was an effort on the part of the Premier and Attorney-General Lucas to divide the U.F.O. He declared that he knew the Premier's viewpoint; that no ministers on the Government should say a portion of a community: "You cannot come in and help us." Why should the Farmers go to the rainy-days in the towns and cities: "We do not want your vote and counsel"? He argued that the Farmers should say: "Here is our platform; if you are satisfied, we are glad to have you join us." The Provincial Treasurer contended that J. J. Morrison had the same idea in his speech at Delta.

Behind Drury.

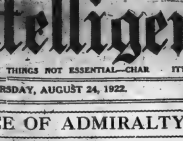

"I am behind Premier Drury in his broadening-out policy," said Mr. Smith "in as far as ideal organizations can say to the towns and cities: 'Come on and help us.' That is a wonderful escape from Hydro-radials."

ANGER OF IRELAND AIMED AT CHILDERS

Renegade Englishman in Wrong — Churchill Mourns as Personal Friend

London, Aug. 23.—Premier Lloyd George and Winston Churchill this morning sent messages to the Free State authorities in Ireland saying they were profoundly shocked at the killing of Michael Collins, and Mr. Churchill added that he was particularly distressed since the advertisement of Michael Collins resembled his own, and that they had become close friends during the last few months. The principal effect of this dastardly assassination which has shocked Britain must be the abandonment of proposals for an early peace, and the end forever all prospects of de Valera's return to parliament. The anger of Ireland is chiefly directed against the renegade Englishman, Childers, chief of staff of the rebel forces. Michael Collins had hoped to reassemble parliament next Saturday, when the sternest measure would be taken against the rebels after approval by Dail Eireann. General McKeon or O'Dally are spoken of this morning as most likely successors of Michael Collins in the field and Herzon or Mulcahy in the government.

COLLINS PLANNED TO PLACATE REPUBLICAN ELEMENT

Dublin Recovering From Shock—Southern Parliament to Meet Saturday—Cosgrave Acting Head Of Government

CROWDS OF MOURNERS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Dublin, Aug. 24.—Dublin began to recover somewhat to-day from the shock caused by the death of Michael Collins, and plans were developed for the meeting of the Southern Parliament on Saturday. Meanwhile William T. Cosgrave is acting head of the government, and Richard Mulcahy, Chief of Staff, is directing military operations against the rebels.

The body of Collins arrived here this morning, and was met by an enormous crowd of mourners.

London, Aug. 24.—At the time of his death, Michael Collins was under consideration plans to redraft several sections of the Free State Constitution so as to placate the more radical Republican element. This was stated today by Michael Francis Doyle, a Philadelphia lawyer, who said he went to Dublin to consult with members of the Provisional Government.

Collins' sudden removal from the arena of Irish affairs is given considerable space in to-day's newspapers. Naturally there is greater effort to eugolize him—to describe his meteoric career and romantic personality and to pay tribute to his gay bravery than there is to look into dark clouds of Ireland's immediate future.

TRIBUTE TO COLLINS BY LLOYD GEORGE

Entire London Press Regrets Death of Irish Leader—"De Valera Bound to Rule or Ruin"

London, Aug. 24.—Premier Lloyd George has telegraphed his condolences to Ireland for the loss of Michael Collins.

The premier, in a telegram to Liam T. Cosgrave, said the assassination of the Irish leader deeply grieved him and paid a marked tribute to Collins.

Downing Street officials emphasized that Lloyd George was an admirer of Collins' power and was personally grieved by upset over his murder.

The text of Lloyd George's telegram to Cosgrave follows:

"I am deeply grieved to hear of the death of the commander-in-chief of the Irish Free State army. In his death the Free State lost its most fearless soldier, a leader of great energy and devotion and a man of remarkable personal charm.

"Please convey to the members of your government my profound sympathy with them in their loss of one of Ireland's most brilliant sons at the moment Ireland most needed his splendid qualities of courage and resolution."

The entire press to-day regretted the death of Collins as another tremendous blow to the Free State.

"De Valera has resolved to rule or ruin," the Evening Star said.

NO FREIGHT CARS FOR PROFITEERS

Washington, Aug. 23.—Legislation substituting the idea of the temporary National Coal Xarrier recommended by President Harding in his address to Congress last week is being prepared by the administration for introduction in Congress. The legislation is designed to give the Interstate Commerce Commission complete authority to embargo the profiteer at the mines by declining to allocate freight cars.

The purpose is to hold out cars on the mines that are charging prices considered to be extortionate and to exercise the same sort of control against the retailer.

IRISH LEADER WAS BUTCHERED

So Says New York Pro-Irish Paper—Rebels Blind to All But Futile Ideals

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Aug. 24.—The World, in a strong editorial today, declares that Michael Collins was "butchered" by members of the irreconcilable minority, and deals unsparingly with the followers of de Valera, whose supporter it was at one time. The rebels are blind to everything but their own unworkable theories and unrealizable ideals, it adds.

ASK PREMIER KING TO WITHDRAW TROOPS FROM COAL FIELDS

Labor Leader Attacks the League of Nations

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Montreal, Aug. 24.—In a telegram to Premier King, the Labor Congress today asked him to use his influence in having the soldiers withdrawn from the coal fields.

John MacDonald of Toronto launched a hot attack against the International Labor Bureau and urged the withdrawal of organized labor's support from the movement. He declared the League of Nations was a machine created by governments of employers, and that that should be sufficient to warn labor that it could not hope for anything from such an organization.

Tom Moore favored the League and declared that it was not disapproved by organized labor but by the International of Moscow.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS FOR ROBBERY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Aug. 24.—Found guilty of the robbery of two and a half million dollars from a mail wagon on Broadway last October, Gerald Chapman and George Anderson were yesterday sentenced to twenty-five years' imprisonment by Justice Holmes.

COLLINS FORESAW HIS DEATH

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 24.—Michael Collins had a premonition of death, says Belfast despatch to The Evening News today. Recently, while parting with a Belfast friend, he said: "I will say goodbye because I don't believe I shall ever see you again."

DELORME'S HEAD STILL SUBJECT OF DISPUTE

Whole Question of Mental Capacity of Accused Priest to be Re-opened in Supreme Court

Montreal, Aug. 24.—The whole question of Adelard Delorme's mental condition will be reviewed in the Supreme Court on August 30, at the continuation of hearings on interdiction proceedings, instituted by a Delorme family council, following a report made by Dr. D. Brochu, medical superintendent of St. Michel Archiac, Besinport, where Delorme is interned, that his patient is sane enough to administer his own affairs.

Dr. Brochu will be called to give evidence supporting his report. It is considered likely that the Crown and defence alienists, whose evidence in the Delorme criminal trial led the jury to pronounce the slain inaquable of standing trial on the charge of murdering his half-brother, Raoul, will be called in rebuttal of Dr. Brochu's testimony.

The upshot of the whole affair may be that the Provincial Government may order a mental examination of Delorme by a third set of expert alienists to decide once and for all whether the slabs if not in condition to face the murder charge, or whether he is sane and should be transferred from the asylum to Bordeaux jail once more, to appear in the Court of King's Bench on the merits of the cause celebre.

LITTLE GIRL SETS CLOTHING ALIGHT

Children Left Alone in the House Were Playing With Matches

Montreal, Aug. 24.—Suffering severe burns when her clothes caught fire, while she was playing with matches, on the balcony at the rear of her home, 6Verdun Sedawey, 8 years of age, of 90a St. Andre street, was taken to the Hotel Dieu Hospital. Investigation disclosed by Constable Duchemseau, of the Ontario street east station, was that the child, left alone for two or three young companions, was alone in the house, her mother having gone out a short time before. The children were playing with matches and suddenly the little girl's clothes caught fire. She ran, screaming, into the house. Mrs. Caron, a neighbor, hearing her screams, rushed into the house and, picking up a blanket, wrapped it around the child and extinguished the flames. She then called the Ste. Justine Hospital ambulance and the little girl was removed there.

12,000 MINERS WILL START WORK

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Calgary, Aug. 24.—Approximately twelve thousand miners of District 18 of Herbert King pleaded guilty to the theft of A. V. Demke's automobile from a garage on Ossington avenue last October. Wolchfield sentenced him to one year in jail.

It will be recalled that despatches from Toronto, Aug. 24.—An echo of Detective Mitchell's recent trip east was heard in mid-jury assize court yesterday when Albert King pleaded guilty to the theft of A. V. Demke's automobile from a garage on Ossington avenue last October. Wolchfield sentenced him to one year in jail.

It will be recalled that despatches from Ottawa stated that Alfred Allard, of Kirk and a woman, Cecilia Haley, as being in connection with the Ambrose J. Small trial and speculation was rife as to what the arrival of the couple in Toronto would disclose. Sensational rumors were set in circulation, but Detective Mitchell reached Toronto with his prisoners he exploded the whole story, stating that King was wanted merely on the charge of theft and non-support.

A charge of receiving brought against the woman was withdrawn.

MURDER CHARGE HANGS OVER DEAF MUTE

Father Cloheey Succumbs to Wound, Result of Hemorrhage

RELATIVES AT BEDSIDE

Deaf-Mute Apparently Unmoved by Tragic Turn of Events

Owen Sound, Aug. 23.—Rev. Father Thomas Cloheey, parish priest at Dundalk, died at 5 o'clock this afternoon at Proton Station, as a result of being shot by John Cosgrove at the door of St. Patrick's Church, Proton Station, on Saturday evening. Until 3 o'clock this morning, when a severe hemorrhage commenced, his condition was hopeful, but with the internal bleeding that continued all morning he gradually sank, and expired 12 hours later.

Dr. Carter and Dr. McWilliams of Dundalk were in attendance and secured a signed statement from the priest, who knew that his end was near, to the effect that the fatal shot had been fired by John Cosgrove, a deaf-mute of Proton, while Father Cloheey was at the door of his church.

Second Signed Statement.

This was the second statement signed by Father Cloheey, the first having been given to High Constable Pentbroke, but at a time when there were still hopes that he might recover.

A Coroner's jury was empanelled by Coroner Marsh Wright, and after viewing the remains, adjourned for a week.

John Cosgrove, who is in jail here charged with shooting with intent to kill, will come up for a preliminary hearing on August 30, when the charge will be enlarged to that of murder. The news of the death of the priest was made known to him, but apparently it affected him little. He made no observation on the matter when given an opportunity with paper and pencil.

He has expressed no regrets for the act, but maintains a moody and almost dejected attitude.

SMALL MYSTERY NO CLEARER

Jail Sentence of One Year Puts an End to Sensational Story of Small Case

Toronto, Aug. 24.—An echo of Detective Mitchell's recent trip east was heard in mid-jury assize court yesterday when Albert King pleaded guilty to the theft of A. V. Demke's automobile from a garage on Ossington avenue last October. Wolchfield sentenced him to one year in jail.

TRUNKS TO CARRY MONEY

(Associated Press)

Moscow, Aug. 1.—(By mail)—Americans contemplating visits to Russia would travel with them suitcases of ample proportions in which to carry their money, for ordinary pocket-books have long since ceased to be adequate for carrying the huge quantities of paper currency that one is required to have in order to exist. The following menu from one of Moscow's leading restaurants, indicates that one can dine rather well for 25,000,000 or 30,000,000 rubles.

Beefsteak	5,000,000 rubles	Potatoes	3,500,000
Soup	2,500,000 rubles	Ham (2 slices)	4,000,000
Cauliflower	5,000,000 rubles	Orange	6,000,000
Strawberries	4,000,000 rubles	Coffee	1,250,000

GIPSY QUEEN WHO CAPTURED ARCHIE MILLER

Svetta Marhovitch, $2,500 gipsy beauty, alleged to have been sold for that sum by her father to Archie Miller, a Romany Prince, who is now bringing action for fraud because his bride left him after he had cashed in. Svetta is supposed to be in Halifax now, and her husband is in camp with his tribal associates at Springbank Park, near London, Ontario. With Svetta in the picture is thirteen-year-old Princess Mary, the child wife of a boy of fourteen. The picture was taken on the streets of London before the departure of Svetta from her husband's tent.

OFFERS TO CLEAR UP SMALL MYSTERY

Toronto, Aug. 24.—There was a sensation in the women's police court yesterday when Elizabeth Roy, a diminutive little grey-haired French woman, volunteered, in a mysterious whisper, to elucidate the mystery of the disappearance of the theatrical magnate Ambrose Small.

According to Elizabeth, the missing millionaire was first drowned and afterwards burned. She said that she had witnessed every detail of the gruesome deed. She concluded by stating that she had spent over $400 in railroad fares from Ottawa to Toronto in her vain endeavors to convince the police of the truth of her story.

Elizabeth, against whom a vagrancy charge was preferred, was remanded for a week for medical examination.

MONS FAMILIES CLAIM FORTUNE

Several Working Families Claim to be Heirs to Estate of Man Who Died in Canada

Associated Press.

Brussels, Aug. 8.—(By Mail)—Several families of workingmen near Mons have had their hopes raised by the possibility of being the heirs of one Savard, died in Canada in 1904, leaving a fortune of 100,000,000 francs.

These heirs, numbering about 40, only recently heard of the death of the relative who was said to be owner of several brush factories in the United States, Canada, and France. Among them is a miner, several times wounded in the war and now unable to work.

DAILY MAIL PLANS NEW AERIAL PRIZE.

London, Aug. 23.—That the Daily Mail intends to carry out Lord Northcliffe's idea of fostering and encouraging aviation is indicated by an announcement that the paper offers under the auspices of the Royal Aero Club, a prize of £1,000, open to airmen of an ynationality, in a competition to be held in England late in September for a flight of the longest duration in a motorless glider. The flight must be not less than thirty minutes, and entries are to be made with the Royal Aero Club. A larger prize under more exacting conditions, next year, will be announced soon by the same paper.

CAST ASIDE PARTY REBELS SAYS MEIGHEN

Conservative Leader Calls For United Party at Convention in Vancouver

Vancouver, B.C., Aug. 22.—"No matter what else you do, let union be the product of this convention." This was the message given by Right Hon. Arthur Meighen last night in his speech to the British Columbia Conservative convention. His speech dealt chiefly with a review of political happenings since the last Federal elections, and he repeated his condemnation of the present Federal Government and its policy. He followed closely the lines laid down in his speeches in Eastern and Western Canada during the last few weeks, describing the Liberal policy as one of insincerity.

"You are here to determine your course in provincial politics," he said. "In that, I cannot help you, and you are abundantly able to help yourselves. An impetus to Conservatism would be given if a united and determined party issues from this convention. Any individual who stands in the way of a united party should be ruthlessly cast aside."

CLAIMS A FORTUNE AFTER 72 YEARS

Question as to Which O'Neill is Rightful Heir, However

Associated Press.

Montevideo, Uruguay, Aug. 23. (By Mail)—After a lapse of 72 years an heir to the £9,000,000 fortune left by an Irish seer has appeared in this city in the person of Don Eugenio O'Neill, a Uruguayan subject who is employed by the Agricultural Society of Uruguay.

Mr. O'Neill, who is 68 years of age, was first made aware of the facts of the case by a London friend who read in a newspaper a list of the great fortunes held by the Bank of England in trust for their legitimate heirs. Once in possession of the antecedents of the case, the lucky heir-presumptive took steps to set the law in motion to assert his claim to the vast fortune. He has been deluged with letters of congratulation from all his friends, and many others who claim to be, and the only fly in the ointment is the discovery of the existence of other O'Neills in Chile, Portugal, the United States and Argentina to say nothing of a possible claimant from Queensland, Australia.

In spite of this, however, Don Eugenio is convinced that he alone is the rightful heir to this respectable fortune, and the progress of his claim is being watched with much interest in the city.

Washington, Aug. 22.—Lieutenant Hinton, pilot, and "the members of the crew" of the seaplane, Sampaio Correia, which left Nassau in the Bahamas today for Haiti, in its flight to Brazil from New York, were picked up by the U.S.S. All those aboard the craft were understood to be included in the report that the "members of the crew" had been rescued.

Upon the report being received from the cruiser Denver, it was added, a station tug was sent to assist in salvaging the seaplane. No other details were contained in the brief message received here.

New York, Aug. 22.—The Majestic, largest ship afloat, which left Southampton for New York last Wednesday, is about twelve hours late, having been delayed because of repairs which had to be made at sea in her engine room. Officers of the White Star Line said today that the big ship was not in serious trouble, and that she would reach port tomorrow morning. It was declared that the difficulty developed in Southampton in the bed of one of the big turbine engines.

"Saved My Little Girl"

Mother tells how her little Ethel's life was saved.

That is what one woman wrote us recently and then she goes on to say—"Ethel, who is just past eight, caught a bad cold last August. The children of a highly strung, nervous temperament and could not be kept quiet in bed. We tried everything we could think of to cure her cough. But, the cough became worse and from a rasp, a harsh, stringy girl she became pale and thin. Nothing we did seemed to stop the cough and by this time regular seasons of coughing had developed. These coughing spells left the child weak and completely worn out. I believed that a short time the cough would have reached the child's lungs. After trying everything I could think of, I saw an advertisement for Carnol, saying that this preparation would build one up. I got a bottle from the druggist and before it was half finished my little girl had almost completely shaken off her cough. Her cheeks began to get back their old colour. She started to put on flesh again and would run and play all day without being tired. Finally, after having taken two bottles of Carnol, she is looking and feeling better than she has ever felt in her life."

Carnol is sold by your druggist and if you can conscientiously say, after you have tried it, that it hasn't done you any good, return the empty bottle and we will refund your money.

THE CAUSE OF WARBLES

The Gad Fly Annoys Cattle and Injures Hides.

How the Pest Operates—Effects and Losses Described—Prevention and Treatment of Warbles — Wood Verms Wheat.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The name "warbles" is applied to a rather common condition affecting cattle which is characterized by the appearance of small lumps along the back and loins. The lumps gradually develop during the late winter months, and as spring approaches the skin along the back and loins is noticed to be covered with small, rounded swellings about the size of a small walnut. The lumps are quite tender at first, and when they become fully developed a round hole, surrounded by a little frothy matter, becomes noticeable in the centre of each little swelling. Through each of these little openings in the skin a grub or warble is easily removed. The explanation of the occurrence and development of warbles in cattle is rather interesting.

The Gad Fly is Responsible For the Injury.

The primary cause is the "Gad Fly," of which there are two varieties technically termed the Hypderma bovis and the Hyderma lineata. These flies attack cattle while at pasture during the warm summer season, and are seldom troublesome during cold damp weather. They make a humming sound in flight, and cattle when attacked by them become terrified to such an extent as to endeavor them to stampede, which is commonly known as "gadding." The flies usually attack the lower parts of the body and the legs. They deposit their eggs in the hairs close to the skin, and which in some cases the eggs are firmly attached to the hairs. After a time the eggs hatch out, and small larva or young insect passes down the hair follicles, through the skin, into the tissues. Further development of the larva takes place in the tissues, and finally they proceed in making their way to the region of the back, which they appear to select for the last stage of their development, and form little lumps in the skin, in each of which a grub or "warble" is present, which is the mature larva. Finally the grub bores its way out through the skin and falls to the ground, where it passes through the pupa or chrysalis or caterpillar stage encased in a cocoon or shell-like covering, and is transformed into a pupa which in about a month becomes fully developed and emerges as the mature gad fly.

Effects and Loss Illustrated.

The effects produced by gad flies and warbles are chiefly economic losses, which the flies cause by worrying cattle while at pasture during the summer time and lessening milk production, and the damage which the warbles inflict to the skin, thus lessening the value of hides for tanning purposes. The extent of the injury done to hides through warbles is considerable, and it is conservatively estimated that twenty-five per cent. of cattle hides are thus damaged each year. Tanners and hide dealers do not want warbled hides, and the value of a hide that has to be put to are limited, and as a result hides are graded low and reduced in price.

Prevention and Treatment.

Various preparations have been recommended and used as repellants to ward off the attacks of gad flies and prevent them laying eggs on cattle during the summer season. Local treatment of the backs of cattle with a mixture of sulphur, oil of jar and train oil is popular, but it would appear to be of little real service. It is now generally established that in districts where warbles are troublesome that the best course to be adopted is to keep the cattle under shelter or the shade of trees during the heat of the day in summer to prevent them being attacked by the flies as far as possible. During the winter months cattle should be examined every week, and if any of them are noticed to be affected with warbles the grubs should be squeezed out of their backs every few weeks or at least once a month. To facilitate the removal and destruction of the grubs the small openings in the skin over each lump may be enlarged a little with the point of a sharp knife and a little iodoform-vaseline ointment applied. This ointment is composed of one part of iodoform and five parts of vaseline, and is very effective in killing the grubs. The grubs can be readily squeezed out of the lumps at the proper time and should be destroyed to prevent their further development and thus lessen the number of flies for the coming summer. If these precautions and simple measures were carried out by cattle owners each winter the occurrence of warbles would be largely overcome, and a considerable loss avoided which in the aggregate is very considerable as it involves loss of condition, lessened milk production and damages to the hides.—C. D. McGilvray, Principal Ontario Veterinary College, Toronto.

Weeds Verms Wheat.

Raywood, Saskatchewan—On the soil 14.6 pounds of nitrogen and three pounds of phosphoric acid for each ton of weeds, while the same weight of wheat in grain and straw removes only 12.3 pounds of nitrogen and 3.2 pounds of phosphoric acid. One ton of wet weeds is equivalent to a 13-bushel crop.

Warm water, green feed and hot mash boost the egg production.

ARMENIAN BOYS GOOD FIREFIGHTERS

Bucket Brigade of Orphan Boys Saves Thousands of Lives

Associated Press.

Constantinople, Aug. 1.—(By mail). A bucket brigade of 200 Armenian orphans boys from the industrial school recently saved thousands of Turkish homes at Berberkey, on the thickly-populated Asiatic shore of the Bosphorus, from destruction by fire.

The fire started in a locality made up of tenements and at on time was most threatening. hTere was no fire fighting apparatus available, so Mrs. A. A. Burt, of Los Angeles, the headmistress of the school, sent two hundred of the oldest boys to the scene of the fire with buckets. They organized a quadruple line from the waterfront to the fire and succeeded in confining the flames to a group of 12 tenements. About 100 Turkish families were rendered homeless.

Doctor Esther Lovejoy, of Portland, Ore., head of the American Women's hospitals, who happened to be visiting the school at the time, assisted in directing the boy fighters.

A MARTYR TO GOOD-WILL

Then someone asked what Ireland would do now. This ran a portion of a despatch from Dublin yesterday dealing with the assassination of Michael Collins. That is the question which many are asking at this present moment. Collins and Griffith were the two men who were responsible for the signing of the treaty with Great Britain which led to the forming of the Free State Government, and for that act they had given their lives. It is true that Griffith was not slain by an assassin, but the strain placed upon him and the constant danger he was in undoubtedly had something to do with his early death. There is no doubt that Griffith was marked for elimination by his treacherous enemies.

Thus two more were the martyrs to good-will. Both were at one time strong rebels against Great Britain, and they fought persistently for what they regarded as the rights of the Irish people, but they came to realize that Britain was not the foe of Ireland, and that it was possible to secure all the freedom that Ireland could use by compromise and consultation. They followed the scriptural injunction, "Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou are in the way with him." They were tired of the bloodshed and futile strife and bloodshed that gripped Ireland like a chronic plague and bred a race of rebels and haters.

Who will Ireland's foe now?

Ireland has never lacked for leaders, and there will arise some strong man to take the place of the two who have given their lives in the cause of good-will. DeValera has so far escaped the bullets, because he has invariably thought of his own street.

HERE AND THERE

A GIGANTIC—?

On the 6th day of August, 1868, H. M. S. Daedalus was cruising in North Pacific waters. The morning was clear, with only a slight breeze. A shout from the watch in the fore-top brought all hands on deck, and officers and men lined up at the weather rail to behold an extraordinary sight. Less than a quarter of a mile off the weather bow was swimming, in an almost calm sea, what looked like a gigantic snake, forty feet of its length was visible, and its head was erected four or five feet above the surface.

The creature was swimming at a speed of about fifteen miles an hour, and was not in close or apparent touch with land, so was able to observe it at leisure with field glasses. Its back was dark brown, likewise the head, and the throat yellowish. Its chase and harpoons were hastily prepared, and a shot fired. Boats were lowered with the intention of going in could be made in pursuit the monster suddenly disappeared.

AT VANCOUVER, 53

The evening before setting sail on the good ship Makura, bound for Sydney, I spent an evening hour, as all visitors to Vancouver do, on the English Bay, and saw a sight that would make the fortune of a painter. There were the people—ten, men, women, and children, bathers on the beach, which has every water-sport for the pastime. Its sandmal bluary is a great line of pine log on the sand. Round it gathered all the tanned medley of bathers, all clad in the regulation garment, which is brief but shirred.

This company before the fire flaming high and glowing deep, in the foreground of a glassy sea that reflected the red sun just setting over the blue and snowy hills beyond, had a strange brilliance quite new to my experience. You could smell the ruinous odour of the log all about the shore. Close by, before an open-air theatre, a large company were enjoying the community singing of popular airs under the guidance of a conductor and an orchestra of two or three players. His sallyman in the world a popular gathering so individual and, in spite of some technical crudities, so essentially artistic.—The London Times.

HOW TO WRITE WELL.

Stripped to the bare minimum of words, our advice to such an inquirer is: Never write anything unless you have something to say; say it in as few words as possible; say it also in the best words you can command, and then stop. If you don't know your subject you are not likely to write anything worth reading; if you use more words than necessary you will be wasting time and energy of your own and the reader's; if you are not careful to choose the best words, you will not be doing justice to your subject. All subjects deserve but to be treated in the best words a writer can find.

Hundreds of fatalities are to be encountered daily in print that never ought to be allowed there like in spite of the fact that, for 'although,' and 'on account of the fact that' for 'because,' when very likely there is no fact at all. Never permit yourself to write, as too many are capable of writing, some such sentence as the, which is hardly an exaggeration: 'The state of the present position as one of the factors in the solution of the problem.' To lapse into such dreary balderdash is deliberately to refuse to hit the bull's-eye when it might otherwise be within your marksmanship. What is to be thought of a rifle-shot who never aspires to do more than blaze vaguely in the direction, more or less, of the target?—London Times.

THE "FOOL HEN."

We saw the wild goat during the day, and in the woods could examine at our leisure that curious grouse of the groves known as the "fool hen." A rock bird, conspicuous by reason of the vivid scarlet line above the eye, allowed one of the guides to throw a handful of stones at her, but it only fluttered up a bough higher when hit. Its one instinctive defence, I suppose, is concealment.

You have an easy enough time to enjoy its peculiar nest, and to those who would climb, would hunt, would botanize, would photograph, would geologize, let me point the proper readers of this journal that into the S.Kirke from the Windermere Valley.—London Times.

THE O'NEILLS

The family of the O'Neills, through the assaults of the Scots and Fenians has lost its second ancestral home by arson. Shane's Castle, as the stronghold was known, long raised to the ground. This castle was erected on the River Maine and Lough Neagh in the days when the House of O'Neill claimed sovereignty over all the chiefs of Ulster, but was burned down in 1816. The strength of this old castle may be polated from its massive towers which still stand. The castles are luckily getting less frequent in Ulster, which is a matter for congratulation.—Montreal Gazette.

SHAKESPEARE'S YOUTH

Shakespeare's early literary work proves that while in the country he earnestly studied birds, flowers, and trees, and gained a detailed knowledge of horses and dogs. All his kinsfolk were farmers, and with them he doubtless as a youth exercised many field sports. Sympathetic reference to hawking, hunting, coursing, and angling abound in his early plays and poems. There is small doubt, too, that his sporting experiences passed at times beyond orthodox limits. . . . Some practical knowledge of the art of poaching seems to be attested by Shakespeare's early lines:—

What? hast not archen fish often struck a deer
And borne her cleanly by the keepers nose?

NEW GRAND TRUNK HEAD

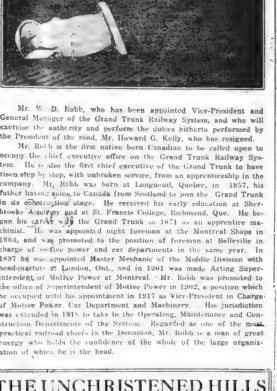

Mr. W. D. Robb, who has been appointed Vice-President and General Manager of the Grand Trunk Railway System, and who will exercise the authority and perform the duties hitherto performed by the President of the road, Mr. Howard G. Kelly, who has resigned.

Mr. Robb is the first native born Canadian to be called upon to occupy the chief executive office on the Grand Trunk Railway System. He is also the first chief executive of the Grand Trunk to have risen step by step, with unbroken service, from an apprenticeship in the company. Mr. Robb was born at Longueuil, Quebec, in 1857, his father having come to Canada from Scotland to join the Grand Trunk in its early engineering stage. He received his early education at Sherbrooke Academy and at St. Francis College, Richmond, Que. He began his career with the Grand Trunk in 1873 as an apprentice machinist. He was appointed night foreman at the Montreal Shops in 1883, and was promoted to the position of foreman at Belleville in charge of engine power and car departments in the same year. In 1897 he was appointed Master Mechanic of the Middle Division with headquarters at London, Ont., and in 1901 was made Acting Superintendent of Motive Power at Montreal. Mr. Robb was promoted to the office of Superintendent of Motive Power in 1902, a position which he occupied until his appointment in 1917 as Vice-President in Charge of Motive Power, Car Department and Machinery. His jurisdiction was extended in 1919 to take in the Operating, Maintenance and Construction Departments of the System. Regarded as one of the most practical railroad chiefs in the Dominion, Mr. Robb is a man of great energy and has the confidence of the whole of the large organization of which he is the head.

PRESS OPINIONS

THE WHEAT BOARD HAS GONE BY THE BOARD.

(Mail and Empire.)

The Wheat Board has proved the fiasco Mr. Meighen predicted it would be and which he now truly repeats it was meant to be. Instead of being the boon that the Wheat Board of 1919 was to the farmers, the Wheat Board of 1922 was a gold brick, and there was not much gilt on it at that. We wonder at the farmers being for a moment taken in by it. Even the most superficial observer could see that there could be no ground for expecting from the King Government's Wheat Board benefits comparable to those derived from the Wheat Board established by the Union Government. The latter-named Wheat Board was a necessity because it was soneatly and wisely conceived to satisfy existing conditions. The King Government's Board had no chance of being a success, for it was not soneatly designed to satisfy existing conditions. It was intended to deceive the farmers, upon whom it was also intended to throw the onus of its failure.

WINDING UP THE COAL STRIKE.

(New York Times.)

As an adjustment of the difficulties in the coal trade, the agreement between the strikers and the producers of 60,000,000 tons, a bituminous in six States does not go very far. On the old method, such an agreement in the central competitive field would save set the standards for wages and prices throughout the United States. It is possible, even probable, that the part of the industry formally represented in the agreement will be many times increased. Also, there is a prospect that the anthracite negotiation will be quickened. Both parties to it have expressed themselves amicably. The trouble with the bituminous trade is that there is too much coal and there are too many miners. The anthracite trade is a tight monopoly on both sides. There are no miners outside the union, and there is no anthracite outside Pennsylvania.

It is certain that coal is going to be low. It is probable that it is going to be scarce. It is unlikely that there will be a famine of fuel. Up to the scimming of the coal strike in April there had been stored on tidewater 129,200,000 tons of bituminous. That is 26,000,000 more tons than in June, 1917, the coal strike prevented the railways from moving over eighty million tons. The effect of the rail strike was less striking, but cumulative. If the coal strikes should end today, the railways would have to be placed in the receiver as to the movement of coal, regardless of the shopmen's strike. If both the coal and rail strikes should be settled at once, it is more likely that the priority of coal would produce a congestion of the general railway movement than that a coal famine would result.

SMILES OF CHILDREN.

By Strickland Gillilan.

There are smiles among the children;
There's bids for time-to-come;
Till the children come tot smile we will never quite overcome.

There are little children dancing everywhere;
In the heart of raving tunnels, in Arcadia the crowned,
In the free-gutted cities of the North,
There are little children smiling;
there are faces pleasure-flushed;
There is courage no calamity may crush.

There are smiles among the children
wherever are children found,
For the world begins anew for every child;
Though they're harnessed in a treadmill for the world-old, dreary round;
Yet their spirits are to dread unreconciled.
All the grief of all the ages cannot hold their laughter bound,
If they're even halfway housed or fed or clad;
Let them glimpse a play-ball bounding, let them see a rabbit track,
And they—well, they just are children and are glad.

There are smiles among the children;
let us still be one with theirs;
Let us drop awhile, as they, the heavy load;
Let us stand awhile from under all our half-imagined cares
And go singing with the children
down the road.
All our problems would be simpler,
and, the finest thing of all,
We should lose our apprehensions that beneath;
There, oh little children smiling,
grey wears the sunbeams fall—
While the children smile, there's hope for time-to-come.

World's Champion Deep Sea Diver Praises His Wife

At a time when so many celebrities in given lines and walks of life, tire of their wives within a month or two of the honeymoon, and are not especially agreeable in telling the world so, it is highly refreshing to come upon a real world champion who is a wife-worshipper of the most ardent and steady type and has been so for sixteen consecutive years.

I refer to Captain John F. Turner, the world champion deep-sea diver, who has far outclassed all others of his profession, reaching to depths of ocean quite unheard of in the past and who spent last Friday in Montreal. Not only is he an avowed petticoat lipper but he speaks of himself as almost a paltry "second" compared with the "wonderful little lady of Newbury Port, Mass.

I was looking through his album of photos of himself in various costumes garbs and armours, says a correspondent in The Montreal Herald, and the decks of vessels, about to be lowered; of drawings in the Scientific Americ can and other periodicals of his work in the deep and of various national scenes in which he has taken a part when we came suddenly upon a quiet domestic scene—a photo of a bright and cheery looking little lady in front of the porch of her cottage—and I asked him who she was.

"What! Don't you know her?" he asked in some surprise. "Don't you know our wonderful Mary of Newbury Port, Mass.?" He then went on to tell of her numerous activities to and out of that state which had endeared her to the country at large; saying "that the astonishing things about her busy and generous life is that it has kept her so young in looks and in heart that she is often thought to be a younger sister of his daughter, just a flapper of sixteen years.

Possibly the sturdy affection of a man of Captain Turner's type and the general happiness of the home have had much to do with keeping "the wonderful little lady" so fresh and young.

FADS AND/FASHIONS

Hamilton, Aug. 21.—They're arrived. Yep. Flappers simply couldn't do without 'em. What are they? Why shoehorns the new flip-flop flapper boot, known in the shoe business as the Russian boot.

A few days ago a nice young flapper, with bobbed hair n'everything, flip-flopped up a Hamilton street adorned, or at least, wearing a brand new pair of the new famous boots. She thoroughly enjoyed the notoriety, as she flopped along followed by the admiring comment of her sister-flappers to say nothing of the negative crowd.

"Goo bet aren't they great? Did you ever see anything so cute? I see where my hair pay goes, etc," was a few of the choice comments overheard by a reporter. And the truth of it is, they like 'em. Can you beat it?

The shoe or rather boot in question is made on the Cossack style and was made primarily as a summer boot for the galosh or flip-flop flapper exotics. And the nice part of it is that you flip-flop just so well.

Made of Patent Leather.

The boots are made of patent leather with grey suit top trimming and turn over leather band. Others are made of fine calf leather with boots trimming on the top. The boots are from shoe laces and eyes and therefore of great advantage to the flapper who generally sleeps in every thing but the galosh, and grand, pa would say they were just fancy "lazy slippers." But the flappers themselves are much more high class, and therefore call them Cossack boots. There you have it.

It is interesting to note that the prices of these boots in Hamilton run from $10 to $35, according to the quality of leather used and the amount of fancy trimming.

The Daily Recipe

JUNKET ICE CREAM.

Sweet, unpasteurized milk, when thickened by rennet or junket tablets, makes one of the best deserts for children and any one who needs to have a large quantity of milk in the diet.

The following recipe is for junket freeze:

First make the usual junket recipe, using one tablet or one teaspoon rennet to one quart lukewarm milk.

Break up the tablet into small pieces and dissolve it in one tablespoon cold water. Let the junket set in the usual way; add to 1 quart junket:

1 cup sugar
1 cup cream
¼ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon vanilla

Freeze as you would any ice cream. This is excellent served with canned or fresh fruit, and gives sufficient cream for ten servings at a very small cost.

Music and Drama

"THE MAN FROM HOME" FINELY PRODUCED BY PARAMOUNT

Foremost among the novels which have brought Booth Tarkington fast and true to undoubtedly "The Man From Home," which has now been translated to the screen, and is the feature attraction at Griffin's tonight to Saturday, with a matinee Saturday.

With the action laid mostly in Italy and several scenes in England and America, the story is a thrilling one, and its transference to the screen it has lost none of its intensity. Produced by George Fitzmaurice for Paramount, it has been invested with the customary fire and vigor expected from this virile director. One of the chief details is the excellent cast, which comprises such favorites as James Kirkwood, Anna Q. Nilsson, Norman Kerry, Dorothy Cumming and John Miltern.

A two-reel Century comedy titled "Table Steaks," featuring Brownie, the wonder dog, a beautiful Travel-Picture and George Walsh in the historical chapter play "With Stanley in Africa," are being exhibited on the same program.

AERIAL TICKETS TO INDIA FOR $300

These Trips May Soon be Offered to British Travellers

Associated Press.

London, Aug. 7.—(By Mail).—Trips to India by air in three days, at a cost of $300 first-class and $175 second-class, may soon be offered British travelers. A number of large technical corporations have made a proposal to the government to run a mail and passenger service from London to Bombay. The airships would have capable of flying at 80 miles an hour with 200 passengers.

The proposal has been put forward in order to develop the communications of the British Empire in speed and cheapness, and thereby assist the development of trade. No promotion profits would be taken by any party, and all the promoters ask is a subsidy from the government sufficient to pay the public investor a dividend of four and one-half percent.

With a shrug Staff turned back to the telephone and asked for the manager of the catering company. The manager said was promised that, if the call could be traced back to the original station, he should have the number. He was, however, enmeshed to be patient. Such a search would take time, quite possibly until very probably.

He explained this to Jif, whose face got real ill-disguised.

"And meanwhile," he expostulated, "We're sitting here with our hands in our laps—waste and lunay, as Mike's bad, is—" He broke into profanity, trotting up and down and twisting his small hands together.

"I wish," said Staff, "I knew what makes you act this way. Lanny can't saddle you with a crime committed by him when you're in my company—"

"You don't know him," interpolated Jif.

"And you surely can't be stirred so deeply by simple solicitude for Miss Searle."

"Oh, can't I? And how do you know I can't?" barked the little man. "Gwan leave me alone! I want to think."

"Best wishes," Staff told him pleasantly. "I'm going to change my clothes."

"Symptoms of intelligence," grunted Jif. "I was wondering when you'd wake up to the incongruity of knight-errantry it after damsels in distress in an open-faced get-up like that."

"It's done, however," argued Staff good-humouredly. "It's either that or illustrators are to be believed. Don't you ever read modern fiction? In cases genuine like these the hero always takes a cold bath and changes his clothes before rallying forth to put a crimp in the villain's plans. Just the same as me. Only I'm going to shed evening dress instead of—"

"Good heavens, man!" snorted Jif. "Are you in training for a monologuist's job? If so—if not—anyway—can it! Can the extemporaneous Staff!"

The telephone bell silenced whatever retort Staff may have contemplated. Both men jumped for the desk, but Staff got there first.

"Hello?" he cried, receiver at ear. "Yes? Hello?"

But instead of the masculine accents of the exchange-manager he heard, for the third time that night, the voice of Miss Searle.

"You," he replied almost breathlessly —"it is I, Miss Searle. Thank heaven you called up! I've been worrying silly—"

"We were cut off," the girl's voice responded. He noted, subconsciously, that she was speaking slowly and carefully, as if with effort. . . . "Cut off," she repeated as by rote, "and I had trouble getting you again."

"Then you're—you're all right?"

"Quite, thank you. I had an undesant experience trying to get to you or taxicab. The motor broke down zoning through Central Park, and I had to walk home and lost my way. But I am all right now—just tired out."

"I'm sorry," he said sincerely. "It's too bad; I was quite ready to call for you—you understand—and save you the trouble of the trip down here. But I'm glad you've had no more unpleasant adventure."

"The necklace is safe," the girl's voice told him with the same deadly precision of utterance.

"Oh, yes; I assumed that. And I may call for it?"

"If you please—today at noon. I am so tired I am afraid I shan't get up before noon."

"That'll be quite convenient to me, thank you," he assured her. "But where are you stopping?"

There fell a brief pause. Then she said something indistinguishable.

"Yes?" he said. "Beg pardon—I didn't get that. A little louder please, Miss Searle."

"The St. Regis."

"Where?" he repeated in surprise.

"The St. Regis. I am here with Mrs. Ilkington—her guest. Good night, Mr. Staff."

"Good morning," he laughed; and at once the connection was severed.

"And that's all right!" he announced cheerfully, swinging round to face Jif. "She was in a taxicab accident and got lost in Central Park—just got home, I infer. The necklace is safe and I'm to call and get it at twelve o'clock."

"Where's the stopper?" demanded Jif, shaking his little head as though impatient. Staff named the hotel, and Jif fairly jumped. "Why that's impossible!" he cried. "She can't afford it."

"How do you happen to know she can't?" enquired Staff, perplexed.

Momentarily Jif showed a face of confusion. "I know a lot of things," he grumbled, evasively.

Staff waited a moment, then finding that the little man didn't purpose making any more adequate or satisfactory explanation, observed: "It happens that she's Mrs. Ilkington's guest, and I fancy Mrs. Ilkington can afford it—unless you know more about her, too, than I do."

Jif shook his head, dissatisfied. "All right," he said wearily. "Now what're you going to do?"

"I'm going to try to snatch a few hour's sleep. There's no reason why I shouldn't, now, with nothing to do before noon."

"Pleasant dreams," said Jif sourly, as Staff marched off to his bedroom.

Then he sat down on the edge of the divan, hunting the drowsing-gown round him, scowled vindictively at nothing and began thoughtfully to gnaw a bony knuckle.

To be continued.

Modern Mothers

The following article from the London Chronicle shows that the same conditions prevail in England as here. It is sensible, and for parents to read and consider whether they need the lesson.

"Hank goodness I have a level-headed daughter," a modern mother remarked to me the other day. "Mary came home last night at three o'clock escorted by two young men. She did her cousin Cynthia had previously dined with them, and gone on somewhere to dance. I didn't know either of the youths."

"Hank goodness I have a level-headed daughter," a modern mother remarked to me the other day. "Mary came home last night at three o'clock escorted by two young men. She did her cousin Cynthia had previously dined with them, and gone on somewhere to dance. I didn't know either of the youths."

"Thank goodness I have a level-headed daughter," a modern mother remarked to me the other day. "Mary came home last night at three o'clock escorted by two young men. She did her cousin Cynthia had previously dined with them, and gone on somewhere to dance. I didn't know either of the youths."

A day or two later I was having tea with Nancy and her mother, who had just come from London.

"By the way," remarked Nancy, in the course of conversation, "you called on Lady——, I hope, when you were coming through."

She mentioned the chatelaine of a very gay house where they stayed the year before.

"No," her mother said, placidly, "I hadn't time." She is a woman who has never had anything to do.

The girl's face fell.

"Fibs," she said, gloomily, "I shan't be asked to Wells again."

Later when we were alone she pounced it all out to me.

"You're a writer," she said, "you can say it. Can't you sound a clarion call to mothers, or something? Tell them their sheep-like neglecting of duties, which are light enough now, positive dangers. They're not supposed to sit up late the night chaperoning us, or to escort us everywhere we go. They need time at home to do much needed things for us—the kind of people who are kind to us, and so on. If this mother to know any friends of us she would. Mother does nothing for us, they say. 'If we want something to take us about we have to pursue the young married women of our acquaintance—and then if we're brought home by a strange young man, they consider us early at breakfast that such things were not done in their day.'

"They were taken to parties, and brought back. All their amusements were arranged for them, whereas we have to find our own."

Nancy's outburst opened my eyes. I looked around at the girls I knew. There was Kitty Carew, who belonged to a club—at eighteen—and came back to her mother's house at one o'clock in the morning by herself, whilst her mother slept placidly; there was Nancy's cousin Cynthia, whose parents couldn't be bothered with young people so that their daughter, when she wanted to entertain, had a party at a restaurant, and took them on somewhere, as though she were a married woman of forty, instead of a girl of twenty-five.

"What about Madeline?" I asked curious about a woman of the world.

"Oh," Nancy's face glowed enthusiastically, "Madeline's got the perfect mother. They're like chums and comrades, you know, and she enjoys things just as much as Madeline does. She has all the privileges of the old-fashioned mother, without any of their faults that I can see.

"Madeline does what she likes—Mrs. Bruce says she trusts her absolutely, and when a young man takes her out she brings him home to tea or supper, which is much nicer, you know, than always having to go to a restaurant," Nancy sighed. "If only my mother would be interested in my friends. You see, it's particularly hard if you're an only girl."

"But you have a brother," I said.

"Oh, brothers!" but Nancy's remarks on brothers must be kept for another occasion.

Grand Trunks Oust Petes Still Lead the League

Hard Fought, Close Scored Game Goes to Locals 3-2—Both Teams Hit Well—Mallen Had Edge on Heckman in Pitching Department

When the Grand Trunks defeated Jake Solomon's Peterboro squad here on Wednesday, their ambition of two weeks ago became a realization namely, to defeat Cobourg, Lindsay and Peterboro (the three tough teams of the circuit) on the home diamond. Cobourg were shut out 10-0, Lindsay bested 10-2, and yesterday Peterboro were defeated by the score of 3-2.

As the score will indicate, the locals did not haul the game off at Christie street either, but played nine hard innings of real live baseball to win their laurels. It was certainly a lovely exhibition to watch, and the large crowd of the same thought so also.

"Doc" Mallen twirled the whole way for the Railroaders, as did Al. Heckman, the widely-hailed blonde wonder, for the opposition. Heckman has pitched better games than he twirled yesterday, however, and Swanston, his catcher, has certainly turned in a better game behind the bat than he did yesterday. Two of the three Trunk runs were scored on passed balls that were thrown by Heckman to hitters. The team was none too sure in the field, either, although they were rather lucky.

Mallen twirled in a nice game, pitching steady and heady ball. He was not dangerously hit at any stage, Long being the only man who laid on one, getting a three-bagger in the fourth. His control was good, and he dug himself out of the holes admirably. If one pitcher was superior to the other, Mallen should get first place on yesterday's game. He struck out 7 men to Heckman's 4, but passed 2 to Heckman's 1. The Petes touched Mallen for 8 hits, and the Trunks got 7 off Heckman.

Both squads were hitting, but the Petes couldn't bunch their hits and many went to waste, the clean-up men failing flat. Heckman, ranked as an unusually good hitter for a hurler, struck out twice and flew out twice, out of four times up. In both the second and fourth innings the Petes got two hits and sent one run over. In the second Collins singled, and McCarney hit to left field, going to third and scoring Collins when the ball bounded past Heerman. In the fourth McCarney's single, following Long's three-bagger, netted number two.

Petes scored the first run of the game in the second, but the Trunks came back in their half and when Casey got on on McCarney's error, Hagerman pounded a two-bagger through (except and scored him. Then in the fourth, after Ross singled, Casey pounded out the hit of the day, a three-bagger to deep centre garden, and scored Ross, himself scoring on a pass ball.

Casey's big clout and Stan. Hagerman's stab catch in left field were two deciding factors of the game. In the fifth inning Heckman came up and bunted the pill to deep left field, with Johnson and Swanston on second and third, respectively. It was a long drive, and had Hagerman missed, three runs would have crossed the plate for sure. He ran sideways and backwards, however, and it nailed into his fingers just at the psychological moment, making the second out.

The Trunks played sixtight ball in the field and were out to win in every department or phase of the game. The score, by innings:

TRUNKS ARE OUT IN FRONT

The following are the results of the other three games.

Poor Cobourg Again.

Hall hit safely in the sixth, stole second, Legge sacrificing him to third, and he scored when Boyd dropped Evans' pop fly. RED SOX BEAT G.T.R. SHOPMEN

These Teams Tie For first Place in City League

Last night at the Agricultural Park the Red Sox and the G.T.R. Shops clashed in a city league fixture which ended in a win for the Sox by a score of 3 to 1. The game was fast throughout. Mott handled the mound for the Sox and had 11 strike-outs and allowed 3 hits, while Gerow filled the pitching position for the Trunks. He also pitched good ball but his support was ragged. He is credited with 8 strikeouts and allowed two hits. The Sox support was very good, there being only two errors, while the Trunks allowed five to slip through their fingers. Mr. Miles was umpire-in-chief while Mr. Gerdanier had the scoring to look after. Both handled the game to the satisfaction of both teams. The G.T.R.'s and the Red Sox are now a tie for first place in the league. The lineups were as follows:

Grand Trunks—Miles, Dennis, Folwell, Pringle, Mackarath, Smith, Ross, Locke, Gerow.

Red Sox—Cooke, Mott, Cummins, Wardhaugh, Joss, Townsley, Ashley, Welch, Miles, Hunter, Stark.

YOUNG REPUBLIC FORGES AHEAD

Czechoslovakia Has Built Up a Prosperous Industrial Life

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Aug. 1.—(By Mail)—Although the Czechoslovakian Republic is only three and a half years old, it is the one state in Europe which has set its house in order and has avoided the evils of the printing press. The Czechs or Bohemians are a hard-working and phlegmatic race, full of common sense, and they have built up an economic and industrial fabric which has made the country one of the most prosperous in Central Europe. Its industry to-day is beyond the needs of its own population. The Czech crown, which until had almost followed the fluctuations of the German mark, has now established its independence in the world's exchanges.

Since the creation of the republic the bulk of trade has been with Germany, although the United States is gaining an increasing share of it. According to official figures, 47.7 per cent. of Czech imports in 1921 came from Germany, the latter country taking 34.5 per cent. of Czech exports. Every Czech realizes that the future of the country's trade is in Central Europe, but he is anxious to avoid as far as possible any economic dependence on Germany.

Like many other European countries, Czechoslovakia's most vital problems concern the much-needed increase in production and the cost of living, the reduction of taxation, and amelioration of the housing situation. At present Prague is one of the most expensive cities in Europe. One of the causes is the tremendous national budget, which is swollen by heavy military expenses.

Compared with Vienna and Budapest, Prague presents an appearance of prosperity and alertness. There is not that sense of despair, uncertainty and indecision which the American traveler meets in Vienna. While other European capitals suffered by the Great War, Prague was hardly affected until the revolution of 1918, when she awoke suddenly to find herself one of the great capitals of Europe.

Czechoslovakia's political system is based upon the strictest democratic principles, her policy being one of humanism and evolution along republican lines. Bolshevism has been crushed. Drastic land reforms have been made, to appease the appetite of the masses. No one is allowed more than 250 hectares of arable land or 500 hectares of forest land. Owing to increased wages, the working classes live in comfortable content. There is little unemployment.

As in most other European cities, the housing problem in Prague is acute. Any owner of a flat or house is liable to have his quarters commandeered by the State. In spite of the government endeavors to encourage the erection of new buildings, the building trade has remained virtually suspended. Many of the poorer nobility have migrated to Vienna, Munich, Berlin, Poland or Hungary, in order to benefit by the rate of exchange. Others occupy a small corner of the vast palaces which have been in the possession of their families for centuries.

BIG TIME AT SAND BANKS

Lydien Lodge O. B. A. Held First Picnic on Wednesday Afternoon

Lydien Lodge Orange Benevolent Association held their first picnic to the Sand Banks yesterday, and it proved to be a decided success.

The trip was made in Fred Smith's motor trucks and motor cars, and at the Sand Banks, many games were pulled off, and a happy time spent.

Mr. Lou Soules was in charge of the sports, the results of which were as follows:

Girls' Race—Violet Rigby.
Boys' Race—J. Fall.
Married Ladies' Race—Mrs. Rigby.
Married Mens' Race—Will Kennedy.
Old Ladies' Race—Mrs. Shaft.
Bean Race—Mrs. Weeks.
Pipe Race (Men)—W. Kennedy.

A tug of war between the men and women was the feature of the day, the men being warned that in the event of their winning they would go hungry. It was a battle royal, and it goes without saying who won this event.

Another feature event was the novelty race for cash prize donated by W. C. Mikel K. C. The contestants had to swim 50 yds, climb to the top of the sand bank, back into the water, then dress, Mrs. John Hanna, won this prize proving herself to be an Alpine climber.

Mrs. Carrie Kennedy acted as judge of the various events.

Parents:-

The retardation of mental development caused by defective vision and eyestrain in the growing child is now-a-days receiving greater attention—especially in the larger cities—with the result that a proper education is now possible for those who formerly were deprived owing to inaptitude for study, or wrongly considered inability to learn.

None of the cities have more efficient eye-sight service than Belleville.

NOTED SCULPTOR DEAD.

London, Aug. 23.—Sir Thomas Brock the sculptor died yesterday.

Sir Thomas Brock was born in 1847 among his better known works are "The Moment of Peril," "The Genius of Poverty," "Eve," and the Queen Victoria memorial in Buckingham Palace.

The Lord meant brothers to be a horrible warning to a girl, but it doesn't seem to do a bit of good when another fellow comes along.

Don't allow yourself to be forced back by the great anxiety about putting up a good front.

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

THE PEOPLELESS PEOPLE.

Wherein the Khan wastes an amicious eye towards an array of empty cradles, and an ominous condition concerning their possessors.

Even now it is being cast up to us that we have to rake the by-ways and alleys in the world to get people.

I am told, and I will pass it on, we are a peopleless people.

A farm held by the Magulres for three generations was sold yesterday and it went into the possession of Barbee Mazanian. And why? Because we are peopleless people.

Folk whom we once despised swarm over the earth because they get married and have children—lots of them, and they glory in it.

Here in Canada we have peopleless places. Who then shall people with people these peopleless places? We should do it, but we are not doing it.

What seems to be the matter?

I was up in Northern Ontario the other day and I thought I was in Quebec. It is Quebec! It used to be part of this province, on the map, but now it is as much a part of the "ancient province" as Bonaventure, by gosh! They don't go on the state so more, they go on the province of Ontario. And I was glad to see them there. They don't go on the state-less since the bitter day at Chateauguay; they are white, ah, yes, they are white, and they have been taught and educated and trained for generations that it was their destiny and their privilege and their mission to people with people the peopleless places of this Dominion.

I have been going to church since I was so high and I have listened to a hundred thousand sermons more or less, but I don't recall a single occasion when the preacher exhorted his young people to get married and replenish the earth.

To people with people the peopleless places.

The peopleless places would be better lying in the virgin state than to people them with people who can't speak our language and don't want to, and never will if they can help it. We people our peopleless places with people who immediately proceed to create problems that we can't solve. We have little Russias, and little Galicias, and little Polands, and little Bulgarias in "our midst" because we couldn't people with people our peopleless places ourselves. I would rather see a naked prairie and an empty province than behold them peopled with people who will never be our people.

The French-Canadians have the right idea, the ver' best fam'lee. If I remember right the Quebec Government at one time gave a hundred acres of land to the man who was the father of more than ten children. That's the talk! If we all had ten children apiece we would not have to rake the backyards of Europe for people to people our peopleless places.

Two-thirds of the young ones in his province are raised on the bottle. And what's in a bottle? Skim milk.

A skim milk generation will never people with people the peopleless places. It will be puny on most everything. But I don't believe in a ask-off on baby's milk. Baby may have it at the foot of MacNab street, Bullock's Corners, depends for his sustenance on a cow 'way up in Gunny. That's where cradling the matter with that cow. I know the cow. I have dodged her out of my oats more than once and she's all right. She gives good milk and plenty of it, but by the time it is jolted over the generally concession in a democrat, and then loaded into a truck and dumped into Bullock's Corners it is almost churned—even if there hasn't been a rake-off somewhere between.

The question is not whether we should put up with limite this winter. I am not troubled about the uel question. The question is not whether we are going to fill the coal bin out. How shall we people with people the peopleless places?

One of our own family men dare not go into a peopleless place unless he can afford to take a cow along with him.

The foreigner walks right in, cow or no cow, and puts the dogs on any returned soldiers he may discover in the district.

The Khan.

NO HARD COAL FOR CONSUMERS

Other Fuel Must be Used In Eastern Part of United States

Washington, Aug. 24.—The Federal Fuel Committee to-day made the fullest to the southern coal situation, meaning that normal consumers of hard coal for domestic purposes in the Great Lakes region, New England and the middle Atlantic States will be forced to use other fuel for heating purposes. The committee stated that the increase in the car loadings on Monday, making the loadings the largest of any single day since the beginning of the strike, was due chiefly to new production in Ohio, Pennsylvania and northern West Virginia.

"The urgency of the railway fuel situation," it was announced, "promises to be considerably relieved by production from coal fields now being reopened. The presence of this new coal in the market rendering available those supplies of fuel which the railroads have previously been accustomed to obtain, naturally tends to relieve the strain on the railway fuel situation in the southern Appalachian districts which have for months been the chief sources of provision of railway fuel."

ROYAL CANADIANS ARE LEADING IN RACE

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Toronto, Aug. 24.—In the International Yachting races between crews of the Eastern Yacht Club of Marblehead, Boston, and the Royal Canadians of this city, score is now four to one in favor of the Canadians, the latter with Cary Mia skippered by Norman Gooderham having won this morning's race against Charles Adams in the Patricia.

COLLINS' SWEETHEART.

London, Aug. 24.—Michael Collins is said to have been married shortly as soon as the military situation in South Ireland was well in hand, to a charming County Longford girl, Kitty Kiernan, whom he met under romantic circumstances.

Once when he was on the run she tramped all through the night to a lonely cabin where he was hidden to warn him that the police were on their way to arrest him. There was then a price on his head.

TO INVESTIGATE ESCAPE.

Kingston, Ont., Aug. 23.—Gilbert Smith, Ottawa, inspector of penitentiaries, is in the city conducting an investigation in the escape of Walter Griffith, the convict who leaped from the train conveying seventy-five convicts to the provincial penitentiary at Prince Albert, Sask.

Gas to the Rescue May Displace Coal For Heating Homes

"Water Gas," Easily Manufactured and Costing One-third the Price of Anthracite or Bituminous Coal

MADE IN HOMES

Is Hailed as Greatest Invention of Modern Times

New York, Aug. 24.—A new fuel—"water gas"—produced by fusing dissintegrated water and crude oil in a temperature of 900 degrees Fahrenheit, has been produced in the cellar of a West 69th street home. It was disclosed today, and, according to the inventor and his financial backers, it will do the work of coal at one-third the cost.

The Interborough Rapid Transit Subway System could be equipped to operate on oil and water in ten days, Abraham Hume forsees, and cars so equipped with a "water-gas" maker and the house heated, and locomotives, steamers, automobiles, fire engines and aeroplanes can be run, according to the inventor.

Engine To Burn Water Gas.

At the same time, the invention of a new type of steam-operated engine, designed to burn "water-gas," was disclosed. The model already constructed has only 96 operating parts and was designed to operate a motor delivery truck. The average automobile truck motor has 2,700 parts. A steam aeroplane engine, consisting of only 11 parts, is against 2,300 in the Liberty motor, is being constructed.

The fuel and the engine were designed and assembled by Joseph Watrous Prosser, born, 57 years ago in Carolina, R. I. Prosser is a former high school and school teacher, who turned automotive engineer. He was emphatically confident of the possibilities of his inventions.

Equally confident was Elbridge Gerry Snow, President of the Home Insurance Company, who said that he and a number of unnamed business and banking associates were backing Prosser.

"I consider," he said, "that we have one of the greatest inventions of modern times, with revolutionary consequences in power, heating and lighting."

Seen End of Use of Coal.

Mr. Snow said that options had been taken on several plants, one near Newark, for the purpose of turning out the "automatic gas-fuel burner," as the oil-water fuel maker is called, and the "duplex steam motor engine" in large numbers. He added that engineers and officials of several big corporations had witnessed tests of the fuel and engine, but that offers to purchase the rights to the inventions were not being considered.

"I desire to add," said Snow, "that the end of the use of coal may be regarded as in sight and the public bond not worry over the fuel conditions, as cheap fuel made of oil and water for all purposes is in sight."

EDITOR'S MOTHER DIES AT PORT HOPE

Port Hope, Aug. 24.—Mrs. Thos. M. Littel wife of T. M. Little, Postmaster there, died to-day at the family home, Garden Hill. Two weeks ago Mrs. Little had a breakdown at the office. For a few days hopes were entertained for her recovery, but a second stroke followed about a week ago, from which she came unconscious, and gradually grew weaker, and died at 8 o'clock this morning. Mrs. Little was a daughter of the late Robert McKeown, of Garden Hill. She had spent all her life there, and died in the home in which she was born. Since girlhood the deceased was a member of the choir of the Presbyterian church and held offices at various times in the Sunday School and missionary and auxiliary societies. She is survived by her husband and an only son, Wesley M. Little, Editor of The Daily Ontario, Belleville. Two sisters and three brothers also survive; they are: Mrs. J. C. Martin, Strasbourg, Sask.; Mrs. W. G. Gist, Canton, Ont.; and Messrs. Alfred McKeown, of Woodstock, Walter of Toronto.

COAL SHORTAGE MEANS FREEZING

Coal and Rail Strike Situation Before American Senate

Washington, Aug. 24.—The industrial crisis, through failure of the negotiations to settle the railroad and anthracite strikes, found its way back to the Administration doorstep today and aroused an uproar in the senate. Collapse of the mediation efforts in both of the strikes precipitated turbulent debate, in which strong sentiment developed for Government seizure of the railroads and anthracite mines.

The discussion was the first real manifestation by Congress of an appreciation of the gravity of the situation, and may be a forerunner of action authorizing the President to assume control of railroads, and hard coal mines, pending a settlement of the labor controversy. The breach so far as known, has not changed his policy outlined in his message to Congress, which demanded that the law be enforced in the strikes, but recommended no legislation relating to them. Today's Senate debate, it is believed in some quarters, might result in a change of Administration policy, should the strikes continue.

BLACKSMITH MAY SUCCEED COLLINS

Gen. McKeon Likely Successor to Michael Collins—Mulcahy Is an Outstanding Figure

Oxford, Aug. 25.—The death of Michael Collins leaves Richard Mulcahy the outstanding personality on the Government side.

He was formerly in the postoffice, but was dismissed for sedition and became a medical student in Dublin.

Before the truce he was republican chief of staff, and if Collins was the soul of the republican army, Mulcahy was the brains. During the treaty debates in the Dail his speeches reached the high-est level of parliamentary oratory. He is a born statesman and organizer. At present he is minister of defense. The successor of Griffith as president of the Dail, is likely to be Laurence O'Neill, lord mayor of Dublin, who is a realistic unsentimental character, very like Griffith. Gen. McKeon, ex-blacksmith, will possibly be commander-in-chief.

His fighting record is equal even to Collins, but for combination of political and military qualities Mulcahy is preeminent.

DE VALERA HAS EMERGED

London, August 25.—DeValera has emerged from his hiding since the death of Michael Collins and is reported to be seeking a truce with a large force of Rebels, says a Belfast correspondent of the Evening News.

COAL SHORTAGE MEANS FREEZING

THE GAS AGE

Fuel Expert at Canadian Gas Association in Hamilton Says Homes Must be Heated by Gas in Future

Smoke Nuisance to be Eliminated—Burning of Raw Coal is Wrong

Hamilton, Ont., Aug. 24.—Floyd W. Parsons, New York fuel expert, delivering an address at the annual dinner of the Canadian Gas Association i nthis Royal Connaught Hotel last night, at the fifteenth convention of the organization, declared that in the future homes would be heated entirely by gas; locomotives would b soperated by electricity exclusively; elimination of the smoke nuisance in cities, and burning of all coal in centralized plants, where every available atom of energy can be derived from the fuel. The present was the gas age, he declared. Cheaper oxygen would have to be supplied by the steel companies, and his price would drop to a fraction, instead of a cent a foot, the present rate. The use of this element was particularly desirable, he said. It was to .be regretted, Mr. Parsons said, that so much development was hindered by political operations. "Despite all that has been said to the contrary, I am sure that the coming Winter is going to be one of unprecedented distress from the fuel point of view," the speaker declared.

With the United States thirty million tons of coal short, consumers could prepare to use bituminous fuel. Health would be interfered with as the result of this condition, but it would be absolutely necessary this Winter. When people realized that the burning of raw coal were rong, then the future of gas industry would be assured, said the speaker.

Present conditions will improve within a few months cheaper methods of making gas, it was averred. A German scheme was now being inspected with a view of introducing it here. The day was not far distant, said Mr. Barnes, when industries would require all the electric power, and gas would be the heating medium. The heating of homes entirely by electricity was not feasible.

BIGAMIST GIVEN HIS FREEDOM

David Frederick Gets Suspended Sentence on $200 Bond for One Year

TELLS QUEER STORY

Wife No. 2 and Her Companion Each Get One Month on Vagrancy Charges

David Frederick, who pleaded guilty to a charge of bigamy, was allowed out on suspended sentence on recognizance of a $200 bond for a period of 1 year, at police court this morning.

The reason for the lenient manner in which the case was dealt with, as explained by Magistrate Masson, was that according to accused's story, he did believe that his first wife was dead, and secondly, that no particular harm was done wife no. 2, who did not prove to be a virtuous girl.

Frederick stated that he had not seen wife no. 1 for 17 years, and yet on cross-examination believed that his youngest child, living in Western Canada, was 12 years of age. The Crown Attorney cleared the atmosphere by saying one word. "Radio".

"Did you know your first wife was living in Toronto with another man?" asked Mr. Carnew.

"No although she might have lived with 2 or 3 men," was the answer. "I heard she had been the mother of 7 or 8 children since she left me."

When asked if he thought his brother, a section foreman back north, would know whether or not she was alive, accused said he would not believe his brother because he had at one time

WE MUST BURN SOFT COAL IN FURNACE NEXT WINTER

People Not Willing to Buy Soft Coal But Must Make Up Minds to Use It

STRIKE MAY LAST

Hydro Issues Warning Note to Those About to Instal Electric Heating

Toronto, August 25.—Toronto people will have to burn soft coal in their furnaces before the winter is over, and the sooner they realize that fact the better for them," was the emphatic statement ill a leading Toronto coal dealer in The Star to-day. Be designed to permit the use of his name, but he made no bones about admitting that as he saw it the ranks of the anthracite miners might not all winter.

"Eventually the people will have to come to soft coal," said the dealer, "but if the dealers were trying to sell it now they could not sell 5 tons of it in a day. Why? Because the people are not ready to buy it. People do not realize that they will have to use it and they won't realize that until they are up against it."

"There has been a break of $2 a ton in the price of soft coal at the mines in the last five years," said the man. "And I would not be surprised to see another drop of $3 a ton in the next two weeks. That would bring the soft coal price, delivered in Toronto, at about $9.00."

In view of this he thought that it would be unwise to go too heavily on Welsh coal. "No wonder the Welsh dealers want to dispose of their coal now when they see the break in American price," he said.

Dealers Not Keen.

But because the people will not at this time buy soft coal the local dealers are not keen to get it. They can save money of course by selling it from the cars rather than to unload it from the cars and carry it to their yards before delivery.

Coal men say that if soft coal is properly handled it can be burned to advantage in ordinary furnaces. They predict that the hard coal miners, who are practically 100 per cent. organized, may stay out indefinitely, and the bituminous miners are opening up daily and soon

WAR CONDITIONS SHALL RETURN

This is Prediction of Mine Authority—Says Railways Cannot Haul Enough Coal

Washington, Aug. 25.—Lighted nights, curtailed street car services, closing down of non-essential industries and other restrictions practiced during the war and post-war coal conservation periods, probably will have to be instituted this winter, Ellis H. Searles, editor of the United Mine Workers' Journal forecasted to-day.

Searles, who has made a careful survey of the fuel situation, believes the railways of the country will not be able to haul all the coal that is mined and required to meet the business and domestic needs.

While the Federal government now is rationing fuel, it will have to go much further to save the people from suffering and business from serious embarrassment, this writer Searles said. If the government does not revive the fue l administration which operated during the war and in the winter of 1920, then the states and cities will have to take the necessary steps, he held.

"Right now it is not a matter of how much coal can be mined, but how much coal the railways can haul. Within the next few days the mines will be producing coal at the rate of from 2,000,000 to 10,000,000 tons weekly. There is bound to be a jam on all railways when heavy movements get under way."

CAST ASIDE PARTY REBELS SAYS MEIGHEN

Conservative Leader Calls For United Party at Convention in Vancouver

Vancouver, B.C., Aug. 24.—"No matter what else you do, let union be the product of this convention." This was the message given by Right Hon. Arthur Meighen in his speech to the British Columbia Conservative convention. His speech dealt chiefly with a review of political happenings since the last Federal elections, and he repeated his condemnation of the present Federal Government and its policy. He followed closely the lines laid down in his speeches in Eastern and Western Canada during the last few weeks, describing the Liberal policy as one of insincerity.

"You are here to determine your course in provincial politics," he said. "In that I cannot help you, and you are abundantly able to help yourselves. An impetus to Conservatism would be given if a united and determined party came from this convention. Any individual who stands in the way of a united party should be ruthlessly cast aside."

Was Prominent Figure in Social Life of Past Generation

Montreal, Aug. 26.—Mrs. John Young, widow of the late John Young, has passed away at her residence, 1220 Mansfield St., Westmount, at the advanced age of ninety-five years. WON'T RESCUE SUICIDES

Paris Police Warn Would-Be Suicides That They Do So at Their Own Risk

Paris, August 22.—The chief of the river police has issued notification that his force numbers only 25 men for both day and night service, and therefore constant patrolling of the eight miles of river banks at night is impossible.

The notification is intended as a warning to avowed suicides that they must expect to get drowned if they throw themselves from bridges into the Seine after dark.

The former prefect of police encountered as one of his first duties to plunge into the Seine to rescue a drowning woman who declared afterwards that she had lost her determination to commit suicide as soon as she touched the water. The latest notice will perhaps encourage them to take the plunge in daytime, unless they are fully persuaded to have done with life.

London, June 24.—A Belfast despatch to the Evening News, today says it is clear that Michael Collins had a premonition of death. Kenneth Collins saw a Belfast friend, to whom he said upon taking leave: "Good-bye, I will say goodby before I don't expect I shall ever see you again."

The correspondent adds that it is stated in Belfast that Collins had been "sentenced to death" by the Irish republican brotherhood.

CANADIAN POET IS REMEMBERED

House of Lieut. B. F. Trotter Scene of Appreciative Gathering

Toronto, Aug. 24.—Standing back from the rocky shore of Lake Cecebe, almost hidden from view, surrounded by cedars and pines, is Valhalla, the northern home of the late Lieut. Bernard Freeman Trotter, one of Canada's sweet singers, who, of his free manhood's choice, crossed the sea to save a stricken people from the foe." This lodge in the wilderness, built largely by the poet's hands, lent its artistic environment to the evening given by its gracious hostess, Mrs. T. Trotter (mother of the poet,) when, after a "homey" tea, at which Miss Frances Trotter and Mrs. F. W. Hayden assisted, a musical and literary program was presented by Professor G. H. Follows of Pittsburg and F. W. Hayden of the Canadian Literature Club. "My Inn," by Bernard Trotter, and "Night on Scarecrow Lake," by the late Sergt. G. P. Hayden were two selections which called forth much appreciation, while Dunsany's play, "The Glittering Gate," was the cause of a lively discussion led by Mr. Charles Robinson of Pittsburg.

RELIEF EXPEDITION FOR WRANGEL ISLE

Nothing Heard of Allan Crawford and Party Since Last September

Ottawa, Aug. 24.—Relief for four men, stated by Vilhjalmur Stefansson, the explorer, to be now in danger on Wrangel Island, has been provided by the Canadian government, the sum of $1,000 being advanced to Mr. Stefansson for the purpose of taking the necessary relief measures. The matter of the ownership of Wrangel Island was brought up in parliament last session, when it was stated that the Stefansson party of four men, headed by Allan Crawford of Toronto, had raised the British flag and claimed sovereignty over the island as a British possession, though there were at the time conflicting claims as to ownership.

The relief expedition arranged by Stefansson on the provision of the money by the government, is stated to have sailed from Nome, Alaska yesterday. Nothing has been heard of the Crawford party since September last and the ship which sailed yesterday is carrying fresh supplies and a new party to continue the occupation of the island.

Wrangel Island is claimed to be rich in mineral deposits.

ANGORA WANTS PEACE WITH GREAT BRITAIN

Mustapha Kemal Adopts a Friendly Attitude Towards Britain—Solves Big Puzzle

Constantinople, Aug. 24.—According to news received from Angora Wednesday afternoon, a sudden change of attitude towards the British has taken place among the National leaders.

Mustapha Kemal Pasha, who only a few days ago denounced Britain as the arch enemy of Turkey, is now contemplating a policy of rapprochement.

Following the urgent advice of Ismir Bamy, Recep Bey, the National let premier, it is said that the incident that peace is near, and that in order to facilitate the solution of the near eastern puzzle, the nationalist government is willing to make large concessions in Thrace and meet halfway the British point of view on that question.

Moreover, it is reported that Kemal who has lately been in frequent communication with Major-General Town shend, is preparing a letter to Prime Minister Lloyd George offering liberal terms for a British-Turkish understanding. The letter, which, according to Angora reports, is already drafted, will be sent to London by special messenger as soon as General Townshend advises Kemal to do so. Whether the new attitude of the Angora government is sincere or is merely a trial balloon, will soon appear.

Ottawa, Aug. 23.—The protest of the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress against the sending of troops into the strike area in Nova Scotia has been communicated by the premier to the officer commanding the district and through him to the local authorities. Under the circumstances I have given instructions to have residents of your wire communicated through Department of National Defence to officers of district under whose requisition troops have gone to Nova Scotia, with the request that we advise local authorities of its representations, at the same time informing them that our Government is most desirous that the troops should be withdrawn just as speedily as may be possible in the opinion of the authorities by whom they have been requisitioned, and who are financially liable for expenditures incurred in connection with their aid to the civic power.

POLES MOBBING JEW SHOPKEEPERS

Berlin, Aug. 24.—Serious excesses against Jews have been taking place in Kattowitz, in the Polish part of Upper Silesia, since Monday afternoon as the result of heavy increases in the cost of food. Following a demonstration against the exorbitant prices a mob of several hundred persons invaded the Jewish quarters and stormed numerous shops, beating up the owners and customers and throwing them all into the street.

At night the mob raided saloons and cafes, maltreating all the Jews found. The police finally dispersed the rioters, but outbreaks in various parts of Kattowitz still continue.

RURY ACKNOWLEDGES DEFEAT WILL ORGANIZE NEW PARTY

(By Special Correspondent)

Ottawa, August, 9 1, 1922.—The premier of Ontario has stirred up a controversy which his own party which has been added to the gaiety of the daily press. In reality, it is not without importance. Hon. Mr. Drury would enlarge the scope of the United Farmers of Ontario as a political organization, and take in "likeminded" men, even if they do happen to live in towns and cities. He has entertained the view for some time, but has become more emphatic and specific as election time draws near, and declares that the U.F.O. party never intended to be a political body. Unexpected publication of a circular letter which the premier sent out to "like-minded" men in his own party, asking for names of urban supporters, brought matters to a head, and divided the U.F.O. camp, the opposition wing, of course, being headed by the veteran secretary, J. J. Morrison, who makes no bones about "class consciousness" and disputes the bona fides of the title "Progressive" in connection with the Ontario organization.

There was an impression in some quarters that the argument was being staged to hold Conservative farmers recruited in 1919, and attract more in urban municipalities, while the Morrison faction kept the stand-patters solid, but if the battle was "framed" in the first place, it is drawing blood now. Your correspondent attended the South Huron U.F.O. picnic, where the premier virtually told Mr. Morrison to mind his own particular business, marketing the butter and eggs, in reply to which Mr. Morrison has gave an interview to the effect that neither Mr. Drury nor anyone else, is big enough to dictate to the U.F.O. The official organ, The Farmers' Sun, proclaims the "broadening out" plan one that "no thoughtful man can fail to realize must end in undoing all the work of the past few years." Judging from the attitude of Mr. Drury's auditors in South Huron and numerous interviews in other parts of the province, he has behind him a majority at least of those who are willing to be articulate on the subject.

The fact is that, whatever may have been intended, the U.F.O. did become a political organization. For the present term, soon to end, it is in power, by a narrow margin, and by grace of the Labor Party. If it fail in the coming contest, there is bound to be a certain adverse effect upon the business side of the organization. Hence the S. O. S. call, which may at least attract some friends of Hon. Mr. Raney's methods.

MOULDY SWEET CLOVER

Is a Dangerous Feed, Especially to Young Cattle.

Investigational Work by Provincial Veterinarians — It Makes Castration and Dehorning Risky—More Research and Experimenting Necessary.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Recently considerable sickness and losses have been reported among cattle being fed on sheltgan. In some instances only a few animals have been affected on a particular farm, but in a few cases the losses have been serious, as one farmer is known to have lost 17 animals out of a herd of 50 after the frequency and peculiarity of those losses has led the Department to have investigations and experiments made to determine the cause.

Investigational Work by Ontario Veterinarians

The staff of the Ontario Veterinary College have been in close touch with the veterinary surgeons throughout the province, and reliable information obtained as to the prevailing circumstances where cattle have died. In all cases investigation has revealed the fact that the losses have occurred among cattle fed extensively on sweet clover ensilage which had become mouldy. Samples of the ensilage were shipped to the Veterinary College, and experiments conducted clearly indicated that mouldy sweet clover ensilage was harmful to cattle. From observations and information available at the present time, it would appear that the harm is confined to sweet clover ensilage which has become mouldy, and that the continued feeding of it is liable to cause death.

Young Cattle the First to Succumb.

It is an interesting fact that young cattle under three years of age are the ones which suffer most severely and succumb the quickest. In illustration of this the case mentioned where in a herd of 50 cattle the 17 which died were all young cattle under two years of age and in good condition. No stickiness had been present in the herd until after the feeding of the ensilage commenced, and the losses occurred within a few weeks. Apparently cattle over four years of age are able to withstand the ill effects better than young cattle. However, continued feeding of damaged sweet clover ensilage may be harmful to cattle of all ages.

It Makes Castration and Dehorning Dangerous.

It is also interesting to note that operations such as dehorning and castration performed on cattle that have been kept largely on mouldy sweet clover ensilage caused sudden death in many cases, while the same operations similarly performed on animals differently have not been followed by ill effects. The exact nature of the poisonous factor associated with the ensilage, and the manner in which it produces harmful effects in cattle and to cause their death has not yet been definitely determined, and any opinions expressed at the present time are based on practical observations.

More Research and Experimenting Required.

In fact a large amount of intense study, investigation and research will be necessary to obtain reliable conclusions regarding the possible dangers incidental to the feeding of mouldy sweet clover ensilage, as to whether sweet clover cut at certain stages and under certain conditions develops harmful properties as silage. In the meantime sufficient evidence is at hand to justify warning farmers against the feeding of mouldy ensilage to live stock in order to avoid losses, and under no circumstances should operations including dehorning and castration be performed on cattle which are being fed on sweet clover ensilage if it appears mouldy. Such animals seem to develop marked vascular changes which produces a tendency to internal hemorrhage resulting in death.—Dr. G. D. McGilvray, President, Ontario Veterinary College, Toronto.

CANADIAN BACON IS STILL POPULAR IN GREAT BRITAIN

No Danger of Trade in Bacon From Canada Disappearing Says British Importer

London, Aug. 24.—The statement made at the annual meeting of the Ontario Veterinary Association in Toronto this month that the Canadian bacon trade in Great Britain was in danger of disappearing has just reached this side, and it is characterized as "absolutely crazy" by London importers of Canadian bacon. Not only is Canadian bacon not about to vanish from the market, they say, but it is improving its position month by month.

The statement, which was made by the representative of one of the large Canadian packers, was that British imports of Canadian bacon had dropped away not only as compared with war years but with the pre-war period, and would this year be less than 100,000,000 lbs.

John Louden and Company, one of the largest British importers of Canadian bacon and produce, made the comment: "Our existence depends on the sale of Canadian bacon here, and we can sell every ounce of it that Canada can ship. Britain is crying out for Canadian bacon. It is quite true that Denmark is a competitor, but it will never drive Canada from the British market. Imports of Canadian bacon have naturally decreased since 1919, when Denmark was unable to ship a pound, and when bacon prices were very high and the demand very great. Last year saw the shipment of a large accumulation of Canadian bacon from the previous year. Our actual imports this year, however, will be greater than last year, we confidently predict, and Canadian bacon is gaining favor from month to month. The statement that it is in danger is not worth discussing."

A Bit Cruel.

"Every time the baby looks into my face he laughs," declared the proud and boastful father.

"Well, he is too young to have learned good manners yet," replied his sarcastic friend, "but at least you must be gratified to see that the child has a real sense of humor."

Clover Seed Grown at Home Is Safest.

Clover seed from Italy and other countries of similar climate produces plants that are not hardy in northern districts of Canada and the United States. In 1918 four and one-half millions of pounds of this seed came into the United States. This seed is not sold to farmers in the condition that it comes in, because seed-houses know it is inferior and will not produce good crops. Therefore it is mixed with native clover seed and undoubtedly is the cause to a considerable extent of the unsatisfactory clover crops.

The only way to be safe is to buy from reliable firms which will guarantee the source of the seed or purchase from growers in the Immediate vicinity.

When purchasing direct from growers care should be exercised to secure seed free from noxious and otherwise troublesome weed seeds.—A. C. Arny, University of Minnesota.

VICTIMS OF SPEED

Speed continues to claim its victims. The desire to obliterate time and distance seems to be insatiable and there is persistently the summary if invariably ends in the obliteration of the persons. The terrible accident that occurred on the Fashora Road on Wednesday evening was only one of many similar fatalities that are occurring every day on this continent, and will continue to occur while men are not satisfied with using the motor car for purposes of transportation, but insist upon using it for racing purposes on public roads.

Every provision has been made in the criminal code for the prevention of and punishment for furious driving, so that the Government can not be blamed for any accident that may happen. The law in this respect cannot be too widely known, and we would impress it upon all motorists that they should be fully acquainted with it. Section No. 286 of the Dominion Criminal Code, having particular relation to motor vehicles, reads as follows:

"Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, having the charge of any carriage or motor vehicle, automobile or other vehicle, by wanton or furious driving, or racing or other misconduct, or by wilful neglect, does or causes to be done, any bodily harm to any person."

This is the law of the land, and law-respecting citizens should, for their own sakes and the sake of the public generally, always keep this law in mind when they are in charge of a motor vehicle.

The sympathy of the citizens of Belleville will go out to the relatives of the men who lost their lives in such a tragically sudden manner, and to the young man and his newly-wedded bride in the great calamity that has befallen them.

IS DELORME A MARTYR?

The question of the sanity of Father Delorme will not down, and it certainly should not until it is dealt with in a legal and unprejudiced manner. Dr. D. Reuben, medical superintendent of the asylum in which the priest is confined, is a man that is used every day to dealing with lunatics, and he has declared that Delorme is mentally normal and able to administer his estate.

HERE AND THERE

WHY SALMON IS PINK.

Most of science were long puzzled to know why the various salmon and trout have red or pink flesh. Now they believe that the color comes from the food that they eat, observes the Youth's Companion. All of the salmon family are particularly fond of shellfish, and trout eagerly feed on fresh water shrimp. It is well known that when lobsters, prawns and shrimp are cooked the flesh turns pink; similarly the process of digestion turns shellfish pink. When a shrimp is found in the stomach of a salmon or a trout the gastric juices of the fish have turned it almost as red or pink as if it had been boiled. Therefore, even if we had no definite proof, we might believe that the color of the flesh of salmon and trout results from the considerable quantities of various small shellfish that the fishes eat.

But there is definite proof. Several years ago Professor Leger, of the Piesciultural Laboratory at Grenoble, France, made experiment with trout to determine what gave their flesh its color. He separated the eggs from one trout, put into two lots and hatched them in different troughs. He fed one lot of young fish exclusively on fresh water shrimps; to the other lot he gave no shrimps whatever. At the end of the second year the trout that had fed on shrimps had salmon-colored flesh, but the flesh of the other trout was perfectly white.

MORE SEA-SERPENTS

On the twenty-sixth of October, 1878, two fishermen were out in a small boat near the east side of Belle Isle, Conception Bay, Newfoundland, when they saw a strange object floating on the water. They struck it with a gaff and instantly it shot out two enormous arms over the boat, typing to seize its assailants. One of the men, Theophilus Lee, cut off both arms with an axe, whereupon the creature fled, darkening the water with an inky fluid. One of the severed pieces of tentacle, seventeen feet long and three and a half feet in circumference, was sent to Yale College. Its size indicated that the squid was not more than half-grown.

In 1861, on the 20th of November, between Madeira and Teneriffe, the French dispatch steamship Alecton came upon a huge squid floating at the surface of the sea. According to the story, it was asleep, but presumably it was dying. The vessel was stopped, and several volleys were poured into the animal from rifles. Harpoons were thrown into its body, but they would not hold. Finally a noose with a running knot was slipped over its tail and an attempt was made to hoist it upon deck; but its great weight caused the rope to cut through and, falling back into the sea, it disappeared.

"PUBLISH AND BE DAMNED!"

Whatever may be the merits of the case, Mr. Lloyd George has certainly scored off General Sir Frederick Maurice in the controversy regarding the latter's charges that the Premier, in 1918, wilfully misrepresented certain figures relative to the strength of the British armies, supplied by Sir Maurice, in his capacity as Director of Operations, 1. G. S.

In some quarters opinion on the case the General concludes his letter of July 15th as follows:

"Would you kindly let me have obth a letter by 24th July? Failing such a reply, the only course left to me, in order to clear my reputation, is to send this letter to the Press."

To this, Mr. Lloyd George, through his secretary, replied on July 21, that "What he said in 1918, he said in good faith upon the information supplied to him; and he does not think it will be injurious to the public interest or unjust to you if he leaves your criticism, like much more of the same character, to the unprejudiced judgment of posterity.

"As regards your threat to publish, he would refer you with all courtesy for answer to a short observation made in similar circumstances by the Duke of Wellington."

Of course there is only one saying that could be meant—that is the Duke's famous remark in a certain quarter: "Publish and be damned."—Montreal Herald.

THE ISLE OF JUNIPERE

I will arise and go now, and go to Innisfree,
And a small cabin build there, of clay and wattles made:
Nine bean rows will I have there, a hive for the honey bee,
And live alone in the bee-loud glade

And I shall have some peace there, for peace comes dropping slow,
Dropping from the veils of the morning to where the cricket sings;
There midnight's all-a-glimmer, and noon a purple glow,
And evening full of the linnet's wings.

I will arise and go now, for always night and day,
I hear lake water lapping with low sounds by the shore;
While I stand on the roadway, or on the pavements grey
I hear it in the deep heart's-core.

EXAGGERATION AND WIT

BY H. GREENHOUGH SMITH.

There is in the philosophy of wit—a science which has by no means yet received the study it deserves—a long array of questions still awaiting answers. Here is one, for instance: "When does exaggeration develop into wit?"

It is, of course, a truism to assert that mere exaggeration is not witty. There is no wit in saying of a lanky man that he is a mile high, but there is wit in such a specimen as Sydney Smith's description of a certain too plump dame of his acquaintance who attempted to walk round her own morning before breakfast, but had to give it up half-way." Mrs. Pozzi enforces the fact on one occasion he drank thirty-eight bottles of soda-water by way of celebrating his friend's birthday. "But do you know," he adds, "that that is not a reliable article for steady drink? When I got up in the morning I hadn't an article of clothing that I could wear except my umbrella."

The Great Master

Here, of course, is exaggeration, pure and simple; but they are wit as well. Of this peculiar form of wit Rabelais is the great master. Gargantua's mother is immediately clouded with anxiety as to the size it is, no doubt, the consequence of the portion consumed just before the mental eye which turned it from pure extravagance into wit. But although, upon the whole, we must allot the palm to the genius who was too witty to be misled by any lust of the flesh, there are notable examples of this kind. Charles Lamb was wont to tell a charming story (of his own invention) about Coleridge. He chanced one day to meet the sage of Highgate, who, as usual, seized him by the button and began into a flood of words. Lamb, who was pressed for time, quietly cut off the button, and the latter, in his fluency, kept pouring forth the torrent of his speech. This fable is a model of artistic and legitimate exaggeration.

Walpole's Gibe.

The power of putting volumes into nutshells is that which is most characteristic of witty exaggeration. Very good of this kind was Horace Walpole's gibe at Sir John Germain, who was, he said, so ignorant that he left a legacy to Sir Matthew Decker, in the belief that he was the author of St. Matthew's Gospel. It was said of Sir Charles Wetherell that three launderesses had died in the attempt to wash his shirt. Many pages of description would not give so vivid an impression of the fact that Sir Charles, like Dr. Johnson, "had no passion for clean linen."

Now, wit is the mysterious quality which makes such exaggerations things of humour while others are extravagant and nothing more? Of course, we can recognise a good extravagance by the simple test that it can make us laugh—but that does not tell us why. Where is that book on the Philosophy of Wit, for which the world is waiting?—John O'Londons Weekly.

WIT AND HUMOR

Ready to Oblige.

"I want a shave," said the determined-looking man as he climbed into a chair in the Cobourg Barber Shop. "I don't want a haircut nor a shampoo. Neither do I want any hair rum, witch hazel, hair tonic, hot towels, or hair massage. I don't want the manicurist lady to hold my hand, nor the bootblack to bundle my feet. I just want a plain shave, with no frillings. Is that understood, then?"

"Yes, sir," said the barber. "Will you have some talcum on your face, sir?" yelled Yorkshire Jimmy Mail.

PRESS OPINIONS

STATESMEN ARE IMMUNE.

Toronto Telegram.

This glorious Canadian climate is fatlate in its variety and unique in its ability to make extremes meet. For even as the electric fan fails to carry coolness to our perspiring bodies, our minds are struggling with the great conundrum: "Whence comes our winter's coal?"

But our politicians never vary. They go right on being statesmen and troubling not with such minor matters as this summer's heat or the winter's cold. Secure in their own greatness they're evidently immune to each and both.

MICHAEL COLLINS.

Toronto Star.

The assassination of Michael Collins, head of the Irish Free State and commander-in-chief of its forces, must utterly discredit the followers of de Valera with Ireland's sympathizers the world over.

His death cannot be considered as incident of the socalled war that is being carried on. Several attempts had been made on his life. At much risk he attended the funeral of Arthur Griffiths in full uniform. Warned that his appearance at certain places to make speeches would mean death, he went resolutely to those places and made his speeches. He was big, young, a man of action and a power in the conference table.

All through the Irish upheaval no man has arisen who appealed so much to the imagination as Michael Collins. When fighting was being done there was no fighter like him; when the time for negotiation came he was among the ablest; when the Dail split in his hand he was putting down rebellion and ensuring the future of the Irish Free State.

It has been said that the blood of the martyrs has been the seed of the church, and the blood of Michael Collins will open the closing of Sunday will please with an eloquence the Irish people cannot resist, for no ending of discord. His passing is the more lamentable as a man, least of all, Ireland can't her time of crisis.

A Sunday school teacher had been telling her class of boys about crowns of glory and heavenly rewards for good people.

"Now, tell me," she said at the close of the lesson, "who will get the biggest crown?"

There was silence for a minute or two, then a bright little chap piped out:

"Him wot's got t' biggest 'ead."

And here is another little Sunday school story.

Ethel used to play a good deal during the lesson, but one day she had been so good that her teacher said in praise:

"Ethel, my dear, you have been a very good girl today."

"Yes, ma'am," said Ethel, "I couldn't help it; I've got a stiff neck."

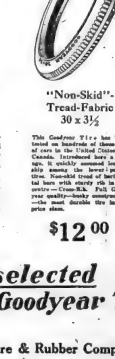

Correct this sentence: "The man had a splitting head and a miserable taste in his mouth next morning, but he made no good resolutions."

HEARTS DESIRE.

A little house, dear Lord, is all I ask of Thee!
Not by the cyclone pressure nor the storm,
And Thy peace,
Where I may do the work Thou send'st me out ise,
Until Thy call from earthly labor come;
A little house!

With flowers and sunshine filled,
Preserved with odors of kind, deeds from decay,
Of virtues forgotten and forgiveness willed,
And close for any who are and sad access.

A little house. A haven for tired souls
Weary, with tossing on life's stormy sea;
A happy shore light will show them clear the goal,
Which comes to hearts that truly wait for Thee.

A little house. To shelter safe and sweet
Thy children who here yet so far to go
Along life's toilsome path with bleeding feet;
Drearily groping in the mist and snow.

A little house. Dear Lord, grant my request!
I'll wait Thy coming with the door ajar!
And ever long to reach that Home more blest—
Thy Father's House, where many mansions are.

FISH—EAT MORE OF IT AND LESS MEAT

BY BERTHA E. SHAPLEIGH
Cooking Authority for NEA Service and Columbia University.

Even those housewives who live near the ocean or inland lakes and are good to fresh fish forget to have it on the table except on Fridays.

Most people eat too much meat. Fish is classed with meat, eggs and nuts as a protein food, supplying that which is necessary for repairing and building the body.

Many cooks know but one or two ways for cooking fish; they bake or boil it, and one tires of it when served in the same way too often.

There are many ways of reheating or making over fish, and the left-overs of yesterday's meal dishes are especially good. Cromettes, scalloped fish and puddings fish added are some of these methods.

Wide Variety for Choice.

Of course those living on the coast or near the Great Lakes have a large variety from which to make a choice. Many fish are in the market the year around while others have seasons.

Baked people must depend on fish caught in fresh bodies of water—and usually there are one or two good ways of cooking such fish.

Now that we have such a wonderful system of refrigeration, fish can be shipped from one part of the country to another—although it is likely to be frozen and, of course, loses some of its flavor when served. Such fish should be cooked as soon as the ice is out.

Canned Shell Fish

Shell fish such as lobster, crab, shrimp, clams and oysters are excellent canned, and the canned lobster even though the fresh is obtainable.

Salt and smoked fish are appetizing, and at times nothing is so satisfactory as smoked herring or finan haddie or salt codfish. Finan haddie now comes in cans. Creamed finan haddie and baked potato, or salt codfish and creamed potatoes make a most satisfying meal.

Always serve tomato or cucumber salad, or lettuce, with a well-flavored dressing or cole-slaw with fish, if possible. Spinach and green peas or beans are good vegetables to serve hot.

If fish is boiled have the potatoes baked or fried. Often it is well to combine fish and shell-fish, as stuffing haddock or codfish with oysters.

Planked Fish.

White fish, shad, haddock and blue fish are delicious when planked, that is, broiled on a plank and served with a potato border with each vegetables fish as would go well with that particular fish.

A good sauce is an improvement to most fish. Drawn butter with hard-cooked egg or pickles is good with boiled fish and the hot egg sauce is good with baked fish. Any leftover boiled or baked fish is excellent for salad. The fish may be combined, with a vegetable and served with a mayonnaise or a boiled dressing to which has been added onion, pickles and a little chili sauce or catsup.

Wedding Ceremony Takes Place Thousand Feet Above the Earth

New York, Aug. 25—With the shrill cris of frightened gulls instead of a choral anthem, wisps of cloud instead of confetti, and the reports of a roaring motor instead of a wedding march, Miss Helen Virginia Lent became yesterday afternoon Mrs. Lloyd Hilton Bertland, a thousand feet above the city. Former Lieutenant Irwin W. Maynard, the flying parson, tied the knot.

The sceptre Pilt, which is owned by the bridegroom, left the waters of the Hudson River at five o'clock. With the groom himself in the driver's seat they rose and soon circled to about a thousand feet. The machine was travelling at—sixty miles an hour when the Rev. Mr. Maynard began the ceremony. The ground was forced to divide his attention between the bride and the boat and called his "I wills" over his shoulder. When the plane splashed down twenty minutes later and taxied to its moorings, the couple stepped ashore man and wife.

The wedding party of ten people included Miss Jeanne Lipon, of 700 West 190th Street, as maid of honor, the best man, James Rogers, of Rockaway Park; Mr and Mrs. David B. Lent, the parents of the bride; two mechanics and a photographer. Mr. Rogers was acting for Bert Acosta, winner of the last Pulitzer Trophy prize, who is laid up from a recent accident.

This woman, Mrs. May Sladdin, of New York, was wrapped on the knuckles by a policeman when she came out of a confectionery store to the street smoking a cigarette. She is now suing the policeman for damages.

LONG SKIRTS MEAN DANCES OF DIGNITY

May Be a Revival of the Old-fashioned Steps

New York, Aug. 22.—Are lonesome skirts to bring in the old time dignity of short, graceful dance steps? This would seem to be the conclusion reached by dance hall masters from the United States and Canada, who met at a convention in the Hotel Commodore recently. Perhaps there will be a revival of the old world minuet and mazurka, that instead of the particular bobbed head and short-skirted youngstere one has grown accustomed to seeing at dancing restaurants these days, there will come the dignified grande dame of other days, powdered of wig and elderly of bearing.

Whatever the new dance steps are to be, it is assured that they will require more of dignity and less agility in movement.

Two organizations are holding their conventions in the Commodore this week, one is the American National Association of Dancing Masters and the other the International Association.

THE WEARING OF BLACK.

London Times.

"There is a rumor that black will be worn more than ever this winter. As has been said so often, black never goes out of fashion in Paris, and a French woman wear it with great distinction. They dispel all gloom from it, and know how to make it wonderfully attractive, however, brilliant. To say that black will be the fashion during the coming winter is to be so sweeping. What is likely is that neutral tones will prevail. One will see brown in all shades, green in some blue, and, for afternoon and evening, black in almost, since. Black makes a splendid background to color. A flash of green, gold, or flamingo can lift a black dress to brightness. Silver, steel, copper, and jet make it all a glimmer and moonlight sequins give it a rippling beauty."

Velvet millinery has already made its appearance. Velours and felt are seen on most hats. The small hat always comes back in the autumn, but this does not mean that the large hat is out of fashion. Hats in Paris are very wide in the brim at present, and they sit closely down on the head so that no wind can unsettle them. The perfect stability of a Frenchwoman's hat is one of the wonders of the feminine world. No matter how flimsy the hat, or how wild the weather, it sits just where she places it. The secret of this is that she always insists on having a hat which fits her head, and she never depends on pins to keep it steady.

EARRINGS ONCE MORE.

Earrings are coming into fashion again, says a Paris correspondent. The jewellers' windows show that the larger the earrings the more fashionable they are. Most are barbaric, and some are like franc pieces, only in gold. Huge precious stones or clusters of jewels are popular, as well as large jet ear ornaments. The latest novelty devised for the smart woman is a dainty little fleecy cuff made entirely of artificial flowers. They are perfumed with the scent of the flower they represent.

EVEN SPEED COPS ARE NOT IMMUNE

John A. Wilson, traffic policeman on the Cobourg Road, met with painful injuries the other evening when his motorcycle collided with a Ford car being driven by Mr. Victor Boundy.

Mr. Boundy was thrown out and his car-ride was badly smashed. Mr. Boundy claims that he was on the right side of the road and he will enter action against the speed cop to recover damages. The motorcycle was badly smashed.

THE BANDBOX

By Louis Joseph Vance

In the other room, his host was undressing with surprising speed. In spite of his nap, he was still tremendously tired; perhaps the reaction caused by Eleanor's reassurance capping the climax of his excitement had something to do with the sense of complete mental and physical fatigue that swept over him the instant his back rested upon the bed. Within two minutes he was fast asleep.

But in the study Mr. Ill kept vigil, biting his knuckles what time he was not depleting his host's stock of cigarettes. Daylight broadened over the city. The sun rose. Not to be outdone, so did Mr. Ill—moving quietly round the room, sweeping beneath his breath as his nervous excitement gradually accumulated more and more of the articles of clothing which he had so disdainfully discarded some hours earlier.

The telephone interrupted him somewhat after six o'clock. He answered it, assuming Staff's identity for the moment. When the conversation had closed, he sat in reverie for some minutes, then called the telephone book and called up two numbers in quick succession. Impatiently thereafter he tiptoed into the bedroom, assured himself that Staff was fast asleep and proceeded calmly to rifle that gentleman's pockets, carefully placing what he found in an orderly array upon the bureau. In the end, bringing to light a plump bill-fold, he concluded his labors.

The pigskin envelope contained a little less than four-hundred dollars, principally in bills of considerable size. Mr. Ill helped himself generously and replaced the bill-fold. Then he returned to the study, found paper and pencil and wrote Staff a little note, which he propped against the mirror on the bedroom dresser. His own cards he left in pockets with cigarettes, he smiled and let himself out of the apartment and, subsequently, of the house.

Staff slept on, sublimely unconscious, until the sun, slipping round to the south studded his face with modified gold: when he woke, fretful and sweating. He glanced at his watch and got up promptly. It was a little after eleven. Diving into a bathrobe, he turned the water on for his bath, trotted to the front room and discovered the evasion of Mr. Ill. This, however, failed to surprise him. Ill was, after all, not bound to act right until Staff gave him leave to stir.

He rang for Mrs. Shults and ordered breakfast. Then he bathed and began to dress. It was during this latter ceremony that he found his pockets turned inside out and their contents displayed upon his bureau.

This was a shock, especially when he failed to find his bill-fold at the first sweep. The bottom dropped out of the market for confidence in the integrity of Mr. Ill and concert in the perspicacity of Mr. Staff. He saw instantly how things had been the issue of falsehood whereunto the so-damnt Mr. Ill had sought to cloak his duplicity, how surprisingly well he had succeeded therein, to swallow that extraordinary yarn. The more he considered, the more he marvelled at his own credulity—his asininity did; at least he wouldn't have believed he could be so easily fooled. But the hidden hand of Ill had worked unutterably for a chance to kick his erstwhile guest.

The first sting of this transport he found himself staring incredulously at the envelope on the dresser. He snatched it up, tore it open and counted three pieces of white paper. Two of them were crisp and tough and engraved on the other with pin-black ink. The third bore this communication:

"My Dear Mr. Staff:—Your bill-fold's in your waistcoat pocket, where you left it last night. It contained $385 when I found it. It now contains $300. I leave you your way of security Bank of England notes to the extent of £40. There'll be

BEING A TOWN'S DADDY

By Byron Stauffer in Toronto Daily Star

Out of one of Ontario's newest communities comes a pitiless wail from a man, who laments having settled among a lot of low-brow people. He writes: "I made a great blunder in coming here, and now what shall I do? Every dollar I have in the world is invested in this burgh in the making, and I can't get it out just now, though I know there's money to be made right here, and I like this north country. But my neighbors are all low-brow; there's neither intelligence nor kindness, and their children will be like them. My fix is just like that of the man you mentioned the other week, only my children are small, thank God!"

No; your fix is different, my friend. When you say that your burgh is "in the making," you speak volumes. For you can help make it a good town; your children are not too old to take a hand; and they can help one other children. Besides, since the population is growing all the while, there's no telling how many good fellows are on the way to assist you in your task.

You have "some job," old man, and I congratulate you on your chance to help build up a new Canadian community. You are in at the opening, as they say out West, and if you play your cards well, you can make almost say score you set your mission." My! it will be as much fun a game of checkers.

What makes the difference between a good community and a poor one? Why, usually just two or three whole hearted men and women, strong mentally and morally, who take the reins and lead their neighbors where they choose. Up in five-year-old Capreo you have an example; a half-dozen earnest men have turned the town into the right direction and it will be a veritable Philadelphia in the end of time. And Quaker City, let me add, got a fine start by having a few citizens of the Benjamin Franklin type among its early inhabitants.

Up in Manitoba, I visited a bleak little town whose people were so pleasant and bright that I expressed my surprise that such warm hearts were to be found in such frigid clime. My host said, "Did you see that bright old gentleman who played the organ at the church tonight? Well, he deserves the credit for this community's intelligence. He came here thirty years ago, gathered the young people into singing schools and literary societies. He rode ten miles to let me have Morley's Life of Gladstone. He has been getting up magazine clubs and circulating libraries and whetting our taste for good lit erature. He is the conciliator and father confessor of this whole town ship."

Lecturing at a certain four corners, I found myself and my audience enlivened at the merry of a crowd of young ruffians who threatened the little gallery at the far end of the little church. They greeted the blushing school with shouts of "Carrie!" They punctuated my address by showering peas on the heads of the audience and made rude remarks at the choir girls as they rose to sing before the close. And the church leaders were helpless, impotent in the distressing situation, declaring that it had always been so.

Shortly afterwards I spoke in a village not twenty miles from there. I watched a company of some thirty young people enter and take seats on a raised platform at the farther end of the church. With my late discomfiture, I asked the chairman whether he was sure those chaps would behave themselves. "Why, bless you, yes!" he exclaimed; "they are here to listen to your lecture."

So it proved, and at the close from the midst of the group arose one to move the usual vote of thanks in a brief little speech. Another seconded the motion in even a better speech. Then the chairman said, "You have heard the motion made and seconded by my son John and Mr. George Dalton." That rather shamed me and I seized the opportunity then and there to explain to the chairman, right before the audience, just why I had been so nervous about the entry of that pack of youths, of course without naming the neighboring hamlet.

The chairman then said, "Mr. Stauffer, we have always had a fine type of young men here since our village was founded. We began right. Our fathers were gentlemen, and our first pastor stayed with us forty years. A schoolmaster served us for ty-seven years. So the community received a distinct flavor of good breeding."

Say, you of that so-called lowbrowed town of the North, by the very strokes of your pen I can see that you have a will of your own. And I see that your rating is the highest given in your burgh, though of course that's not saying so very much, since only three of you have a rating at all. You'll do! Only call in and be one of the fathers of a first-class town!

TRINKES PLAY IN COBOURG

Return Game With The "Shearer Boys" on Saturday Afternoon

The Belleville Trenks will journey to Cobourg on Saturday next, where they will play the return game with the team from the thriving Town-ship of Port Hope, and later the Belleville defend the laurels of the Cobourg crew seems to be broken, and it is hard to say whether they will give the locals a battle on Saturday afternoon or not.

The spectators are taking no chance, however, and are going to "shoot no quarter," and are going out to win at all hosts.

It is expected that Jack Williams will be on the mound for the Trenks, and go doubt "Funny Dey" ry will be in there for Cobourg, for he just stated, it is rumored, that he will quit baseball if his cannot beat the Belleville club." "Punch" has better arrange for transportation right away that's all he intends to ride to Cobourg. Kingsley, for judging by the way the both Wallace selling, the Trenks squad will have an awfully large contract if they intend to beat Belleville even in their own back yard.

Saturday evening will tell the tale, however, and let's hope it is a "good story."

COBOURG PAPER ON WEDNESDAY'S GAME

Umpire McDonald Gave Bad Decisions Against Fans According to this Sheet

ATTENTION PLEASE.

A Cobourg paper has the following:

McDonald, the Toronto umpire in the Central League, made a very poor showing, and without a doubt it will be his last year in this league. He should never have been appointed in the first place. At Belleville yesterday, for the second time in succession, he was half an hour late in arriving, and Umpire Barnes, of Cobourg, handled the game alone until he arrived. McDonald's decisions on balls and strikes were weird, and twice Pitcher Heckman, of Peterboro, walked off the diamond. Heckman was if not easily ruled, and McDonald's decisions must have been pretty rank when Heckman will object that strenuously.

Belleville did not get a thing from McDonald on Wednesday. Malish was just as inside about strikes being called balls on him as Heckman was, but he didn't make such demonstrations as the Solomon-Heckman-Johnson trio. We all know Jack Solmson's bluff baseball, and so does outsider Benedict, who waved them all back to their positions when they crabbed about McDonald's decisions.

Is it that Cobourg and Peterboro have taken up the cudgels jointly? Maybe they could get a bell team if they hand pocket a pound from both of these towns.

Puzzle—Find The Team.

Will some team kindly take a wallop at that Belleville outfit. They are going too strong.—Calamity Jane.

YOU TELL 'EM, SANDY.

If Cobourg cannot find grounds for another protest they might as well pack their baseball paraphernalia Yesterday at Leaside they were defeated 7 to 5 which practically kills their chances for the championship of the second round. The wise ones say that Belleville will defeat Cobourg next Saturday, right on their own grounds.

IT HAS HAPPENED—ONCE

In the earlier days of baseball before the effective factory had been so hard at work as it has been in recent years, and before there were many men who sat down and carefully and their brains devising baseball phrases, the pundits way of saying that a team could has was that it "knocked the cover off the ball." A thirty-third degree bug of the Order of Bugs wants to know if such a thing ever happened in a regular league game. It did. Delehanty Ellis knocked the cover off the ball and the cover was filded to first by the pitcher, while the ball, unwinding around every lamp, was pounced upon by an outfielder. Everybody at last tangled up before the play was finished.

COBOURG GOLFERS FINED UNDER O. T. A.

Golfers at Cobourg Are Fined, and Their Ball Team Lost

We motored over to Cobourg this morning to offer our sympathy to the ball team and transact a little business. In opening the town hall we noticed Chief Stone surrounded by a number of young men attired in white trousers and knickerbockers. Upon enquiry we learned why the game of golf is so popular, and this is a question that has puzzled us for a long time. Golfers always tell you that it is one of the best forms of exercise and probably it is. But, from what we learned this morning, the wonderful exercise is not much good without a stimulant and some of the Cobourg players have been paying more attention to the stimulant than they have to the game. Last week License Inspector Goodwin visited the Club House and found a quantity of liquor and also many empty bottles. The occupant of the house pleaded guilty to having liquor in a place other than his own residence and was fined $250.00 and costs.—Port Hope Guide.

H. M. Ashworth, manager of the Toronto Hydro Electric system, to-day issued a note of warning to persons who are contemplating the installation of electric heating apparatus. He said that attention should first be given to the wiring inside the house, then outside the house, and thirdly the transformer behind it. Unless heavier wiring and more transformer capacity is installed the system is not in a position to supply any the consumer to take the current necessary for heating purposes.

The consumer, he said, should not put in a lot of grates or heaters without having his electric wiring gone over. "Even if the wiring is gone over," said Mr. Ashworth, "there is no use coming to us at the last moment with a heavy heating load that we are not in a position to supply. We can afford to put in a heavy supply for a stove because it is an all year around proposition, but the consumer will likely find himself called upon to put up a considerable sum to guarantee the system against loss."

BIG FIELD DAY IN SEPTEMBER

B.A.A.A. Will Hold Field Day For This District Here on Sept. 23rd.

Under the auspices of the Canadian Athletic Union in conjunction with the Provincial Government great field days are to be held this autumn throughout Ontario for boy and girls of the public and separate schools of the province, under 15 years of age.

The idea behind these plans, as explained by Mr. Archibald, of Toron to, weight thrower of note at the Olympic games, who was in this city on Thursday, is to encourage athletics and sport among the younger school children of the province.

The field days are being held in seven of the cities of the province, and Belleville has been chosen as one of the seven, covering the district of Hastings, Prince Edward, Lennox and Addington and Frontenac counties. That is, the above mentioned counties will each hold a field day, and all will send their winners to Belleville on September 23rd, where the final competitions in all events will take place. Medals are being awarded by the C.A.U. as prizes.

The Belleville Amateur Athletic Association is behind the movement here and the officers will conduct the field day for this district. There is no entry fee for these events, and no price of admission for seeing the events pulled off. Everything is absolutely free of charge.

The following is the list of events

75 yards, for boys 13 years and under.

Running broad jump for boys 13 and under.

COBOURG SHOW SIGNS OF BROKEN MORALE

Introduce Fistic Exhibition at Leaside on Wednesday—Catcher Tyson Banished

When Tyson, catcher for Cobourg, stuck his fist into Umpire Rosevear's chest at Leaside yesterday, he was put out of the game, and Cobourg lost. Mr. Tyson may thus be responsible for Cobourg not winning the second half.

This paragraph explains the attitude of beaten Cobourg now, and also shows how much it ever gets any baseball learn. The cocky minute town squad resented being defeated by Leaside who have not been winning every game they have played, and evidently proceeded to beat up the umpire for revenge. Umpire Rosevear is too well and favourably known to be taken that any decision by him would, for raw thought to warrant this behaviour.

As long Catcher Tyson was about to beat up Rosevear after the game, but a Leaside husky beat him up instead, so a story goes.

Belleville play in Cobourg on Saturday. Bring your lunch.

REMINISCENCES OF ALEXANDER BELL

A beautiful old Scottish lady of eighty one years with whom I am privileged to be on friendly terms, was telling me some interesting things recently about that wonderful Scottish Canadian, the inventor of the telephone. When a young girl at school in her native Edinburgh, Mr. Alexander Graham Bell's father, Professor Melville Bell, was the master in reading an elocution at her school. One day she was called upon by Mr. Bell to read a poem, it was a sacred piece whose subject was the white Emmanuel—oh, she has not pre viously seen the poem and was quite unprepared and not in the mood to read it, however she went through the reading and was much astonished to hear herself highly commended by the master, who gave her tickets for some of his public readings as a reward for her intelligence and taste. A few days later she received from Mr. and Mrs. Bell an invitation to dinner at their private residence and here she met the future inventor of the telephone amongwith another guest, a Mr. Graham, both of whom were deeply interested in a splendid skin which had been just received by Mr. Bell from a friend in India. It was a huge skin and very beautiful. Our Mr. Alexander Graham Bell was then a lad of fourteen or so, and the guest, Mr. Graham, seemed inclined to tease him. He offered the lad a shilling if he would put the skin about his shoulders and walk around the square which faced the house. Day-like, he entered into the spirit of the joke, wrapped himself in the great beast's skin and set forth on his tour around the square. All watched him laughingly from the window till he returned—and claimed his shilling. Later the narrator of the story married and came to Canada with her husband who became a very well known lawyer in Canada, and when the Bells in turn came, to Canada, their son then being about twenty-four years old, and very delicate, Mr. Bell's old pupil and her husband were among those to welcome them to the new country and to introduce them to their many friends.—Valerie, (Saturday Night.

AUSTRIAN SUGGESTS NATIONS DISARM

Suggests Revision of Peace Treaty—Especially Reparations

Williamstown, Mass., Aug. 25.—Disarmament of all European countries and a new league of nations, to include Germany and the United States, was advanced by Dr. Joseph Redlich, former member of the Austrian cabinet, in his last lecture to the Institute of Politics at Williams College.

Dr. Redlich said that the only way to meet the present European danger was for all the powers to co-operate in the financial situation, revise the peace treaties and the league of nations, and join in helping the smaller states and protect minorities.

He emphasized the need of revision of the peace treaty, "especially in respect to the sums of the reparations."

GERMANS FIND CLOTHING PRICES ARE PROHIBITIVE

Berlin, Aug. 25.—Working people in Germany are complaining at the cost of winter clothing. The price soars daily with the continuing decline in value of the mark. A suit of man's ready made clothes costs between 8,000 and 10,000 marks. An overcoat costs at least 4,000 marks and a woman's simple dress 6,000 marks.

Underwear, shoes and stockings are so expensive at the present time that the average family is quite at a loss how to get the money needed to make purchases for the coming winter. Tea gowns, dancing frocks and evening dresses cannot be bought for less than 50,000 marks each, a sum equivalent to an average workingman's wages for a whole year. Men's tailor-made suits range from 20,000 to 50,000 marks.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

New York, Aug. 23.—The anthracite coal miner negotiations fail and the strike continues indefinitely.

Bituminous miners are going back to work.

Philadelphia, Aug. 23.—With the hard coal parleys broken up as a result of the inability of miners and operators to agree on the arbitration problem, those anxious for peace in the anthracite fields today commented upon the fact that the door was left open for future negotiations. The abrupt halt in the proceedings followed the instance by operators on some form of abitration in future during which the miners would remain at work.

SOVIET GOVERNMENT CANCELS ORDER FOR LOCOMOTIVES

Stockholm, Aug. 4 (By Mail).—After having ordered 1,000 locomotives from an engineering firm here and having received 300 of them, the Russian government has intimated that it is now unable to pay.

When the contract was made it was agreed that the engine were to be paid for as they were delivered, and the manufacturers obtained a guarantee for their money.

It is now considered probable that the Soviet government will cancel the balance of the order, and that the present financial state of Russia and the failure of it Gross and use and the failure of he Genoa and Hague conferences is responsible.

RUSSIA BUYS MEAT IN ARGENTINA

Moscow, Aug. 1 (By Mail).—The Russian Government Grain Produce Company has purchased 2,000,000 pounds of meat in the Argentine, paying 500,000 gold rubles in cash, and the balance in Russian raw products, according to local newspapers.

Keep Records.

Adequate records are necessary to the efficient management of any business. The farmer, to be successful, must be a business man as well as a grower of crops and producer of live stock. As a business man he should have suitable business records.

Uniformity Desirable.

Every poultry raiser should make a study of the market demands. A uniform color of eggs and fowls in poultry is desirable. A mixed flock will not produce uniform eggs or meat, and eggs from such a flock are not desirable for hatching.

Accused will harp been married to wife no. 2, 6 years on Christmas Day. They have no children, and didn't want any something to somewhat voluntary statement.

Wife Gets 1 Month.

Ida Frederick, wife no. 2 was sentenced to 1 month in the county jail with hard labor on a charge of vagrancy, to which she pleaded guilty.

"He is to blame for all," she said. "He treated me like a dog, and gave me the name of a vagrant for the past 6 years. He wouldn't support me and filled his time away."

This afternoon, the household effects of their home are to be sold by order of the sheriff for debt.

Irene Doyle, who hails from near Harrowsmith, and who has been living at the Frederick's home for some time past, was also given one month in the County Jail with hard labor, on a similar charge. She took the sentence quite calmly, but Mrs. Frederick broke down when her sentence was pronounced. She must leave this city when she gets out.

AFTERNOON FIRE.

The Fire Brigade received a call on Thursday afternoon about 4 p.m. to a fire at the home of Mrs. Caverley, 200 Ann street, which started from a three burner coal oil stove overturned in the basement of the house.

The occupants of the house had the fire under control by smothering it with a carpet, and using the garden hose on it. It was soon extinguished by the firemen and no damages resulted.

Music and Drama

HIGHLY DRAMATIC AND THRILL

ING IS THE STORY OF "THE MAN FROM HOME"

Picture fans have come to expect a bountiful measure in their screen entertainment these days, but the many excellent features incorporated in the Paramount production of "The Man from Home" which opened a three days' engagement at Griffin's last night, must surely satisfy even the most exacting.

A famous novel by a nationally known author, translated to the screen by one of the foremost producers of the day and interpreted by a cast of popular and talented players, surely that is a foolproof form of entertainment even in these days. Booth Tarkington wrote his novel of and in Italy which meant that if it was to be done justice in its transference to the screen, it should be filmed in that country. This was done, Jesse D. Filmmaster and an entire company being despatched to the exact scene of the author's story for the purpose. For this purpose. And then the cast. James Kirkwood most capably heads it and he has the support of such favorites as Anna Q. Nilsson and Norman Kerry.

Summed up, all in all, "The Man from Home" is capital entertainment, supplying in addition to a thrilling and dramatic story the additional pleasure of living for an hour and a half in the most magnificent section of Italy.

"Table Steaks" an amusing comedy with Brownie the Wonder Dog in prominent role, a beautiful travelogue of scenes in Muskoka, and a new chapter of the adventure play, "With Bailey in Africa," were exhibited during the evening.

FREE TO EXHIBITION VISITORS

An exhibit which every man from this city attending the National Exhibition at Toronto should see is that of the Regent Tailors, which will be found in sections numbered 81 and 83, under the Grand Stand. This company was warmly complimented last year on the excellence of their display of clothing, and this year their showing is the most complete and up-to-date of suits and overcoats that can be found anywhere in Canada. Every man from this city calling at the booth will be presented with a souvenir.

Despite the quiet period in the tailoring trade, the Regent Tailors have forged ahead during the past twelve months and their exhibit shows the wonderful progress they have made in the designing and making of clothes. The number of men who are finding out that Regent Tailors' values are the greatest in Canada is surely and steadily increasing.

Parents:-

The retardation of mental development caused by defective vision and eyestrain in the growing child is now-a-days receiving greater attention—especially in the larger cities—with the result that a proper education is now possible for those who formerly were deprived owing to inaptitude for study, or wrongly considered inability to learn.

None of the cities have more efficient eyesight service than Belleville.

HORSE AND BUGGY STOLEN IN TWEED

Is Property of Thomas Orr and Was Stolen on Tuesday

Local police have received word of the theft of a horse and buggy which occurred at Tweed on Tuesday night.

The outfit is the property of Thomas Orr, of Tweed. The horse is a bay bay weighing about 1000 lbs., with a small white star on the forehead. The buggy is black with red gear, and the harness was an ordinary black sett of single harness. The buggy is equipped with a tan cushion.

The outfit was supposed to have been seen at Frankford on Thursday, but Tweed officials who toured the country Thursday, failed to land their men.

JULY AND AUGUST PENNY BAG AMOUNTS

Collections Have Fallen Off During the Summer Months

The amount of the Penny Bag Collection for the Hospital and Home has decreased considerably during the last two months, owing, no doubt, to the warm weather and the holiday season. But now that the holidays are almost over, and we are all returning to our homes, refreshed and invigorated by our holidays at Lake-side and Camp, let us once more turn our energies towards helping those who, perhaps through infirmity or ill-health, have had to spend their holidays in town.

Through the generosity of the Belleville citizens, the old people in the Home for the Aged are more comfortable than ever before, in their beautiful, dignified, stone home, with its inviting lawn, surrounded by some of the finest famous Belleville maples.

The Belleville Hospital has been filled almost to capacity all summer, but, as usual, the Superintendent, nurses and Medical Staff have been indefatigable in their efforts, and all are receiving the best possible care and attention.

The collectors will, as usual, make their rounds the last week of each month, starting on the last Monday. Have your bags ready, and don't be afraid your donation must be small that it is not acceptable, for: "Many a mickle makes a muckle."

Following are the amounts collected for the months of July and August:

FARMER'S SON INJURED BY FALLING PITCHFORK

A serious accident occurred last week at Frank Bailey's farm, a few miles west of Stirling. While Mr. Bailey's son was at work in the barn a pitchfork thrown across from one side to the other, struck a beam and rebounded to the floor, in its fall penetrating the young lad's shoulder and lung. Medical aid was speedily summoned and every assistance given to the young sufferer, who is progressing satisfactorily.

ANOTHER SMALL FIRE.

Shortly after eleven o'clock today the fire department received a call to a small fire on Mary street, caused from an overheated stove in the wood shed. The fire did not amount to anything, however, and was quickly extinguished. No damages were suffered.

NURSE THINKS NOTHING BETTER

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Advised for all Women in Poor Health

Toronto, Ontario.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound two years and it is the only patent medicine I ever recommend. I am a nurse and if I find a woman in in poor health I always tell her to take it. Although we have good doctors and nurses do not use patent medicines. I tell you that I think there is nothing better than your Vegetable Compound. I have taken it myself many years ago, I was so tired when I got up in the morning that I could not eat, and when I went to bed I was too tired to sleep. My mother-in-law told me that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was just what I wanted so I tried it and only took two bottles when I felt better. Since that I have found that there is nothing that makes me feel so well, for it seems to build my system right up. I don't know any other medicine that has done so much for me."—Mrs. H. F. Mara, 139 Wellesley Ave., Toronto, Ontario.

We have hundreds of such letters that they have been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. "After other medicines have failed." It has been used for nearly fifty years and not found wanting.

If you are suffering from any of the various ailments which accompany the sex, write to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

EMIGRANTS NOT COMING WEST

Splendid Class Now Going To Australia Under Colonization Scheme

GIVE THEM FARMS

Plan is to Settle Them on Their Own Land After Year's Experience

London, Aug. 25.—West Australia has started an important immigration scheme which has come entirely new features over that which is attracting considerable interest here.

Briefly, it is to take twenty-five thousand British families averaging three persons apiece and attach the head of each family for one year and then take the men who have made good in groups of ten with their families and give them a definite area of land to clear and develop.

Men who do not show initiative and give promise of being successful during their year of probation will remain attached to farmers for a further period. The premier of West Australia declares that at least six thousand farms will be provided in this way. He is associated with the first batch of settlers that the colony has received although they were originally all city dwellers.

The Australian boom in immigrants like conditions. An Australian official said that the high standard of men demanded by western Australia is being maintained, and that only between ten and fifteen per cent. of those who make application are accepted and in this way the cream of the settlers is being secured.

Discussing Tom Moore's statement of Toronto's ability to absorb an official of the overseas settlement board said Canada could make the same claim. He said that the skilled agricultural workers were very scarce and hard to get, whereas many city dwellers and clerks desirous if they are carefully selected and trained. He stated further that Col. Amery's object in visiting the dominion was to urge adoption of some training scheme. Canada at the present time is losing many potentially fine settlers including surplus naval and military officers who are out of jobs and who would make fine men for defense forces who are now going to Australia.

LIVING IS HIGH IN ST. THOMAS

Cost Highest in Canada Say Pere Marquette Shopmen to Conciliation Board

Windsor, Ont., Aug. 25.—The cost of living in St. Thomas, Ont., is higher than anywhere else in the Dominion of Canada, according to evidence submitted by representatives of the Pere Marquette railway shopmen to the board of conciliation investigating the dispute between the railway and employes here.

The evidence touching upon the cost of living was brought out when the shopmen explained how the cessation of Sunday overtime by the railway last January had greatly affected their standard of living and had chopped their annual income $500 or more in some instances. The company has refused to restore Sunday overtime should not be insisted upon.

COAL STRIKE IN NOVA SCOTIA HAS BEEN SETTLED

Nova Scotia Coal Strike is Settled

Agreement Arrived at at One O'Clock This Morning—Contract to be Ratified By Referendum and Will Last Until January 1924.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Sydney, August 26.—After a conference lasting until early this morning, representatives of the British Empire Steel Corporation and the United Mine Workers of District 26 arrived at an agreement for the settlement of the Nova Scotia coal strike. The contract, if finally ratified, will last until January 15, 1924.

The acceptance or rejection of the proposed scale rests with the twenty thousand striking miners of the province who will be asked to vote upon it in referendum, the date of which has not yet been fixed, but which will probably be Wednesday, August 30.

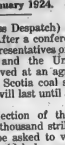

It was one o'clock this morning when the mediators announced that a basis of settlement had been reached.

The Council also decided to accept the tender of W. J. Donohoe for the construction of a sanitary sewer on Geddes street from Evans to College streets.

Tenders will be invited for the construction of the proposed asphaltic concrete pavements on Station street and Highland Avenue.

Premier G. H. Murray, of Nova Scotia, is playing a prominent part in the move to settle the miners' strike in that province.

MURDER BAFFLES PARIS POLICE

Aged Silversmith and Engraver Found Bound in Workshop

Paris, Aug. 25.—The Paris police to-day are confronted with one of those baffling murders which cause hard thinking to the best detectives —a crime which in this case is attended by mysterious and romantic elements.

"Father Formol," an old silversmith and engraver of precious metals, was found in the small hours of this morning bound and gagged and lying in a pool of blood in his little workshop in a tumbledown building situated in one of those old world streets in the populous "Latin Quarter" district, strangely reminiscent of the Rue Morgue in Poe's famous tale.

On account of his distinguished bearing and manner of conversing, it was generally surmised that he had been better days. But, although never denying this when it was suggested, he never confided the details of his past even to those with whom he was most intimate.

Three or four times during the last ten years the curiosity of the neighborhood was excited when a smart carriage, and at a later period a big limousine, drove up and stopped at Pere Formol's door. From it each time stepped a fashionably powered but heavily veiled woman, who remained in the workshop for several hours and then disappeared as she had arrived.

Last evening this visitor appeared again— a few hours, according to police, before he was murdered with the implement he used for engraving and his shop looted. The best Paris detectives are trying to trace the woman.

The last time the victim was seen alive yesterday by a neighbor was when Pere Formol assisted the woman to alight from a motor-car and conducted her into his workshop.

HIGH RENTS AFFECT ROYAL HIGHNESSES

London, Aug. 26.—Unable to find a castle whose rental would fit his pocketbook, the Crown Prince of Denmark has been forced to postpone his marriage to Princess Olga of Greece. There are many empty castles in Denmark, but the rents are too big for the Crown Prince, who has only a small income.

The Dowager Empress Marie of Russia, who was instrumental in arranging the engagement, is said to be about to some to the rescue by offering her castle, Amalienberg, in Copenhagen. When an apartment of this castle has been redecorated, it is expected, the wedding will take place.

MAYOR IS BACK WITH FIREWOOD

After a Rough Journey the Mayor and Aldermen Return Bringing Them "Cords" With 'em.

CAR LOADS OF WOOD

Mayor Hanna, Aldermen Foster and Thompson returned yesterday from a trip through the north country in search of wood with which to relieve the fuel situation in the city during the coming winter.

The three city officials covered more than 150 miles through the rough and woolly roads of the north country, travelling almost entirely over rocky and in some instances swampy roads. They returned very travel worn, but brought good tidings nevertheless.

They first journeyed to Veronea and Tichies across country to Enterprise, Tamworth, Kaladar and Flinton, calling at no less than twelve places for the purpose of purchasing wood.

Two cars of wood were purchased at Veronea and an option taken on twenty cars. Another car load was bought at Erinaville, where options on several other car loads were secured. When the party arrived at Kaladar, however, the price of wood had doubled, strangely enough, and no purchases were made there.

This wood purchased is good body wood, mostly elm, but a good deal of oak and hickory is also amongst it, and it is expected that it will retail to the citizens at from $8. to $10 per cord.

One car load of the wood is on the siding here now, and will be unloaded on Monday.

TRENTON JAIL LIFE APTLY DESCRIBED

Comment on Recent Escape From That Jail Reads Good

With reference to the recent escape of two prisoners from the Trenton jail, the following from the Trenton Advocate explains matters, in a humorous vein:

Sunday night the police did not close an eye. They were on the jump from daylight till dark and then again from dark until daylight, and when when the birds were caged the dear old condemned jail could not hold them. What encouragement for a police force. Really, we as citizens should be ashamed of the condition of the cells and the building in which they are located. There were seven in one cell, about eight by twelve feet—all that is established as size for one night. Just like chickens in a pen. In future it would be really fine to catch prisoners with roosting feet only and put up a roost in the cells. In the bunch were a Frenchman, two Chinese, two Jews, a native of West India and two Canadians, man cess. Two bars of iron were man race. Two bars of iron were out out of the wooden window sill in the largest cell and out popped the birds. Just like getting money from home to climb out of Trenton jail. "In Kenia out Again, Madgean." It will be necessary to get pickets for outside duty or chloroform the prisoners for the duration of their stay in jail. Perhaps a sentry box proper plan would be advisable if both are tried and find we can locate the suitable one for our purpose. As it is now, it is a case of just chase the prisoners in and out of the buildings—a kind of hide and seek game. All that really will hold anyone in is the idea that perhaps our expert police will catch them again and it is very monotonous to be arrested too many times in a given month. Of course if fear-once is a novelty; but that wears off. Just try it and see.

ICONOCLASTS IN RUSSIA CAUGHT BY POLICE

Moscow, Aug. 5 (By Mail).—Valuable jewels stripped from the historic icons of the Iberian Virgin by policemen who broke into the famous Iberian chapel at the gates of the Red Square on April 7, have been recovered by the Moscow police.

Thirty members of a camp of robbers, who looted many churches, chapels and convents before and during the government requisition of church treasures have been arrested, and but valued at many millions of dollars has been recovered. The jewels from the Iberian icon alone were estimated to be worth nearly $3,000,000.

REDS CAPTURE BRITISH SHIPS

Two Vessels Seized in Black Sea and Crews Sent to Batoum

Constantinople, Aug. 25.—Milton D. Brown of Boston, and eGorge Smith, Assistant Director of the Near East Relief in the Caucasus, lost $30,000 when their private car, en route from Batoum to Tiflis, was held up and rifled, according to F. A. Husber of Chicago, who has just arrived from Batoum.

The British ships, George and Lady Ellinore were overtaken by the Soviets a week ago and their crews were removed to Batoum, where they are being held, Mr. Husber adds.

When the captain of the George was ordered to hand over his ship he dressed the vessel and took his place on the bridge. The Soviet authorities came on board with a band at 2 o'clock. While the band played "God Save the King" the British colors were struck. Then the Red flag was run aloft amid the strains of "The Internationale."

Mr. Husber brings word that the Baku oil fields have been entirely nationalized since the Genoa Conference, 92 production being in the hands of the Soviet authorities. He says the Soviets are doing their best, under a handicap of poor tools, to keep up the production, but despite all efforts the output of oil is gradually falling.

New Basic Industry Starts at Trenton

Foundation Stone of New Dominion Combing Mills Laid Yesterday by E. Guss Porter, K.C., M.P., in the Presence of Leading Men of Canada and a Large Gathering of Citizens.

WILL BENEFIT FARM AND FACTORY

All Trenton turned out yesterday afternoon to celebrate the laying of the foundation stone of the new Dominion Combing Mills, which marks the advent of a new and basic industry into Canada. That the occasion was an important one was evidenced by the presence of many leading men from various parts of the Province.

The stone-laying ceremony was performed by Mr. E. Guss Porter, K.C., M.P., and he was supported on the platform by ex-Mayor Church, M.P., of Toronto; R. J. Graham, of Belleville; W. H. Ireland, M.P.P. Mayor Lewis E. Koenigk of Trenton, who presided over the function, read messages from Hon. Arthur Meighen, Hon. H. L. Drayton, and Hon. W. S. Fielding, expressing regret at not being able to attend.

Mr. Porter received a great ovation as he wielded the trowel and declared the stone well and truly laid.

Mr. A. E. Rea, President of the Dominion Combing Mills, in a brief speech said that three million sheep were being produced in Canada and that nearly all of the wool grown was sent out of the country and had to be brought back by the Canadian manufacturer. He declared that the mills would be the means of increasing the growing of wool in Canada, and that eventually the price of woolen goods in the Dominion would be considerably reduced.

Ex-Mayor Church said the mills would be the beginning of many other basic industries in the Bay of Quinte District, which he believed was destined to become the greatest industrial centre in the whole Dominion.

Mr. R. J. Graham said that while he was holding up the banner of Belleville, he believed that Trenton was the next best place, and that the new industry would benefit the entire district.

It is expected that the mills will be in operation late in the fall as the buildings are already well under way.

A Handicapped Industry.

The wool raising industry in Canada has been badly handicapped largely through the absence of a vital link. Millions of dollars have been lost to the farmers of the Dominion because one process was lost to the satisfactory marketing of their output has been lacking and the raw material has had to be exported at low rates instead of being prepared for the finishing processes at home.

This missing process is wool combing and it is indeed a fortunate thing, not only for those immediately concerned but for the country at large, that private enterprise is making it possible to provide the necessary capital to erect a mill which will supply the missing link of the worsted end of the textile industry in Canada.

Every Canadian who stops to think recognizes the value and importance of the agricultural industry to every man, woman and child in the community. It is the key producing industry and the source of wealth above all others, notwithstanding the value of mine, forest and fisheries products.

Sheep Raising Necessary

To round out a farm, sheep must be raised as well as cattle and the important part of the sheep per, apart from the flesh of the animal is the wool. To market the wool to the best advantage is naturally the ambition of every sheep raiser and it is the purpose of this article to tell about the difficulties which have confronted the farmers of Canada through the lack of the missing link referred to, and what a boon its provision will be to them when the new plant at Trenton, Ontario, under the management of Dominion Combing Mills, Limited, is ready for opening. The financing of this plant was carried out by the Dominion Development Corporation, Limited, through which A. E. Rea is the President.

TREATMENT OF WOOL AT COMBING MILLS

A brief outline of how wool is handled and prepared for the manufacture may be of interest at this stage. The first process is grading. The coarser wool is given low numbers and the finer quality high numbers. It is then passed on to the scouring department where it gets a good washing to take out all the grease and dirt. It is then passed through a drier and blown through tubes to the carding room.

The process of carding is to open out the wool fibres. From the carding machines the wool passes to the doffing room and then through the back washing room, where from a loose mass of wool it is transformed into a continuous strand of even or less uniform diameter.

The backwashing machine takes several of the carded slivers and combines them into one. These are bobbed and dried and then fed to a number of gill boxes which is the first of a long series of drying operations. In this and all the following stages there are always several slivers being combined into one and drawn out until the resultant sliver has about the same or smaller diameter than the ones fed into the machines.

Then comes the combing operation. It is simply the removal from the sliver at short fibres which will not spin properly. These short fibres are known as noils, the waste product of the top making. After the wool is combed in passes through a series of gill boxes with the object of further drawing it out. Again several slivers are combined into one in each process. The wool is now reduced to its real worsted basis. The noils have been taken out and the bails or tops are ready to be sent to the spinner to be spun into worsted yarn.

USE POISON GAS AGAINST MICE

(Associated Press)

Geneva, August 8.—(By mail).—The valley of Ajoie, on the Swiss-Prench frontier,"has been invaded by thousands of mice and the rodents are doing much damage. They are believed to have come from the trenches in Alsace. The village authorities have arranged driven by the people, offering half a cent for each dead animal. Poison gas is being used and the method is to inject this into the subterranean galleries built by the mice. It has proved most effective; 27,000 dead being the record for one day.

The greatest breath you can offer a Russian Bolshevist is to call him a "socialist", his being the scornful epithet invented by Trotsky to designate those who are red only on the outside.

Knowledge must heal the wounds that knowledge makes.

A citizen is a man who knows how to be governed.

PAYS TO TREAT EMPLOYES WELL

Lord Leverhulme Makes Another Step Forward in This Policy

(Associated Press)

London, Aug. 7.—(By Mail).—At the mammoth establishment of "Lever Brothers, Port Sunlight", Lord Leverhulme has long demonstrated to the commercial world that it pays to treat employees well. The copartnership idea has been the foundation of his gigantic business. He has just carried that idea a long step further.

Life insurance policies will be taken out by the company for every copartner in the firm, from laborers to directors. The policies of ordinary members of the staff will be worth from $500 to a maximum of $5,000; those of foremen from $10,000 to $20,000, and those of managers from $20,000 to $30,000. A system of grading is to be instituted to determine the amount of the policy allotted to each person. Devotion to duty and efficiency will lead to promotion to a higher grade and an increase in the amount of the policy, while for insufficient or careless work an employee may be graded down.

Should an employee retire with the company's consent, the company will try to arrange that he continue to pay the premiums. In the event of an employee leaving in any other circumstances, the company will try to secure that the assured person, if he so desires shall continue payments at the ordinary rates without medical examination.

Under the unemployment scheme the firm will pay a corner-sum such a sum as, with all allowances from other sources, will equal half wages. Benefit will be paid on a similar basis in the case of sickness extending over a week. This benefit will run for four weeks and its continuance will then be considered.

Lord Leverhulme, explaining the scheme to a meeting of the employes, who adopted it with enthusiasm, said that it was not something in place of wages. The payment of trade union rates of wages was the basis of the plan, but the idea of the new proposals was to reward and encourage diligence and efficient service."

"We feel," Lord Leverhulme added, "that there cannot be any greater stabilising effect than that of removing the dread of unemployment and removing the possibility of dependents being left destitute in the case of the death of the bread winner."

Lord Leverhulme spoke highly of the value of co-partnership. "The last two years of stress and strain that we have gone through in business have proved", he said, "that co-partnership is a sheet anchor in such a time. We may have adversity in the future, but I am certain that the co-partnership principle will come out triumphant and with flying colors."

Then sit in the car. Here is comfort equalled only in the costliest automobiles.

Look about you—the upholstery and trimming are of the finest quality, the instrument board is equipped with richly finished instruments, the control lever is at finger's end, the cowl ventilator control and windshield wiper are within easy reach.

And the chassis shows far-reaching improvements. Test the new rear cantilever springs—you will be amazed at the difference in riding comfort. Lock the handy transmission control and know that this feature, with others, gives McLaughlin-Buick a low rating by insurance underwriters. Even the famous McLaughlin-Buick Valve-in-Head motor shows important changes—higher cylinder block, larger connecting rods and pistons, larger crankshaft, with pressure feed to main bearings.

These are just a few of the sweeping improvements in the new McLaughlin-Buick "45" Special. From the newly designed radiator to the combination tail and stop lamp, the McLaughlin-Buick "45" Special is a new and finer car—more than ever the standard of comparison.

FAMOUS PIANIST OUT OF POLITICS

Ignace Paderewski has Definitely Retired From the Political Arena

WARSAW, Aug. 3.—(By Mail).—The announcement given out in Paris that Ignace Jan Paderewski, the world-known pianist and former Premier of Poland, then he had retired definitely from the political life of Poland, has caused varied comment here. The Radicals are relieved at practically their feared his return; the Nationalists hope it is not true.

They argue that Paderewski is too great a patriot to stand aloof from Poland during the very important elections of November, on the 6th of members of the Diet and on the 13th of members of the Senate. Even should he return to music at the present time, they say, sooner or later he will have to resume his career as a Polish statesman. Paderewski has been away from Poland for two years; but in spite of this absence he still has great prestige here, and many faithful and loyal followers. The Nationalists are still trying to persuade Paderewski to return to Poland for the election campaign.

The radicals, it is believed will announce General Pilsudski, the present chief of the state, as their candidate for the presidency of the republic. The Nationalists have not yet any candidate in sight; if Paderewski returned he undoubtedly would have their support.

In the meantime reports from Switzerland, where Paderewski has been staying recently at Morjes, describe the former Premier as devoting himself to music, and convinced in his own mind that, for the present, he has decided upon a course of action which is the best for his country and himself.

At Morjes Paderewski practiced many hours a day in preparation for his concert tour in the United States which is set to begin in November. He has played little during the past five years. Once was on the occasion of his wife's birthday, in 1919, at his hotel in Warsaw, and another when he was in California last spring. On the latter occasion he played without notice. His memory has not failed him, and in Switzerland, also he played much without notes, waiting until his music could be collected. His favorite hours for practice were in the early morning, and again late at night. His idle time he spent in reading or in feeding his pets—chickens, of which he has a large number.

Overworked Nerves

The Most Successful Treatment is Through The Blood.

The early stages of nervous debility are noted by restlessness and irritability in which the victims seem to be oppressed by their nerves. As the trouble advances, common symptoms are a tired feeling; weakness in the knees and ankles; headaches, backaches and sleeplessness. The matter requires immediate attention, for nothing but suitable treatment will prevent a complete breakdown.

The nervous system governs the whole body, controlling heart, lungs, digestion and brain, so that it is not surprising that nervous disturbances cause acute distress. For troubles of this kind Dr. Williams' Pink Pills succeed when other treatment fails, for these pills make new blood, enriched with the elements on which the nerves thrive, and in this way reach the root of the trouble. In proof of this is the statement of Mrs. Doctrill, Stratford, Ont., who says:—"My daughter, Matilda, was suffering from nervous debility, and the usual remedies did not seem to help her. I was advised by a friend to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial, and soon we found they were doing her a great deal of good. She complained of pains in the stomach, and a severe flutter-ing of the heart, with a general weakness. Under the use of these pills she continued to gain, and I believe they have saved her from going into a decline."

You can get these Pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WILL DISCUSS AERONAUTICS

Duke of York Appointed Pres. of General Council of International Air Congress

(Associated Press)

London (By Mail).—The Duke of York, who is a Captain in the Royal Air Force, has consented to become President of the General Council of the International Air Congress which is to be held in London next June. The Congress is to discuss the technical and scientific development of aeronautics. Lord Weir is Vice-President.

An organizing committee representing all phases of British aeronautical activity has been formed, with the Duke of Sutherland as Chairman.

The Congress will be open to all countries which are signatories of the International Air Convention or are represented on the Federation Aeronautique Internationale.

According to present arrangements the Congress will occupy one week during the last fortnight in June. The reading of papers will alternate with visits to various aircraft factories and other aircraft establishments. It is suggested that the Air Ministry may arrange for a Royal Air Force pageant to take place at the end of Congress week, and that the Royal Aero Club may organise an air race meeting. The Congress will wind up with a banquet.

The International Air Congress should not be confused with the British Air Conference, called for each year by the British Air Ministry. The latter is of a domestic nature, dealing with aeronautical matters only so far as the British Empire is concerned.

NEED MACHINE POWER IN TURKEY

Long Drawn - out Wars Have Depleted Horse Supply

(Associated Press).

Constantinople, Aug. 4.—(By Mail).—The vital need of machine power in Turkey has been obvious and urgent as a result of the exhaustion of the available supply of animals in the long-drawn wars, in the opinion of American Consul-General O. Rie Ravndal. "Most of the draft animals have been used for cavalry and artillery purposes, and many of them, to supply food for the soldiers," he continued, according to the representative of The Associated Press. "Consequently a demand is arising for the tractor and the plow. American tractors as well as other American-made farm machinery, possess a fine reputation in Turkey, and at present dominate the market. The Kahnemann (German, Fiat (Italian), and Renault (French) tractors are in the field, but they cannot compete successfully with American machines which are being offered. The chief desiderata are price, efficiency and simplicity, and the American tractors have been found to fill these requirements."

Similar consideration apply to other agricultural machines and to tillage instruments, for which the demand is growing in the Near East. These include reapers and binders, threshing machines, plows, harrows, cultipackers and drills.

There appears to be good ground for encouraging American manufacturers of agricultural implements and machinery to pay increasing attention to the near eastern field, Mr. Ravndal went on. In the extension of this trade it is essential to give credit to dealers in order that they may be able to carry out the practical demonstrations which are so necessary in these virgin markets, and to accommodate the farmers financially. It is also important that measures be taken to have full supply of spare parts on hand in suitable repair shops.

"The opportunities for the development of the Anatolian, Thracian and adjoining markets for agricultural machinery and implements are considered very good," the Consul-General continued. "The situation at the present time is adversely affected by the absence of highways and railways and other means of transporting farm produce to the central markets, but this defect is certain gradually to be remedied. No duty is charged for the admittance of agricultural machinery into Turkey. As a rule, general agencies are established in Constantinople with branches in other cities."

COAL QUESTION PUZZLE ENGLAND

American Demand for English Coal Makes Big Demand on Their Mines

London, Aug. 3 (By Mail).—A question of immediate practical interest, raised in England by the American demand for British coal, is that of the capacity of the British mining industry to meet the demand—with the least injury to the requirements of other customers.

The pressure continues to increase, and it is estimated that the American requirement will soon approximate 100,000 tons a day. The tonnage already taken up, however, does not justify that estimate, for the fixtures reported since the boom began represents a deadweight capacity of between 600,000 and 700,000 tons only. A circumstance to be reckoned with is the advent of Canadian business. There are many indications of shortage in the supply of bituminous and anthracite coal from the United States on which Canada, under normal conditions, depends exclusively, and in the event of a continuancy of the coal and railway difficulties in the United States, a strong demand for large supplies of English coal from Canada will doubtless soon have to be reckoned with. Coincident with the inquiries from America, there is a growing demand from Germany and the Scandinavian countries for Northumberland, Durham, Yorkshire and Scottish coal.

There are markets in which South Wales coal may only be occasionally current existing but the more the south can coal is exported to the Continent of Europe the less they will be left for shipment to America and the more acute will become the demands from the United States for Welsh coal. This gives rise to the question as to what the Welsh coalfields can sell to America under existing conditions.

The margin for the coal-exporting districts is about 60,000 tons a week. No arbitrary limit can be placed to the quantity which it is possible for the collieries to produce in a seven-hour day, but the circumstances under which trade has been carried on during the past twelve months go to show that it is not possible to improve to any appreciative extent on that quantity.

THE CUNNING OF J. J. MORRISON

(Toronto Telegram)

The cunning of Mr. J. J. Morrison has started the sham fight against Hon. E. C. Drury and the anti-Ontario Government in the Queen's Park.

The purpose of the J. J. Morrison sham fight is to smash Ontario's certainty of defeating Hon. E. C. Drury and the anti-Ontario Government in the Queen's Park.

The cunning of Mr. J. J. Morrison teaches Mr. Morrison the truth that Conservative constituencies gave the U.F.O. most of its following in 1919. Mr. Morrison knows that even in 1919 Conservative farmers would not have voted U.F.O. as Mr. J. J. Morrison had asked his dupes to vote it a Drury leadership had arrived as an issue of the last provincial election.

Showing Route of 1018 Miles through Mountain Passes from Edmonton to Vancouver—New Link in Trans-Canada Highway

Overland First Car to Cross Rocky Mountains Over All-Canadian Route

VANCOUVER—Completing the thrilling, and at times hair-raising path-finding run from Edmonton to Vancouver, the Edmonton Automobile Club Overland car piloted by C. W. Niemeyer, and Frank Silvertorne, rolled into Vancouver, the men exhausted, but happy. They described their journey as one of marvellous beauty and remarkably hard work, but they said they had opened the pathway to Edmonton, and that the expenditure now of a comparatively small amount would make it a permanent and pleasure trail. They encountered muskeg, burned bridges, rock slides, grizzly bears, primitive trains, windstorms and furious rains, but they came along with only three blowouts, and these caused by rail spikes.

Leaving Edmonton, the Overland, equipped with the famous Triplex springs, proceeded westward. It had a heavy load, but never once did the sturdy car cause any trouble during the entire grinding trip. The car weighed 1,800 pounds, carried two to four men, and was outfitted with picks and shovels, axes, hammers, four twelve-foot ten-inch planks and several shorter pieces, a complete set of tools and spare parts; two spare tires and a spare wheel; fifty gallons of gasoline and five gallons of oil. They made the entire run on forty-one gallons of gas and six quarts of oil, and came every foot of the way on their own wheels, via deserted railroad grade, active railways, tote roads, and Pacific highway, demonstrating once again the wonderful economy of the Overland Four.

Through Yellowhead Pass

From Edmonton they proceeded through the Yellowhead Pass trail, taking the abandoned G.T.P. railway grade near the mountains and following it to Jasper, where they picked up Baldy Robb, a well known mountain guide, who was with them through the trip. At Jasper they took to the steel railway and bumped the ties to Lucerne, resuming the abandoned grade one mile west of that point and following it to Red Pass. Then they took steel to Tete Jaune Cache and the old tote road, thence to Alfreda, steel to Blue River and Avola, tote road to Lytton, steel and tote road to Hope and the Yale road to Vancouver. You can imagine what a tremendous strain this was on the units of the car. Yet throughout the entire trip the motor ran smoothly and powerfully. The all steel body stood up exceptionally well and the motor remained cool and quiet under the worst travel conditions.

The motoristic Alexander Mackenzies arrived in Vancouver with blistered hands and sore muscles, even though they started out in good shape. They brushed and built miles of road, constructed 26 bridges, some of which were good enough to be called permanent structures, killed a 14-foot grizzly bear with a 303 rifle, and took 200 pictures of the wild life of the trail, Rocky Mountain sheep, deer, birds and each other. They drove their car on the railroads around curves and along precipices where the variation of a hair would have thrown them hundreds of feet to death. The car wheels straddled the rails the outer wheel being on the outer edge of the ties. The ties in many instances were projecting out over a yawning space which fell straight to the roaring river hundreds of feet below. At one point where erosion had worn away a tote road for some hundreds of feet, they went down to the river and leaded a trail through the water around a rock point and then back to the road. At another they found a rock as large as a house right in front and they had to cut their way around through shale.

Thrilling Experiences

One section was a mass of fallen timber, due to a great windstorm that came down on them. This was near Tete Jaune Cache. They cut their way through. Everywhere they went they left a passable trail behind them.

There was one near accident, they say. They do not speak of the fly climbing stunts going round the precipice curves on a railway grade as a near accident. They were proceeding on the steel toward a tunnel and had not been notified of an extra train. It came belching out just before they reached the entrance. The driver swung off and against a pile of rocks, bending an axle, jarring his friend, but permitting the train free passage.

At Victoria, Mr. Niemeyer was presented by the Victoria Automobile Club with a gold medal for having been the first man to drive a car from Alberta to the Pacific Coast over an all-Canadian route.

AN INDUSTRIAL ACQUISITION

The citizens of Trenton are to be congratulated upon the establishment of a new industry in their midst, in the Dominion Woollens & Worsteds, the foundation stone of which was formally laid yesterday by the Hon. E. Guy Purney, M. P. These mills are being erected for the purpose of combing Canadian wool into tops for the Canadian spinner, and provide a basic industry of vital interest to citizens of Trenton, to the farmers and the rancher who raise sheep to the city men who wears the finished article in various forms. These mills supply the hitherto missing essential need of the textile industries of Canada. Of the wool clip about seventy per cent. of the wool raised in Canada is exported to other countries where it is combed and prepared for weaving purposes, and Canadian manufacturers of woollen goods have to buy their own wool back again. It can be easily seen that this is a very costly and roundabout way of doing business and must add considerably to the price of woollen goods in Canada.

Over one million dollars has been invested in the establishment of this new industry, and it is the first step in the building of Canada on the map as a manufacturing country, and is worthy of note that the project was initiated under the regime of the Hon. Arthur Meighen. The farmers of this and other districts of Canada should know that their best friends are the men who encourage industries that serve the interests of all classes in the community.

Here is a striking example of the essential interdependence of every section of the community, and it should once and for all kill the invidious class-consciousness that is causing like a disintegrating canker into the vitals of the nation. Anyone who reflects for a moment upon the woollen industry must realize that no one class of producer could possibly exist without the other, and that what is done in the interests and welfare of one section must benefit all.

Belleville has no feeling of jealousy toward its neighbour in its good fortune, but rejoices in the fact that so valuable and important an industry has been located in the Bay of Quinte District, and this city is bound to benefit by such an acquisition. The Financial Times of Montreal in an article dealing with the new project says:

"With Canada's great farming territory, wool raising, which is the raw material of a very important line of industry—the textile industry—should be made profitable to the farmers and above all it is necessary to make the process of preparing the wool for the finishing mills complete within our own country.

"What has happened is that our wool rajsers have had to sell their product to foreign countries at such low prices that it became unprofitable to raise sheep. They could not sell it to the textile factories at home because it lacked treatment in an important process, and the manufacturers could not use it without being processed.

"The result has been that Canada has had to import their finished raw materials from abroad instead of getting it from the Canadian farmers or those to whom they depute the task of handling the output.

"This matter was very fully discussed in the Canadian House of Commons during the recent session and extended statements were made by members of the House. Incidentally, a good deal of light was thrown on the subject of wool raising in Canada and its handicaps under existing conditions. The erection of a wool combing plant in Canada is a step in the right direction, marking a long stride in the direction of correcting the deficiency and rendering the wool industry better for the farmers and better for the textile industry of Canada as a whole.

It is an advantage to the wool grower and the woollen trade but it will benefit the consumer as well. In the recent parliamentary debate numerous demands were made for the reduction of the duty on wool blankets in the interests of the poor people who could not afford to pay the prices asked, and the low price the farmer received for his wool was contrasted with the high cost of the wool when it is manufactured into blankets and cloth."

A BECK FOR BLACK COAL

The present chaos in the fuel trade in Canada, and the uncertainty that exists as to the possibilities of procuring sufficient coal to keep the population of our cities from freezing next winter, should lead the powers that be to seriously consider whether it is possible to supply ourselves with coal from our own resources. We have coal fields in Nova Scotia which export enormous quantities of coal annually, and there are said to be vast resources in the West which are scarcely touched as yet.

The question presents itself—are we making the best of these resources, or are these resources no good?

People who have lived in the West declare that the coal mined in Alberta is used throughout the prairies in ordinary furnaces, and that it can be purchased for about half the cost of the coal that we are getting from the United States.

It was stated in Toronto the other day that local dealers were "knocking" the soft coal from Wales because it was competing with the coal business in Pittsburg. The same policy has been pursued against the coal from Westcoast Canada. This sort of thing should not be tolerated at any time, and especially at a time when we are threatened with a coal famine. Every resource of fuel should be thoroughly investigated by competent and unprejudiced men, and the result should be placed in a position of independence in the matter of coal supply. A Dominion commission might be appointed to co-ordinate the production and distribution of fuel.

Why should we not have a Beck for black coal as well as white? The black coal is far more important for the preservation of the lives of the people as a whole than is electric power, unless Sir Adam can supply us with sufficient "juice" to heat our homes.

HERE AND THERE

"TOO OLD AT FORTY"

Is the race to the young? We are constantly told that it is. But with equal frequency we are told that the old can be young for as long as they like. Youth is invited to take charge, and age is exhorted to hold on. The several stages of life—the last three or four of them at any rate—have been thrown into hodge-podge. We hear that we are too old at forty, and again that we can be young at seventy. It was Dr. Osler who, some twelve or fifteen years ago, painted the fortieth milestone red. He said that men over forty are comparatively useless, and that the world's history bore out his statement:—

Take the sum of human achievement in action, in science, in art, in literature—extract the work of the men above forty; and, while we should miss great treasures, even priceless treasures, we should practically be where we are to-day. It is difficult to name a great and far-seeing conquest of the mind which has not been given to the world by a man on whose back the sun was still shining. The effective, moving, initiating work of the world is done between the ages of twenty-five and forty— these fifteen golden years of plenty, the symbolic or constructive period, in which there is always a balance in the mental bank, and the credit is still good.—Wilfred Whitten.

A TRUTHFUL SKIPPER

A few years ago the skipper of a vessel arriving at San Francisco from the South Pacific told a story which caused much wonder to scientific men. While becalmed in twelve fathoms of deep water he had seen crawling over the bottom an extraordinary animal of gigantic size. Its body was enormously long and its tail rather short. It had paddles like the flippers of a turtle. In brief, its description answered in every detail to that of a plesiosaur. The skipper was not an educated man, and it was hardly possible that he could ever have heard of a plesiosaur. Yet the points he gave were accurate, even to the number of toes on each foot.

THE HARVEST OF MIDDLE AGE

Cervantes was fifty-when he published the first part of "Don Quixote." Bunyan fifty when "The Pilgrim's Progress" appeared, Defoe fifty-eight when he wrote "Robinson Crusoe," Swift forty-three when the first of all his Waverley Novels was launched, and Milton fifty-eight at the date of "Paradise Lost." At forty-one Dumas wrote "The Three Musketeers." At forty-two Bacon set to work on his "Novum Organum." At forty-four Newton began to issue his "Principia," and at forty-five Chaucer to write his "Canterbury Tales." At forty-seven Montaigne published his Essays, and forty-eight Lamb his "Essays of Elia." Rabelais launched his gigantic mediæval masterpiece at forty-nine. Edward FitzGerald was fifty when his "Omar Khayyam" began to wait for recognition. Adam Smith published his epoch-making work, "The Wealth of Nations," at fifty-three, John Locke his "Essay Concerning Human Understanding" at fifty-eight, Jonathan Swift his "Gulliver's Travels" at fifty-nine, and Izaak Walton his "Compleat Angler" at sixty. I have been content to take these facts from the interesting appendices to Sir William Robertson Nicoll's chapters. They could be supplemented indefinitely. Shakespeare, it is true, produced most of his plays before he was forty. He was twenty-seven when he started with "Love's Labour's Lost," and thirty-eight when "Hamlet" was first produced. At forty came "Othello," and he was over forty when he wrote "Macbeth," "King Lear," "Antony and Cleopatra," "Coriolanus," "The Winter's Tale," and "The Tempest."

WHY NOT?

Across a hill, a little way,
And down a step or two,
Between tall trees and waving grass,
A little house—and you.

A gingham apron and a cap,
A wind-blown whirling curl,
Brown, dancing eyes; red, laughing lips,
And deeds of kindly pearl.

You sing a little lilting song,
It echoes o'er the hill,
It draws me from my plowing, dear,
That soft, enchanting trill.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

Across a hill, a little way,
And up a step or two,
A lazy horse, a rusty plow,
Some brown, turned loam—and you.

A worn straw hat, blue overalls,
Sun-tanned and ruddy face,
A listening look is in your eyes,
Your pose is languid grace.

You dream fair dreams—perhaps of me,
I like it, I'll allow,
But while I dream and sing, I see—
My dear, why don't you plow?

LITERATURE AND CREATION

(By A. CLUTTON-BROCK.)

A Russian gentleman has written to me to say that writers, of whatever nationality, are small with all the world only if they display emotions and perceptions common to all cultured people, that Dickens has the largest sanity—because he is full of the universal human." There, except in his use of the word 'cultured', he agrees with Tolstoy, and many writers have agreed with both of them; we are always being told that the masterpieces of literature deal with themes of universal human interest, and Tolstoy held that a writer ought to choose such themes if he would produce a work of art.

But this, I think, is putting the cart before the horse. The greatest writers interest the world in what interests them. We are being instructed by Shakespeare in Hamlet, say that it has a theme of universal interest; but we should never have said that if we had been given the theme without the play. Tolstoy, indeed, condemned many of the most famous masterpieces in all kinds of art because he saw clearly that their themes were not such as could have aroused of mankind apart from the work of art. "Nine Lear" seemed to him, when he considered it as a story no other than as a Shakespeare's play, a mass of extravagant nonsense, and accordingly he said that the world was wrong about it. We may say, too, that "The Divine Comedy" or "Paradise Lost" are poems only because they have human masterpieces in all kinds of art because he saw clearly that their themes were not such as could have aroused of mankind apart from the work of art. "Nine Lear" seemed to him, when he considered it as a story no other than as a Shakespeare's play, a mass of extravagant nonsense, and accordingly he said that the world was wrong about it. We may say, too, that "The Divine Comedy" or "Paradise Lost" are poems only because they have survive because Dante and Milton expressed an intense interest of their own in them and expressed it with a power which overcomes the contrary opinions and prejudices, the larger knowledge of all posterity.

New Experience.

And Dickens himself, whom every one calls so human, is he not odd rather than universal in his themes, his interests, his perceptions and emotions? They do not seem to me common to all cultured people, but rather peculiar to him, until he forces us to share them. Theme in a Dickens world and we enjoy it just because we have never perceived it until he showed it to us. They are Dickens' character. Take Scrooge, not from any common stock of observation, but from his own way of feeling rather than of common people. Indeed, intense peculiarity is more than anything common to all great writers. Their visions and values and perceptions, to the mark of the greatest writers and the reason why finally they interest mankind.

Shelley expressed his view in a verse of "The Skylark," more often quoted than understood, where he speaks of a poet—

Hidden
In the light of thought,
Singing hymns unbidden,
Till the world is wrought
To sympathy with hopes and fears it heeded not.

He held the creative view of literature—namely, that it does not express the common experience of mankind, but makes mankind capable of new experience. The poet is difficult through excess of intellectual light; he writes in answer to no call and of things which no one has told him. He is, in fact, a discoverer like the man of science, but in another province; and his value to mankind lies in his process of discovery. It is not a practical value like that of science; it does not increase our mastery of external things; but it does increase our experiencing power. Because of it we become more human, are more in nature and in each other, live more intensely, and believe more in the significance of life.

And that is true of all great writers, whether in prose or verse. The poet may, indeed, discover; he does not choose themes of universal human interest, but makes his themes out of his own personal interest, which is based on the artistic achievements of the past but proceeds further in perception and subtlety than by him, too, the world is wrought to sympathy with hopes and fears, and many other things, it heeded not; for by his art he can make us share his own personal interest, that is always something new and peculiar to him.—London Times.

WIT AND HUMOR

Speaking on the marriage laws at a meeting presided over by an archdeacon, a curate remarked that it was not generally known that a man could marry his widow's cousin.

"Widow's sister, you mean," corrected the president.

"No," replied the youthful cleric "I mean widow's cousin."

The archdeacon was much tickled in an instant. His law must got be challenged by a curate.

"I tell you," he rejoined, "that a man may marry his widow's cousin, but not his widow's sister. You must really allow me to know."

"But," persisted the curate, "how can a man do anything in the way of marrying when his wife is a widow?"

Not a Chance.

Flubbs—Is your wife charitably inclined?

Dobbs—Too much so. Why, I haven't worn out a suit of clothes in the last ten years!—New York Sun.

Sufficient Excuse.

Jack and Mary had just been to the grown-ups' church for the first time. A day or two afterward they were found in the nursery whispering audibly to each other.

"What have you children doing?" their nurse asked.

"We're playing church," replied Jack.

"But you shouldn't whisper in church," admonished nurse.

"Oh, we're the choir," said Mary.

—Judge.

A teacher in one of our western school-homes was accustomed to tell the younger children stories from the Bible.

One day, on asking them if there was any story which they would like to hear next, a little fellow, whose vocabulary was not very scriptural, waived his hand to attract attention, eagerly called out: "Tell us about that sully guy who wanted his father to give him all Really Ass Possible, but not Later Than September 30th, to a Branch of any Chartered Bank in Canada and receive in exchange an official receipt for the bonds surrendered, containing an undertaking to deliver the corresponding bonds of the new issue.

The surrendered bonds will be forwarded by banks to the Minister of Finance at Ottawa, where they will be exchanged for bonds of the new issue, in fully registered, or coupon registered or coupon bearer form carrying interest payable 1st May and 1st November of each year of the duration of the loan, the first interest payment accruing and payable 1st May, 1923. Bonds of the new issue will be sent to the banks for delivery immediately after the receipt of the surrendered bonds.

PRESS OPINIONS

COST OF REBELLION.

(Montreal Gazette)

The rebellion which De Valera is presently inciting can serve no purpose and will only lead to the plunging of Ireland into debt and difficulties for many years. De Valera has fallen an easy prey to the flatteries of a squad of irreconcilables and, foreign gunmen, who have less pretensions to statesmanship than they have love of Ireland. With the death of Griffith at such a critical period, the next few months will be a fateful period for Ireland's national aspirations. It is most desirable that when the National army troops make up the final clearance in the South of Ireland that the new political leaders in the Irish Free State will fulfil the pledges and promises and shipping given in the army manoeuvres. If they do, then Ireland's future is assured, waiver the Irish will be with the full friendship of Great Britain and all other parts of the British Empire. Time alone will tell, and united and unised interest will lead to profound moral and political transformations pointing to the success, happiness and permanent peace of a country that has been inflicted about for over seven hundred years. Humanity and decency call for a cessation of the Irish civil war which is bewildering the world.

Woman's Sphere

RICH DAYS.

Whitened by frost, rich Autumn days,
How comes the cold, leaf-pricking wind;
When golden stacks are seen in fields,

All standing still in awe entwined;
And gallons of sweet cider soon
On trusts in apples red and green.

With mellow pears that chant our tooth;
Which melt that tongue may suck them in;
With shrivelled red, and blue-black plums,
Now round and soft from stone to skin;
And woodnuts rich, to make us go
Into the loveshit lanes we know.

WOMAN CANDIDATE FOR LONDON LABOR

She Gives Reasons for Aligning Herself With This Party

That the political party which above all other parties stands for the hard-fisted sons of toil should put forward as one of its parliamentary candidates a member of the social elect and a woman at that, may be regarded as one of the anomalies of one of the times. It is not because of any dearth of good parliamentary material among the lower ranks and file that the English Labor Party has adopted Miss Edith Picton-Turbervill as its candidate for North Islington in the next general election.

Miss Picton-Turbervill is the daughter of Colonel Picton-Turbervill of Sweeny Priory, Glamorganshire. Among the claims of long descent, there are few among the British aristocracy who can trace their lineage so far back as can Miss Picton-Turbervill and that such a notable beginning of it. One of her ancestors was Sir Richard Turbervill, one of the 13 knights of Wiliam the Conqueror who settled in Wales soon after the conquest.

Miss Picton-Turbervill is the sixth or of "Christ and International Life" to which Lord Robert Cecil contributed a preface. Her social work abroad has given her an international reputation. She spent some years in India on behalf of the Young Women's Christian Association, and travelled for it in America and other Countries.

In stating her reasons for allying herself with the Labor Party, Miss Picton-Turbervill said:

"The party has a definite, practical program. Its policy is founded on Christian principles. It has been the chief champion of woman's entry into politics."

If Miss Picton-Turbervill gets into Parliament she will not be on the same side as Lady Astor or Mrs. Wintringham.

"My politics are not the same as theirs," she said, "but I am sure that on all things affecting the welfare of women and children we should find ourselves on common ground, although in many cases I would go further than they for the betterment of the working woman. For example, I stand definitely for widow's pensions."

THE VALUE OF GIRLS IN CANADIAN LIFE

Dr. Margaret Patterson who has given much thought and time to the young womanhood of Canada says: "We have heard a great deal during the past few years about the boy's value to his country, and we all recognize it as very great, but I believe a girl's value to her country is infinitely greater.

A nation's greatness depends upon social conditions, health and home life, all of which are absolutely in the hands of the women. Women set the social standards throughout the world, and on the enlightenment and high ideals of the women the moral standard of the nation depends.

That few girls realize the sacredness of the body is shown by the fact that so many are defacing this temple with paint and powder and rendering it hideous by the grotesque clothing they wear. Surely it is a perverted mind that regards the deformed as beautiful, yet the modern idea is a deformity. The disgusting habit of exposing the body, as present fashions do, not only lowers the vitality of the wearer but the moral standards of all around them.

I will not insult the intelligence of the girlhood of Canada by explaining the evils of smoking for I do not believe there are many decent girls indulging in the habit. As for the girl who does smoke, let me quote the words of a noted nerve specialist, "She need not worry about her future for she hasn't any." There are plenty of the right kind of girls left in spite of the encouragement of the flapper type.

There are girls physically big, strong and sound. They are making themselves useful, accomplishing something, saving something, understanding something. There are girls prith more than the rudiments of ideals, and a sense of the proportion of the values of this life.

Every girl should take as her life motto the promise that she has stood the test of time and has never failed to give the promised result: "Whatever it does, whatsoever wins respect, whatsoever is just, pure, lovable, of good report, if there be any virtue, anything worthy of praise, think on these things. What do these things mean in the yoon girls

The Daily Recipe

PLAIN ICE CREAM

With a good foundation recipe any kind of ice cream can be made. It may be pink cream sweetened and flavored and frozen. It may be made with custard, varying from a simple to a rich custard. Then the cream added may be thin or heavy, and if heavy, it is often beaten until stiff.

A very good recipe, making sufficient cream for eight servings, is:

1 pint milk
1 cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
2 eggs
1 cup heavy or 1 pint thin cream
1 tablespoon vanilla

Scald the milk, and add to eggs slightly beaten with the sugar and salt. Cook over hot water until smooth and thickened.

Add cream cool, add vanilla, and freeze.

For a small quantity of ice cream in a freezer turned by hand, three measures of ice to one measure of salt is the best proportion to use for a smooth, fine grained cream.

Economy Measures Reduce Deficit in Wages of Government Employees

(Associated Press)

Constantinople, Aug. 6 (By Mail) — The Sublime Porte is considering seriously the note from the Allied High Commissioner regarding the reduction of government employees, and it is expected that action will be taken which will make good the monthly deficit of 500,000 Turkish pounds in the wages to government servants.

In addition the Sublime Porte has decided to abolish the legations and consulates in various neutral countries. Orders have already gone out for the closing down of legations and consulates in Madrid, Berne, The Hague and Stockholm. Several government buildings of secondary importance will be evacuated and rented to private concerns. Some palaces on the Bosphorus will be rented to millionaires.

The economy measures provide also for the reductions in the salaries of schoolmasters, hospital nurses, and office boys; the abolition of superfluous government offices and the retirement of a large number of army and navy officers.

The Finance Ministry has decided to withdraw worn paper money notes from circulation. The government, together with two delegates of the Ottoman Public Debt, is devising a plan to this end. Worn paper money of one, two and a half, five 20 and 25 piastres notes will be withdrawn from circulation and replaced by metal pieces of equivalent value. No more metal money than the amount of paper money withdrawn will be struck.

A substitute for Lingerie Ribbon—As a serviceable lingerie ribbon in underwear, use the soft, standard all-linen hemstitch tape, doubled. It has many advantages over ribbon. It does not mass or mark, it is absolutely fast color, it goes through the smallest lace mesh, requiring no extra beading, and it does not have to be taken out and put in again when the garments are laundered. This embroidery floss comes in almost every conceivable tint, so that the colors in flowered or embroidered lingerie can be perfectly matched in the ribbon substitute.

Baby's Great Danger During Hot Weather

More little ones die during the hot weather than at any other time of the year. Diarrhoea, dysentry, cholera infantum and stomach troubles come without warning, and when a medicine is not at hand to give promptly the short delay too frequently means that the child has passed beyond aid. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in the house where there are young children. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if the trouble comes suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will relieve the baby. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FRASER RIVER
EMPTY OF SALMON

Victoria, B.C., Aug. 26.—The famous Fraser River, the greatest river in the world for years in its yield of sockeye salmon, whose watery supply a decade ago were so crowded at spawning seasons of the year that a person could literally walk across on a solid mass of fish, is now fished out of sockeye, according to the report on fisheries issued recently by Hon. William Sloan, Minister of Mines and Commissioner of Fisheries. The big run of sockeye is destroyed, the report announces with sadness. If the salmon run is ever to be built up again it will only be after years, perhaps generations, of patient endeavor and the most rigid control.

The Skeena River, for decades second only to the Fraser in its salmon productivity, is practically reached the same condition, according to the report.

THE BANDBOX

By
Louis Joseph Vance

He breakfasted with a famous appetite, untroubled by life's aspects on the sense of humour, which was excellent; and he had certainly heard. Miss Searle aright: she had named the 3d. Regis not case, but twice, and each time with the clearest enunciation. He could only attribute the mistake to her excitement and fatigue; people frequently make such mistakes under unusual conditions; if Miss Searle had wished to deceive him as to her whereabouts, she needed only to refrain from communicating with him at all. And anyway he knew now where to find her and within the hour would have found her; and then everything would be cleared up.

He was mildly surprised at the sense of pleasant satisfaction with which he looked forward to meeting the girl again. He reminded himself not to forget to interview a manager or two in her interests.

Just to make assurance doubly sure, he telephoned the St. Simon while waiting for Shuks to fetch a taxi-cab. The switchboard operator at that establishment replied in the affirmative to his enquiry as to whether or not Mrs. Illington and Miss Searle were registered there.

On the top of this he was called up by Alison.

"I'm just starting out—eh wallthe," he told her at once—"to go to Miss Searle and get your—property."

"Oh, you are?" she returned in what he thought a singular tone.

"Yes; she called me up last night—said she'd discovered the mistake and the—eh—property—asked me to call today at noon."

There was a necessity that he could see of detailing the whole long story over a telephone wire.

"Well," said Alison after a little pause, "I don't want to interfere with your amusements, but . . . I've something very particular to say to you. I wish you'd stop on your way up-town."

"Why, certainly," he agreed without hesitation or apprehension.

The actress had put up, in accordance with her custom, at a handsome, expensive and world-famous hotel in the immediate neighbourhood of Shaff's rooms. Consequently he found himself in her presence within fifteen minutes from the end of their talk by telephone.

Dressed for the street and looking uncommonly handsome, she was waiting for him in the sitting-room of her suite. As he entered, she came forward and gave him a cool little hand and a greeting as good. He received both with an imperturbability founded (he discovered to his great surprise) on cold indifference. It was hard to realize that he no longer cared for her, or whether she were pleased or displeased with him. But he didn't. He concluded, not without profound amazement, that his passion for her which had burned so long and brightly had been no more than sentimental incandescence. And he began to think himself a very devil of a fellow, who could toy with the love of women with such complete insouciance, who could off with the old love before he had found a new and care not a rap!

Throughout this self-analysis he was mouthing commonplace—assuring her that the day was fine, that he had never felt better, that she was looking her charmingest best. Of a sudden his vision comprehended an article which adorned the centre-table; and words forsook him and his jaw dropped.

It was the bandbox: not that which he had left, with its cargo of trash, in his rooms.

Alison followed his glance, elevated her brows, and indicated the box with a wave of her arm.

"And what d'you know about that?" she enquired bluntly.

"I've come by messenger about eight this morning Jane brought it to me when I got up a little while ago."

"The last we saw of it!" he asked.

She nodded impatiently: "Oh, of course—with the lining half ripped out and the necklace missing."

"Curious!" he murmured.

"Rather," she agreed. "What do you make of it?"

"This address isn't her writing," he said, deep in thought.

"Oh, as you're familiar with the lady's hand!" There was a accent in Alison's voice that told him, before he looked, were hard.

"This is a man's writing," he said quietly, wondering if it could be possible that Alison was jealous.

"Well?" she demanded. "What of it?"

"I don't know. Miss Searle got me on the telephone a little after one last night; she said she'd found the necklace in the hat and was bringing it to me."

"How did she know it was mine?"

"Heard you order it sent to me, in London. You'll remember my telling you she knew."

HUGE MUSKELUNGE

Battled for Half Hour With 34-lb Fish in Hay Bay

Three Messrs. George Rattan and Colin Carter landed a 36-pound muskellunge in Hay Bay Friday, they established for all time their fame as fishermen, and also the fame of the Bay of Quinte waters as the home of big fish.

When the "muskie" first jumped after being hooked and the fishermen said the immense bulk of the fish broke above the water, we have it in Geo. Rattan's own words that he thought it was a whale. On the other hand Colin Carter believed it to be a young shark.

The "thing" monster put up a half hour's exciting struggle with even chances to win out, but constantly lost ground to the veteran fishermen. Geo. Rattan, who had hooked him, finally arriving close to the boat by careful manipulation of the line, the three attempted to make a getaway by driving under the boat but was "outwitted" in his attempt.

To cap the climax, the fish was landed by tipping the boat North of the Rio level of the water and rolling him to as he came alongside by the aid of half-hook and hand underneath him.

The fish was shot to Picton the night morning where it was on exhibition all day Saturday at Carter Bros.' store, being much admired. The exact weight, the 24½ pounds, length 50 inches, circumference 22 inches. Photographs were taken and may be seen at any time at Carter Bros.

Messrs. Carter and Rattan during the same week caught 16 game fish 3 of which were "lunge", the other two weighing 18 and 11 pounds. Mr. Colin Carter is a member of the hardware firm of Carter Bros. and the pair were using fishing tackle similar to that sold by the firm.—Picton Gazette.

IF THEY CAN'T GET RUM
THE SHIPS WON'T CALL

Charlotte Amelia, St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, Aug. 6 (By Mail).—The Virgin Islands are now officially "dry" and the Volstead Act is in force, but Rear Admiral Kittelle, the naval governor, by official publication has announced that there are no funds provided by law for the enforcement of the Act and that the police officers in the Island will have to watch out for violations which will be punishable in the local courts.

The period of time granted for the disposal of liquor stocks or hand expired July 31. A commission is now in Washington urging modification of the law to permit the sale of liquors on ships' stores in order to prevent foreign ships plying up St. Thomas as a port of call.

Music and Drama

THE REX STOCK COMPANY

"The Man From Home", produced by George Fitzmaurice in the Italian settings of which the author wrote. Even the castles in which much of the dramatic action is unfolded, were assured with considerable difficulty and they enable the spectator to gain superb views of the architecture of the country. One setting in particular, overlooking the Bay of Naples, depicts the bench upon which the late Enrico Caruso sat day after day, vainly waiting for a return of health to enable him to go forth to new conquests in the realm of music. The picture is perfectly interpreted by a cast including James Kirkwood, Anna Q. Nilsson, Norman Kerry, Dorothy Cumming and John Milton.

A 2-reel Brewing Wonder Dog Comedy, a beautiful Travelogue of the Muskoka regions, and a new chapter of "With Stanley in Africa" are exhibited in addition to the feature offering. The entire program is being repeated again to-night for the last time.

BEBE DANIELS, JACK HOLT AND GLADYS WALTON HERE NEXT MONDAY

A Western picture and not a "Movie" cowboy in it! This is the distinctive genre of "North of the Rio Grande", a Jack Holt-Bebe Daniels Paramount picture which is to be shown on the double bill program at Griffin's Monday to Wednesday.

For instead of recruiting his cowpunchers in Hollywood, Director Rolin Sturgeon waited until he arrived at the Arizona "Location" and then employed twenty-five from bona-fide cow ranches.

The remarkably rugged scenery, "Shot" in places where it is said no cameras have ever before been set up, forms a background for a story which carries its action swiftly back and forth across the Mexican border and involves the two popular co-stars in a story which combines thrills, romance and humor in equal parts. The supporting company is excellent. Proving again the fact plots are not the most important of screen stories, but that characterization is the main essential and a strong theme the absolute result, the "Second Hand Rose" which is the second five reel feature offering on the same program will prove indisputable proofs of this contention. It marks the first venture of the film industry in the production field of the famous the first venture of the film industry in going into new fields for its material. "Second Hand Rose" was filmed by Universal with Gladys Walton as the star. A. P. Younger made the popular story into a play and Shapiro Bernstein and made its pathetic little character and central figure in a human story.

An amusing Sunshine comedy is being exhibited on the same program.

ZANA VAUGHN OF THE REX STOCK COMPANY.

For their opening play in Belleville, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, September 4th, 5th, and 6th, the Rex Stock Company have chosen New York's latest and funniest comedy "Here She Comes". Not only is this a comedy that is humanly funny, but it has all the requirements of the theatre-going public, it is bright, snappy, and the fun is clean and wholesome. Rex has a real "Rex" part, the kind he himself so thoroughly enjoys, that the audience entered the spirit of the thing from him—One of those poor unfortunate chaps that is always in trouble, and through no fault or action of his own. Another chaps that is always in trouble, and through no fault or action of his own. Another chaps that is always in trouble, and through no fault or action of his own. From his boarding house and office aspires to marry the daughter of the richest family in New York. The daughter, played by Zana Vaughn also desires the young struggler, but father (Wm. Carey) objects on the plea that father she turns him down (apparently), and he in desperation agrees to a form marriage with a woman he has never seen for a cash consideration of a mere one hundred thousand dollars. No sooner is the deal made than the daughter comes back and says she is willing to elope with him, and then the fun starts. Bill Yule as the fire-eating old father is at his best. Florence Winters as the "She" in "Here She Comes" has one of those eccentric parts that fit her like a glove. New members of the company include Mr. Justine McCarthy, late of "The Bat" company, and the team of Conley and Ray, who have just ended a two years' contract with the Keith Vaudeville Chain of Theatres.

BOOTH TARKINGTON'S "MAN FROM HOME" AT GRIFFIN'S

Last evening again at Griffin's Theatre, with every seat booked, and all passengers happy in the anticipation of the treat ahead of them, the audience took a ninety minute cruise to Italy, stayed there while a thrilling and colorful drama was enacted and then journeyed swiftly back to America.

But to be more precise, the patrons of the popular playhouse had presented to them the Paramount up-

KU KLUX KLAN IS POWERFUL

This Mysterious Organization Revived and Powerful in Texas

Washington, Aug. 2.—(By The Canadian Press)—The Ku Klux Klan, that night-riding organization which was such a potent factor in the South in the years after the Civil War, and which has recently been revived in many states, both north and south, has become the great political issue in the state of Texas.

The democratic organization of Texas is split wide open as the result, of raising this issue, which is a factor in the primary election in which the people of the state will today select candidates for the congressional election. The republicans, who usually make little showing in Texas, are highly encouraged by the split among the democrats and profess to think they see some chance to win at the November election.

Today's election in Texas is what is known as a "run-off" primary. Under the United States constitution the various states have different methods of selecting candidates for public office. The majority have one primary election in which the voters register their choice, and another to register their ballots in favor of one or the other of the candidates for the nomination at that party. A few of the states employ the convention system, while Texas has a sort of doubly-barrelled primary system. Two primary elections are held. The two aspirants for the nomination of each party receiving the highest number of votes in the first primary are placed on the ballots for the second primary and the voters of the party in the second election choose between them. This second nomination contest is the "run-off" primary.

So far as to-day's primary is concerned, the big fight is over the democratic nomination for senator. The two men who were at the top of the list in the elimination primary held some three ago, were Senator Jim Ferguson, former governor, and Earle B. Mayfield. Mayfield is now a member of the state railroad commission and has the complete and unqualified endorsement of the Klan. Ferguson has come out for beer and light wines and is against to Ku Klux Klan, or as they say, anathema.

Ferguson ran second in the first primary according to the prevailing opinion and will have to be beaten by Mayfield. The Klan is strong in Texas and includes many prominent men in its membership.

Expecting Mayfield to win, the opponents of the Klan are casting about for some way to beat him at the polls. They are to get the aged Senator Culberson, who was beaten in the first primary and did not even get a chance in the "run-off" primary, to run as an independent candidate. It is entirely likely, however, that Culby can master as an independent, he would have a much of a vote. Should Culberson run strong and following, he would be handicapped by the fact he is physically unable to make a campaign.

The republicans have nominated M. P. Wilmot, a banker of Austin, for senator and have put an anti-Klan plank in their platform. The republican election was made at a convention held recently at Fort Worth. The party is unable to hold a primary in Texas as the law requires a certain percentage of the vote in preceding election to have been registered by the adherents of the party as a prerequisite to the holding of a primary by that party. Texas is overwhelmingly Democratic and in the last election there were not enough Republicans voting to fulfill the legal requirements for a "recognized" party in the primary elections.

If Mayfield wins the democratic nomination for the Senate, it will be difficult to defeat him at the polls despite the split in the party. The reason for this is that Texas democrats are loath to vote outside of party lines.

In case Mayfield is elected to the Senate, there will arise a most interesting question whether he shall be seated as a member of the Senate. Some of the foes of the Ku Klux Klan maintain this oath-bound secret order, which takes the law into its own hands in many communities, call it anti-American and insist that no one belonging to it should be allowed to take oath as a member of the Senate. A test fight over this question is a possibility. However, at this distance, it looks doubtful whether the Senate would exclude a man on that ground, provided he is otherwise of good character and there are no serious charges against him. The truth of the matter is that while the Klan has taken the law into its own hands in a good many communities, many of the things it has done have in themselves met approval of citizens, such as driving out of those communities undesirable characters whose offenses could not well be reached in court. The result is that the Klan has the quiet support, or, at least, semi-approval, of a great many voters who are not out openly adhering to it. This is a fact, too, that has to be borne in mind in considering the outcome of today's "run-off" primary in Texas.

It may be added that the fight between Ferguson, who indicted while Governor, and Mayfield, is a heated one, involving numerous personal attacks. Ferguson is being assailed by Mayfield for alleged violation of the prohibition laws.

BRITAIN NEGOTIATES FOR LUMBER

Warsaw, Aug. 2 (By Mail).—The enormous forests of Bialowiecs, containing many thousands of acres of finest timber, are engaging the attention of British concerns, who are negotiating for lease. At the same time American business interests have sent an agent over here who, in company with H. H. LIFEBOATS ON RAILS MAKE LAUNCHING EASY

London, Aug. 2 (By Mail).—Lifeboats arranged on deck on rails, so that they can be run to that part of the ship from which launching is possible, are features of the new steamship Mechlenburg, claimed to be the last word in safety ships, which has just made her maiden trip between Folkestone and Flushing.

In many cases of disaster at sea it has been found impossible to launch all of the boats on a ship because of the list. By this new device this difficulty is said to be overcome.

EAT AND SWIM AT MOIRA LAKE

More Leaves From a C.G.I.T.'s Diary at Community Camp

August 21.

Such a busy day a s we have had! We began our regular program today. After "spotting exercises" and a dip, we met for Morning Watch. After that came breakfast and cereal, fried eggs, toast and jam didn't seem a bit too much for us were absolutely hollow. After breakfast it didn't take long to wash the dishes and finish morning fatigue. Down by the water on a ledge of rock shaded by little pines and poplars, we met for Bible Study and discussion. Ever since we arrived we had been wanting to try the war canoe and this morning two of us baked it while the others got paddles and then we started out. There was not much wind and we could go along splendidly. At first it was ever so hard to keep in time, we banged each other and splashed and got all tangled up and I thought my arms would ache for the rest of my life, for you must not miss a single stroke.

This afternoon Quiet Hour was put over when the campers from around the lake began to gather for a beach! ranch and the camp diamond. We played too, and had a real exciting time. They joined us for a "swim afterwards. Miss Jean McIntosh is our swimming instructor. She tells us just what to do and I am improving a lot. There is a spring-board and pontoon. I'll learn to dive before I go home. I tried today but hit on flat I almost made a belly whack. We were just at ten when Miss Mercy arrived. We took the big camp cart down to the pier to bring in her baggage; she is just home from Bean Hirsch Camp on Canonsprue and told us all about the C. G. I. T. there as we sat around the burning log in the great stone fire place. In between we sang all our songs and finally said good night by singing:

Day is done,
Gone the sun
From the hills, from the lake, from the sky.
All is well
Safely rest,
God is nigh.

August 23.

It is so hot to-day and was so hot yesterday that I can hardly write, but we're having a good time. Our programme is mostly eating and sleeping and swimming. We are improving as a war canoe crew and paddle over to Cottage Cove to swim on the sand beach every afternoon. Each evening we have a sing song and story hour till bed time. To-day there was a regatta at Cottage Cove and we all went over. There were canoe and rowing and swimming races and a tub race, relays and everything. There is a shop too where we can get ice cream and candy. L O double L I P O P spells lollipop That's the very finest kind of candy; The man that manufactured it's a dandy!

The last four or five years she has been very much confined to her home by ill health, but prior to that date was an active woman, always assisting in good works and very much interested in Methodism in the city and especially in the Tabernacle congregation and Albert College.

Some years ago blood poisoning set in in her right arm and it was necessary to have the same amputated, and although at that time advanced in years, she bore the operation with fortitude and recovered from the same. MAY USE NEW TYPE OF CARS

New Gas Cars For the Pacific Great Eastern Railway

Victoria, B.C., Aug. 28.—New types of gas cars may be used on the provincially-owned Pacific Great Eastern Railway and at the same time give the people along the line a better service. Cars of a type which will behave as well as any automobile and run on rails have been produced, experts have advised Premier John Oliver.

At present only one train a week is being run over the Pacific Great Eastern and it is not paying expenses. The reason for this, it is explained, is that the cars are light that it does not meet the expense of running a one hundred-ton locomotive over the line to draw a few cars. The only chance of making traffic pay expenses is by carrying it on a light, fast car, on which all overhead will be cut down.

If these new cars prove successful it is predicted here that they may be placed in service on Island lines of the Canadian National and the Esquimalt and Nanaimo railways to give a speedier service to holiday resorts.

Coal Strike Hits 105,000 Ford Men Plant to Close

Ford Will Close all His Plants—Men Out of Jobs on September 16—Cannot Get Coal—Threaten of Advance in Steel Prices Also Affects Situation.

DETROIT, Aug. 28.—One hundred and five thousand employes of the Ford Motor Company throughout the country will be without work after September 16.

In addition several hundred thousand other workers employed in industries furnishing materials for the Ford plants will be affected.

Henry Ford gave these figures on Saturday in announcing that his three big motor plants located in Detroit, Fordson and his assembling plants throughout the country would be closed on that date because of the coal shortage.

"The announcement was the most severe blow that industrial Detroit has sustained since the industrial depression of two years ago. It means, according to Mr. Ford, that 78,000 men employed in the Highland Park, River Rouge and Dearborn Plants of the company here will be without work. Thirty thousand others now working in the various assembling plants scattered throughout the entire country also will be thrown out of employment.

How long the machinery in the Ford plants is to be stilled will depend entirely upon the coal supply of the future, the Detroit manufacturer said.

Mr. Ford's announcement, which followed a conference with his associates, was received by the Detroit, Toledo and Ironton, to obtain sufficient fuel at the various junctions to keep his factories here supplied.

The price of steel and other materials also entered operations, Mr. Ford said, adding that he had received notice of an advance in steel prices to be made shortly.

In his stand against prices of coal and steel, the manufacturer took the same position that prompted his decision to cease operations two years ago—that prices asked were unwarranted and that he would prefer a suspension of work and a resultant financial loss to the payment of higher prices on materials.

Industry in the United States must "throw up its hands in surrender" within a few weeks, if the rail and coal strikes continue, Mr. Ford declared.

Mr. Ford held financial interests responsible for the industrial tie-up declaring, the "money barons" were manipulating the labor unions, and the public officials, state and national, were impotent in the crisis. The deadlock in strike negotiations indicated, he declared, the existence of "a plot to unload the demoralized and run-down railroads upon the Government at their own price and to market the people through excessive coal profits."

GERMANS WILL MAKE INDUSTRY PAY REPARATIONS

BERLIN, Aug. 28.—Sir John Bradbury and Eugene Mayer, members of the Reparations and Guarantees Commissions, will to-day lay before the Reparations Commission a plan which engages industrial Germany to insure reparation deliveries. Thus the industry has been put up to the country's real government —industry.

The plan was offered to avoid Premier Poincare's threatened seizure of the state, forests and mines. The Government promises to handle the labor end of the deal, while the industrials agree to give satisfactory guarantees for reparation deliveries until the end of 1923. The usual penalties for failure to live to a business contract will follow failure to deliver promptly.

Hugo Stinnes, the greatest of the industrials, took the lead in offering these guarantees. He says of the plan:

"It can only succeed if both employers and employes work together for the salvation of the country. It means sacrificing profits on the one side and overtime on the other."

LOOPED THE LOOP AT 85 YEARS OF AGE

CAPE MAY, N.J., August 28.—"After looping the loop 2,000 or more feet in the air, Mrs. Peter Quidort, 85 years old, told Captain Jack Robertson, former British ace," who took her aloft, that she had had the time of her life.

Captain Robertson, who had also enemy airplanes to his credit in the war, and who has learned every spot in the air since, said that he was "jolly well startled" when Ronald Quidort, one of the umpires at Columbia Park, asked him to take his grandmother, Mrs. Quidort for a spin. The aviator demurred at first, then consented, and was genuinely astonished at his passenger's coolness.

CALGARY MINERS STRIKE AT END

Men Vote 7 to 1 in Favor of Agreement Between the Operators and Union

CALGARY, Alta., Aug. 28.—A vote of seven to one was cast by District 18, United Mine Workers of America, in favor of the agreement reached between the miners and the executive of the Western Canada Coal Operators' Association at their week toward ending the strike; it was announced late last night.

FLIES STOP TRAIN

PARIS, August 28.—A small fly which owing to its short existence, is called the "ephemeral," yesterday swarmed in such vast quantities in the Cote d'Or district on a railway track that they brought a fast train crossing a bridge over the river Seine near Saint Jean de Losne to a standstill. The engine could have crushed countless millions of those tiny insects.

HUSBAND AND WIFE BOTH ELOPERS

Left Families in England To Come to Canada and be Married

CHIEF RUSE, of Cobourg, has received a letter from a lady in Birmingham, England, in reference to Joseph Hallam, who deserted her and her 16 months old baby in May, 1906, to marry Florence Ruse, a married woman from the same town who also deserted her husband and child. They both heard the pair had come to Canada, and had three children. Since that time the Birmingham woman has heard nothing from her husband, nor,was she at all anxious to, as "he was a lazy scamp." She was looking for information from Chief Ruse as to the husband, and wanted to know if the law was the same in Canada as in England. If it was she had a chance to re-marry, as she felt she had wasted enough of the best of her life on a bad man. The couple referred to lived for some time in Cobourg, but left there recently, and should their present place of residence be found out action will likely be taken against them on the charge of bigamy.

RAILWAYMEN NAME THEIR WAGE DEMANDS

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

CHICAGO, Aug. 28.—Railway maintenance of way employes, comprising approximately four hundred thousand men whose threatened strike with shop crafts last month was held in abeyance pending the new wage hearing, placed their demands for increased pay before the United States Labor Board to-day.

LADY KILLED IN AUTO SMASH

Two Cars Collide, Hurling Young Woman to Death, Several Injured

HAMILTON, Aug. 27.—In a collision on the Oak road near Cornell's Lane this afternoon about 5 o'clock, Miss Bessie Pewell of Port Dover, aged 22, was instantly killed; John Faulkner, of Port Dover, seriously injured; and Frank and Mrs. Ryrene, also of Port Dover, severely shaken up.

Mr. Faulkner was driving Mr. Ryrene's touring car along the highway when it crashed into a coupe driven by R. Armstrong, Dundas, as Mr. Armstrong's car came out of the lane. Miss Powell was sitting in the front seat with Faulkner and the force of the impact threw her out on the pavement where she alighted on her head, her skull being crushed.

The others who were in the Ryrene car will recover, although one of the persons in his auto escaped injury. It is thought the accident was caused by the sun shining in Mr. Faulkner's eyes.

Faulkner was brought to the general hospital here and the Ryrenes were able to proceed to their home. Coroner Rykert, of Dundas, was notified and directed that an inquest be held.

TORONTO MAN BURNS WATER-GAS IN HOME

W. H. Legg Has Used Oil and Superheated Steam For Years

TORONTO, Aug. 26.—According to W. H. Legg of Legg Brothers, surveyors, who reported the discovery of a new fuel, water gas produced by fusing crude oil and disintegrated water at 90 decrees F. is not entirely new. He says that he has been working on the same process for the past eight years, trying to perfect a method by which "water-gas" could be used as a fuel. He claims that he has the process perfected now by experiments carried out in his own home.

"It is a simple arrangement of pipes," he says, whereby the water, air and oil are preheated and brought to a gas state before it comes to the fire. It gives a perfectly clear flame, bluish red in color. After the furnace is hot there is no smoke. The dampers can be almost closed in the pipes, thereby retaining all the heat in the furnace. It can be easily operated, manufactured and installed in anyone's home with a little knowledge. It saved me quite a substantial sum in my coal bill last winter. The mechanism of it is very simple and it is constructed with only $10 and costs for its erection at this morning's police court session.

WALKS TO DEATH OFF WHARF

Fred R. Simpson, Toronto Man, Takes Fatal Stroll in Darkness at Kingston

KINGSTON, Aug. 28.—Fred R. Simpson, of 3 Reid street, Toronto, was drowned about 11.30 on Saturday night off Queen's dock.

He had been in Kingston visiting relatives and was about to take a sleeper at the G.T.R. station, which is near the wharf. Taking a stroll before turning in, he walked off the wharf in the darkness. His shouts for help were heard, but before any one was able to go to his assistance he had disappeared. He was a good swimmer, but in the darkness he apparently swam away from the wharf instead of toward it, as the body which was grappled for and found in about an hour and a half, was picked up 75 feet from the shore.

Mr. Simpson, who was 53 years of age, was married and besides his wife, leaves three children. The body was sent to Toronto last night.

MORE HARD COAL AT SUDBURY

Geologist Issues Challenge to Government on the Production of Anthracite

SUDBURY, Ont., Aug. 22.—A seam of pure anthracite coal, with slate above and below, was reached 30 inches below the surface in the Larchwood area, about 23 miles from Sudbury, by A. F. A. Coyne, the Toronto geologist, and his gang of experts and miners yesterday afternoon. Samples of the coal were brought to this town by Coyne, and are on display in E. J. Cleland's store. Mr. Coyne is full of optimism and claims that he will be able to supply coal for the province for the next two weeks. Enthusiasm in the district has reached a high pitch.

Took Samples

The geologist left this town last night with several bags of the new found coal, samples of which will be sent to the British Museum and other of the continent for analysis. Work will be continued in the coal area on Monday. A definite challenge to the government in respect to the development of the coalfields in this district was issued by Mr. Coyne to prove his claim that anthracite coal exists in commercial quantities.

The Challenge

The terms of the challenge are as follows:

"That if the provincial government will sign up that they will pay to me the sum of one million dollars on the condition that I produce on the surface ten thousand tons of coal from the Chelmsford and Larchwood districts, or that area between and known as the Sudbury anthracite prospect, within less than twelve months from the date that your government accepts this challenge. I am sure that practical coal men will, upon this security, after an examination of the field with me, advance me the required $250,000 which would 'be required to mine, clean and ship the anthracite.

LLOYD GEORGE WILL GIVE BOOK PROFITS TO WAR CHARITIES

Impelled to Write Volume to Answer Critics—First Instalment by Spring

LONDON, Aug. 28.—All profits made by Premier Lloyd George on his war memoirs will be given to war charities. Authorship of memoirs has not been made. It was pointed out that many books, pamphlets and articles attacking the Premier's conduct of the war have been published, especially recently. Some of them have been partisan productions, and largely distributed by partisan organizations hostile to the present Government. These publications are considered by Mr. Gorden calculated to mislead the public.

The Prime Minister feels impelled, therefore, to write in order that the moment has become of the great struggle. He has already made considerable progress with the work of his memoirs and means to devote some part of his holiday to further prosecution of the work.

For the Nation's Gain.

The Prime Minister feels unable to take any personal advantage for himself out of the story of the struggle and suffering of the nation during the great war, so he intends that the whole of the profits of the book shall be devoted to charities connected with relief of the suffering caused by the war.

THIS FARMER LIVED IN THREE CENTURIES

Dies at 126 Years of Age

CLARKSBURG, W. Va., Aug.-28.—John Drysdale, a farmer, said to be 126 years old, died at his home near Craigsville, according to a despatch received here. Drysdale was born in Scotland, and a family record gives 1796 as the year of his birth.

The centenarian is survived by several relatives. Those who reside on his farm regard his birth record as authentic.

ERIN MOURNS DEAD LEADER

Michael Collins Laid to Rest Beside Griffith Amid Demonstrations of Great Grief

(Canadian Press Despatch)

DUBLIN, Aug. 28.—Such a demonstration of grief seldom equalled in the long centuries of Ireland's troubled history, Michael Collins, the heroic and spectacular leader of the Irish Free State, was laid to rest today in famed Glasnevin, where lie the bones of many brave and noted Irishmen who gave their lives for Ireland's cause.

Arthur Griffith was buried with all honor due to a great leader, but Michael Collins, beloved adventurer, romantic figure, fighter and statesman, went to his grave with the tears of the nation that worshipped him for his gay bravery.

Good humor, power of oratory and laughing disregard for death —all were his, and while innumerable people filled the cathedral and adjacent streets at the funeral service, congregations gathered in churches of Southern Ireland to mourn his passing.

LARGER LEAGUE OF THE NATIONS

World Association of States to Link Up All Nations to League of Nations

(Canadian Press Despatch)

GENEVA, France, August 28.—A plan for "world association of states" to link together the League of Nations, the pan-American union and those governments which are not members of either, was contained in the report submitted to the Institute of International Law here by Prof. Alejandro Alvarez of Chile.

The new association would seek to encourage regional and continental groups rather than attempt to replace them entirely.

ROTARIANS DISCUSS DOLLAR DAY

Resolution of Condolence to the Family of Late D. V. Sinclair was Passed

Belleville Rotarians talked at their luncheon to-day on the Dollar Day that was held in the city on Saturday last. Mr. Andrew Davy, of the Daily Ontario, spoke briefly on the origin of Dollar Day idea, which he said was instituted in the United States. Mr. H. O. Henley, speaking from the point of view of the Chamber of Commerce, said that Dollar Day would go far to invalidate the habit of co-operation which was much needed in the city. Local merchant members of the club spoke favorably of the idea.

A resolution of condolence to the Sinclair family on the death of D. V. Sinclair was passed by the club.

CHURCH UNION CONTROVERSY STILL ALIVE

Climax in Great Religious Fusion to Come in Fall

OPPONENTS ORGANIZE

Big Gatherings to be Held Here by Both Sides

TORONTO, Aug. 28.—The controversy over union of the Congregationalist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches in Canada bids fair to reach a climax in Toronto this Fall with the holding of crucial meetings by various church bodies. On Saturday a call was issued for a convention of all Presbyterians who oppose church union. Earlier in the week Rev. B. D. Chown, D.D., announced that the Methodist conference, in union, would meet late in September to take up the legislative side of the scheme. Almost simultaneously the joint committees on union, representing the three denominations, will meet, also in this city, with the sessions of the Methodist General Conference to follow.

From headquarters of the Presbyterian Church Association, a body opposed to organic union, it is announced that several meetings have been held this year in Hamilton and Toronto, prominent among which was the address of the Presbyterian Church, who desire the continuance of the Church, as at present composed to the exclusion of organic union. As a result of these meetings it has been decided to hold a provincial convention in Toronto early in October. The Presbyterian Association has opened an office in the Lumsden Building, Adelaide street. An active campaign will be carried on throughout the province. The aim is to have the Presbyterian Assembly representative of every part of Ontario.

"If anti-union sentiment in the Presbyterian Church, the property measure may be introduced at the next session of Parliament, early in 1923, and union consummated shortly thereafter. But it is understood that the bills must first be approved by the joint committee on union, by the committees of each denomination and then by General Conference, General Assembly and the Congregational Union. As the General Assembly does not meet again until 1924, there might be a postponement of final discussion in the Presbyterian Church until 1925, when the bills could not reach the House of Commons until 1926, or an Autumn session in 1923 be very certain.

The joint committee on union and the Methodist committee will meet in the Metropolitan Church just prior to the General Conference which convenes on September 5th. Chairman of the Presbyterian opponents of union will rally their forces for the final fight, in full knowledge of the position taken by the Methodist Church.

TWO ARE KILLED IN AUTO WRECK NEAR ORILLIA

ORILLIA, Ont., Aug. 28.—Two motorists were killed and two others had a short distance north of Orillia last night. They are: Sam A. Sylvester, of 260 St. Clair avenue west, prominent in insurance and aquatic circles, and A. F. McLean, of Moose Jaw, Sask. They were on their way from Toronto to Dorset, Muskoka, where Mr. Sylvester had a summer cottage.

W. H. Scott, of Toronto, who was with them in the car, escaped serious injury.

The automobile struck a culvert and turned over, the accident happening about ten o'clock last night.

MAN WITH GOLDEN RIBS LIVES IN FEAR OF THIEVES

(Associated Press)

BERLIN, Aug. 10.— The young man with ribs of gold and platinum is working in a cigarette factory at Breslau.

When he was a locksmith's apprentice, several years ago, he fell from the roof of a house and was badly injured. He was taken to a hospital where the doctors found that his skull was fractured and all his ribs but one were broken. The youth was in the hospital for so less than four and a half years, and finally the surgeons undertook to repair or replace his shattered ribs.

A metal plate was inserted in his skull and the fractured bones were replaced by ribs of gold and platinum. Two and a half years later the man was able to leave the hospital, and since then he has been working in a cigarette factory. In view of the present value of gold and platinum, it is evident that he is carrying about in his body quite a considerable amount of wealth, and it is stated that special measures are being taken to protect him against criminals.

EGYPTIAN KHEDIVE DECLARED OUTLAW

Had Been in Exile Since Beginning of Great War

(Associated Press.)

Cairo, Aug. 3. (By Mail)—Abbas Hilmi Pasha, deposed ex-Khedive of Egypt, who has been in exile ever since the beginning of the Great War is destined to spend the rest of his days outside the confines of his native land, if the decree depriving him of all rights in his native land be carried out.

A law passed by King Fuad I and countersigned by every member of the Egyptian Ministry has been promulgated, restricting in various respects the ex-Khedive's political, as well as social rights.

The preamble of the law sets forth the necessity that the measures taken by the British military authorities under martial law be sanctioned. These measures included the deposition of the ex-Khedive and the sale of part of his property.

Some of the provisions of the law are:

(1) Abbas Hilmi is not either personally or by intermediary, to exercise in Egypt any political rights, to possess or acquire any title to any property, real or personal, to be designated as the beneficiary in any Wakf or to collect any sum of money for same.

(2) All the remaining property of the ex-Khedive is to be sold by the public executor and the net balance of the liquidation which would be balanced after payment of, or provision for outstanding liabilities, is to be placed at his disposal.

(3) Egyptian territory is forbidden to the ex-Khedive. Should he contravene this law, he will be conducted immediately to the frontier under the direction of the executive.

Nujol is a lubricant—not a medicine or laxative—so it passes gently through the system. When you are constipated, not enough of Nature's own lubricant (bile) is produced to keep the food waste soft and moving.

Nujol supplies the lubricant and thus you replace it. Try it.

REVIVAL IN N. S.

EXPORT TRADE

Halifax, N. S. August 23.—A revival in the export lumber trade of Nova Scotia from the slump which occurred following the war boom shipments has been reported lately.

Building operations in New York and other parts of the United States are said to be chiefly responsible. Several large schooners are engaged in carrying cargoes from Shoot Harbor and the Musquodoboit Valley in Halifax County, and from other places in American ports.

The lumbering industry of Nova Scotia formerly depended almost entirely on the British and South American markets. Cargoes are still going to the south but the British Market has not been a good customer of late years.

The great piles of lumber known as "war stock" which were seen lying undisturbed following the slump in the latter part of 1920 are said now to be at the vanishing point and a new cut is being sought.

ACCURACY OF MEDICAL DIAGNOSIS QUESTIONED BY FRENCH EXPERT.

Glasgow, Aug. 10.—(By Mail)—Doctors often fail to diagnose correctly lung consumption as distinct from other respiratory diseases, according to Professor Erist, of Paris, in a recent address before the British Medical Association.

The speaker said that in 1916 at Compiegne 192 men were sent into the hospital with a diagnosis of tuberculosis. Observations showed the diagnosis to be justified in only 52 cases. The 139 other cases, he declared, were undoubtedly non-consumptive.

In 1918, Dr. Erist examined 342 men in Paris said to have consumption. Of these only 27 had lung consumption, 22 were not definitely diagnosed, and 293 were certainly non-tubercular.

Mlle. Augustine Dupont, voted the prettiest stenographer in Paris, has received 10,000 francs, a trousseau, a small car, 324 offers of marriage and many theatrical and movie engagements.

GAY-COLORED BUTTERFLIES ARE FED ON STRAINED HONEY

London, Aug. 9—(By Mail)—Not the gross eating of the carnivorous animals, but the dainty feeding of the butterflies today attracts many people to the Zoological Gardens, at least those people who appreciate what has been pronounced the prettiest sight in the zoo. There could be no greater contrast than that offered by a lion or a tiger snarling over a mess of flesh and bones and a flight of beautiful butterflies sipping honey.

Every hour when the sun shines Miss Chessman, Curatrix of Insects, enters the spacious butterfly cage at the zoo and regales her charges, hundreds of peacocks, tortoise-shells, brimstones, greenveined whites, and other butterflies galore, on diluted honey.

There are plenty of flowers in the enclosure but artificial feeding is necessary, for the blossoms do not provide sufficient nectar for the thirsty insects, and they are so quickly fertilized by the frequent visits of the butterflies that they soon turn to seed.

On entering the cage with t e mixture Miss Chessman is mobbed by the hovering throng like a donor of cakes and sweets at a picnic of school children—the gaily-hued insects settling all over her and assembling in a group upon the honeycan.

The scene at such a time suggests an animated kaleidoscope or some fairy spectacle.

SWEDEN RECOVERS HER FOREIGN TRADE

Exports of Timber Are 97 Per Cent. of Pre-War Figures

(Associated Press)

Stockholm, Aug. 8.—(By mail)—That Sweden has definitely survived the post-war crisis, and is one of the first nations in Europe to show a natural and consistent recovery, appears from the monthly report on the foreign trade of this country during June, which has just been issued.

The export of timber and sawn wood, a staple commodity, has grown so rapidly that the volume is now 97 per cent. of the peace time figures. At the end of June the timber sales were close to 800,000 standards, which is considerably more than half of the normal, yearly output. The export of matches is 95 per cent. of the pre-war normal, and it is encouraging that the export of iron ore has even surpassed pre-war figures by three per cent. As regards wood pulp and paper, which America buys from Sweden in large quantities the figures for the month exceed the 1913 figures for the corresponding month by 18 to 72 per cent. Incidentally it is reported that one reason why the quotations on sulphite pulp are high is the increased demand from the United States for the manufacture of artificial silk. Newsprint, which is shipped in great volume to America, shows an export figure of 72 per cent. above that of 1913.

In the line f manufactured industrial products the quantity of electrical machines and apparatus, ball bearings, and telephones is nearly three times that of June, 1913. Cream separators and motors have risen to 59 per cent. of the pre-war figure.

A similar indication of prosperity is seen in the increased imports of raw materials needed for Swedish industries. American dealers in copper will be interested to know that Sweden's imports of that metal have reached 84 per cent. of the pre-war figure.

With a Fisherman among the 30,000 Islands

by Ben. C. Robinson

THIS beau ies bking in the Georgian Bay Country!" the conductor on the Grand Trunk told me as we proceeded from Algonquin Park to Scotia Junction, where I expected to turn southward with the rest of the tourists from "the Station." The long five days' trip through some of the greatest speckled and grey trout lakes that I have ever fished over had been hard, and my back ached from toting my share of the camp outfit. I was tired, I told myself, and I intended to head it back down into the broad leaf country for a good rest along some little hill branch where the sunfish were schooling at the fly hook.

"Bass!" That woke me up from a doze.

"Where?" I was keen again. The grey trout and the great speckled giants of Bluff Lake and Blue Jay in the Algonquin Park, hidden far away now back of the rolling hills, were but memories, while the magic word bass kindled anew my interest in life. No matter how tired a man from the States might be, that magic word BASS revives him. It's the incentive to renewed efforts along the winding water trails.

"Yes, sir!" continued the conductor, "and talking—well, just remember to load up with dew worms, brother—just remember that!"

That the way with those lads up there. It's the land of sport, and fishing the high card there this Summer, as in all Summers past and gone. It is the land of the angler and the sportsman, and the talk is always of sport on lake and stream.

By the time we reached Scotia I had changed my mind about the sunfish. I was no longer tired. The train for the States waited to turn southward, but Roble, the old Deputy of Field and Stream, was well-wed bound toward the far hills, beyond the lakes and green edged ridges—away to that country where the hills roll back wide and deep with shadows, and where the big rock ptarms open and unshaded by timber, to Parry Sound, northern gateway to the "Thirty Thousand Islands"—to rolling, fishy Georgian Bay, grandest of all fishing paradises.

And when I got there?

Lucky party that I was, I found dear old Joe Lawrence, Merdie, and Ed. Taylor, three jolly boys of Parry Sound, who have fished the winding ways of Pickerel Island for a full many a season.

Merdie, freckled and bonny of face as all outdoor lads are, south or north, waited for us the next morning with his pasteboard box bulging with cool, damp moss gathered from the shady caves the bay on Parry Island, and in this moss, brothers of the arching bamboo, lay full many a dew worm that had crawled from that my friend the conductor had blessed with the day before, as the train swept onward toward the broad leaf country.

"All right, Merdie, me boy," said Rosie the Old Deputee, as he slambered into the little launch and Joe "turned 'er over" for the long jaunt northward across the tossing waters of Georgian Bay for the bass fishing grounds out there.

Now, here's a secret, lads of the Sea Lawrence, God bless his great heart, was my friend, as I wish he might be in every one of you, fine readers. He was taking me out to his favorite bass grounds rather than to Ed. Taylor's favorite grounds, for really, after all, Ed. the old brown-faced King of Pickerel was the chap who was blowing us to the treat. Ed. himself first place in the magic Hall of Fame for the secret spots of Georgian Bay, for where he caught the limit and they were many, I couldn't guide myself back there.

Through channel after channel winding by the shores of rocky islands sweet to the soul of the wanderer down the water trails, with their leaning, wind-warped pine, hemlock and birch—channels that wound treacherously between dangerous rock where with one hasty turn of the rudder we would have been dashed upon the fangs of the waiting reefs; through bays and across wide open channels, until at last "The Sisters"—those guiding points of rock and warped pine, with the white exclamation marks that denote the entrance to Steamboat Channel appeared.

Then at last we came to the gateway! Rosie, Island lay nearby, and the water foamed and whitened over a long bar. Little rocky knolls protruded from the glittering expanse of the bay. We shut down the engine suddenly.

"All to one side quick!" commanded the old deputee, as said we swung our cargo to the starboard side—just as Joe could keep the keel that scraped the bottom of the launch. "Now, Merdie, me boy, you're next out there so living man but Ed. Taylor could keep the launch—and we were in The Pool Of The Bass.

"Blow for the dew-worms!" breathed Ed.

"Quick, Merdie—that's right, give me the dead one! Ed. said we stayed the everlasting banter of jolly old Joe Lawrence as Merdie handed him a wriggling juicy bass charmer.

A dew-worm—a bass! chanted Merdie, many Merdie.

And for me, boy, oh—the old appeal! I reached for the baltered red case I had toted over the long, long circuit of the fish-hook trail. I dipped in blindly and brought out a stiff spinner No. 4 size—which my friend, F. A. Pflueger, had handed me the night he spun for me the story of the big rainbow that battled him into the sunset up there on the Soo. It was a fly in Ontario's hills back of the great locks of the Soo up yonder across Huron.

A skeptical smile crept into the face of Ed. but he was too much of a gentleman to say anything. The first cast was made. Bang! Ed had hooked his. Merdie's old reel sang the song of the fighting fin. I looped on and cast, and there was a sudden stop, as though I had hit one of the everlasting rocks of Paradise Island. I lifted the tip sharply. There was a golden gleam, a leaping leap, and subconsciously I knew the shout "Net!"

If I had hooked my first Georgian Bay bass, and for some seconds I played one of the gamest fish of my trip. So the school of bass swam by, and as they passed we collected our toll—Merdie, Joe and Ed. with their dew-worms and I with the artificial spoon. As I landed my fish with them I caught the keen dark eyes of Ed. upon me, and that day is the one left low back of the warped pines and hemlocks beyond silent, dreaming Paradise Island Ed. came up to me while we waited for the black "kittle" to bile.

"Lad, what sort of fishing is that fig you're using there? I don't know but what it's as good as the old dew-worm after all."

And so it was! The bass were feeding, my friends, and that's one of the points I want to bring out in writing this short sketch of one of the greatest bass fishing days I ever experienced on lake, stream or bay, that when the black battlers are really feeding in schools the bait has least of all to do with the taking of fish. The location of good feeding grounds and the finding of schools of feeding fish are the main things. Then some good bait—be it live frog, dew-worms, minnow or artificial—and them will take the fish, providing dear old Ed. Taylor, of Paradise Island pool may predventure be found once more.

Buddies of the singing reel, let's hope that some time you find Ed. and Joe and Merdie yourselves, up there among those pine crested islands, and that with them you pass through the rocky reefs into the feeding grounds of the bass—small-mouth bass of Georgian Bay!

A Quick Revenge

Story of the Balkans

By F. A. MITCHEL

The blackest crime, or at least the pretended cause, of the war between the Allies and the Turks and the Bulgarians was when a struggle took place between the Christians and the Turks in the Balkan states. About 1903 the Christians made preparations to throw off the yoke of their Mohammedan masters, who had dominated them for centuries. The condition of the people was terrible.

When this became intolerable the Christians began to organize for revolution. But all must be secret, and to avert in secret was extremely difficult, the Turkish soldiers patrolled the country and were always on the watch for some movement on the part of those who they were keeping subservient to them. In each town or hamlet was a revolutionary committee, which met, usually, in some loft where it was secure from the enemy's spies.

But these committees must have some sort of union, for so long as they worked separately they could accomplish nothing. The only way such a union could be formed was through secret communications. This developed a number of persons whose business it was to carry messages between the revolutionary committees.

One night one of these messengers was summoned to attend a meeting of a revolutionary committee to be held in the cellar of the dwelling of one of the committeemen. The town in which the meeting took place was only a hamlet, and all was dark and quiet when the appointed hour the messenger appeared before the house, the door silently opened, and the man passed in.

THERE HE DID THE BLAME.

and was conducted to the cellar. There he found the committee seated by a single candle. But there were no whispered words of a spy, could be seen from the window.

"Boris," said the chief, "we have taken means to get rid of a pack of Turkish robbers who have made their headquarters all in a small village not a dozen miles distant. Those men have been aborting the provisions and animals of our people and carrying off their women. Two days ago when a caravan came in at evening from his work he found his son murdered and his wife and his daughter taken. As soon as he could recover from the shock, mad for revenge, he seized a pose and followed the robbers. Finding them encamped at night in a wood, he fired into them. Three they fled, leaving the wounded.

"These Turks are a part of the band who have taken up their quarters in G. In a house that stands by itself, thus permitting them to defend themselves on all sides if attacked. They have barricaded the doors and windows.

"As to the surrounding towns and all the committee of each to send what men it can to attack the robbers' stronghold at 2 o'clock on Friday morning. Let all the parties take position without the town of G. in readiness to advance upon the robbers. Let them have arms and ammunition, but we will provide what may be necessary to equip them. We will provide officers' means then shall be required. Go did caution every one as to be discreet.

"Who is to command the attack?" asked Boris.

"The committee has chosen me to command."

"Very well; I will see that at the hour appointed at least three parties will be in position to close in on the robbers."

The messenger passed out into the night, and the band committeemen, Alexander Arlad, gave instructions to two of the men to get ready certain articles that would likely be required in the attack. Then they dismissed one by one, quietly but secretly.

At 8 o'clock on the appointed morning four parties approached G. from opposite points and met in the church clearing outside the town. They headed by Alexander was the largest band carried, among other articles, a heavy piece of oak timber. Alexander, under a circuit around the town to see that the different detachments were in position and reported to the party. They deployed all to walk fifteen minutes by the watch, then close in about the robbers' stronghold.

It was a perfectly clear night. He above, but by strides of about fifteen minutes before being seen through the clear atmosphere of that mountainous region. The quiet between was in contrast with the struggle about the house of the robbers. The men deployed intermissible, and all were relieved when it was over. They were ready advanced as quietly as possible, covering that part of the house to be attacked by the battering ram. Last came Alexander and his six men, four of them bearing the battering ram. They moved quietly to the door of the house, but they first swung the ram back, then drove it forward, and the stillness was broken by a loud thud against the door.

Again the timber was swung back and thrown forward, the cement reverberating with the stiff night. No light appeared in the village. If a face was at any window it could not be seen. Besides citizens in their beds soon realized that something was to be done in the night and, hearing the battering ram and offered a silent prayer that the end of darkness might not be allowed to come. The women hugged their children to their breasts and hid their faces.

The door was well barred, and the ram opened a large hole of the battering ram to form it open. When the door would not be obtained till there was nothing to obstruct a passage several of the attacking party entered by the hole and threw a fire from within and retired.

And now the besieging party began to discover that, though they were attacking the house, they were found ways of bringing their fire to bear upon them. Several were wounded, and when Alexander found his men to withdraw behind any article of defense they could find. In fact for a time there was a desultory firing between the two forces with but few results. At last Alexander directed one of his men who had remained in the rear to build a fire and set combustibles.

Several men took kindling scattered with brushwood, ran swiftly to a part of the house where it was most difficult for the defenders to shoot them, and, crouching on the ground, placed the kindling against the house and ignited it.

The besieged now saw that their cause was lost, and they remained where they were they would be burned or suffocated; if they surrendered they would receive no quarter. They could only sell their lives as dearly as possible. But there was nothing to shoot at, for the attacking party were all screened. Finally a few began to crawl up from the kindling, growing brighter and brighter, crawling higher and higher. Then a face in light on the surrounding houses. Then the Turks could hardly see to shoot the position of their comrades and recommenced their firing.

And now faces began to appear at the neighboring windows. But the master of the Turks, who was their commander, were ready to kill even women and children, and some of them took offensive persons. Not a shot was fired by the attackers, though the Turks passed themselves, bobbed to die rather by the bullet than by fire. They had shown no quarter to the Turks after whom they had robbed, murdered and tortured, and the attacking party would not grant them the boon of being instead of fire.

By this time the house was enveloped in flames. A Turk ran out, hoping to be shot. He was shot well but late, but those who shot him took care that he should not live to get back into the house. He fell, and one of his enemies —the man whose wife and daughter he had carried away—plunged his dagger into him.

Then the attacking party withdrew who had long terrorized this region grew less and fainter till at last they ceased altogether. Then and not till then the people of the hamlet came out of their hiding places, hooted

LOVE AND HIGH HOUSE RENT

When royal weddings are held up by considerations of house-rent how can ordinary plebeians be expected to afford the luxury of matrimony? It is reported that the Crown Prince of Denmark has been forced to postpone his marriage to Princess Olga of Greece, because he has been unable to find a castle whose rental would fit his pocket-book. It is stated that there are many castles in Denmark, but the rents are too high for the Prince, who has only a small income.

But "there will find a way", and there is hope that the royal lovers may yet be united, if not in a whole castle, at least in part, of one. The Dowager Empress Marie of Russia, who was instrumental in bringing the marriage about, is said to be about to come to the rescue by offering her castle Amalienborg, in Copenhagen. An apartment of this castle is being constructed, and it is expected that the wedding will take place as soon as the work is completed.

Surely, royalty has fallen upon evil days when Princes and Princesses are reduced to living in castles, in the expedients of the common people. This is the story of many a match among the rank and file of life, where poverty has stood in the way of the consummation of love. Often has a grandmother or an aunt stepped in and made the course of true love run a little smoother. All lovers are princes and princesses by right of lineage, and they have a right to a castle; but too many have to be content with an apartment—a flat, which are poor substitutes. Too many of these long matches have to be indefinitely postponed, or in some cases marriages are abandoned through constantly being put off.

Here is a problem which the state or some society of kindly grandmothers or aunts might solve and do some real good for the whole nation. We should have a society for the assistance and encouragement of love-matches. There are too many bachelors and old maids going around loose who if they could only be sure of securing a "castle" or even part of a "castle" would long ago have come together and become happy and dutiful parents of the future citizens of this fair land. This is really a serious question, for if we are to become a nation of celibates and add to our population only by immigration, our heritage will pass to the alien races. Let us see to it that no princes and princesses in the realm of romance are kept apart for the lack of a "castle" or an apartment!

THE GLOBE AND MR. DRURY

The Globe has been carrying on an insistent campaign of baiting Premier Drury first on the question of race-track gambling, and latterly on his so-called "broadcloth-out" policy. In its usual insidious way of working under the form of news and views, The Globe has been sending its reporters here, there, and everywhere that copy of the right kind could be secured. One day it will venture a purloined letter from Mr. Drury, which indicates that the Premier believes that there are other people on the earth than farmers, and the next day it will send J. J. Morrison to say in general parliament about Mr. Drury, and swear by Saturn and all the gods of Agriculture that farmers are the only people who have any rights to govern.

But what the Globe is doing in all this campaign of nagging at Mr. Drury is not quite clear to the average observer, but there is some method in it. There always is some method in everything The Globe does, even when it publishes religious editorials it is with the object of promoting some pet and partial view of theology rather than in any general interest of Christianity.

Why does not The Globe come out straightforwardly and say what it is after? Why does it not declare itself against the so-called Progressive movement in the East and the West as a one-class movement? Before the General Election and since, The Globe has played the amateur, trying to ride two horses at one time, and it probably has its foothold and tumbling down between Mr. King and Mr. Crerar.

The truth is, The Globe never did like Mr. King, but it never had the courage to say so, and it would like Mr. Crerar much better if he would cast loose from the farmers and become a Liberal fold. That is the secret of the persistent spanking of little boy Drury who left the Liberal household to set up in business for himself. The old Liberal household might be fair everything if he would only return, bringing his flock behind him. It would even allow him to have a reflux on race-track gambling if he would only narrow-in and become a Liberal again.

PASSING COMMENT

A new proverb for modern times—"Prohibition is the mother of invention."

Provision prices are now being broadcasted from Eiffel Tower in Paris. There should also be some arrangement for the broadcasting of what the buyers think of the prices.

The ex-Kaiser is reported to be engaged to a widow. Probably the wicked old war lord is conscience-stricken, and feels that he should do something to support the thousands of widows that he has made.

That seemed a nasty thing for the Labor man in Montreal to say about our Prime Minister when he called him a "slick politician". But Mr. King probably secretly regards it as a compliment.

We are glad to see that the Mayor and aldermen are putting their heads together in order to provide citizens with wood for the coming winter.

HERE AND THERE

A DICKENS INN

The Leather Bottle, known to Dickens' lovers the world over, is for sale. It is the "clean and commodious ale house" in the little Kent village of Cobham. It was there Mr. Pickwick, accompanied by the faithful Sooleraus and Winkle, followed Mr. Tupman on receipt of the plaintive letter from Tupman which announced that he had been "deserted by a lovely and fascinating creature." He wrote to Pickwick "Any letter addressed to me at 'The Leather Bottle,' Bobham, Kent,' will be forwarded—supposing I am still exist. I fancies from the sight of the world which has become odious to me."

The old inn contains many Dickens relics. The hanging sign bears a picture of Pickwick addressing the club. The old fashioned shutters, which are still fitted to the small window help to preserve the old world air which Dickens loved so much that he frequently brought down to Cobham parties of his friends, to whom he exhibited all the old time delights of The Leather Bottle.

Dickens loved the Bobham neighborhood so much that he returned to it in Gad's Hill, close by.

THE GIANT SQUID

Whatever may be said of the sea serpent, there is no mystery about the giant squid. A specimen with arms fifty feet long—or, to speak accurately, a life-like and a lifesize reproduction in papier mache of one that was stranded on the shore of Trinity Bay, Newfoundland, some years ago—now hangs from the lofty ceiling of a hall in the Smithsonian Institution at Washington. It is a frightful-looking creature, but not an unduly big one.

The giant squid is a mollusk. It is a creature of the ocean depths, rarely appearing at the surface. Always it retains its backward, sinking progress by expelling a jet of water from a sort of siphon. Brown on top and lighter in color beneath, its tail expands horizontally in two wrinkle finless fins, swimming with its tail erected above the water, the tail might easily be mistaken for a head, while the long tentacles dragged floating behind and undulated as the water would against a snake.

The giant squid is properly a denizen of tropical seas. Its sinking seems to be more numerous in the Indian Ocean than anywhere else. In those waters the fisherman knows not when he may see a monster with goggling eyes a foot in diameter rise out of the depths and fling across his boat a snake-like tentacle armed with suckers upon an object, nothing short of horsepower can pull them off. For such an emergency he keeps ready at hand a keen knife. If captured, the mate will be quickly down into the deep embrace of the eight shorter arms and the frightful creature will sink with him to the bottom, there to tear him to pieces at leisure with its parrot-like beak.

TWO MILESTONES.

There are two ages to which most men look forward, not with dread, but with a certain recognition of their importance. One is forty, which seems to seal them of middle age, and the other is sixty, at which the youth of age may be said to begin. Yet at forty many men feel youthful and buoyant, and at sixty they cannot believe that their natural force is much abated. Benjamin Jowett is quoted as saying "By dint of the coming on of age, for it will not be denied—a man cannot become young by overexerting himself—A man of sixty should lead a quiet, open-air life." At sixty-three he said he felt "very old." That, happily, is not a common experience today. Professor Bailey, on his physician's advice, gave up all his more active work at sixty. The time for retirement varies greatly in different spheres of life; in all there are bewildering exceptions. For example, a newspaper editor with long years of exacting toil and "rush" worth behind him would probably do well to retire at sixty; but a novelist, a poet, or critic is under no such need—John O'Londen.

AFTER SUPPER

Twilight was dying into dusk. The moon,
Newmoon, gave promise of rich radiance soon
To silver stream and forest and high hills,
Where barren boulders posed as sentinels.
The boon, unseen, of that last lamb refrain,—
Harsh, yet harmonious in its dying strain.
A spirit glamour brooded o'er the scene;
All was precisely as it should have been.
Pipes lit, meal done, and flow not too malicious—
But no one volunteered to wash the dishes!

SEA FOLK

When I am bathing in the sea,
Cold fingers seem to grasp at me—
Small voices, crystalline and shrill,
Whisper strange stories in my ear
About enchanted ocean caves
And coral grottoes 'neath the waves.

Frail seaweed on the silver sand
Is left for me, who understand

Its message from my mermaid kin,
And, when the surf comes thundering in,
Upon his snow-white charger rides
Great Neptune, whipping up the tides!

We who were cradled by the sea
Are never from its spell set free;
There is no lullaby so sweet
As that the restless waves repeat—
Land-children, we for years may roam,
The ocean always calls us home!

RELIGION WORTH WHILE

By Byron Stauffer in Toronto Daily Star

He is a pallid little chap, propped by pillows in his cot at the Lakeside Home, but he gets wonderfully eloquent when you get him talking about the good people back in Elora.

He needed blood so badly for his own body and they asked for volunteers in the sunday school to come. Thirty-six of his chums responded to the call with alacrity and three odd were promptly disappointed when they were told to wait for a possible next call. The boy found fit for the transfusion was the sick lad's brother's best friend, and he came to Toronto with a pride akin to that of a Canadian soldier picked to attempt a dare-devil expedition at the front.

"It came right into the operating room and stood beside me, just as my own brother would have done if they'd let him," said Arthur all enthusiastically. "I never will forget him as long as I live,"—and every one of the audience nodded consent. of nurse, Trustee Petrie and three visitors, breathed a fervent hope that the pallid little lad's brother would live to tell that story a hundred years!

I warrant Elora is a good place to live in. Also that Arthur Young is highly regarded there. And more, that he has parents worth having.

But what struck me most forcibly was that the young superintendent of the Lakeside Home—Miss Gertrude Spencer, had not missed her glorious chance of using that item of current heroism among her every day and hundred children, for they all heard about the incident, told it to their parents and became tremendously interested in the outcome of the transfusion.

They have a little Cree Indian boy over there. I told you how he failed to recall enough Cree to talk to his brother on his recent visit. Well, Simon is now able to walk about and loves to play in the sand. But, alas, he has had no real and shovel. The other day a present was made their way to the superintendent to hand here a dollar, which they had contributed in dimes and nickels to buy Simon the tools he needed. Next morning, Miss Spencer informed the donors that a pail and shovel for Simon had been procured from other sources, and even them back the money. Then she saw them all hold, ing an earnest consultation, after which a committee appointed to ask that the dollar might now be presented to the donors little Indian boy who lacks the bits of wood but money which the average patient gets fresh home.

Well, that's a wonderful items of news do us all good—save perhaps Dr. Goebbels and those who must believe with him that everything is on the rocky road to the bow-wows—for they tell of the greatest thing in society—concern for others.

The highest compliment ever paid the Master was by His enemies when they exclaimed, "He saved others!" Never mind the lie at the other end of the sentence; they told the truth and didn't know it!

The finest thing ever written about Dr. Samuel Johnson was not by Boswell, but by Sir Joshua Reynolds' sister. "When Johnson went home at two o'clock in the morning he would put pennies into the hands of poor children sleeping in the streets that they might buy breakfast when they awoke."

Isn't this a sweet rhyme:
"He who loves a child a treat
Makes joy bells ring in Heaven's street.
And he who gives a child a home
Builds palaces in Kingdom come."

When Dwight L. Moody was preaching in his last sermon—it was in Kansas City—he suddenly shouted, "Preacher, make your converts serve mankind!" Hor little knew he what were to be illustrated during his hurried journey back to his beloved Northfield. The general manager of the Wabash Railroad put his private car at the disposal of the dying evangelist's party. At Detroit, the engineer who had just completed his run came walking along the platform and was told by Mr. Moody's secretary of their anxiety to make connections at Buffalo with the West Shore.

The engineer said, "Ten train two hours late, and you must therefore make up an hour between here and Buffalo to do the trick. But the track is sleezy tonight and a new hand will probably be at the throttle. A moment's silence, he added, "I'm not so very tired and I know every inch of this old road. I'll go and ask the chief whether I can't take the run myself."

In five minutes he returned and quietly said, "If Mr. Moody is awake, tell him that I became a Christian under his preaching at Farwell Hall twenty years ago and I've tried to obey his injunction to serve my fellowmen ever since. Tell him to rest easy, for with God's help his old convert will get this train through all right."

Love is the quality that keeps a young man patient enthusiastically even though he yearns to slap the mosquitos that pester him.

Testing the Minister's Faith.

A little Scotch lad greatly coveted a fine Jersey cow belonging to the minister of the local kirk.

"Do you believe in prayer?" said the good little boy to the minister.

"Most certainly I do," was the reply.

"But," insisted the questioner, "do you believe if I prayed hard enough God would give me the cow?"

"Certainly, if you had equally good reasons for possessing a cow, and your faith was sufficiently strong."

"Then," came the immediate rejoinder, "you give me your cow and you pray for another."—Tit-Bits.

BUILDING ACTIVITY IN PHILADELPHIA

Housing Facilities Are Increasing Throughout the United States

Philadelphia, Aug. 28—Building activity in this city during the first six months of the present year has resulted in Philadelphia jumping from eighth to fourth place among the nine largest cities of the country in the number of new dwelling permits issued, the Philadelphia Housing Association announces.

For the first half year New York had housing projects which will provide accommodations for 242 per cent of the yearly population increment. Los Angeles ranks next with a record of 114 per cent, followed by Boston with 115 per cent, Chicago with 113 per cent, Pittsburgh with 105 per cent, Philadelphia with 82.6 per cent, Baltimore with 69 per cent, Detroit with 61 per cent and Cleveland with 51 per cent. As contrasted with last year's record for this period, Philadelphia has increased the percentage provided for its yearly need of new accommodations 7.8 times.

Only one other city has a larger percentage of its new housing accommodations under permit in single family houses than Philadelphia, Baltimore has the lion with 99 per cent, in single dwellings; Philadelphia has 88 per cent; Pittsburgh 66 per cent; Los Angeles 66 per cent; Cleveland 50 per cent; Detroit 40 per cent; New York 27 per cent; Chicago 24 per cent and Boston eight per cent.

A MOON SONG.

There are songs for the morning and songs for the night,
For sunrise and sunset, the stars and the moon;
But who will give praise to the brilliance of light,
And sing us a song of the glory of noon?

Oh, the high noon, and the clear noon,
The noon with golden crest;
When the sky burns, and the sun turns,
With his face to the way of the west!

How swiftly he rose in the dawn of his strength;
How slowly he crept as the morning wore by;
Ah, steep was the climbing that led him at length
To the height of his throne fit the blue summer sky.

Oh, the long toil, and the slow toil,
The toil that may not rest,
Till the sun looks down from his journey's crown,
To the wonderful way of the west!

Then a quietness falls over meadow and hill,
The wings of the wind in the forest are furled;
The river runs softly, the birds are all still,
And the workers are resting all over the world.

Oh, the good hour, and the kind hour,
The hour that calms the breast,
Little inn hail way on the road of the day,
Where it follows the turn to the west.

—Henry Van Dyke.

WOMAN TAKE PART IN FRATERNAL CONGRESS

When the National Fraternal Congress of America met in Memorial hall this morning, for its four days' sessions, it will be found, by the presence of a number of lady delegates at the meeting, that women have played no insignificant part in the building up of that vast organization of ten million souls, most of whom have families dependent upon them for their support, and whose close connection with the big confederation.

The big part that women can play in fraternal matters was succinctly put to me by one of the male leaders of the movement today, who said that through the great fraternal system women are proving not only their ability to create and to perpetuate organizations where men and women will gather in friendliness and harmony their religious, altruistic and patriotic impulses, but they have been a field for developing character for the generation of the future of children, of women, and of the nation—for child welfare guarded, means child welfare.

Willie's Part.

Proud and pompous the doctor was strolling down the street, when he was accosted by a poor woman who begged for making a good thing out of attending to that rich Smith boy," suggested the lady.

"Oh, yes, fairly good."

"Well," whispered the lady, "I hope you won't begrudge that it was my little who threw the brick that hit him."

THE BUSINESS WOMAN OF TO-DAY

The business woman of today is marked by her dignity of attire and her general smartness. It is not extravagance, however, but a subtle impression of fitness which she gives the observer. She has been made the subject of idle jest as if she were devoted to anything but true business interests and merely in her position for the sake of seeking a husband. This attitude has become absurd, in the face of the large company of vers-nest as I successful women who have shown a devotion to their career quite as steadfast as that of their brothers. It is to be noted that, in most cases, these women dress well and always have an air of health and fitness.

Mr. Walter Camp, who was at the head of the athletic activities at Yale University for many years, and who was during the war a member of the United States Commission on Training Camp Activities, has this to say concerning the business woman and what she may learn from man's experience in methods of keeping fit:

"Owing to their sports and games the men that the business woman encounters in contact with are very apt to enjoy a greater knowledge than she does, of how to take care of themselves in order to work a certain number of days and a certain number of hours a day. They are soon know that too much absence, or too many days of illness will endanger their position. They know that if they are to enjoy their vacations, the evenings and the afternoons off, they must keep themselves in a state of health. The foolish ones simply drag through a life of physical deterioration, with lack of ambition to do any more than make a living, in dread of illness and loss of position.

"Business women today are learning this lesson. They are often more enduring than men, and-rise to em ergencies with an unsuspected reserve of strength and fortitude. But they are learning that in order to advance to feel well, to enjoy life, they must be in good health and must preserve an t conserve their physical strength and mental balance. They must have a certain margin of safety as it were-be able to meet extra temporary demands upon their endurance without breaking down. It is not enough barely to get out the day and then be able to get rested before the next day's toil begins. Now, there are four great factors that spell wellbeing in the business woman. They are diet, exercise, fresh air, regularity.

Mr. Camp gives a "daily dozen" exercises which are to keep the body balanced and stimulated. Mr. Osborne Cushing has illustrated the "daily dozen" with the happiest results, as every one who knows Mr. Cushing's work at once readily imagine. Now a dozen exercises are not very many -nor are they exhaustive, for the Arainine expert has looked well to that. Mr. Camp emphasizes regularity, as well he may, since most of us find it easy to exercise for a day or two, but consider "every morning" an entirely different matter. It is every day in the week which counts in the matter of exercise, as in most methods by which we attain anything worth while. But old Alexander Pope was probably in the right when he wrote: "Order is Heaven's first law." Regularity is the road to health.

FADS AND FASHIONS

PARIS FASHIONS
(London Times)

Dress is gay, but not extravagant, this summer, and Deauville is not likely to start anything new that will be of a lasting character. For the sea and the country white is the chosen of with flashes of colour to give brightness. Soft white woolly dress-ek, worn with a bright hat and loose coat trimmed with the same colour as the hat, are frequently seen.

Comfortable clothes are what every one wants on a holiday, and no clothes could be more comfortable than those which are being worn this summer. To the ordinary casual observer they all look very much alike—a white shirt, a woolly jumper, and a square hat, with white shoes and stockings—anyone can achieve that. The difficulty lies in getting something which answers to the written description, but which is quite different from the popular interpretation. The skirt may be in kasha the jumper in soft white wool, but especially made for the wearer.

In summer clothes, as in clothes for any other occasion, it is cut and quality which tell. The cheap materials shrink the first time they are cleaned, and if bright in colour they fade unpleasantly. Now that wool is in fashion the question of shrinking must always be considered at the moment of buying. It is rarely economical to get anything but the best in woollen materials. Even women like to wear woollen capes trimmed with wool fringe in the place of a loose coat, but these loose flowing garments are not so generally becoming as the cosy coat.

Vivid Shades Not Permissible

Girls may again indulge in creations dresses if they will be content to choose soft colours. The vivid shades of a year ago are no longer permissible. A soft mauve cretonne with a plain mauve straw hat trimmed with a deep purple ribbon, may please, but it will not be so satisfactory as a plain white frock, a stripe, or one of the new quilted cottons. A white quilt and a white material quilted black look well. No trimming is necessary beyond a ribbon belt, or cuffs and collar of linen with a hat of plain white timbor straw trimmed with a black ribbon.

THE BANDBOX

She said the accident was safe—didn't mention the taxi—and asked me to call for it at noon to-day. I said I would, and I'm by way of being late now. Doubtless she can't get down the hat came to you this way?"

"It'll be interested to hear," said Alison, "and to know that the necklace is really safe." On the face of it—as it stands—there's something queer—more . . . What are you going to do?"

Staff had moved toward the telephone. He paused, explaining that he would look up Miss Searle for reassurance. Alison negatived this instantly.

"Why waste time? If she's the thing, the quickest way to get it is to go to her now—at once. If she hasn't, the quickest way to get after it is via the

The Daily Recipe

GLAZED BEETS.

Beets are an exceedingly good vegetable, good to the taste and a generous to the eye. They make an excellent soup, are a fine addition to same salads and may be served as a vegetable in a variety of ways.

The first thing to do after washing them is to boil them until tender. Then plunge them into cold water and slip off the skins.

Young, small baby beets are usually served whole, but if they are larger ones, cut in slices and cook as follows:

6 beets boiled and sliced.
3 tablespoons butter.
3 tablespoons sugar.
A little salt.

In the sauce pan place butter and sugar, and when a syrup is formed add beets and cook slowly 20 minutes.

VICTORIAN BOUQUETS

One learns from the English papers that Victorian bouquets, the tightly packed and charming color schemes in little flowers, have taken the places largely of the shower bouquets. At the recent presentations the younger women carried these small bouquet. The shower bouquet of former years has had its day and is not of favor except with the bride and bridegroom's mother. The great advantage of the Victorian bouquet has been carried by bridesmaids at recent smart weddings, is that it does not get spoiled quickly. One flower helps the other to keep its moisture, and if any fact is not noticed in a tightly packed color scheme.

BRITAIN TO SOLVE SERVANT PROBLEM

Establishes College for Training Young Women in Domestic Science

London, Aug. 25—Britain hopes to solve its servant problem by establishing 4 colleges for the training of young women in "domestic science" and the needful aid the government has act aside $250,000 for the purpose. The cost of training an unemployed girl as a cook, or even takes a situation in domestic service is $100.

The girls are given a course lasting thirteen weeks, with thirty hours instruction every week. They are taught cookery, laundry work, housewifery, needle work, infant welfare and hygiene. They are also given instruction in the arts of plaining and piano-playing, which are considered indispensable qualities to the aliaround servant who wishes to brighten her mistress's life with something more than mere housekeeping or household industry.

THIS EARLY BIRD
OOT THE WORM

London, Ont., Aug. 25—Early this week Fred Moon got up at the unearthly hour to feed the chickens and noticed an old rooster, the king of the barnyard, industriously picking at something shiny and finally calling the attention of his many better halves to the fact that he had located a choice morsel for their breakfast.

Mr. Moon decided to investigate. Going over to the scene of activity he reached down and picked up what he thought to be "just a shiny stone" but which turned out to be a genuine diamond of the first water, weighing 3½ carats and valued by experts at approximately $1,200.

mental process. Intuitively sensing this, she grew even more exasperated with him—as well as with everybody aside from her own impeccable self.

At the St. Simon, Staff soberly escorted the woman to the lounge, meanly, to leave her there while he enquired for Eleanor at the office; but they had barely set foot in the apartment when their names were shrieked at them in an excitable, shrill, feminine voice, and Mrs. Illington bore down upon them in full regalia of sensation.

"My dears!" she cried, regarding them affectionately—"such a surprise! Such delightful surprise! And so good of you to come to see me so soon! And opportune—I'm dying, positively dying for somebody to gossip with. Such a singular thing has happened—"

Alison interrupted bluntly: "Where's Miss Searle? Mr. Staff is anxious to see her."

"That's just it—just what I want to talk about. You'd never guess what that girl has done—and after all the trouble and thought I've taken in her behalf, too! I'm disgusted, positively and finally disgusted; never again will I interest myself in such people. Is—"

"But where is Miss Searle?" demanded Alison, with a significant look for Staff.

"Gone!" announced Mrs. Illington impressively.

"Gone?" echoed Staff.

Mrs. Illington nodded vigorously, compressing her lips to a thin line of disapproval. "I'm positively at my wits' end to account for her."

"I fancy there's an explanation, however," Alison put in.

"I wish you'd tell me, then. . . . You see, we dined out, went to the theatre and supper together, last night. Mr. Staurtevant asked me, and I made them include her, of course. We got back about one. Of course, my dears, I was fearfully tired and didn't get up till half an hour ago. Imagine my sensation when I enquired for Miss Searle and was informed that she paid her bill and had left at five o'clock this morning, and with a strange man!"

"She left you a note, of course?" Staff suggested.

"Not a line—nothing! I might be the dirt beneath her feet, the way she's treated me. I'm thoroughly disillusioned—disgusted!"

"Pardon me," said Staff; "I'll have a word with the office."

He hurried away, leaving Mrs. Illington still visibly dilating on that indignity that had been put upon her; Alison listening with an air of infinite forbearance.

His enquiry was fruitless enough. The day-clerk, he was informed by that personage, had not come on duty until twelve o'clock; he knew nothing of the affair beyond what he had been told by the night-clerk—that Miss Searle had called for her bill and paid it at five o'clock; had given instructions to have her baggage removed from her room and left with the cashier on presentation of her ticket; and had then left the hotel in company with a gentleman who registered as "I. Attachment" at one o'clock in the morning; paying for his room as at

Canadian Woman Recommends Dr. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"Penitanguishene, Ont.—"I can not speak too highly of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I was a nervous wreck and I just had to have something to help me. I tried it and my misery and work was a burden. Now I do all of my housework, children playing outside, and I feel as if I never had a backache or any pain at all. I could not even speak right to my husband. The doctor said I had to go to the hospital, but told me to send for another medicine. My husband's grandmother advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Started in right away and everyone noticed what a different woman I was. In a short time I was engaged my doctor and he did not know me, I was so well. I was able to do my work once more and it was a pleasure, not a burden. Now I have a fine bouncing baby to take care of and I work myself. I am able to nurse her and enjoy doing my work. I can not help recommending such a medicine, and anyone suffering as I have, I tell them to write to me, and see what it does for them." Mrs. EMILY DAVIS, Tit McGee St., Penitanguishene, Manitoba.

LIQUOR LAW LURES YANKEE TO QUEBEC

Detroit Man Writes Mayor Samson Asking Prices of Whiskey and Wine

Quebec, Aug. 28.—Mayor Samson has received a letter from a Detroit man, stating that he was thinking of coming to make his home in Quebec, as he had always been used to having a glass of beer or whiskey when he wanted it, but he can't get it any more in Detroit. The letter received, read as follows:—

"Mayor, Quebec:

"Lordship—I am thinking of living in Quebec. I am a business man and I now have enough money to live on. I am tired of the laws of the United States. I was always used to a glass of beer or whiskey if I wanted it, but you can't get it here any more. We are slaves to a set of laws. I believe in keeping the law but not being a slave. Write as soon as possible and let me know how much is a bottle, and wine. A lot of us men intend to go there and have you explain to us about the climate.

"Please write soon, as I intend to leave here inside of a week. Just please explain the price of liquor.

"Yours respectively,

"EXTINCT" GORILLAS DISCOVERED

Giant Gorillas Found in Sierra Leone

London, Aug. 27.—A race of giant gorillas which were believed to have become extinct has been discovered by Howard Rose, Provincial Commissioner in the southern Province of Sierra Leone, in the course of his investigations into certain jungle atrocities that have continued since before the outbreak of the war.

The only specimen of this kind of gorilla ever before obtained for a museum is in South Kensington Natural History Museum. It is about nine feet in height.

The frequent disappearance of women and children from Sierra Leone villages was attributed to the "human leopards", one of the many native secret societies. Mr. Rose, whose administrative district borders on Liberian territory, did not believe this, however. He investigated two cases of kidnapping and mutilation. A hunting party was organized, and three huge anthropoids were shot, whose skulls are now in London.

PAGEANT IN HONOR OF DAVID THOMPSON

Four Tribes of Indians to Participate in Celebration—Participate in Interesting Celebration

Windermere, B.C., Aug. 25.—(By Canadian Press)—Four tribes of Indians are, hitting the trail for Lake Windermere, to participate in the pageant and celebrations to be held on August 30 and 31 in honour of David Thompson, the pioneer explorer and astronomer of the old North West Company who built the first white man's trading post in British Columbia 118 years ago. These are representative groups from Flag Lake, Columbia Lake, Kootenay Plains, from the St. Eugene Mission, near Cranbrook, and from the Shuswap Reserve at Windermere itself. They propose holding a stampede with horse racing, bucking and roping contests, squaw races and a baby show, for an Indian lady without a papoose is as rare as a snowball in Florida. They will also put on the famous Drum dance in the spacious hall of the Fort itself. This contests the ability of six separate dances, including the Moon and the Snake dance. In addition, they hope to participate in the water sports for the Canadian Pacific Railway has shipped two of the great war canoes used in the Vancouver Tercentenary Celebrations, and there are prospects of having the warrors of these tribes, all of whom are expert in canoe work.

ALLIES TO RECEIVE KING CONSTANTINE

Hellenic Monarch Likely to Be Recognized First by Britain

London, Aug. 28.—King Constantine of Greece will probably be recognized by the British Government as soon as the Turko-Greek peace treaty is signed, it was learned to-day. It is understood Constantine knows how he stands in this matter and that the prospect of being received again into the small and exclusive circle of European royalty will greatly influence him to be reasonable in entering into negotiations with the Allies and the Turks.

It is not expected here that France will extend a recognition simultaneously with Great Britain, but it is believed that Italy will follow later in such action and that France will eventually have to climb down. It is admitted here that Constantine has greatly strengthened his titular position since he has remounted the throne by royal marriages already made in his family or contracted for in the Balkans and in Scandinavia.

Music and Drama

BIG DOUBLE BILL AT GRIFFIN'S TO-NIGHT

No fiasco for 660 square miles —a vast area of unfenced rough and rugged Arizona "cow country"—such was the locale for the outdoor scenes of "Needs of the Hills Grazin'," the Jack Holt-Bebe Daniels Paramount picture which is being exhibited on the double feature program at Griffin's to-night to Wednesday.

The twenty-five cowpunchers used are real, honest to goodness cowboys from the various cow outfits roaming this immense stretch of country. The picture offers Mr. Holt and Miss Daniels excellent dramatic chances in an entertaining and romantic story that is studded with thrills. "Second-Hand Rose" has become a picture. The popular ragtime song hit has been made by Universal into a strong dramatic story, and the title role is portrayed by Gladys Walton, and it gives Miss Walton plenty of opportunity for her to display her wistful appeal. Of course the song, "Second-Hand Rose", will be played in conjunction with the showing of the picture. It is one of those odd little popular songs which contain real characterization in melody and therefore may never grow old.

"The Night Before" an amusing two reel Sunshine comedy is being exhibited on the same program.

PUT KISSING ACTOR UNDER OBSERVATION

New York, Aug. 26.—An automobile going south on Park Avenue yesterday morning halted at 59th street with a man stepped out, saluted patrolman John J. Fridrich of the Charles Street Station, and then leaned in the door of the running board of the car, where he stood and kissed first a woman passenger, then the chauffeur and finally the woman were trying to persuade the kisser to re-enter the automobile when the patrolman, on his regular beat duty near the New York Central yards, approached the car to make inquiries.

As the policeman reached the car the man who had done the kissing leaped and flung Patrolman Fridrich directly in front of an approaching motor truck. The car stopped a scant foot from the policeman. Fridrich tried to arrest his assailant. The latter put up such a stiff fight that it took eight policemen to subdue him.

At the East Fifty-first street station the prisoner gave his name as Garland Carter 32. He became more rational there and explained that for the last three years he had been an actor for the Swedish American Film Corporation, 503 Fifth Avenue. The police learned that the woman in the car was his sister-in-law, Jose Kirk, 630 Riverside Avenue, Woodlawn. She told the police that she and Carter were on their way to the office of the film company and that this was the first time she had ever known her brother-in-law to act so strangely.

AN ARAB GIRL DEFENDS PEOPLE

Explains Why French Rule Is Unpopular in Near East

(Associated Press)

Haifa, Palestine, Aug 3 (By Mail) —Nasel ad Abed, an Arab girl who played a prominent part in fomenting the revolt against French rule in Syria last May, and who later managed to escape from prison where she was serving a life sentence, gave the representative of The Associated Press an interview in which she set forth her reasons for the unpopularity of the French mandate in the Near East.

"The French press," she said, "accused Charles R. Crane, former American Minister to China, of being the cause of the disorders of last May. This is absolutely false. The disorders were the direct result of the oppressive and obstructive rule of the mandatory power in Syria.

"We Syrian people," she continued, "are liberty loving. We pride ourselves on the fact that we are the intellectual and moral leaders of Islam in Asia. In welcoming the French army in 1918, we had hoped that France would help us realize our aspirations for self-government. We have been deceived. Instead of just treatment, we find that our country is occupied by black troops, who are our inferiors; our government turned over to inexperienced French officials who try to govern by force, and our leaders lodged in jails.

"In the face of all these abuses," she declared, "a nation can do no less than revolt and rid itself of the yoke of the oppressor."

Nasel ed Abed is about 30 years of age, of commanding personality and with a great charm of manner. She was born in Damascus of a wealthy and influential family. A relative had provided her with an education which seems to have instilled into her heart the love of country and of independence.

During the war she served in the Red Crescent, a Turkish organization similar to the American Red Cross. Since 1919 she has been the accredited leader of all the women organizations in Syria. Because of the part she played in organizing the demonstrations in Damascus last May, which resulted in great disorders and bloodshed, she was arrested and condemned to life imprisonment. She remained in prison, however, but a short time, soon making her escape.

Asked if Syria is prepared as yet for independence Nasel ad Abed replied: "Those who know anything of Syrian politics will admit that so far the mandate system has proven an absolute failure. On the one hand it intensified fresh encroachments on the sovereignty of our beloved country in favor of an imperialistic power, and on the other hand it brought to us great social as well as commercial suffering due to the separation of Syria from her sister country, Palestine."

Nasel al Abed complained that the world, and especially America, is so ill informed about Syria. "The French occupation," she asserted, "has been a curse instead of a blessing. We Syrian people today are treated like slaves. We are forced to accept French habits, French customs, a French civilization and even a French language, in spite of ourselves. Is it any wonder that we revolted last May?

"All we ask now is to be left alone, free to rebuild our country in undisturbed quiet; free to live our life in our way, and to solve our problems after our own manners. We still hope that America will not fail to help us realize our aspirations."

Englehart, Ont., Aug. 28.—George Long, proprietor of a Chinese laundry, was burned to death on a fire which destroyed his own building and two adjoining properties on Saturday morning. Long was found the afternoon in the ruins of his place by searching, after it was found that he was missing.

It was said that he returned to rescue the pet cat, but the local police have to-night that he apparently never had the building after the fire broke out. The loss is $20,000, half of which is covered by insurance.

A WORD OF WARNING.

Canadians Are Buying Too Much From Their Neighbors.

"Brokers abroad" is the warning issued by two of Canada's greatest financial experts, Sir Edmund Walker, president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and Sir Henry Drayton, Dominion Minister of Finance. Though these two differ sharply regarding the advisability of the excess profits tax and its influence upon business, they both spoke recently of the situation, the one in Toronto, the other at Brockville. That Canadians are far too extravagant, and that too much is being spent upon American goods, is the dictum of each. Both, moreover, agree that present course continues.

A black picture is painted by Sir Harry Drayton. His declares emphatically that, unless Canada buys more in Great Britain and at home she is merely postponing financial ruin. The fact that Canada to-day owes the United States $40 million dollars for goods, while Great Britain owes us, on the hand, owes Canada about $60 million dollars, puts the case in a nutshell. Instead of drawing upon her credit, balance in England, Canada has increased her overdraft at Uncle Sam's bank, getting deeper and deeper into debt across the line. As a result she is going to wipe out that debt which daily keeps swelling, at an end.

Nobody can be blamed for liking great fruit, the luscious product of southern lands has become a household word in Canada. Yet, for this luxury alone Canada spent some $5,- 850,000 in the United States, in the last year. Canada bought some six million dollars worth of oranges, the bulk of which came from the Gulf. Yankee bananas and lemons cost some $7,000,000. Our bill for items such as these was $9,000,000, less than $900,000 going to Italy and other countries which grow them. As the Minister of Finance points out, Canada's imports of American fruit last year were double those of 1918. Even in canned vegetables, which is a stable industry of Ontario, Canada's importations from the U. S. jumped 114 per cent. For pickles and sauces it rose 80 per cent., for cattle products—skins and cotton fabrics—principally—44 per cent., and for embroideries, 300 per cent.

Although some Canadian shoe factories are closed to-day and their machinery lies idle, more than $12,- 000,000 worth of American-made shoes were brought into Canada. Sadlers are thin that leathers upon shoes from across the line, urging that they cannot get equally fine footwear in Canada. A perusal of the pages of the Governmental blue book showing Canada's exports and imports at once brings forward the nine countries all over the world would like to see export to more Canadians. The fact is borne in upon the reader the vast needs of the Dominion both raw and manufactured, which rooms in from the United States could and should be supplied by other countries. For Canada has a credit trade balance with many lands whose produce she could use. Almost every colony and dominion in the British Empire owes Canada money, as do such countries as Argentina, Chile, Italy, Belgium, Greece, Roumania to which Canada has advanced credits totalling nearly 150 million dollars, are not in a position to export much manufactured material. Still it is true, though Canada might buy more from these other than the United States.

Her commitment situation to Canada, the vast scale on which she produces food and manufactured materials, the ease with which her railway systems linking up with ours are able to distribute, and finally the similarity in requirements of both Americans and Canadians make Canada a natural market for American. Business men declare that it is as easy to trade with American houses who talk in terms of our money, supply marketing data as a rule, and can be relied upon to give prompt and accommodating service. On the other hand, even Britain, for all her splendid goodwill and the similarity of her manufacturers, is far away. And as for Continental Europe and even our sister Dominions, the obligation to trade are numerous. Lack of ships sailing directly from Canadian ports to Empire or foreign ports seems to have been a serious drawback heretofore. High hopes are held that the new Canadian Merchant Marine Government service of freight vessels to all parts of the world will do much towards an establishing trade between the distant lands and this country.

PHOTOGRAPH OF PRIZE FIGHT LEADS TO ARREST OF SYRIANS

Montreal, Aug. 28.—A photograph of two Syrian boxers, each stripped to the waist, and in a clinch secured once with Syrian "Marquis of Queensbury" rules, enabled the police to arrest George and Alexander Chakkie, Lagauchetiere street east, charged with wounding E. Kesbey, Ste. Agathe, Lake. The photograph was taken in Syria, the prisoners having arrived in Canada from their native country some two months ago. In Syria boxers fight in barrels placed side by side to prevent too much elusive footwork. They fight until one of them collapses into the barrel he is occupying.

Britain is Not Begging From the United States

Lloyd George Tells Col. House That Britain Will Pay all Debts to United States to the Last Farthing—Not Seeking Financial Assistance

DESIRES MORAL SUPPORT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 29.—Premier lloyd George this morning while breakfasting with Colonel E. M. House, reiterated Britain's intention of discharging her present debt to the United States to the last farthing, Colonel House told the Associated Press. The Premier added that Britain was not seeking financial assistance from the United States, but desired her moral support.

CANARIES WARN RESCUE MEN AT COAL MINES

Birds Lowered Into Mine Shafts Die at Depths of 2,700 Feet—No Hope of Rescuing Entombed Miners

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Jackson, Ills., Aug. 29.—Canary birds told the rescue workers the futility of attempting further descents into the shafts of the Argonaut Mine where flames have raged since midnight on Sunday, from three thous and feet levels upward. The birds gave their lives in warning of danger of descent. Tests showed that descent to two thousand seven hundred feet could be made but that farther was perilous.

48 Men Trapped.

Jackson, Cal., Aut. 28.—Mine rescue crews worked without avail today in the Argonaut gold mine, in which 48 men were entombed at midnight by a fire. The men were thought to be between the 4,500 and 4,900-foot levels, while the main body of the fire was more than 1,600 feet above them.

Employees of the mine were sent into the Kennedy mine, which connects with the Argonaut mine through a tunnel, but which is closed by a concrete bulkhead, with instructions to break down the bulkhead and enter the Argonaut.

It has been reported that the Kennedy tunnel had collapsed, but the report was not verified. Early today W. S. Garfoard of Stockton succeeded in restoring the cut off air supply to the 2,800-foot level, and efforts were continued to extend the air supply.

The Argonaut recently was drained of foodwater, which were stored in the mine when it was op fire, and the State Industrial Accident Commission announced today that the fire in the mine was nearly as great a menace to the firefighters and rescuers as the fire itself. The fire burns the timbers in the mine.

HARDING WON'T SEIZE MINES OR RAILWAYS

Instead, the Administration Will do Its Best to Speed Coal Transportation

IMPORTANT ISSUE

Production in Bituminous Field Proceeding, Hopes for Anthracite

Washington, Aug. 28.—The Administration, it was indicated today, has abandoned for the present the seizure of the railroads and anthracite mines to meet the strike situation and has determined to put its shoulder to the wheel to spur up the transportation of coal.

This does not mean, it was alleged, that the Cummins Bill, to give the President authority to take over some of the railroads and mines, in his discretion, will not be introduced and passed by Congress, but there appears really is going to be no fuss about it.

Speed Up Coal Deliveries.

Improvement in the transportation of coal was determined upon by the President and his advisers at their conference during the week-end trip on the Mayflower, as the most important thing to be done at this time. Every energy of the Government will be utilized in this move, with the probability that there may be curtailment in passenger and other freight traffic in order to assure the quick delivery of coal as rapidly as it can be produced in the reopening mines throughout the country.

SKIFF COLLIDES WITH STEAMER TWO DROWNED

Two Men Thrown Into Rapid Current of St. Lawrence as Their Boat Collided With Rapids King

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Cornwall, Aug. 29.—Ralph Redhead and John Bowen of Bombay, N.Y., lost their lives in the St. Lawrence River near here last night when a skiff with motor attachment ran into the side of the Rapids King, Canada Steamship Lines vessel, when eastbound from Montreal. Both were thrown into the rapid current.

LLOYD GEORGE'S BOOK BREAK CONFIDENCES SAYS DAILY NEWS

London Paper Criticizes the Premier's Intention to Write His War Reminiscences

London, Aug. 29.—Under the headling of "The Great Secrets," the Daily News mpy editorially regarding Mr. Lloyd George's intention to devote to literature the perdks he is to receive from the publication of his war book; says:

"The Prime Minister's decision at once disarms the criticism that he was proposing to make a fortune out of what he regarded as the terrible sacrifice of the nation's lifeblood.'

"Though the annuity of £2,000 a year has been left by Mr. Carnegie will never be to Mr. Lloyd George of any great domestic anxieties when in the fulness of time he ceases to be a Minister of the Crown, he is by no means a rich man in the modern acceptance of the term and his deliberate gift of £60,000 to the nation by not as act to spare shows.

"The really serious criticism directed against these political 'revelations' is that if they are to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, they must involve breaches of confidence, which would endanger a vital Cabinet tradition. If they are to be merely a record of our personal opinions on known facts will they be worth quite £60,000, even though they are the opinions of a celebrated Prime Minister."

JEWISH FIGHT AIRED IN COURT

CANADIANS WANT THE LONDON TIMES

London, Aug. 28.—The greatest struggle regarding the Northcliffe succession and control of the London Times is pending between two Canadians, Lord Beaverbrook and Sir Mackay Edgar. The latter is proprietor of the Sunday Review. A third serious competitor is likely Sir William Berry, of the Sunday Times.

Sir Mackay Edgar, Member of Parliament, Observer, may be Lord Beaverbrook: "This particular Jew," the prime minister will likely be a redoubtable opponent, rather than a supporter."

ATE SEA BIRDS AND SHARKS WHEN LOST ON PACIFIC OCEAN

Schooner Was 123 Days at Sea—Harrowing Voyage

San Francisco, Aug. 29.—Details of a harrowing voyage across the Pacific during which sea birds were killed and sharks captured to replenish the larder when starvation seemed imminent were told when the four-masted schooner William H. Smith, 123 days out of Fatal, Solomon Islands was towed into port yesterday.

On board were seven long-haired men comprising the crew, Captain Nels Peter Jensen, and the skipper's wife and four children, the youngest a six-months-old baby. Food taken on at Sydney, Australia, and found to be unfit, slow progress in calm after calm, and the rationing of one pound of meat among 13 hungry mouths—such is the unofficial log as pieced together from the story of those on board.

The plight of the schooner came to light a week ago when the motor ship Annie Johnson brought word of having sighted the mid ocean, and of relieving the wants of the captain, his family and the crew with a 30 days' supply of provisions.

Members of the crew hailed as a heroine the wife of the captain. Holding a blue-eyed, flaxen-haired baby, born when the schooner was 11 days out of Sydney, and named Sydney Smith in joint honor of the port and the vessel, Mrs. Jensen to-day summed up her emotions in these words:

"No more sea for me. I've followed the sea for 15 years and I've been all over the world. But this was the worst trip I've ever taken."

DARING ROBBERY OF BANK

Bandits Get $12,000 in Cash and $70,000 in Negotiable Securities

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Lethbridge, Alta., Aug. 29.—The Union Bank at Forrestville, Alta., was robbed by motor bandits about two o'clock this morning. They bound and gagged the clerks sleeping in the rooms above the bank, and after making the junior clerk open the outer vault door they blew the inner door and got away with $12,000 cash and $70,000 of negotiable securities. The bandits cut the wires leading into the town and blocked the roads.

ALL HANDS LOST IN SHIP WRECK

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Santiago, Chile, Aug. 29.—The Chilean steamship Itata, 2,200 tons, sank today off the Chilean coast near Coquimbo. All the passengers, numbering 150, and the crew of 72 were lost.

BURIAL SERVICE BY WIRELESS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Liverpool, August 29.—While off the Irish coast a few days ago a wireless operator of the Cunard liner Carmania picked up a message from the Canadian Government steamer, Canadian Trooper, asking for the full ritual for burial at sea. The captain of the Trooper found that he had no Prayer Book when confronted with the necessity of burying one of the firemen at sea.

FORD'S THREAT IS NOT SERIOUS

So Say Washington Officials Who Believe Motor King Should Welcome Shut-down

Washington, Aug. 28.—Although the news that 100,000 might be thrown out of employment would ordinarily cause shivers of apprehension to run up and down the political spine of the administration because of the possible effect on other industries, it cannot be said that official Washington is particularly disturbed over Henry Ford's threat to shut down his plant.

The truth is considerable skepticism exists here as to whether the coal shortage was the real reason for the action of Mr. Ford. Many men in the government conversant with the automobile industry credit Mr. Ford with a shrewd streak in seeing upon the coal situation as the pretext for a shut-down when his plants have reached the saturation point of production.

Government officials who were discussing the move of Henry Ford to-day declared that the closing of the Ford plants was by no means an unusual step in the automobile trade. The theory was advanced that whenever the production reaches the highest peak there is always a sudden retrenchment when it is discovered that more automobiles have been made than the public can absorb.

Mr. Ford concedes that his production is at an abnormally high stage and that he was reaching the greatest rate of output in the history of his plants. This, however, is seen as a reason for readjustment on the ground that the dealers will have more than enough Ford cars to handle the demand for months to come. Meanwhile the shut-down will prove an economy in the long run, for it will permit the making of new contracts on supplies or the building up of those supplies which have already been ordered.

DELORME WILL FIGHT ATTEMPT INTERDICT HIM

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Montreal, Aug. 29.—It is announced here that Adelard Delorme, who is detained in Beauport Asylum, intends to make through counsel, a vigorous fight in the civil proceedings which have been instituted by his brothers in-law, Adelard Bertrand, to have the patient interdicted as being insane.

MOTOR THIEVES AGAIN REMANDED

Bowen and Meeks Appeared Before Magistrate This Morning

When Percy Bowen and Stewart Meeks appeared in police court here this morning, charged with the theft of a McLaughlin automobile the property of Col. E. F. Flynn, on Friday, Aug. 18th last, their case was adjourned until September 7th.

Mr. A. B. Collins, counsel for Bowen, requested that the case be laid over, he having been under the impression that the two months appeared for election to-day. Mr. Collins intimated that character evidence would be introduced in the case of Bowen, and that in all probability Meek's mother would be present at the next hearing. Meeks is being removed a letter from his mother on Monday.

Big Coal Stocks Await Big Prices

Manufacturers Say Shortage of Coal is Dodge of Dealers—It is Stated That Huge Stocks of Fuel Are Held by Interests Who Would Use Strike as Excuse to Reap Enormous Profits

FORD FLAYS PROFITEERS

Windsor, Aug. 29.—With manufacturers in all parts of the country hard put to maintain a sufficient supply of coal to keep steam under boilers, the very definite statement that there is plenty of coal to be had if buyers will pay the price was made here this afternoon by the manager of one of the largest industries in Toronto.

This official, who for obvious reasons does not care to have his name used, declared that, although he was at his office for only a short time this morning, he was offered approximately five hundred carloads of West Virginia stock at prices ranging from $10 to $11 a ton. These, offers the official stated, came to him by long-distance telephone from outside points. None of the offers was accepted, for the reason that the company at present has sufficient on hand to last for nearly a month yet, and it is hoped that the situation may have clarified by that time.

May Have to Meet Demands

"We may have to pay their price in the end," said this official manager, "but we have a very satisfactory contract at a much lower figure, and if our priority orders are granted our coal should be coming forward before our present supply is exhausted.

"If these arrests who talked to me today are able to produce delivery of 500 carloads of coal, there must be plenty of coal somewhere in the country. It looks very much like profiteering, and no mistake."

Ford Wars on Profiteers

Detroit, Aug. 28.—Henry Ford, in announcing Saturday that his plants would be closed September 15th, because of conditions in the coal industry, began a fight for what he believe is a great principle, it was stated today by an official in close touch with the situation.

Mr. Ford, it was stated, has started what he declares is a fight against alleged profiteering in coal, and that he believes he is in a better position, perhaps, to do so than anyone else. He has, it was stated that by taking up the fight he is doing every other manufacturer, as well as working men throughout the United States, a real service.

Mr. Ford denies there is a coal shortage. The investigations of his representatives have convinced him it was stated, that coal brokers of the country have an enormous supply of coal on hand. The Ford Motor Company could obtain enough coal to cover a long-term contract if it would submit to being victimized by profiteers, it was declared.

Flivver With Offers of Coal

For several weeks, it was asserted, the Ford offices at Dearborn have

WARNING ISSUED BY CONTROLLER

Says Toronto May Find Itself Hard Pressed For Fuel

DEALERS UNDER FIRE

Doubts Their Ability to Supply U.S. Bituminous Coal

Toronto, Aug. 29.—Warning that the early months of the coming Winter may find Toronto without adequate supplies of fuel of any description is contained in a statement issued today by J. A. Ellis, Fuel Controller for Ontario. For the first time the Controller criticises the local coal dealers. He regrets that they have not seen fit to order Welsh coal, and as much as states that he does not think they will be able to carry out their promise to fill the city's needs with American bituminous coal. Inability of the United States railroads to cope with the demand, present conditions on the railroads and the probability of further serious congestion are given as the reasons for the Controller's attitude.

The seriousness of the fuel situation can be gauged by the fact that the statement advises householders to prepare to close portions of their houses to be used as rooms to conserve fuel. The Controller goes so far as to suggest that kerosene stoves and other makeshifts may have to be resorted to. Should dealers continue to catch up

ANOTHER EVIL OF SMOKING

Montreal, Aug. 26.—Pinching a lighted cigar into an adversary's eye cost $20 or one month in jail in Montreal. John Adams learned when he pleaded guilty to that charge. A young girl complained to her father that Adams made a practice of following her on the street and insulting her. When the father located Adams and warned him to behave, the latter jabbed his lighted cigar into the complainant's eye.

CANADA INVITES U.S. MOTORISTS

The New York Tribune says We are Good Neighbors and Hopes for Better Acquaintance

(By Canadian Press)

New York, Aug. 29—The Tribune believes that Canada, in opening wide the door to U.S. automobilists, has done something profitable as well as neighborly. After summarizing the changes in the regulations governing visiting motorists, the paper declares:

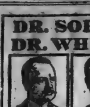

"All this is neighborly and makes for better acquaintance and improved relations. Likewise it makes for thrift, so far as Canada is concerned. A report issued by the Dominion Government's Department of Parks estimates that in 1921 American tourists spent $75,000,000 in Canada. It is also estimated that 100,000 American automobiles entered Canada last year. Probably automobiles hailing from every State in the Union crossed the northern border in 1921. Canadians compute that this means upwards of half a million automobile tourists. The figures may or may not be accurate, but the fact remains that American automobile travel is an important item in the Dominion's sources of revenue.

"Now that restrictions have been removed it is expected that this form of American travel will be increased. Whether this happens or whether the tide of American tourist travel ebbs on its course, Canada's share of it is likely to be large. And the bigger it is the better. The more people on both sides of the line mingle together the better they become acquainted, and the better they become acquainted the more readily do bars go down that tend artificially to separate them."

WOULD DECLARE HUNS BANKRUPT

Sir John Bradbury Proposes That Germany be Thrown Into Hands of Receiver

Paris, Aug. 25.—Germany should be thrown into the hands of the receiver, Sir John Bradbury, English representative on the allied reparations commission, declared to-day.

Bradbury proposed that the former enemy nation "be given a breathing spell to get on its feet" by a moratorium during which period she would accept "disinterested financial expert advice, which would amount practically to a receivership.

The English representative said that the declaration of such a receivership would be the only means of checking up what Germany actually spends during the moratorium period, balancing the budget and stabilizing the mark.

"I have talked this plan over with representative Germans and it has met their favor, after which I presented the plan to the reparations commission," said Bradbury.

"I believe unless a complete moratorium is granted, Germany will run into bankruptcy. The nation is having a difficult enough time in paying its own bills without paying bills in foreign currency at the present rate of exchange, which makes the dollar worth 2,000 marks.

"I am speaking only for myself however. I have yet to convince my colleagues of the necessity for a moratorium."

STAUFFER HITS EASY DIVORCE

Wedlock Would Be Entered in Hasty Way if the Law Was Relaxed

Montreal, Aug. 26.—Strong warning against making divorce easy in Canada was uttered by Rev. Byron Stauffer, of Toronto, in preaching in St. James Methodist church yesterday, the attitude of the preacher being that divorce should be granted for one reason only, and that the load given by the United States in dissolving married couples for incompatibility of temper and minor differences between married couples must and ultimately in the destruction of society upon its present basis. While admitting that the stringencies of ecclesiastical law on the indissolubility of the marriage tie bore hardly in special cases, Mr. Stauffer held it down that it was better the few should suffer vicariously than that the majority should be irreparably injured by the lowering of the standard laid down by the church.

At the first glance divorce seems a reasonable thing, continued the preacher; in face almost necessary, like an operation on the body. The idea that divorce ought to be easier and that there ought to be a way out for mistits, that it is better to separate them to quarrel, has taken the minds of many people. That is the academic theory which if put into practice would destroy civilization.

"So I say that the crime of divorce is a matter for the cabinet at Ottawa or for the legislatures at Quebec and elsewhere. It is certainly not a matter for the whims of the average man or woman to decide. For my part, I have come back to the statement of Jesus, which was to the effect that divorce should be given for one cause only, the cause which we have always recognized in Canada, and I contend that if you allow these grounds for divorce to broaden out so that filthyness, incompatability of temperament and whims may be added to the causes, then people will soon discover incompatabilities and all other things necessary to take proceedings.

SYRIAN ACQUITTED ON SERIOUS CHARGE

Former Bancroft Man Was Charged With Implication in Arson Charge

An Assyrian named Sahab, who it will be remembered was arrested some time ago in Ottawa by Provincial officials charged with offering money to persons who would burn a building at Bancroft; received his trial at Bancroft recently, and was acquitted on the charge.

The case was heard before Mr. Justice J. F. Mc. K. J. Butler appointed for the accused, and Crown Attorney Carnew conducting the prosecution.

Although at the time of his arrest that offers of $150 had been made in this connection, it was thought by the Magistrate to be of too weak a nature to send the accused up for trial, so the case was dismissed and Sahab returns to Ottawa.

URGE PUBLIC USE OF TIMBER AS FUEL

Berks County, Pa., Householders Are Encouraged to Burn Wood

(Associated Press)

Reading, Pa., Aug. 28. (By Mail)—The Berks County Conservation Association's campaign, urging throughout the county the use of timber of little marketable value to avert a possible fuel famine, has been endorsed by the state department of forestry at Harrisburg. The plea of the association to Berks land owners has already borne fruit, and many householders have laid in a supply of wood. The association is renting placards throughout the county urging householders to use coal wood cut from such timber, in order to save coal for hospitals, schools, churches and industries.

Harvey F. Henly, president of the association, has received the following letter from Major R. Y. Stuart, State Commissioner of forestry.

"I think the Berks County Conservation association's plan of calling the attention of the public to the availability of timber wood, particularly blighted chestnut, for fuel as a means of averting distress this winter, is an excellent one. The department in turn is encouraging the use of chestnut on the state forests for this purpose. I believe that there will be small quantity, particularly, in those sections of the state wherein it is feasible to use wood as fuel without a change in equipment. Further, to the extent to which blighted chestnut can be utilized, the owner and forest are benefited."

NEWFOUNDLAND HAS RICH COAL DEPOSITS

Three Areas Capable of Producing 500,000 Tons of Coal

(Associated Press)

St. John's, Newfoundland, Aug. 28—Newfoundland coal fields, it has been estimated, are capable of producing 500,000,000 tons of coal. There are three known distinct carboniferous areas in the geological formation of Newfoundland; one in the Codroy Valley, another in the country lying south of Bay St. George and the third on the upper reaches of the Humber River between Grand Lake and Sandy Lake.

RURAL DISTRICTS VOTE PROHIBITION TOWN AGAINST IT

Sweden Will Remain Wet—Referendum Does Not Give Majority For Prohibition

London, Aug. 29.—A despatch to The Times from Stockholm says the towns generally voted against prohibition. Stockholm having given 139,122 noes against 22,035 ayes, and Gothenburg 51,547 noes against 18,-963 ayes.

The country districts, however, mostly gave majorities in favor of prohibition.

The despatch adds that it is evident prohibition will not become law as Parliament and the Government would proceed with a dry measure only if the referendum had shown a big majority for prohibition.

FLED FROM BEDS WHEN HOTEL BURNED

The Queen's at Kincardine Afire at 3 a.m.—Some Left by Fire Escape

Kincardine, Ont., Aug. 28.—Guests fled in their night clothing and hotel employes clambered down the fire escape from the third floor to safety at three o'clock this morning, when fire of uncertain origin broke out in the Queen's hotel. The blaze was well under way when discovered and presented alarming proportions when the guests were aroused. Nobody was hurt, but several rooms were badly damaged and furniture destroyed along with some personal effects.

The fire department made a quick response and the pressure was excellent, so that the fire was soon put out.

The hotel is owned by A. E. Hodgins and Geo. Tate is manager.

Two Days at Rest Cure

By JOHN FIRST BROOK

(© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The woman was rather dull at the Rest Cure. The ladies had been whisking for something to happen; ever since the ordinary when the arrival of a guest, who refused to be sociable set them all in a ferter of excitement.

"Are we all quite sure that we saw the cruncher?" asked Mrs. Dunvegan as she poured tea.

"Oh, yes, my dear; I, for one, am quite positive—two crutches with leather tops," proclaimed the widow Pepper, as she fingered the locket that contained the portrait of her dead husband.

"What night was it we saw them some?" piped Miss Tupsney. "Since my nerves have been so sensitive I can't remember dates, or landlady's chicks, or anything important.

"It was last Wednesday evening," declared Mrs. Looney, a fat woman in a crochet sweater coat; "before we sat down to the weather I remember it was raining a perfect downpour, and we had just finished dinner, you all recollect, when they came into the office. He woman stamping and shaking the rain all about, and saying to the clerk she need as she reached the desk, 'I've got my letter! I hope you can let me have room on the ground floor. I will not stay unless I can be quite away from the other guests. I have reasons for not wishing to be disturbed.'

"I'm, ya," murmured Miss Tupsney, "all all comes back to me now, dear Mrs. Looney, for you describe things very well. I am quite sure that could write a novel. The man with the crutches followed her?"

"Such a lot of baggage as they had!" softly murmured Mrs. Fish, a thin woman with straight hair and scant clothing.

"I'm," chimed in Mrs. Pepper, "what I mean, dear, I'm sure there was. Boxes and bundles, and two trunks. The poor man with the crutches was handled about and carried along in the midst of the confusion. No one could help the thought of him, poor fellow. I suppose he was tumbled in with the rest of her baggage, for when she had her banged her door the man with the crutches was gone."

"Poor fellow," faltered Mrs. Fish; "perhaps he did not pass us, but he may have climbed out of the side half way down."

"With crutches?" interrogated all the ladies at once.

"Not possible, my dear," drawled Mrs. Looney.

"Well, none of us really saw him go into the room," promised Mrs. Fish.

"No, we did not," assented Mrs. Dunvegan. "And then we went in we are all quite sure, for we heard his crutches pounding on the floor."

"My impression is that the person is a medium, and that she smuggled him in while she kept our minds merged in a subconscious mist," smugly suggested Mrs. Pepper.

"Well, who are they? Perhaps the man with the crutches is ill," further haunted Mrs. Tyrell.

"We looked in the hotel register. Two names were given—Miss Burkbedder and below a name so illegible we could not make it out; we thought we recognized it and so did not."

"No matter," murmured Mrs. Dunvegan. "The name was purposely disguised, and I, for one, decidedly object to such deceit going on under our very noses."

"I suppose we might form ourselves into an investigating committee," said Mrs. Looney, "if it were not so much trouble."

"How," said Mrs. Dunvegan, "let us go about the thing in an open, straightforward manner. Let us get right at the point. I will myself interview the proprietor (though I'm afraid he has been bribed). You, Miss Tupsney, interview one chambermaid, Mrs. Pepper the other one. Mrs. Fish, could you take hold of the bellboy?

"And you, Miss Tyrell, would you mind tackling the bathman?"

"Don't ask me," objected the newcomer. "Remember I never saw the apparition of the man with the crutches. Anyway, certainly at real cures, I believe in letting sleeping dogs lie."

"We must rise for dinner," exclaimed Mrs. Dunvegan, rising.

The next afternoon the ladies met as usual at the hour. There could be observed an undercurrent of suppressed excitement. Mrs. Dunvegan looked anxiously about.

"Where is Miss Tupsney? She is the only one absent. I do hope her experience has not given way. Did you find out anything definite from the bellboy about the person on the ground floor, Mrs. Fish?"

She took a small piece of paper from her reticule as the lady thus made answer.

"I inquired from Albert by way of an opening if the rooms in the hotel were pretty well filled. 'Middlin',' answered the bellboy.' Mrs. Fish referred to her paper as she continued; "he said, 'Them two rooms on the ground floor bein' occupied makes more work'; also a awful ringer! Wants things all the time. But the boss says it's some of my business, and if his help starts to complain of his way of doin' things it can get out. Cog thing I can tell you, miss, is, there ain't no downstairs to a rum couple.' I sat at the table and wrote every word he said as well as I could. I do like to be exact!"

"Now, my dear, dear, are you sure he at college, pressed Mrs. Pepper at this point the doctor was stopping open and Miss Tupsney came staggering into the room, threw herself into the merric chair and began to sob.

"It's dreadful," gasped Miss Tupsney. "If I can compose my nerves I will tell you all about it, but the chambermaid/about—"

"The horror of the ground floor," supplied Mrs. Pepper.

"Just then it—horror is the word," continued Miss Tupsney. "I spoke to Matilda, the chambermaid. I gave her my second best satchel and asked her to tell me all about Miss Burkbedder."

"Matilda cheerfully answered, 'Oh, she's all right, lady's queer, for she's afraid of beetles and bags pinned on paper. She is making human nature studies or something. She takes all her meals in her room. The waitress says that's why it's something dreadful when they go back to the pantry. We all think that she feeds that horrid object she keeps shut up in her back room.'

"Oh, did she say that?" gasped Mrs. Fish.

"Just wait till I tell you all," wailed Miss Tupsney. "When Matilda left me I think I fainted, for the first thing I knew I was stumbling along toward the baths—hot mineral water after effects you see. Can you believe me when I tell you that I heard a plaintive, pitiful wail of 'Help, help!' coming up from Miss Burkbedder's room, and that to reply a horrid, snappy voice said, 'Now shut up.'"

"Oh, Miss Tupsney," said all the ladies in a breath, "how dreadful!"

"We must decide what to do at once," announced Mrs. Dunvegan.

Then the ladies rose in a body and clattered their cups and saucers on the table, just as Mrs. Dunvegan's footsteps might have thrown down their swords, then formed into a body and marched along the hall.

When they reached Miss Burkbedder's door Mrs. Pepper knocked. There was a great rummaging and shuffling inside, then the door opened and Miss Burkbedder looked with astonishment at her visitors through large, heavily framed spectacles.

Mrs. Pepper bowed. "We have come to call upon you, Miss Burkbedder," she announced.

"Oh, dear me, this is sudden. I'm not prepared for visitors; could you call another time?"

"No," rang out Mrs. Dunvegan's voice. "We have come today and will not be put off. We want to know what goes on in your back room."

"Well, come in, then, and look to your heart's content. But," added Miss Burkbedder savagely, "I think I told you quite plainly, ladies, that I was busy and did not want to be bothered dressing, talking and fooling at this time when I wanted to study. I am sure I cannot offer you refreshments. You see everything is filled with my specimens; I even had to put the beetles on the bed."

"Never mind chairs," said Mrs. Looney blindly, evidently recalling, "just let us take a peep into your back room."

"What shall I do?" groaned the poor lady in evident distress. "Really I would excuse you did not—"

"We demand you to open that prison door," sprouted Miss Tupsney, almost on the verge of hysterics. "In the name of humanity we demand it."

Mrs. Pepper now went boldly forward and opened the door.

On a table by the window, in a gilt cage, sat a parrot in solemn meditation. For a moment he tolerantly eyed the body of militant females, then called: "Help, I want to go home!"

The ladies rushed in a body from Miss Burkbedder's domains. As they reached the front hall they nearly knocked over a man with crutches, who had just come in the front door.

The clerk called from the desk: "Hello, Sandy Malone; you back again! Did you have a successful trip?"

Pell mell up the stairs rushed the excited ladies of the Rest Cure. Mrs. Pepper and Mrs. Dunvegan on ahead. Then came Mrs. Tyrell helping little Mrs. Fish, while in the rear Mrs. Looney struggled to drag the half-fainting form of Miss Tupsney, and through Miss Burkbedder's open door came the strangely human cry.

"Help, help, all want to go home! Now shut up."

BRITISH EMPIRE EXHIBITION 1924

Preparations are actively going forward for the great exhibition which will be held over London, England, during 1924. The task of organizing the shipbuilding, marine, mechanical and general engineering sections of the exhibition, which will form quite the most magnificent display of British engineering triumphs, has been placed in the hands of the British Engineers' Association. This Association will allot space to the various branches of British engineering and will ensure that the exhibits will be representative of the best modern practice in British engineering.

MAY TRIES BEING A HICK

By WILL T. AMES

(© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Among the girls of Manhattan Island there is a tradition, immutable as the laws of the Medes and the Persians, that forever yet strive through the operation of extreme violence and utterly ignorant of the fact that all such methods leave the city and go to the country to live. Wherefore, when May Dart, expert board operator in the Bryant exchange, informed her friends, Gladys Adams and Ethel Mackie, that she was quitting the job that night and going to Stongport, away off in the wilds of Connecticut, to live, they simultaneously gasped at her incredulousness, and with one voice cried:

"Going to the country! To stay! Gonna live with the squirrels and be a hick! For gawdsake, May, hawdja get that way?"

"Aw, I just thought I'd like to do something different," replied May, nonchalantly. Which was not the whole truth.

Doctor MacKillroy, who had practiced in the Ninth ward more years than May was old, and who had known her parents—eased their successive tuberculous departures out of the world, in fact—had ordered, commanded, bullied and finally thoroughly frightened May into putting out of New York before, as he phrased it, New York got her.

And so it came to pass that May, having been given a highly complimentary recommendation by her chief, after a conference with that kindly official, had applied for a place in the Stongport telephone central and had been enthusiastically accepted. "You're going to fine," said MacKinzy. "And you come back in less than a year I'll eat my hat. Now, then—"

Stongport flattered between the condition of a big village and a city, and a small city. It called itself the latter, and its most sophisticated society women smoked cigarettes sometimes on the grills of the big Mannpeng hotel. But its people still term the railroad station the "depot" and tradition and politics between them had so far succeeded in preserving the bucolic institution of a volunteer fire department.

May, as an hereditary cockney, experienced a scene of obligation to look upon Stongport with unbounded scorn as attitude in which she persisted, though she soon perceived that the roseglow station was a telephone station, whether in New York or New England, and that the limousines on Main street looked about as costly as the ones on Forty-second.

The Stongport air, however, was fresher and cleaner than the cafeteria atmosphere that never ceased in York, and the big, airy three-windowed room overlooking a vista of gardens, in which May was the excitative mistress, furnished a staggering contrast to the tiny cell, smelling of gas, from which she had looked out on the dreary rear walls of Bank street.

Also, because there was no Gladys and no Ethel and no Bryant Exchange Dancing club, and no long list of theaters and no Coney—as anything, it seemed, May got lonesome and sounder, than she had ever known in her twenty-five years of life. Even Doctor MacKinzy for the wise-old seer that he was—but she wasn't having a good time and again she voted Stongport a lay town.

It was inevitable, of course, that the coming of Fred Faxon into the life of the girl at this lonely stage of it should be epochal. Logical enough in any event, inevitable when one took into account his good-looking and had been through the thick of the hell in France and had come back to laugh over it and tell funny stories about it by the hour.

Fred had been mustered out by the old landlady—that's how their acquaintance came about—and was established starting in business, a shining model deliveryman shop. He had had to start on a shoestring, he confided to May, and his "wop" landlord would only give him a miserly two years lease. "But a fellow learned to take chances over there, if he didn't learn anything else." Perhaps that was because the chances of success were not less hazardous—his prospects in life better—that May caught Faxon looking at her so wistfully every now and then.

The Stongport part of the American Legion was giving a ball, for the replacement of its building fund—a big affair in the armory. May, resplendent in the sofiume black and gold patty gown that had almost made enemies of Gladys and Ethel at the Bryant club's reception six weeks before, regally descended the stairs to Fred Faxon in his service uniform, waiting in gasping admiration in the hall.

"You look wonderful," he exclaimed. "Are you all ready? We're not going to be a minute too early."

"As soon as I put on my wrap," May had scarcely uttered the words when "Bang! Ke-er Bang! Ke-er—Bang! The great bell in the tower of the co-pree house three doors away was faintly rattling the windows.

"Goodness gracious! What's that?" cried the girl. But the effect on Faxon was amazing. "D——I that is, excuse me! Wait. Be back. Fire!" And tearing the door open, her escort was gone.

What's more, he didn't come back. It took ten minutes for May to realize that Faxon had described her to go to a fire and to become fittingly indignant. "Well, of all the low-down hick tricks!" she exclaimed. Even then she

PRINCE OF WALES DOES KINDLY ACT

London, Aug. 18.—(By Mail).—While waiting his" play in a polo match at Cirencester, Gloucestershire, the Prince of Wales was introduced to Roy Harding, a local lumberconist and ex-service man, who was blinded in France. After listening about his war experiences, and his stay at St. Dunstan's hostel, the Prince asked Mr. Harding to send him a lot of tobacco and write to him.

He wished him good luck and shook hands heartily with him.

supposed that he would return present by, all apologies, and was torn between the desire to revenge herself upon him and reluctance to miss the much anticipated ball. But at the end of three-quarters of an hour, bitterly regretting that there was no one about to whom she might express her feelings—Mrs. Hewett was out at a church lecture—she summoned Miss Dart backbook herself to her room and to bed. And before the week in deep she determined that she had had about enough of hick pollards and small towns and that she would go back to New York, MacKinzy or no MacKinzy.

Because it is the New York habit and not because she had the slightest interest in Stongport affairs. May brought the local paper on her way to the office next morning. And all across the front page, in flaring headlines struck at her eye: "Fred Faxon Hero of Twenty Thousand Dollar Blaze. Soldier Chief of Northeast Fire Company Saves Three Lives. Badly Burned. Is Taken to St. Luke's Hospital. Was in Uniform for Legion Ball."

The situation had May, forgetful of the job, oblivious to her anger of last night, climbed out of a taxi and bolted, bloodless, exhaled and lied her way past a reluctant maid, an obstinate head nurse and a severe but fundamentally human matron to the bedside of Fred Faxon, and that his injuries after all were superficial and that he was rapidly recovering from his exhaustion.

"Oh, Fred," she faltered, dabbing at her eyes, "to think I was so yellow as to be mad for your going away from here to do a thing like that!"

"Gee, girl!" grinned Faxon. "but it was a streak of luck. You see, these kids belong to that wop landlord of mine. And he isn't such a bad scout, after all. He came down here last night crying like a kid, and he brought up a lease of the store to me for a dollar a year for three years—and signed it. Here it is. That makes the business a cinch—plumb sure good for something a year besides living—a living for two, I mean. And when I get out of here I'm going to—going to ask you something. May I?"

"You don't need to ask a thing, Fred Faxon," protested May. "You know just as well as I do, right now, that I'm booked to be a hick for the rest of my life."

MEASURING RIVER FLOW BY RADIUM

If anyone were to suggest that there is any connection between radium and the measurement of the flow of rivers he would probably be scouted as a dreamer. Nevertheless a British man of science has developed a very effective method of measuring the flow of rivers by means of a solution containing just a trace of radium. The method he proposes is a development from an existing system which involves the addition of large quantities of salt solution to a river. What was done was to introduce a certain quantity of salt at a particular point and to collect samples of the water at various parts lower down in the stream, thereafter testing the strength or "saltness" of the solution. With the new method only a few gallons of solution containing a little radium will be required. This solution will be fed into the river under constant pressure; and samples will be taken lower down the stream and conveyed to the laboratory and stored in ordinary flasks for 10 or 12 days. They will then be tested by a simple electrical method for the presence of radium, and by means of this test the rate of discharge of the river can be accurately determined.

"HOBO KING" LOSES BIG BET

Captain J. J. Roche Loses Wager Because of Hasty Marriage

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 22.—Captain J. J. Roche, said to be a veteran of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, spent $20,000 on a marriage license here yesterday.

At least the revelation of his identity through the marriage license bureau is said to have lost him a wager of that amount, entered into with a wealthy New York clubman acquaintance some time ago.

Roche, who has a home in Greenwich village that is often home in Florida, wagered that he could bet his way to New York, Florida and Los Angeles and Mexico and Toronto. His transportation was to cost nothing and his food and pocket money due to have been honored as earned at roach jobs.

Most important of all, he was to remain incognito, but when he met his fiance, Mrs. Alice Jordan, in Seattle, he insisted that they be married and gave his address as the Jordan residence, 20 Rodney drive, Toronto, what's happens to be his birthplace.

It took nineteen and twenty-four hours to discover his identity, and when congratulations started, the check him from New York he realized that his wager was lost.

He traveled under the name of "Hobo King."

LABOR AUTOCRATS

The public generally are getting heartily sick of strikes, and there is a feeling abroad in this and in other walk done to prevent their everlasting recurrence over the same issues. It is realized that strikes are the greatest weapon that Labor can use against itself. The closing down of the Ford plant at Detroit owing to lack of coal is only one instance, but a convincing one, of the way in which one set of workers can deprive another set of their means of livelihood by quitting the employ of those diametrically opposite between their masters and the professional Labor leaders.

The New York Times contains a strong editorial, entitled "Our Dictator," in which it refers sarcastically to the autocratic attitude and power of J. L. Lewis, the coal miners' king. The Times says:

"The latest evidence of the arrogance with which Mr. Lewis now thinks it safe to clothe himself is seen in his attitude toward the bills in Congress for the creation of a Coal Commission. He can hardly conceal his indignation that the President and Congress should have ventured to propose a plan of their own differing from his. In a telegram to Representative Rizad of Indiana he expressed his astonishment that anybody at Washington should have been so bold as to undertake to "nullify the decision of the Cleveland conference dealing with a Coal Commission." When is the President, what is Congress, to presume to set aside a project favored by the head of the United Mine Workers? Mr. Lewis serves fair notice on those in authority who dare to think for themselves. He telegraphs that, if the action urged by the Administration and by the leaders in Congress is carried out, 'responsibility will lie with those who recommend such action.' In other words, Dictator Lewis will hold his subjects to a strict account.

"Mr. John L. Lewis seems to be waxing fat on

HERE AND THERE

GENIUS AND TALENT.

It is a remarkable fact that the two great poets of America—Poe and Whitman—were two of the most deliberately original poets that ever enriched any country's English at least. They were both conscious frontiersmen of poetry, drawn to unmapped territories, settlers on virgin soil. The map help to explain some of their imperfections. Each of them gives us the impression of a genius, rich but imperfectly cultivated. Either should they were from each other, they resembled each other in a certain lack of the talent of order, of taste, of "finish". They were both capable of lapses from genius to incompetence, from beauty into preciousness, to unusual degree. A contemporary critic said of Poe that he had not talent equal to his genius. Neither had Whitman. In the greatest poets, genius and talent go hand in hand.—Robert Lynd.

ACCUMULATIVE BONDS.

I have just come across an old "accumulative" song which, in view of the "twelve dats after Christmas" ditty reproduced in John O'Londons's Weekly some time back, should be of interest. How old the lines are I do not know, and should be glad of any information on the subject:

Have you ever seen—
One Old Ox Opening Oysters?
Have you ever seen
One Old Ox Opening Oysters,
Or Two Toads Totally Tired Trotting To Tewkesbury?

and so on, the entire song consisting of the following arrangement:

Have you ever seen—
One Old Fox Opening Oysters,
Or Two Toads Totally Tired Trotting To Tewkesbury,
Or Three Tame Tigers Taking Tea,
Or Four Fat Friars Finishing Five Frogs,
Or Five Fairies Finding Fifty Flies,
Or Six Soldiers Shooting Snipe,
Or Seven Salmon Sailing in Solway,
Or Eight Elegant Engineers Eating Excellent Eggs,
Or Nine Nimble Noblemen Nibbling Nuts,
Or Ten Tall Tinkers Taking Tuppence,
Or Eleven Electors Eating Early Endive,
Or Twelve Tremendous Tale-Tellers Telling The Truth?

THE FEAR OF DEATH.

No one who fears it can forget Tolstoy's short story "The Death of Ivan Ilyitch." It was founded on the death of Mr. Tolstoy's elder brother, a high-placed civil servant who died in misery with a fatal disease in the full current of his career. Melchinkoff had studied deeply in life and in literature the dread of death and its effects on character and happiness. He knew that even if science, as he hoped, could prolong life to an age far beyond even that of occasional centenarians, it could not abolish it.

Death is as inevitable and as natural as birth. But he believed that as science banished disease and as reasonable habits of life prevented the various forms of autodestruction, natural old age would be as serene and beautiful as are healthy childhood, youth, and maturity. He elaborately theory that we should watch them to grow up and the boy or girl wishes to be adult, so, if it arrived only in the natural way and in the natural time, death would no longer be feared, but would be awaited with calm satisfaction. The mind and the emotions would lie in harmony with the body, and the only remaining struggle between a man still young and a body become old before its natural period would cease to be possible. There are many analogies to this theory of the conquest of death in ancient literature, but so far as we know Melchinkoff was alone in deducing this supreme optimism from the facts of biology.—London Times.

THE HASPIRITE.

I think that Mr. St. John Ervine is not quite right when he says, in his article in your issue of July 29th, that no Scotsman drops his "h's." I think he will find that among the lower classes in Edinburgh the letter "h" is dropped when it is used initially in the word "here."—"Come fere, noo," is often heard.

Conversely, while on a holiday I was about Jedburgh and Kelso, some thirty years ago, I heard the letter "h" added to words beginning with the letter "e". "He" became "heem".

I see one of the leading American fiction magazines regularly, and have been greatly struck by the pitiable attempts at what is supposed to be English speech. Here is an example:—

"Hi hain hass Hinchlishman, hand Hi hain not hashamed to hown hit."—An Edinburgh Man, in John o'London's Weekly.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 24.

I never thought that strange, romantic war
Would shape my life and plan my destiny;
Though in my childhood's dreams I've seen his car
And grisly sword flash grimly 'thwart the sky.
Yet now behold a vaster, mightier strife
Than reboed on the plains of sounding Troy,
Defeats and triumphs, death, wounds, laughter, life,
All mingled in a strange complex alloy.
I view the panorama in a trance,
Of awe, yet others with a secret joy.
For I have dreamed in epic and romance.
Have lived the dreams that thrilled me as a boy
How sound the ancient satires in, forsooth,
How weak is Fancy's gloss of Fact's stern truth!

—Major J. Milne Langstaff, of Toronto, killed in the War.

WORK BEFORE PLAY

Belleville will be to the fore at the ninth annual meeting of the Ontario Association of Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce, which is to be held at Owen Sound on September 22. Several resolutions dealing with very vital questions relating to the industrial and general welfare of Belleville and the surrounding district have been prepared by the local Chamber of Commerce and are on the docket of business.

One resolution urges the Dominion and Provincial Governments and the Press to further in every way possible the immediate development of the water power on the St. Lawrence River and the Eastern and Central Ontario may be supplied with the electric power now urgently needed.

One of the most important resolutions is that which deals with the removal of the water of the Trent River. The recent hold-up of industry in this district owing to shortage of power was due, not to lack of water, but to the lack of co-operation and co-ordination between the Dominion Government officials and the engineers of the Hydro-Electric Commission.

It is to be hoped that the resolution will have the effect of placing the interests of industry at least on an equal footing with those of canal navigation. To our mind there is no question as to who should have first consideration. Work must be put before play every time.

The Sea in Poetry
Some Stirring Lines

Since the Greek poet wrote of the "multitudinous laughter of the ocean waves," many songs have been written to the sea, but no nation has responded to its magic as have the English.

For them it has been the way of adventure—discovery —conquest; its beauty and woe, and its unfathomable mystery, are imbued in the very theme of their beings. All true Britishers have in love with the sea, and thrill to the sound of it.

Swinburne and Cunningham

Shakespeare pictured is as the fons of safety.

Byron, Keats, and Shelley all adored it; but it was left to the poets of the Victorian era to sing the first triumphant sea music. Of these Swinburne is most enthralling—he even buries his heroes, Tristram and Iseult, beneath the waves.

"... Place they have that none may gain who live,
And rest about them that no love can give,
And over them, while death and life shall be,
The light and sound and darkness of the sea."

Allan Cunningham's

A wet sheet and a flowing sea,
A wind that follows fast,
And fills the white and rustling sail

And bends the gallant mast

was the model for many subsequent writers, including the well-known "Midshipmite" and the "Bay of Biscay."

Clough and Matthew Arnold

Some of Arthur Clough's most delightful verse was written to the ocean; he felt and appreciated its mystery.

Where lies the land to which the ship would go?
Far, far ahead, is all her seamen know.
And where the land she travels from away
Far, far behind, is all that they can say.
On sunny morns when the deck's smooth face,
Linked arm in arm, how pleasant here to pace;
Or, over the stern reclining, watch below
The foaming track far-widening as we go.
On stormy nights, when wild north-westers rave,
How proud a thing to fight with wind and wave!
The dripping sailor on the reeling mast
Exults to hear, and scorns to wish it past.

Matthew Arnold was another poet who was most deeply conscious of the magic and fascination in the sound of the sea:—

... Listen, you hear the grating roar
Of pebbles which the waves draw back, and fling,
At their return, up the high strand,
Begin, and cease, and then again begin
With tremulous cadence slow, and bring
The eternal note of sadness in.

Sophocles long ago
Heard it on the Aegean ... .
For sheer triumphant sea thrill, however, no one surpasses R. C. K. Ensor in his "Interview":

Down in the darkness to the coast
I ran on passionate feet
To greet the friend I loved the most
And hungered most to meet.
To hail the friend my heart had lost
And hear its surges beat.

Mom there was none: the sky was blank,
And I could see was black ...
Save where the breakers rank on rank,
Rose up for the attack.
Save where the lion heaved his flank
And roared, and shuddered back.
Yet there it lay, the same, the old
The indomitable sea.
There in the darkness and the cold
Crying continually,
Crying the storm its caverns hold
As my heart cried to me.

Masefield's "Seafever."

The craving which possesses some souls for the sea is clearly expressed here, that hungry longing which absolutely nothing but the sea will satisfy. Arthur Symonds knew it when he wrote "nothing really satisfies some eyes but the sea; there is always a thing of sight which must wait unsatisfied until the eyes drink the sea." And Masefield knew it when he wrote his incomparable "Seafever":—

I must go down to the sea again,
To the lonely sea and the sky.
And all I ask is a tall ship
And a star to steer her by,
And the lonely swell, and the sea's song,
And the wet sail shaking,
And the wind's sting, and the salt spray,
And the grey dawn breaking.

I must go down to the sea again,
For the call of the running tide
Is a wild call, and a clear call,
And may not be denied.
And all I ask is a windy day
And the white clouds flying,
And the blown spume, and the wet spray
And the seagulls crying.

—John O'London's Weekly.

WIT AND HUMOR

WORDS IN DOUBT

Having helped his mother plant the seeds and places at the end of each row, the pictured envelopes showing the name of each seed, and so on, little Edwin was quite distressed when he went out next day and found, to his chagrin, that his sister had washed the envelopes off into the mud.

"Never mind, dear," comforted his mother, "it doesn't really matter."

"But, mamma," said the child greatly worried, "how will the little seeds know what to be when they come up?"

THE LATEST NEWS

"Good afternoon, Mrs. Jones!" exclaimed Mr. Brown. "What a coincidence, meeting you. I ran into your husband an hour ago."

"How queer!" replied Mrs. Jones. "And how did you think he was looking?"

"Pretty poorly."

"Well, I'm surprised to hear you say that. Everyone says he looks much better lately."

"Well, he looked not enough an hour ago," said Mr. Brown.

"I wonder why that was," said Mrs. Jones.

"Oh, I can tell you that," said Mr. Brown. "You see, I was in my car when I ran into him."

The Wicked Worm—Cuthbert had been listening for half an hour to a lecture from his father on the evils of late nights and late risings in the morning.

"You will never amount to anything," said the father, "unless you turn over a new leaf. Remember, it's the early bird that catches the worm."

"Ha, ha!" laughed Cuthbert, "How about the worm? What did he get for leaving out so early?"

"My son," replied the father, "that worm hadn't been to bed all night; he was on his way home."

PRESS OPINIONS

SUDBURY CCAL

(Hamilton Herald)

The Sudbury despatch announcing the discovery by A. P. Coyne of a seam of "pure anthracite coal" is interesting, but not convincing.

It should not be necessary to discriminate "several tags of samples" of the coal among professors in the universities of the continent before the samples analyzed. Mr. Coyne claims to have done this with earlier samples and to have undisputable evidence that analysis has proved them to be pure anthracite. A more practical and satisfactory test would be to try out the anthracite or anthracoite, or whatever it may be, in furnaces in Sudbury town. If it burns as well as anthracite burns and gives out as much heat, it will matter little what name is given to it.

We don't like Mr. Coyne's financial chances to be Charles Ponzi'd either, but we have a rumbyeam proposition, and sounds less like that to the scientific mind business man than that of a promoter of wildcat schemes.

Nevertheless Mr. Coyne may have demonstrated the truth of his predictions. We hope he has. But it would be foolish, without further evidence, to expect any relief this winter from Sudbury coal.

SOLDIERS' AND STRIKES

Mr. Mackenzie King's artifice to disclaim responsibility for the placing of troops in Nova Scotia strike areas must strike the public as strange. Why shouldn't the Government take responsibility for the maintenance of peace? Everybody knows, and no labor man nor employe will deny it, that strikes often breed strife, as witness occurrences in the States. This being the case, is not the public entitled to protection, and should not the Government be willing to afford it?

It is not a question of reflecting on the orderliness of the workers. It is not a question of a Government being anxious to crush out organization or the military power of the state. It is simply and solely a question of a precautionary measure against a condition which, concievably, might visit injury upon an innocent public. A law-abiding citizen has no more reason to object to a militiaman than a law-abiding civilian has reason to object to a policeman.

The local authorities in Nova Scotia believed the conditions threatened disorder; the statements and actions of some of the strikers seemed to confirm this belief. An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure; it was common sense to take precautionary measures. Instead of being so critical of the action of the Government in complying with the request of the local authorities, union leaders of the province who know that labor's agitators can by no orderly process should welcome steps to avoid disorder that would certainly ruin their cause. Mr. Mackenzie King's message read carefully doesn't mean anything—doesn't mean that his Government intends to depart from the very proper course it adopted at the outset. But a bolder and stronger statesman would have replied to the message with a statement of the facts instead of resorting to subterfuge. And the people of Canada who are first, last and all the time for law and order would have backed him up.

INTERESTING LIGHT ON INFLUENZA WAVE

London Medical Officer of Health Says Disease is Deceptive

London, Aug. 29.—An interesting contribution to the documents bearing on the epidemic which, with the regularity of a clock, sweeps over this country at stated periods of five years, is the annual report for 1921 just issued by Dr. Hasber, Medical Officer of Health for London. Dr. Hasner deals with the influenza epidemic in his report, and states that the disease is a far bigger thing than the people think it is.

He forms as many as are numerous that it passes under different names in different areas of the world and in the same areas at different times. Sometimes it is so violent as to leave no doubt as to its real nature, but between the widely epidemic periods there are periods of comparative quietitude. Then, in Dr. Hamer's phrase, influenza is "in mufti".

At this condition it is last night of. There may be an outbreak of illness, but each person's case diagnosis is his own weak spot, and so one person has gastritis, another a nervous breakdown, a third heart trouble and so on. Really according to Dr. Hamer, all of them have influenza in a mild form, and when the wave passes they will all recover.

An authority is quoted as saying that influenza recurs every thirty-third week, but Dr. Hamer says it is "in mufti" until after Christmas, and so is lost sight of except during the early months of the year. He points out that there may be cases of confusion between influenza with a rash and scarlet fever. In any event, a sharp rise in mortality occurs in scarlet fever cases during the influenza prevalences.

Incidentally, the Medical Officer for London expresses the view that fleas play some part in the propagation of scarlet fever, although he does not claim this has been proved.

HOW TO KEEP YOUNG

Perhaps it is because there is so much unrest today that we find so many articles and publications deploring us not as worry and tellin' us how to keep young. There is a constant dwelling on the "youth idea," for so many brilliant young lives were lost to the world during those tragic years of the Great War that it is felt we cannot strive too earnestly for the spirit of youth. Certainly, when we contemplate strike epidemics and the frantic performances of Russia, we begin to feel that it will take all youth's buoyancy to face the coming winter.

However, all is possible to the person of strong will and high heart. We need, more than ever, to guard against the poison of fatigue and depression—which would mean premature old age. An English authority declares:

"I am no believer in man's decrepitude while he is alive, provided he does not over-eat and takes sufficient exercise both of brain and body not to get stale. Think young. That is the great thing. You can then compete with anyone. You are only 2 or 3 as you think you are if you think rightly. The eight-shilling mere somen of forty should have no more hesitation in taking on anything they want to study or do than they had at eighteen. Look at the middle-aged men who became young and victorious during the war. We are a great people capable of great things at any age if we only give ourselves a chance, and idle only a matter of time till wrinkles and decrepitude still melt away before science."—Saturday Night.

Managing Housework

Are you an amateur?
Of course not!

The woman who manages a house has a business or a profession as much as the doctor who attends patients, or the woman who teaches by the business man who manages a bank, or factory, or store. Put a high value on your work. Managing the work of a home is not a thing to be hurried through so as to get on to something else. It is a source of joy, comfort, health—in a real home, an all good work is.

The amateur, who is just playing at a thing, but not trained to it, and the unemployable, who are always unemployed, live in a different world from Mother, whose home is her castle, where all she loves are safe and happy. The Preacher has his Pulpit and the King has his Throne, but Mother does not envy either of them in her own Kingdom she is home.

Just as powerful and quite as popular and nothing "Church" nor State could last if it were not for the kind of home that Mother makes and manages.

Good management secures good health when strength and prevents fatigue. The manager knows what to do, and the best way to do it (which also the cheapest). She uses her strength and skill where they will do the most good. She never puts her feelings before the rights of others nor her rights before their feelings. She is able to get everybody to help her. She allows for human frailty. She does her best for everybody and gives everybody fair play, giving each the work that he or she can do best. She has one out-of-the-way place where she can put things (if she can "get round to them." This means, among other things, saving time, work, and materials so the there is no waste, and doing thing saving devices, for these save time and strength as much as "system."

Hikers Write About their Long Trip

Three Chicago Girls Tell of Conditions From Hiker's Standpoint

(By Kathleen K. Foster.)

We left Toronto on the 12th day of July having taken the train from Chicago to Buffalo, and "hiked" over from there. We reached Montreal on the eighth evening from the start, and New York City on the 18th morning. Then from the end of the Hudson Tubes at Newark we tramped through a corner of Pennsylvania, up the New York State to Buffalo, Ontario again, and to our starting place. Not because our own country men were less courteous and kind than Canadians, but because Ontario people were our first hosts and surprisingly eager and friendly, do make special mention of their part in our "hike."

Trudging over that sunny Kingston road, we sometimes felt our 20-pound packs too heavy for good temper, and we beat baking our arms and faces sensation-ed almost too stupid for a pump or the shade of a haystack or a plunge from a sheltered river bank into the river covered us. And then always stimulating ance the questions and calls and invitations from those who passed us, yards and fields. Sometimes we were served milk and cake underneath an im tree; once chocolate cake were et before us in a Main street drug lore, and often there were bits in foods and fruits and wagons and fe'Lauzhlins—pleasant, jolly lifts that sought us friends and encircled our hilosophy.

One night because of a rain storm, wo men in a Ford drove us in to own and introduced us to the proprietor of a hotel, where, unfortunately here wasn't any room for us, and we stood discouraged and disheveled, or just one moment. Then Mr. Gingsley, who had been approached by a big red-faced man one of the frummers, said: "Well, there seems o be some changing around here, nd the girls can have No. 11." So so rigidly 'men heaved out their uitcases, and slept on hall cots and e were left to occupy their big omfortable room.

The next morning we breakfasted at he hotel, and then, shouldering our acks went up to pay our bill, and our request came the thrilling reply: "There's no bill, young ladies, no bill at all. This is all a present or you, from the men of Canada."

When we slept out, we sometimes used a neighboring pump if a spring refused to yield any sparkling. One night we found a beautiful place, a hollow in a high rocky hill with six white pines for sentinels around us, and the farmer across the way came over while we were cooking our supper, and sat smoking and meditating and left with a gruff invitation from the mistress to go and visit with her. In a spotless kitchen in lamplight, we sat talking with the Robertsons about sheep and goats and farming and Scotland and "hiking" and religion. In the morning Mrs. Robertson met us at the pump with a bowl of blueberries and cream, and three fresh eggs in her hand.

And that is the kind of reception we met with everywhere; and always pleasant leavetakings, as our last word "People To Write To"—would bear witness. We found at every turn new reasons for believing in the decency of human nature, and we grew very close to the earth and to the sky.

THE BANDBOX

By Laula Joseph Vance

Staff, consumed with curiosity about this gentleman, was so persistent in his enquiry that he finally unearthed the bell-boy who had shown that guest to his room and who furnished what seemed at the moment to be a tolerably accurate sketch of him.

The man'd escribed was—Ilf.

Discouraged and apprehensive, Staff returned to the lounge and made his report—one received by Alison with frigid disapproval, by Mrs. Ilkington with every symptom of cordial animation; from which it became immediately apparent that Alison had told the older woman everything she should not have told her.

"I, Arbuthnot,/" Alison translated; "Arbuthnot Lemay."

"Gracious!" Mrs. Ilkington squealed, "Isn't that the real name of that odd fellow who called himself Ilf and pretended to be a Secret Service man?"

Staff nodded a glum assent. ..

"It's plain enough," Alison went on; "this Searle woman was in league with him—"

"I disagree with you," said Staff.

"On what grounds?"

"I doubt believe that Miss Searle—" He shrugged, acknowledging his inability to explain.

"And what will you do?" interrupted Mrs. Ilkington.

"I shall inform the police, of course," said Alison; "and the sooner the better."

"If I may venture so far," Staff said Stiffly, "I advise you to do nothing of the sort.

"And why not, if you please?"

"It's rather a delicate case," he said —"if you'll pause to consider it. You must not forget that you yourself broke the law when you contrived to smuggle the necklace into this country. The minute you make this matter public, you lay yourself open to arrest and prosecution for swindling the Government."

"Swindling!" Alison repeated with a flaming face.

Staff bowed, confirming the word. "It is very serious charge these days," he said soberly. "I'd advise you to think before you make any overt move."

"But if I deny attempting to smuggle the necklace? If I insist that it was stolen from me aboard the Antonetta —stolen, by this Mr. Lemay and this Searle woman—?"

"Miss Searle did not steal your necklace. If she had intended anything of the sort, she wouldn't have telephoned me about it, last night."

"Nevertheless, she has gone away with it, arm-in-arm with a notorious crook, hasn't she?"

"We're not yet positive what she has done. For my part, I am confident she will communicate with us and return the necklace with the least possible delay."

"Nevertheless, I shall set the police after her!" Alison insisted obstinately.

"Again I advise you—"

"But I shall deny the smuggling, base my charge on—"

"One moment," Staff interposed firmly. "You forget me. I'm afraid I can adduce considerable evidence to prove that you not only attempted to smuggle, but as a matter of fact did."

"And you would do that—to me?" snapped the actress.

Staff held her aim in silence.

"You've in love with her," insisted the actress—"in love with this common adventuress—woman!"

Staff nodded gently. "Perhaps," said he, "you're right. I hadn't thought of it that way before. . . . But, if you doubt my motive in advising you to go slow, consult somebody else—somebody better. Call you can trust—Max, for instance, or your attorney. Meanwhile, I'd ask Ilkington to be discreet, if I were you."

Saluting them ceremoniously, he turned and left the hotel, deeply d ejected, profoundly bewildered and . . . wondering whether or not Alison in her rage had uncovered a secret unsuspected by herself, by whom it should have been most intimate.

XII.

WON'T YOU WALK INTO MY PARLOUR?

Slipping quickly into the room through his operating hardly wide enough to admit his spare, spall body, the man as quickly shut and locked the door and reconnoitred the lot. This much accomplished, he swung on his heel and, without further movement, fastened his attention upon Jean, the girl.

Standing w hands clasped loosely before him, his head thrust forward a little above his rounded shoulders, pale eyes peering from their network of wrinkles with a semi-humourous suggestion, thin lips curved in an apologetic grin his likeness to the Mr. Ilf known to Staff was something more than striking. One needed to be intimately and recently acquainted with Ilf's appearance to be able to detect the almost imperceptible points of difference between the two. Had Staff been there he might have questioned the evidence of his man's eyes, which showed a lighter tint than Ilf's, and their expression—here vigilant and predatory in contrast with Ilf's languid, half-defensive look. The line of the cheek from nose to mouth, too, was deeper and more hard than with Ilf; and there was a hint of elevation in the nostrils that lent the face a sense of malice and evil—like the shadow of an impersonal sneer.

TRUNKS PLAY IN BOWMANVILLE TODAY

Try Conclusions With Geo. Patterson's Crew on Wednesday Afternoon

Each day brings us nearer the close of the C. O. A. E. League for this season, as the windup games occur on September 16th. (Two weeks from Saturday). On that date, the winner of the second series will be declared, the schedule, and arrangements, in all probability, will have been made for the all important play-off games for the Central Ontario Amateur Baseball Pennant.

Incidentally, it looks more like the Belleville Grand Trunks, for the championship of the second schedule each day, and in-event of their winning the second half. It is only fair to say, that they have an excellent chance of copping the much sought for pennant, which now wavers in the breeze, from the flag pole on the Cobourg ball park. Peterboro is the team the Trunks have to beat, and there is no doubt about that, they are a fine team, when their team is working at his best.

Tomorrow(), Wednesday, the rejuvenated, will journey to Bowmanville, where they will do battle with George Patterson's gamesters for a nine inning fracas.

Trunks should pull out of Bowmanville with another win to-morrow evening, according to all the dope, too, but jumping to conclusions always was a dangerous practice, so you don't believe that, ask Cobourg) and it is not for prophesy baseball results for Chief Hockman on Wednesday just pere the Trunks that much farther hyyond reach, in the second schedule race.

The Trunks will receive the unanimous support of every citizen of this city, in their ambitious designs, and it's coming to them, too, for there isn't a cleaner, or more gentlemanly aggregation on the road either on or off the field. At the conclusion of the Cobourg game on Saturday last the players were congratulated by some of the Cobourg players, who expressed their wish, that they would go to the limit in the race for the Ontario Baseball Champion ship this season.

BASEBALL TALK

BELLEVILLE OFFICIAL BATTERIES

Umpire Colling, of Belleville, made his first appearance in Peterborough in the Trunks game on Saturday and did good work.—Peterboro Examiner.

THIS RINGS TRUER EVERY DAY

It is going to be Peterboro and Belleville for the final game of the Central League with the boys of the Quinte Town as favorites. But with Al Heckman travelling at top form, Belleville will not have any yank ten party.—Guide.

UNLUCKY CATCHER

Bart Cummine, the good receiver for the Lindsay Greybirds, was for the third time this season badly injured during Saturday's game with Peterboro. Catcher Cummine' injury was a very painful one, the finger being split open, and the nail left almost completely off. It is believed that a faint foul tick was the cause.

"JAKE" GETS WISE

TO OUELETTE

The sport sheet of the Lindsay Post, commenting on the baseball game between Lindsay and Peterboro, state that it was not until the 5th inning that Jake Solomon changed his style of play and told his batter to step three feet behind the plate in order to have a longer time to swing on Ouelette's steam ball. The idea worked, the Petes getting two hits and one run.

HOME RUN OFF HECKMAN

Charlie Allan, one of the Bird's pitchers, got a home run clout off Mr. Heckman on Saturday.

Reaking, that as the Lindsay Post says,

"Take the Peterboro battery away from the Solomonites and the Electric City outfit would not have a ghost of a chance," and watching Heckman's record in the last two games, the outfit is beginning to need Jake Solomon's attention.

SANDY'S SUGGESTION

An exhibition game between Oshawa and Port Hope should make a good special attraction for either Port Hope or Oshawa Fair. Oshawa is about as expert on the toboggan slide as Port Hope. On Saturday they were defeated by Lesside 8 to 1 and the slaughter took place right on the Oshawa grounds.

Yes Sandy, Oshawa have never been the same since Belleville broke into the game of Canadian History, by defeating them for the first time in 2 years, on their own grounds. (Cobourg papers please copy.)

U. S. FISHERMEN IN RACING TRIM

Race for International Fisherman's Trophy Takes Place in October

(Associated Press.)

Gloucester, Mass., Aug. 28. (By Mail) —Five fishing schooners are reviving the game of representing Yankee fishermen in the race for the International Fisherman's Trophy late in October. The elimination races will be sailed October 12, 13 and 14 off Eastern Point.

The vessels which will fight it out for the responsibility of trying to retain the trophy won last year by the Halifax fisherman Bluenose are expected to be Marflower, Elizabeth Howard, Yankee, Henry Ford and L. A. Danton.

Puritan, the pride of Gloucester, on which many a deep-sea fisherman pulled his faith in the great race this fall, too piled up on the treacherous shore of Sable Island. Along the water front the old sea dogs say that the reason for Puritan's wreck last winter was that she developed a speed far greater than those on board realized and fetched up on Sable Island long before she was supposed to be near it.

Now Gloucester folk are turning to Henry Ford, which ran aground on Sable Island when she was first launched in April and was seriously damaged. She was in port recently with a large cargo of salt cod and above all no structural, defect as a result of her early mishap. But the falsefolk wish that Henry Ford were a little longer and openly admit that the other Gloucester entrant, Elizabeth Howard, is too heavy.

From a Gloucester point of view the most profitable fisherman is one measuring between 90 and 105 feet at the waterline. For this reason they frown upon Mayflower and Bluenose, which measure 111 feet at the waterline.

The principal criticism of Mayflower, barred from the race last year, was that those who built and owned her were not interested in the fishing industry and that her cost was almost $60,000—more or much as the average cost of a Gloucester fisherman. Her carrying capacity also is less than the average fisherman. It is expected, however, that the International Committee will approve Mayflower's entry, as she has made a number of fishing trips. Although her profits have not been as large as in the case of some of the other vessels, owing to her high first cost, she has been fairly profitable to her owners.

The recent races of the New York Yacht Club off Marblehead attracted much interest among Gloucester fishermen who attended in large numbers to get pointers for their races two months hence.

While the deep-sea fishermen are unsurpassed in the art of getting the most out of their vessels under heavy sails or in making runs in from the banks, they are not quite so versatile as the amateurs in the game of hitting the line a few seconds after the start.

In the races of the last two years they have had the benefit of the strong and light sail handling of a number of Marblehead amateurs. This year the professional and salt-trained fishermen on the after deck, although there is provision for one observer.

FINAL DINGHY RACES OF THIS SEASON

Special Prizes Will be Awarded Winners in Wednesday's Races

Wednesday afternoon will see the final weekly dinghy race and as a fitting close to a very successful season special prizes will be awarded.

"Jess" sailed by A. Wallbridge and F. Clarke, and "Nomad" J. G. Cahl and Mr. J. Bowen, will fight it out in the first division for the club trophy, with the odds in favor of "Jess" who has proved herself a very fast, well handled boat, but "Nomads" are never beaten till the finish gun and the squaw's cloest race should result.

All boats except these will race for special prizes awarded by the club and should be on the starting line at 2:30 o'clock.

The "Toronto Star" claims yachting's most successful skipper are dinghy men, so who can tell but some of Belleville's present dinghy sailors may develop into future international skippers.

People interested in the above sport should call in to see the Wednesday's racing off Victoria Park at 2:30 o'clock.

AIR SPEED RECORD SET BY ITALIAN— 209 MILES AN HOUR

Turin, Aug. 29—Lieutenant Brakapapa yesterday in an airplane flew at a speed of 326½ kilometers (about 209 miles) per hour.

This is said to be a world record.

The previous speed record for an airplane was made by Sadi Lecointe, a French aviator, Sept. 26, 1921. It was 205.305 miles per hour. Lecointe used a 300-horsepower motor.

PLANS POLAR FLIGHT

Explorer Now at Wainwright and May Make This Departure Point

Nome, Alaska, Aug. 28—Captain Roald Amundsen, who last month transferred to the schooner Holmes from the Maud on his Arctic expedition, is now at Wainwright, 100 miles southwest of Point Barrow, according to a message from Capt. S. C. Cochran, of the Coast Guard cutter Bear

Capt. Cochran's message was sent through the coast guard station at Point Barrow to Capt Thomas A. Row ell.

Capt. Cochran said that the Amundsen party intended to land at Wainwright.

It is thought here that Captain Amundsen and his party have transferred to the Maud because of the Holmes due to heavy ice and that they may be planning to start at Wainwright, the aeroplane flight which the explorer planned over the Arctic circle.

HEAVY RAINS RUIN MARITIME CROPS

Continuous Downpour Causes Great Damage to Grains and Potatoes

St. John, N.B., Aug. 28—That there are no indications of better weather was the discouraging report circulated this afternoon from the Meteorological Observatory.

Up to noon today a total of seven inches of rain had fallen since Saturday morning at 8 o'clock. This is considered the heaviest on record in the province in a short space of time. The result of the torrential downpour has caused havoc in low areas, especially in the country, while in the city property many cellars are flooded.

Of the heaviest sufferers are farmers, who report that potato crops, as well as grain, are practically ruined. The oat crop was one of the heaviest in recent years and the rain has beaten much of it flat and it is feared that in many cases the entire crop will be ruined.

BANDITS WRECK MANITOBA BANK

Make Successful Getaway With Ten Thousand Dollars in Cash

Winnipeg, Aug. 29.—Ten thousand dollars in cash was secured by bank robbers who early yesterday blew open the safe of the Bank of Hamilton branch at Killarney, Man., and escaped, probably by motor car, with more than three hours' start over the pursuit.

Similarity of method leads police officials to believe that the bank was robbed by the gang which made attempts recently on bank vaults at Macgregor, Man., and Carievale, Sask. At Macgregor only $30 was secured and at Carievale the bandits had no financial return whatever.

Some citizens of Killarney heard an explosion at 1.30 a.m., but apparently no attempt was made to investigate its cause. A business man discovered at 6 a.m. that the bank premises had been wrecked and inquiry showed that the safe had been blown open and all the cash stolen. Securities were not taken. Telegraph and telephone wires had been cut.

There is no information as to the size of the gang engaged in the operation. Killarney is southwest of Winnipeg, close to the international line, and it is thought that the robbers headed in that direction.

ALL SORTS OF MEN AMONG HARVESTERS IN THE NORTH-WEST

They Range All the Way From College Youth to Grizzled Veteran of 74

Winnipeg, Aug. 26—Many train crews out of Toronto daily, and a man possessed of supernatural powers might find innumerable tales of tragedy, human hopes and fears and buffetings if he could but peer into the inner minds of these birds of passage, who ride on the rods. Not so. With all these possibilities of learning more of life, however, probably no train of passengers offers such a kaleidoscopic view of life as a harvesters' excursion, on one of which a Star correspondent recently travelled west to obtain first-hand studies of the cosmopolitan crowd making its annual pilgrimage to the western grain fields.

The assembling of the crowd at the Union depot for this particular train resembled the marshaling of troops during the war. As the hours which were to pass before railway officials made sure that each delayed traveller, with his load, was taken aboard, because there were those who thought they were entitled to carry their baggage on seats provided for passengers.

Under official supervision, the train was filled in a remarkably short space of time and the seven hundred happy-go-lucky adventurers settled themselves down without confusion in preparation for the long journey.

Just as in war days, this process was carried out to completion to the accompaniment of jests and gibes.

When, however, the outskirts of Toronto had faded into oblivion, young and old, excited and calm, cynic and broadminded harvesters, settled down in their seats to indulge in rapid surveillance of their fellow travelers, and one of the first points noticeable was the fastidious taste in dress of some.

Overalls, heavy boots and workshirts, the usual concomitants of farm life, were noticeable by their absence. In their stead could be seen negligee shirts, creased trousers, Oxford shoes and be it noted sheer everything else, silk socks. These, in themselves, provided sufficient food for rumination. Silk socks on a harvesting excursion, they were unmistakable, but only part of a veneer, as a glimpse into some of the baggage revealed later.

In practically all the grips work clothes were discernible; and then the great and ludicrous truth dawned on The Star correspondent, experienced in western customs. These city clothes were intended for use on the Saturday night parade in the little western towns when the harvesters, with the day's hard labor achieved, would sally forth to the nearest town to play pool, make purchases, enjoy an evening's amusement and, incidentally, enrich the coffers of the merchants with some of their hard-earned money.

There were several eastern students going west to accumulate sufficient "coin of the realm" to pay for their winter in university. These ran true to type.

A few feet away, calmly watching the crowd with the eyes of age, was a man of 74 summers. His skin was wrinkled, his hair white and he possessed all the earmarks of one in the sunset of life. Opposite was a young Englishman, somewhat bashful, who, it transpired, left home only four short months ago and now was making his first trip west.

Method of Cultivation For the Eradication of Bladder Campion or Cow Bell.

Badly infested fields should be ploughed deeply in the fall and then cultivated and cross-cultivated with a broad-shared cultivator in order to break up and secure the under root-stocks. In the spring this cultivation should be repeated frequently enough to prevent the plant maturing any growth above ground until it is time to put in a hoed crop, which must be kept thoroughly clean in order to be effective. A well-cared for corn crop planted in hills so that it can be cultivated both ways has been found to give excellent results. Special attention must be given to hoeing out any bladder campion plants which may appear in the corn rows, and which are not destroyed by cultivation. One fall and one spring's thorough cultivation, followed by a well cared for hoed crop, has been found to destroy practically all the bladder campion in a field, except in exceptionally wet seasons.—J. E. Howitt.

Maize is cultivated by the Peruvians at a height of 7,000 feet above the sea.

STREET CLEANER IS ORIGINAL

Kitchener "White Wing" Takes Drink of Whisky Then Proceeds to Manicure Street

"Drink and be merry" was the slogan of a Kitchener white wing on Sunday morning last, but upon being arraigned in police court there on Monday morning, was truly sorry for that little sin. He is one of the city's official street cleaners, and had imbibed a little too freely of squirrel whisky. The accused was found wandering down King street with his little cart and horse, singing at the top of his voice. His vocal chords and discords were not appreciated by the church goers, and two policemen guided him to the station. Instead of going about his business, as a good street cleaner should, he staggered around the street a little too much to suit the passers-by. He told the acting magistrates, that he had received a couple of drinks from a stranger, whom he met at the bars where he had his conveyance stabled Upon being questioned, he stated that he never saw the man before, and never saw him after. Inspector Zinkann asked him if he thought a stranger would give him a drink of whisky, and intimated that he must surely know the man who gave him the booze. He emphatically shook his head, and told the court that it was the first time he had ever seen the tempter. He was fined $16 with the option of spending ter days in jail. Another man paid his fine and he was allowed to go.

THE GUMPS—THE PEOPLE'S CHOICE

AGED INDIAN FAILS RAPIDLY

Pete Brant, Aged 102, Ill at His Home Near Deseronto

Deseronto, Aug. 29.—Peter Brant, an aged and respected Mohawk, living on the Reservation with his daughter, Mrs. Isaac Powles, about a mile west of the town along the Provincial Highway, is at present failing rapidly. Mr. Brant is 102 years old, and is now the oldest living Mohawk on the Reservation. Up to the winter of 1920, Mr. Brant was fairly hale active and participated in the sports of the farm, doing chores and working in the garden. During the winter, on a day when there was much ice on the ground and when he went to enter the kitchen of the home from the outside, the wind caught the door, slamming it violently against him and causing him to slip and fall on the ice. While no bones were broken yet his whole system was shaken up and shattered by the fall so that he was confined to his bed and has continually been confined since the unfortunate accident.

However, up to a month ago he was able to sit up in bed to partake of his meals and to converse with his people and friends at time with some length and in a very rational manner and even now he can speak and seems to recognize, but is unable to carry on any conversation.

Mr. Brant was born on the Reservation in the year 1820 and lived up to the early 90's on the present site of the Catholic Presbytery on Dundas street. In the early 80's the lands were ceded to the government and it turn purchased from the government by E. W. Rathbun who in turn made them a part of the town of Deseronto. About that time all the lands west of what is now Mill street were Indian and Reservation property.

must provide some substitutes sufficient to take care of its load requirements until about the middle of December, and perhaps even a little longer. If the anthracite strike is settled at an early date it is quite possible that sufficient anthracite will then be available for the balance of the winter, but the fuel controller cannot at the present time anticipate.

"I am satisfied that the Toronto dealers, with possibly one exception, do not intend to imitate any Welsh coal. I think this is to be regretted. Therefore, outside the amount of coal purchased by the City Council, the people will have to depend mainly upon American bituminous coal for the Fall, if sufficient quantities of that can be brought in. Most of the Toronto dealers are of the opinion that this can be done. I have doubts about it myself, unless the railway situation in the States clears up rapidly.

"It is true that the American bituminous mines are now practically all being operated and that the production is again approaching normal. However, there is a shortage of bituminous coal to be caught up, as well as the much larger shortage in anthracite coal, accumulated during the last 60 days, 50 per cent of the bituminous mines in the States had not been operating since April 1st. I think there is bound to be somewhat of a congestion on the United States railways in moving the bituminous coal, in addition to the difficulty caused by the railway shopmen's strike.

"As Hard Coal in Sight.

"I am satisfied that not more than 20 per cent. at the best, of Toronto's requirements of anthracite coal have been filled. This was coal delivered during the Summer months. There is practically no anthracite available now.

"It would require about 100 cars per day from now until April to meet Toronto's requirements alone for anthracite coal. Whatever bituminous coal is required would be in addition to this. "I think it is clear that the coal supply for Toronto during the Fall is none too certain in any event. I therefore am strongly of the opinion that people must make up their minds to conserve fuel as much as possible. Where part of the coal is to be burned up in the Fall, and only a portion used for living purposes, this should be done. Where a supply of wood can be procured for early Fall this should be used. For the late Fall bituminous coal might be used. In the New England States people are being advised to use kerosene stoves. The writer does not believe the situation to any great extent, but it might help a little. The absolutely necessary thing is that people now make their plans to use as little as possible during the coming Winter, and especially in the Fall.

"The City Council is to be commended for what it has done so far in procuring a supply of Welsh coal, and I understand the city is contemplating further purchases of coal. Under the circumstances this is perfectly justifiable.

BIG COAL STOCKS AWAIT BIG PRICES

been flooded with offers of coal with deliveries guaranteed. It was declared the prices asked ranged from 160 to 200 per cent. above the normal cost.

The Detroit manufacturer believes that, like pirates in what he terms "the hold-up" of the coal brokers, every other manufacturer will follow suit, and that coal prices will reach an unprecedented figure. One source close to Mr. Ford said the manufacturer had "at the back of his mind" a picture of working men being unable to buy enough coal to keep their families warm because of the prices that eventually would be asked "unless this profiteering was stopped in its inception.

Offers to Sell Mines

The Ford Company recently has received a large number of offers on the part of coal operators to sell mines. None of these offers has been seriously considered, however, because of the present transportation conditions. It was explained by persons close to Mr. Ford to-day that the offering of mines meant but little, as they can be purchased now for almost nothing because of the large stocks of coal held by brokers."

JURY'S VERDICT ON DELORME MUST STAND

So Says Premier Taschereau of Quebec—The Case is Closed—Until Priest's Mind Improves

Montreal, Aug. 29.—The Delorme case is closed—for the present, at least, declared the premier of Quebec, Hon. L. A. Taschereau, provincial premier, when asked whether the government would be represented at Wednesday's superior court hearing of interdiction proceedings against the abbe, in which the question of the asylum inmate's sanity will be re-opened.

A jury of twelve has declared Delorme insane," continued Mr. Taschereau, "and that verdict stands until such time as it may be shown that his mental condition is improved and he is in condition to stand trial on the murder charge. The law then would take its course and he would have to stand trial."

Mr. Taschereau declared that he had received from Dr. D. Brochu, medical superintendent of St. Michael's Academy, Beauport an expression of opinion as to Delorme's mental condition. "That is all I want and he is eagerly awaited, in view of reports that he has expressed the view that Delorme is sane enough to manage his own affairs.

"Dr. Brochu never made any statement on the question of Delorme's sanity," said Mr. Taschereau. "That is just newspaper talk. We are not interested in the civil court proceedings, in any event. That is not our affair.

"We stand by the verdict of the jury until further developments."

RESOLUTION OF APPRECIATION TO REV. DR. McTAVISH

Dr. McTavish Has Recently Taken up His Residence In The City

The minutes of the last meeting of the Presbytery of Kingston have recently been printed and distributed, and from them we take the following appreciative resolution regarding Rev. Dr. MacTavish, who has lately taken up residence in Belleville:

"We the members of this Kingston Presbytery, desire to place on record our appreciation of our retiring brother, Rev. Dr. R. MacTavish, who recently resigned from his charge at Madoc. Few men in the active duties of the pastorate have rendered such outstanding service in the various departments of Christian activity, as for example: Missions, Temperance, Sabbath Observance and Y. P. S. He has also made distinctive by valuable contributions to magazines, and by writing useful books and pamphlets. He has had the unique experience of holding at different periods three pastorates in the same Presbytery, and his brethren are truly grateful for a ministry so full of kindly counsel and devoted service, bestowed not only upon his congregations but also upon the various courts of the Church. We rejoice to know that our brother is still full of energy and enthusiasm, and would pray that his many excellent gifts might be devoted to the beloved Church for many years to come.

SHARKS THREATENED FALLEN AVIATORS

Aviators Who Fell Into Sea Tell Story—Had Given Up Hope of Rescue When Naval Launch Arrived

London, Aug. 29.—Captain Norman MacMillan has cabled the Daily News from Chittagong, British India, a vivid account of the experience of himself and Lieutenant Mathieu, after their airplane had fallen into the sea in their attempt to continue the projected flight around the world, started by Major W. T. Blake, and now definitely abandoned.

The airmen were forced down by engine trouble, and suffered so much from exposure that they were sent to a hospital when rescued. For fifty hours they drifted about in the shark-infested waters and their despair became complete when the crew of a native ship passed them by the evident belief that they were evil spirits.

The naval launch, which finally rescued them, was on the point of passing also, thinking the airmen were native fishermen. "Good thing I had another look at you," said the commander of the launch, when they were safely aboard.

Parents:-

The retardation of mental development caused by defective vision and eyestrain in the growing child is now-a-days receiving greater attention—especially in the larger cities—with the result that a proper education is now possible for those who formerly were deprived owing to inaptitude for study, or wrongly considered inability to learn.

None of the cities have more efficient eye-sight service than Belleville.

CANADA'S NAVAL DEFENCE PLAN WAS JELLICOE'S

Nothing New in Story of Naval Proposals Made to Dominions

Ottawa, Aug. 28.—The London cable stating that a formal proposition has been made by Great Britain that the Dominions establish their own coast defences and fleets to be reinforced when needed by the British navy, is not a new story, according to available information here.

This scheme was eventually the one suggested by the British and Overseas Governments in the report of Admiral Jellicoe, two years ago. The Government of that day was inclined to go ahead with it, and the estimates made provision to that end, but objections were made in the party caucus, and little was done beyond maintaining the Canadian navy nucleus. The reason assigned was that the question of naval defence was to be discussed at the then impending Imperial Conference. The Conference was held by the naval question was not taken up because of the ensuing Washington Conference on arms limitations.

In the meantime, there has been a change of Government here and its naval policy, so far, is to make further drastic cuts in the limited naval service. The situation, it is thought, will remain unchanged until an Imperial Conference takes up the whole question of naval defence.

REMEMBER DEATH OF GREAT ARCHITECT

Sir Christopher Wren Died On February 25th, 1723

London, Aug. 29.—Sir Christopher Wren's name is indissolubly linked with St. Paul's Cathedral, in the crypt of which his body was laid almost 200 years ago, and on Monday, February 25 next, a notable gathering in St. Paul's will commemorate the bicentenary of his death, which occurred on February 25, 1723. The Royal Institute of British Architects has the matter in hand, and a committee has been appointed to arrange the details for the memorial services. This committee consists of representatives of Government departments, and of the great archaeological, artistic and scientific societies of London, also representatives of the leading universities.

It is proposed to organize a procession from the Mansion House to St. Paul's, which will be followed by a service at the Cathedral and a visit to the tomb of Sir Christopher. The President of the Royal Institute for British Architects will lay a wreath at the tomb. On a tablet over a doorway leading thereto is the well-known epitaph in Latin to Sir Christopher's monument, and under this tablet will pass many of the present notable men of Great Britain.

The architectural schools in London have been invited to take practical part in the proceedings during the period of Sir Christopher Wren, preparations for which are already under way. Visits to famous buildings erected by Wren will take place, among these being the Royal Exchange and the Guildhall. Bow Church, with its bells proclaiming to all within sound thereof to be Cockneys. It is hoped by this means to draw attention to some beautiful examples of the work of the great architect, and to stimulate still further the increasing interest in architecture displayed by the general public.

Born at East Knoyle, Wiltshire, on October 20, 1632, the son of a clergyman, Sir Christopher Wren achieved renown as an astronomer as well as an architect. He was Professor of Astronomy at Wadham College in 1657, and Professor of Astronomy at Oxford University in 1660. His undying fame, however, is connected with St. Paul's Cathedral, which he designed and built.

Sir Christopher's opportunity came with the destruction of a large part of London as a result of the great fire of September 2, 1666. Almost all the churches in London were swept away, by the flames, and old St. Paul's was left in ruins. Sir Christopher was commissioned to rebuild the Cathedral. The first stone of the new Cathedral was laid in 1675 and the last stone in 1710. Sir Christopher made designs also for fifty other churches which had been burned.

The many-sided genius of this remarkable man, who was a scientist, as well as an architect and astronomer, included mathematics. He was a member of the House of Commons from 1685 to 1700.

RESULT AWAITED OF REINDEER TEST

First Big Move to Establish Reindeer Industry in Canada

Halifax, N. S., Aug. 29.—Amadjuak Baffin Land, on the north side of Hudson Straits, may be expected very soon to give a report of how the six hundred Norwegian reindeer and their Lapland keepers, which were landed there last November fared through the long northern winter. As plans are afoot to place other and larger herds in Canada's northland with the purpose of making it a vast meat storehouse for the American continent, the report of the Amadjuak herd is being watched for with much interest.

It will be remembered that the landing of the reindeer in Baffin Land last November was hailed as history making in two ways; first, because it was the first big move to establish the reindeer industry in Canada; and second, the Hudson Bay Company's steamer Nascopie, in transporting the herd, made her second trip to Hudson Bay and Straits in a single year, the first ship to accomplish this. The great inland sea with its expanse of water stretching six hundred miles east and west and eight hundred miles north and south, was thereby taken out of the class of waters whose navigable season permits of but one visit a year by merchant ships.

FRANCE FACES GENERAL STRIKE TROOPS READY
All the Big Industrial Centres Guarded by Men Mounted and on Foot
SOLDIERS AT HAVRE
Paris, Aug. 29.—Mounted guards and armed police forces were thrown around the big industrial centres of France today on account of the general 24-hour strike call which went into effect at midnight labor federation in sympathy with Havre workmen, who went on strike last week.
No disorders had been reported this afternoon, but ten per cent. of the building workers failed to report for duty this morning, although the strike was not due to become effective until tomorrow.
City authorities as well as the government are planning thorough policing to-morrow as a precaution against potential trouble.
Troops at Havre.
Havre, Aug. 29.—Three regiments of troops were massed to-day at strategic points of the city to prevent disorders arising from the general strike, which became effective late last week. The troops effectively prevented a forbidden mass meeting of workmen who, however, went to the woods outside the town, held their meeting and returned without friction with the authorities.
All shipping activities, street car service and the gas supply continued to feel up to-day, but many engineers were running the electric power houses.
An eight-year-old girl, who was wounded during the week-end riotdied to-day.
There was a complete absence of disorders to-day, but the authorities were taking every precaution, as they said the workmen were known to have a big supply of hand grenades.

NEW RELIGIOUS FAITH
Patients Put to Sleep for Three Days—Alberta's Latest Sensation
Edmonton, Alta., Aug. 29.—"Atamism," a new addition to the religious faiths in Alberta, based fundamentally on the principles of the ten commandments with certain religious ingredients thrown in, is now believed by officials of the Alberta provincial police to be responsible for the death of Sam Joy, of Hillcrest, for which Mrs. Mary Joy and two female companions are now being held. It has been established beyond doubt as a result of investigations into the Hillcrest crime, that dope has been freely used by believers of the faith, putting the patients to sleep for a period of at least three days and three nights. The dope, it is declared, has been sold for the purpose of making "Saints of Atamism," of the persons to whom it has been administered. Police officials here now believe that Sam Joy did not meet his death as a result of the murderous intent of Mrs. Mary Joy, but that he was given an overdose of the "dope" from the effects of which he failed to return to the land of the living.
Mrs. Mary Joy, frail in body and not weighing more than ninety pounds, confessed to murdering Sam Joy, after his body had lain within her house for a period of two weeks and was in such a state of decomposition that it could not be left unburied any longer. She declared she had killed Joy by physical violence. The dead man was big physically, weighing close to two hundred pounds.

BREAD SMELLS LIKE EARTH
Gritty, Dark Brown in Color Starving Russians Are Glad to Get it
(By Canadian Press)
New York, Aug. 29.—The first sample to reach this continent of the new famous "famine flour" of the Russians has just been received at the offices of the National Lutheran Council, which has a number of representatives doing relief work in Russia. It was sent by a Canadian minister who left his home in Alberta to investigate conditions in Russia and aid in relieving the sufferings of the unfortunate people of that country.
Gritty, dark brown in color, and smelling like new earth from the garden, this substance of which the starving Russians bake their bread appears unpalatable, unwholesome, and totally unfit to be eaten. No substance like it is used for food, nor would be tolerated, by the people of any portion of Canada. The "flour" is composed of the ground up seed of Lebeda, with clay mixed in for adhesiveness. It has been used for eighteen months throughout the Volga region, and is now in use in the Ukraine and the Black Sea area, where the famine is still raging.

"The most prominent cause for the rise in Canadian exchange is the amount of money sent over the border by American bootleggers."

BELLEVILLE'S BIG FAIR OPENS MONDAY

Record Entries for Various Exhibits and Events—Labor Day Will See Procession of Union Men—Minister of Labor to Speak

Mr. H. B. Stock, Secretary of the Belleville Fair, was a busy official this morning attending to many details in connection with the Annual Belleville Fair, which will be held here on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

In this morning's mail, Secretary Stock received a sheaf of applications and entries for the various departments of the Fair, and many more are expected. Already the applications are far in excess of former years.

Hon. James Murdock, Minister of Labor, will officially open the Fair on Monday next, and this morning the secretary received a letter from the Minister of Labor, stating that he would be here, and asking for final arrangements in connection with the time of his arrival, and the time of the official opening.

The Labor Unions of Belleville have joined with the officials of the Fair, and on Monday (Labor Day) will hold a full program of sports in conjunction with the fair.

Commencing at 12-30 o'clock on Monday, the procession will leave the Market Square for the Exhibition grounds, in which the usual features of parades will be seen.

There will be at least one baseball game on each day of the Fair, and the management are attempting to arrange for a baseball tournament. The teams which will compete hav enot all been chosen as yet.

There has also been a very large entry in the Speeding in the ring classes, some of the best horses in the country having been already entered.

TRAPPED MEN IN GOLD MINE SEEM DOOMED

Desperate Efforts Are Being Made to Rescue Forty-Three Gold Diggers.

MILE BELOW SURFACE

Canaries Succumb to Poisonous Fumes and Fire is Spreading

At the Argonaut Gold Mine, Jackson, Cal., Aug. 30.—Deadly was striking a desperate battle here to-day for the lives of forty-three men, entombed nearly a mile below the surface.

Down in the pale faces of weary rescue crews, and relatives of the trapped miners, who had toiled and prayed ceaselessly throughout the night, but brought little hope that the men can be saved.

Around the mouth of the mine a pathetic little group of wives and children of the miners watched proceedings, which hourly grew more hopeless.

The entombed men, cut off by fire yesterday, were drowned. It was feared. They had attempted to escape when they could not a little air, but to save them was believed impossible.

A loaded skip was repeatedly shot down into the depth, plunging from the level on which the men were believed to be crouching. Each time there was hope—and then that hope was dashed as the skip was hauled back—empty.

Miners Give up Hope

Miners who were not caught in the blast of fire worked to endless shifts. Many of those who were off the rescue work refused to go home to sleep, but remained pressed against the ropes near the shaft, watching. Those miners have given up hope for their comrades.

LOTS OF WOOD FOR WINTER

Fuel Committee is Busy Buying Wood for Sale to Citizens Next Winter

Mayor Hanna informed the Intelligencer this morning that the "Fuel Committee" of the city council of the city, had purchased two hundred additional cords of wood, north of Napanee.

The wood is mixed, and is said to be excellent fuel, and it will be sold at reasonable prices. There is no difficulty in purchasing wood, the difficulty is in purchasing it at prices that when the freight charges are added, the retail price will be reasonable.

Wood purchased by Mayor Hanna and Aldermen Foster and Thompson will be bought at prices that will enable them to retail it at a price within the reach of almost anyone in the city.

Mayor Hanna is of the opinion that the purchase of one more load will place this city in a position when the approach of winter will not be dreaded.

NEW WHEAT DIRTY

Foul Seeds Mixed With Very High Grade Grain

Fort William, Aug. 30—Owing to the fact that the grain inspectors do not find the real marking new grain to distinguish it from last year's crop, no accurate figures are obtainable as to the number of cars of new wheat which have arrived, but clearly the statement that a few cars of wheat are in the houses here, though the majority of the grain so far received is rye. What new wheat has come down here is very dirty and is graded "rejected." The wheat itself is very high grade, being Number One and Two northern, but from five to twenty per cent. of foul seeds, principally wild oats, is contained in most of it. Most of the grain is from southern Manitoba, where the land has become overrun with weeds. It is expected that cleaner grain will come from Saskatchewan.

JAPANESE ART AT EXHIBITION

Fine Collection of Water Color Drawings in C. P. R. Building Which is all Jap in Decoration

(Special to The Intelligencer by J. Harry Smith)

Toronto, Ont., Aug. 30.—The exhibits at the Toronto exhibition this year include a remarkable showing of Japanese art which has been brought to Canada especially for the "show". It is partly made up of a very fine collection of water color paintings representing the best of the modern school of Japanese painters, those who have to some extent forsaken the more conventional style of Japanese painting in favor of the western method expressing the natural beauty of their country. This collection of paintings has created a great deal of interest in Toronto art circles, and it is hoped that art lovers in other parts of Canada will have an opportunity of viewing them after the close of the exhibition.

This exhibit is at present housed in the C. P. R. building which has been very nicely decorated for the occasion after the Japanese manner. On another wall the St. Lawrence route to Europe is featured with a working model of Quebec harbor thus typifying with its companion picture the Great trans-Canada route from Europe to the Orient. In somewhat similar fashion the west Indies are depicted as through seen from the steps of an ocean liner. Expose of British which will again this year be on of the C. P. liners making a winter cruise of the southern seas. To the east side of machinery hall stands a fully equipped C. P. R. train which is visited by an unending stream of people from daylight to dark. This train represents the latest in all steel rolling stock and is first class evidence that Canadian workmanship in the C. P. R. shops are the equal of any in the world.

GERMANS HAVE GONE THE LIMIT

German Delegates Present Their Proposals for Moratorium Before Reparations Commission

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, August 30.—The reparations Commission convened at ten-thirty this morning and for a few minutes called in the German delegates, including Karl Bergmann, Herr Schroeder and Dr. Fischer, of the Finance Ministry, and Ambassador Mayer. Herr Schroeder presented the German proposal on which delegates hope to be granted a moratorium. They declared that the offer made by Berlin Government represented their limit.

Paris—later—Feeling was expressed in reparations circles this afternoon that the French Government would withdraw its delegates on the reparations question pertaintory to independent action on the indemnity question.

This belief arose from the fact that the German delegates had not advanced proposals satisfactory to France.

BATTLESHIP'S LOSS PUTS FRANCE ON LEVEL WITH ITALY

Paris, Aug. 30.—(Associated Press)—The battleship France, which was sunk off Quiberon Bay early Sunday, will be replaced by a vessel of similar type. The naval agreement signed at Washington, gives France the right to replace any unit lost by accident.

The loss reduces the country's first naval line by one-seventh of its fighting strength and places the French Navy on an equality with Italy's. It will be long before the former superiority can be re-established, as the dreadnought, which cost 40,000,000 francs to build, will cost about 700,000,000 francs to replace at today's prices.

RIVAL FORCES SEEK CONTROL FARMER'S SUN

Drury-Morrison Campaign Are Expected to Put Up a Keen Struggle

Toronto, Aug. 30.—The meeting of the shareholders of The Farmer's Sun which takes place on September 11th, will be invested with more than ordinary interest, by reason of the recent developments in the provincial political field. From what one hears a keen struggle is expected between the supporters of the government and those of J. J. Morrison, the U.F.O. secretary. Whether a directorate friendly to the government or one of another kind will be elected, remains to be seen. The present directors are Col. J. E. Fraser, J. J. Morrison, W. A. Amos, W. C. Good, M.P., and W. L. Smith.

As is well-known the editorial policy of The Sun for some time has been, to put it mildly, subject to suspicion on the part of many friends of the Drury government, and it was on account of this that a conference of supporters of the government in the legislature and a few others was recently held at parliament buildings to canvass the situation. As a result a committee was appointed to take steps to place before shareholders of The Sun in the various constituencies the government's side of the case. The object of this was apparently to ensure that at the forthcoming meeting of the shareholders a directorate favorable to the present administration at Queen's Park would be elected. There had been reports previously that a deal set was to be made on the government by those who control the Sun, and friends of the ministry, it is said, thought it was time to take action of some sort.

It is stated that while the construction of the Farmers' Sun been vigorously denied at shareholders' meetings that the directors not long ago passed a very large secretive permits. That they have called the other side to adopt similar measures to checkmate the Morrison-ites capturing the meeting, but, if it is true, to what extent is not generally known. From what can be learned no decisions were made at the last meeting at Parliament buildings in regard to securing proxies; in fact, those to whom the Sun has spoken have found the question being discussed. At any rate Premier Drury is understood to be opposed to the committee taking part in any proxy contest there might be, and has issued instructions to the committee to that effect. It is stated he has also sent similar notification to Government members of the legislature. The Premier is said to take the view that it is a domestic matter for the shareholders, and they can thrash it out among themselves. The idea of the committee being formed at the Parliament Buildings conference was ostensibly to acquaint the shareholders with what might be said from the government side.

JAP CRUISER IS WRECKED IN TYPHOON

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Tokio, Aug. 30. — The Japanese Cruiser Niitaka, went down in a typhoon off the Kamchatka coast, on August 26, with virtually all hands, according to confirmed advices received by the Admiralty. Naval reports said that practically none of the crew of three hundred was saved.

MOTOR CAR VERSUS TOY WAGON

Motorist Who Ran Down Boy's Wagon Was Haled Before Magistrate and Had to Pay

(Canadian Press)

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 29.—A boy's toy wagon is just as important in the eyes of the law as an automobile. That is Magistrate Roberts' opinion and he put it into practice in a recent court ruling.

Samuel Stern's machine ran over and smashed little Richard Kesling's wagon. Richard took down Stern's number on a board, went to the police station and had the motorist arrested.

When the case was called the boy stepped up to plead his own case. Stern was amused and showed it, which was an unwise move, for the Magistrate saw nothing funny about it. Stern's amusement fled, however, when the Magistrate refused him his choice of being held for court or paying for the wagon. Stern paid.

HESSIAN FLY MAY BE KILLED

By Delaying Planting Date, Insects Die After Emerging From Ground

Hessian fly cuts down the wheat yield of the United States fully 10 per cent. each year, according to the best estimates of the Bureau of Entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture. This loss has amounted to as high as $80,000,000 in some years and probably has not gone below $50,000,000 for the past forty years or more. In one year, with prewar prices, it amounted to $18,000,000 in Kansas alone.

Fly is Very Small

The fly itself is so small that it is difficult to recognize with the naked eye, says the Country Gentleman. Two generations occur within the course of a year. The eggs laid in the spring hatch into larvae or tiny white grubs, which in turn develop into what is known as the flaxseed or resting stage. From these a brood of flies emerges in the fall to lay eggs on the wheat which in turn develop into larvae and then into flaxseed. In this second resting stage the fly lives over the winter to emerge in the spring and lay eggs, thus completing the annual cycle.

Larvae Cause Damage

The damage to the wheat is caused by the larvae, chiefly by the spring generation. These lodge between the leaf sheath and the stem above the joint. The larvae feed upon the young wheat plant, the stem becomes weakened and as the wheat head becomes heavy with ripening grain, the stem, unable to bear its normal load, bends or breaks at the weakened spot and falls.

If the attack is in the fall, the plant may die over winter. Often in a farmer says his wheat has been winterkilled, the real facts are that it had been fly-weakened and winter-finished.

Not Bad Every Year

The fly is not bad every year, but seems to go through a cycle or wave of several years in extent. It becomes serious one year, dies down for several years and then returns again in epidemic proportions to plague the wheat fields. There have been about eight definite waves in the past forty years.

Now, luckily for the farmer, the Hessian fly has a little habit of emerging from his flaxseed rest each fall on almost exactly the same day. This being true, all that is necessary to outguess the Hessian fly is to wait until after it has emerged from the ground in the fall, let it live its little life of a few days and die. Then plant the wheat. When it comes up there will be no fly.

LISTENING IN ON HEAVEN

Thurston Is Making Novel Experiments—Dead on Planets

White Stone Landing, N.Y., Aug. 26.—Foundation for belief that spirits of the dead inhabit the planets has been discovered by Howard Thurston, investigator of so-called spirit deceptions, said, thereafore, a skeptic, he announced today.

In the hope that he may be able to put heaven on the astronomic charts, shortly, he is continuing experiments with a semi-radio apparatus constructed in his summer home.

When Thurston, who was formerly known as a magician, can devise some means of interrupting the weird mappings, writings and charts he has been picking up in the still house of morning, he believes he can establish the whereabouts of lost souls with purely scientific equipment.

Thurston was "listening in" several weeks ago with a new radio set he had installed in his home. A glass of water near seemed to attract strange sounds. Moving the glass produced different effects. The magician, curious to know what station was broadcasting the unintelligible wails he had stumbled upon, commenced experimenting with rocks, earth and water, trying out his apparatus from 2 to 4 o'clock in the morning, when there were few other sounds in the atmosphere. In the last two or three days he has been able to pick up from apparently nowhere murmurs as of Hindu music and unintelligible verse things which seem like humans far removed.

He has been forced to conclude, if they are not communications from spirits, they must be messages from other planets.

"Recently I arrived at the conclusion that many of the planets, if not all, are inhabited by beings, spiritual or physical, who are similar to us in mentality at least, and that in the course of time they will get into instant contact with us," he declared.

TO REMOVE BODY OF SIR WILFRID LAURIER TO ANOTHER GRAVE

More Suitable Place in Cemetery Available for His Resting Place

Ottawa, Aug. 29.—There is a possibility that the body of Sir Wilfrid Laurier may be removed from its present resting place in Notre Dame Cemetery. Plans are now being completed which call for certain changes in the cemetery, and when these are completed the body of the former Liberal chieftain may be placed in a final resting place just opposite the main gates of the cemetery, where the large vault is at present. This vault, which has done duty for over 50 years, is being removed. The decision will have to be made early in the Spring as the beautiful monument which the people of Canada are placing over the grave of the Liberal leader is now being cut in France and will b ein Canada by Spring. Once this is placed it would be almost impossible to change the grave.

JACK HOLT AND BEBE DANIELS SCORE IN "NORTH OF THE RIO GRANDE"

That the screen public never tires of tense, virile, out of doors drama, was exemplified last night at Griffin's theatre by the enthusiasm of a large audience that watched "North of the Rio grande", a new Paramount picture starring Jack Holt and Bebe Daniels.

A well defined plot holds together the units of the tale, novelty being provided by the rather unusual dramatic devices of twin horses. And when one speaks of the equine actors, mention should be made of the marvelous feats of Jack Holt's mount, announced as a champion "Jumper". The horse in question certainly adds several thrills to the action.

Bebe Daniels proves that she can ride a horse and appear to just as good advantage against a "cow" background as in the drawing rooms of her previous productions. Charles Ogle, Alex Francis and Will Walling well-known character players add much to the entertainment values of the picture of wild life along the border.

"Second Hand Rose", the popular song sensation, has become "Second Hand Rose", the popular picture sensation.

For Gladys Walton's latest five reel Universal starring vehicle which is the second feature offering on the same program has a new kick. It enters a new field for material and the result is unique.—If there ever was a song character more pathetically lovable than "Second Hand Rose", it would be hard to name it.

The poor little girl had everything second hand, nothing came to her new, clothes, troubles or a husband. But "Second Hand Rose" hardly needs description to the millions who have heard and sung the piece, and the story is just what you expect it to be. It's the "Second Average Hyden" visualized with the heroine a little Irish waif in a Jewish family.

"The Night Before" an amusing Fox Comedy was exhibited between the feature offerings.

FISHING BEST AT NEW MOON

Old-Time French Poacher Says That Catch is Best During First Seven Days

Paris, Aug. 30.—French Fishing circles just now are arguing with much heat the question of how much the moon has to do with fish, since a few days ago an old-time poacher, who claims to live by nothing else but fishing, started a diary purporting to show that at various periods of the moon fish were more plentiful than at others, and the catch was more certain. The poacher says he has the record for the last thirty years to prove that fish bite better during the new moon than at any other period. Every day is a good day for fishing during the seven days of the new moon, the fourth and fifth days being the best days and from midnight until 3 p.m. being the best hours, according to this authority.

During the first quarter of the moon the sixth and seventh days are best, the hours biting being good all through the day. During the period of the full moon the seventh is the best from noon until nightfall. The second day is exceptionally bad for the fishermen.

The last quarter of the moon is the worst period of all, with not a single good day recorded, although it is shown that on the seventh day the fishing is fairly good in the afternoon.

FIVE ACRES OF SUNFLOWERS

Hastings Farmer Has Record Crop—Reports of Farm Conditions in Ontario are All Favorable

Following is a summary of reports made by the Agricultural representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

Hastings says—"A farmer in the township of Thurlow has five acres of sunflowers which he intends mixing with the corn in the silo. He followed this practice last year with excellent results. He claims that his milk records show an increase from feeding sunflowers over corn alone. When emailing he puts a load of each alternately in the silo, and in that way has been enabled to test the two crops as a silage food."

Lennox and Addington states that four pure-bred Holstein cows sold for $1,000 last week, and four others for $600. These cattle were all from accredited herds.

Middlesex says: "Live stock have been well on account of the good pastures. A few car loads of fat cattle have been shipped out during the past week, and some young stock have been brought in from the Stock Yards at Toronto."

Wellington reports that a cargo of fat stock was shipped this week from Fergus and Elor to Glasgow.

Prontenac states that considerable number of cattle, chiefly cows and bulls, have been marketed during the week.

The milk flow continues to be very satisfactory for the time of year, as pastures have kept up wonderfully nearly all summer.

Hastings reports that all cheese factories in that county are now paying by the butter test with apparent satisfaction.

Halton says that some milk has been rejected by factories in that county, because of the flavor from alfalfa.

Indications point to at least average acreage of fall wheat this year. Much fall plowing is being done all over the Province.

Elgins says: "There has been an increase in the amount of after harvest cultivation or early fall plowing. The weed problem is becoming a serious matter on many farms, and this spring, will no doubt help considerable in cleaning the farms."

Kenora says that much carelessness is shown by too many farmers in regard to weed growth, and urges more drastic legislation to assist in keeping cleaner farms.

Prices for fruit and garden truck have been disappointing to growers so far this season. Norfolk says: "Farmers are complaining of poor returns for market garden crops and state that while everything yielded well the cash returns are very disappointing. Tomatoes consigned to forest Toronto net the grower only five cents per eleven quart basket."

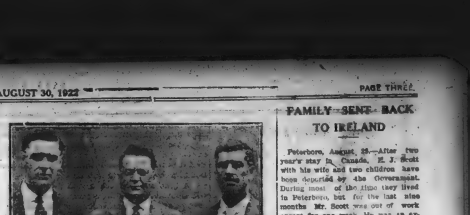

Lincoln says: "The Niagara Peninsula Growers are shipping in carlots plums, peaches, and tomatoes to Western markets, and relieving local market somewhat. There is, however, a large offering of all kinds of fruit, and the prices are just a little slow. The consumer would be well advised to can for the coming winter, and for the winter following, because prices are certain to be higher another year."

The corn situation in the Province is well put by Dundas: "The corn crop has picked up remarkably during the past three weeks, and instead of being a failure will be quite up to average and in yielding six bushels, and more, of seed per acre.

Oxford says that considerable oats are still out, as many farmers have chosen to do their threshing in the field.

Speaking of tobacco, Kent says: "Flue cured tobacco is coming on fairly fast in a number of places and some kilns are already full. The early planted Burley is also reaching maturity now and a considerable number of farmers have commenced harvesting."

Buckwheat where grown in a most promising crop. In many places it is so heavy in top that lodging is to be feared.

LABOR'S NEW VICE-PRESIDENTS

Left to right—Bert Merson, Toronto (street railway employee); J. T. Foster, Montreal (president Montreal trades and labor council, machinists); Alex McAndrews (general organizer for the maintenance of way men), Moose Jaw. They have been elected vice-presidents of the trades and labor congress of Canada.

GEDDES KILLS SCHEME

No Assistance Now For British Reforestation

London, Aug. 30—Complaints emanate from those interested in the future supplies of native timber that the Geddes economy committee, which recently recommended sweeping curtailments of the national expenditure, has knocked practically all the life from the scheme of state assistance for reforestation. The Geddes committee recommended the cutting off of the allowance of over £250,000 for l and drainage and forestry this year.

Independent commentators, while not favoring a national purchase, admit that great inroads upon British woodlands were made for war purposes, but recall the fact that a generation ago barely a tenth of the wood used in Great Britain is home grown. Most of the wood used now comes from Russia, Finland, Sweden and Norway, and timber importers have mostly settled down to relying on foreign growths.

FAMILY SENT BACK TO IRELAND

Peterboro, August, 28—After two years' stay in Canada, E. J. Scott with his wife and two children have been deported by the Government. During most of the time they lived in Peterboro, but for the last nine months Mr. Scott was out of work except for one week. He was an ex-soldier and was sent out from Ireland by the British Government. He was crippled and his disability prevented him from doing heavy work. In sending him back the Canadian authorities have been following their regular policy, it was said, and it was held that Mr. Scots should never have been sent to this country. The cost of his family's return voyage is borne by the steamship company that transported him, and the British Government pays the other expenses.

VAST COAL BEDS AT THUNDER BAY?

Port Arthur Engineer Says District Is Undermined With Fuel

Port Arthur, Aug. 30—Jules Cross, reputed one of the best known and most reliable mining engineers in the district stated today that he is sure that this locality is undermined with coal.

"I have seen outcroppings of coal behind the old high school building in Port Arthur," he said. "This is anthracolite coal, burns to a slight ash and throwing out an intense heat. Whether it exists in large enough quantities to make it of any commercial value has not been determined."

Mr. Cross was led to say what he did by the reported discoveries seen near Sudbury, in which he is greatly interested.

U. S. Senator Core on the Farmer.

The farmer cannot continue to sell his produce for less than the cost of production any more than he could live in a vacuum. Out of the reduced proceeds of what he sells, the farmer is obliged to pay extraordinary prices for everything that he buys. I believe that our national progress and prosperity are bound up with the progress and prosperity of our farmers. Any policy which cripples the farmer will bear evil fruit, and will dry up the fountains of national prosperity.

ONTARIO THE TRUE LAND OF PROMISE

Belleville Chamber of Commerce will present to the Associated Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce in Seven Southern Ontario Counties, urging the encouragement of British emigration to Canada in order to fill and till the waste places of the Province of Ontario. The resolution reads: "Resolved that immigration, especially of desirable British immigrants, in order to fill and till the vacant waste places of our Province, great in area and resources, should be encouraged in every way possible, and to this end systematically assisted if necessary, and by systematically welcoming, settling and establishing home-seekers here; and that Ontario should be given the same measure of publicity, and should have as permanent, prominent and attractive quarters in London, the centre, as other Provinces and portions of the Empire—in working out the destiny of which materially, industrially and loyally Ontario may play a leading part."

It is a good sign of the times when local trade associations are "broadening out" in this way, and extending their interest and vision not only over the whole Province, but also over the whole Empire. The Province of Ontario has for years been overlooked as a field for new land settlers from overseas. The great West has been advertised as the Promised Land for the British emigrant, and it is to be feared that the promise has not always been fulfilled. Disappointment in both the climate and living conditions on the prairies has done injury to the rest of Canada. Immigrants have written home describing the loneliness of the life of the homesteaders on the prairies, and the impression has gone abroad that Canada is one desolate flat plain which is covered with wheat for three months in the year and is under snow and ice for the other nine months.

Ontario is the natural settling ground for immigrants from the British Isles. It was the place where the first British immigrants made their home, and gaining on the Happy Hunting Grounds.

the new-comer in these days can enter into the heritage that has been left by those hardy pioneers. There are tracts of land in New Ontario that await the new pioneer, but there are also acres of semi-cultivated soil in Old Ontario that are lying fallow for lack of men who love to work on the land.

A little less land and a good deal more intensive cultivation would make farming in this country more profitable and more desirable. The farm houses are too far apart and life is too lonesome and unsociable in rural districts. We need more settlers in order to make the country habitable. Let the Government look after the settlement of the East, and the West should look after itself. The best settlers in Western Canada are those that have first been acclimatized in Ontario, which approximates more to conditions in the British Isles.

BURNING WATER

It seems there is no escape from the coal man. The "new fuel" to be derived from burnt water, which was proclaimed as a new discovery in New York, has no more friends than the anthracite which is said to have been discovered at Sudbury. A writer in the New York Times declares that water-gas is not a new fuel, that he saw the process of its production demonstrated eight years ago, and that the engineers who witnessed the process were of the opinion that it was impracticable and would never be a commercial success. The writer goes on to say:

"The processes, condensing fixture, and there are several others of almost equal importance, is the very high operating temperature. A temperature of 900 degrees is spoken of as the point at which water breaks up into its elements. That is the temperature inside of the coiled pipes; the outside temperature is that of a white heat, about 2,100 degrees. At such temperatures metals such as copper and steel corrode very quickly—incidentally copper melts at around 1,980 degrees. Your account speaks of the coiled pipes being well blackened, as of course they would be from the oxidation, and then lies the danger. These pipes will have a very short life. But outside of this the process is dangerous to use because these pipes are likely to corrode so quickly that, with about sixty pounds steam pressure on the inside, you may at any time have an explosion. Instead of decreasing the fire risk you will increase it a hundredfold."

"The idea of burning water makes a great appeal, and it is striking to see nothing but water and a blue oil fed to the apparatus. But the extremely high temperatures will block the commercial possibilities of the process."

We are a little tired of reading about those merry days when prosperity was "just around the corner" from a despatch which states that the conference met and broke up without coming to any agreement.

In the coming watergas age we should not lack for fuel; all we will have to do is to pump it from the bay, or catch it as it falls in the "gentle rains from heaven."

It is reported that De Valera has taken to a horse—that was more than another tyrant could do at the end of his career, when he cried, "My kingdom for a horse!"

Peter Brant, the centenarian Indian of Deseronto, is 102, and is said to be failing rapidly. He is not failing much.

MIDSUMMER'S ROUGH MUSIC

Rattling, Reeling, and Croaking Songs of English Birds.

(By Marcus Woodward)

What the midsummer silence falls on our song-birds, and we are asking: "Where are the notes of Spring?", Nature follows as a rule type of bird-music; this may be called the rough music of midsummer. Throstle and merle are also oppressed by family cares to sing much these days; Robin Redbreast goes into retirement to moult; Philomel's matchless voice changes to a harsh croak—"krr-krr!" The nightjar takes his place with his rattle-cone that is like the old-time night-watchman's rattle, or like the whirring song of the threshing machine, with its rising and falling note, rough music indeed after the vernal songs.

Summer being established in all its pomp and glory, in the meadows where the warblers sang in the hedgerows in April we hear, in place of their gracious music, the strident cry of the corncrake, "Crake-crake"—morning and evening the cry goes up continuously, and it seems to come from every part of a meadow, so swiftly does this elusive bird run through the grass.

"The Land of Afternoon."

The creature of the turtle-dove is another curious song that breathes the spirit of hot summer, the voice of the land of afternoon." The gentle, purring coo surpasts the syllables, "tur, tur, tur," of the repeated measure or less quickly, and this possibly suggested the name.

Most remarkable of all songs is that of the grasshopper warbler, well-nicknamed "reeldiad," whose note suggests the churring of a grasshopper or cicada, or is like a fisherman's well-oiled reel running rapidly, or the vibratory note of the rattlesnake, and goes on day and night, with curious crescendo and diminuendo.

Those of us who love to lie out o' nights in midsummer "under the wide and starry sky" have an accompanist to our dreams in the field-crickets, whose notes are sharp, like the jarring of fine steel wheels (another type of midsummer music), yet pleasantly soporific. The males fiddle by rubbing one wing over the other, while the females quaint their eggs.

Note of the Wryneck.

On the high downs the dominant grasshoppers sing their merry songs in the depths of the grasses where all the lowland warblers are silent. "Cricri-cri-cri-ri!" is the burden of the song that can never be a burden to lovers of the great bare downs, and is in direct harmony with the "hop o' the summer."

The note of the wryneck is to many minds expressive of the very spirit of a hot July afternoon, as he calls from an elm in some meadow of mowing. "Pe-pe-pe-pe-pe!" he calls by the hour, one reiterated note, almost exactly like a hesterle's.

There are several other July notes of this monotonous sort; one that deserves special mention is the extraordinary effort of the lesser edible frog. His "brekek-brekek" carries fully half a mile. The singer is a prodigious fellow, and the power of his mouth two large bagpipes, the vocal sacs that have earned him in the Fens the name, "Candlesticks." Nightingale." — John o'London's Weekly.

WIT AND HUMOR

Why He Is Popular.

Blake—Why is Jim so popular at the club? Why, everyone knows that he can't speak.

Baker—Yes, and he knows it, too.

Awaiting Call to the Bar.

In South London there is a tavern called the Mansion House.

A man had been standing outside the bar for some time, and eventually the landlord asked him why he was waiting.

"I have been commanded to appear as a witness at the Mansion house this morning," said the man.

The landlord explained that there was a Mansion house in the city of London.

"Is that so?" said the man. "This is the only Mansion House I know."

"Quid Pro Quo."

A dairy farmer living in a small town was summoned to appear before the local magistrate on a charge of selling butter under weight. The complainant was the village baker who felt that he was being wronged when he discovered that every pound of the farmer's butter fell below the weight which a pound ought to be.

"Have you a pair of scales?" asked the magistrate of the farmer.

"Yes, your worship."

"And weights?"

"Yes, your worship, I have no weights."

"You have no weights! How, then can you weigh your butter?"

"That is very simple. Since the baker has bought his butter from me I buy my bread from him, and pound loaves serve me as weights to weigh my butter. If the butter does not weigh what it should, it is the baker's fault, and not mine, you see."

PRESS OPINIONS

NOT THE PRICE, BUT THE SUPPLY IS NOW THE QUESTION.

(Toronto Telegram)

United Baiter officials admit that even if the railway strike were settled tomorrow there would have to be rationing of coal this winter.

Since both Provincial and Federal Governments refuse to move in the matter Canada must keep warm during the coming winter on such ration, to say, as the U.S. may throw this way.

It is no longer a question: "What price will we pay for coal this winter?" But the question is: "Where is our winter's coal coming from?"

And the real trouble is that our Governments are content to leave the answer to the coal dealers, who dare not get supplies from Waterdeal their future customers from United States be cut off by mine owners who are more interested in their own profits than Canada's comfort.

IS IT ANTHRACITE?

(Toronto Globe)

The claim that pure anthracite exists in paying quantities near Sudbury, Ont., is reaffirmed by Mr. A. F. A. Coyne, a geologist of repute. The official reply, when the announcement was first made, was that the substance was anthracitiie, which is a mixture of anthracite and graphite, but "is so enc rusted with refractory bowrim matter as to be commercially useless. This verdict was based on previous explorations of the district. At a time when the public mind is agitated by the fuel question, the Federal or Provincial authorities would do well to examine anew Mr. Coyne's claim and to appoint a small committee of geologists to visit the spot and report. If Mr. Coyne is mistaken, they should know it. Those who are being asked to invest money in coal deposits should in this Province should have the benefit of the advice of experts in the public service. Even if the official geologists are mistaken, they should be instructed to go over the ground again.

Almost Strangers.

Day Policeman (relieving night c)—How's the misses?"

Night Policeman—I don't know; haven't seen her for ten years.

Day Policeman—But ye're living together, aren't ye?

Night Policeman—Yes, but she's a charwoman, an' is out all day, an' I'm out all night, so we've never met since we came back from our honeymoon.

ANCIENT WRITINGS FOUND IN SCOTLAND

Belfast, Aug. 31—The site of one of the earliest Christian monasteries in Ireland has been found at Mahee Island, Strangford Lough, near Belfast. The ruins have been identified as those of Nendrum monastery, mentioned in Muirchu's "Life of St. Patrick," written before 699 A.D.

Extensive excavations have been carried out and valuable material, including some stones with writing, the exact meaning of which has not yet been ascertained, have been unearthed. Some of the writings are believed to be of Danish origin.

In Cecily Ecclesiastical History" it is recorded that in 634 Pope Honorius wrote to certain bishops of the Irish Church about the Paschal controversy and Pelagian heresy, and one of the bishops mentioned in this letter is Connoac, Bishop of Nendrum. The island of Nendrum was afterwards named Mahee, after a bishop of the monastery.

Bernard Leveque Finds Father in Montreal When Uses the Newspaper Columns

Montreal, Aug. 30.—Bernard Leveque of 161 West 36th st. New York city, came to the end of a nineteen-year-old-quest in a Montreal hotel lobby when he met and recognized his father, who left him in an orphanage in Ogdensburg. 28 years ago, when Bernard was only five years old.

The death of his wife caused Leveque to place his child in an orphanage. Bernard thrived and lived at the orphanage until he was eleven years old. Then he was sent to work on a farm of Keene Centre, New York. He was fourteen years of age when he left the farm and went to New York City to earn his living.

Search for Years

Every year Bernard spent his vacation touring through the various districts of New York State in search of his father. Other years were to be chanced to visit the farm where he had worked for three years. He was told that five years ago his father had been there in search of him but not being able to find him had returned to Montreal, where he probably still lived.

The son immediately set out for Montreal, armed with a 32-year-old photograph of his father. He searched the city. Directories and telephone books led him on false trails but he finally advertised. Leveque Senior will probably return to the United States to make his home with his son.

HERE AND THERE

"SAINT" LLOYD GEORGE?

It, as suggested, a bas-relief of Mr. Lloyd George is included in the decorative work of the new St. John's Cathedral, New York, he will be the first statesman to find himself so honored whilst still in the flesh. Whom Chester Cathedral was restored many years ago, memorials of Gladstone and Disraeli were added to the ornamentation of the south transept; and Lord Grimthorpe figures as an angel in St. Alban's Abbey, to the waterside pinnacles he made generous contribution. Gladstone's features may also be recognized among the grotesques outside St. Giles's, Cornwall, in company with Rosebery, late Lord Salisbury and Lord Randolph Churchill.—Morning Post.

BEGAN EARLY.

A woman who was giving evidence in the favor of her son swore that he had worked on a farm ever since he was born. "Ever since he was born," repeated the questioning counsel, with a smile at his own sharpness. "What did he do the first year?" "He milked," was the delightful answer.

A RIVAL OF QUININE.

The announcement is made that a plant has been discovered in India which is an effective remedy for malaria and black-water fever. Its Latin name is Vitex peduncularis, and it is found in the provinces of Bengal and Bihar. It is administered to the patient in the form of a tea of infusion, having a strength of two or three per cent., made from the leaves of the plant. Kenner (Stuttgart) states that a short time after the patient has swallowed the aqueous solution of Vitex, his blood is found to be entirely free of malaria germs. This new drug has an advantage over quinine in that it has no bitter taste.

FOR THE "MIMBUS."

When Lord Byng, the Governor-General of Canada, visited a certain military hospital in the West, a convalescent soldier handed him a tastefully and wonderfully made tea bag with the words: "Give that to the missus. Maybe she could do with it."

NOT TOO OLD AT 82.

Mr. Thomas Hardy, who has completed his eighty-second year, has just given to the world a new volume of poems full of the quaint criticism of life. He does not faint or fail. He is wonderful, and the double event makes one ponder not on longevity, but on the persistence of strength, the labor and sorrow. How many middle-aged writers of today—and most of our leading writers are middle-aged—have to alter themselves with unabated force between the ages of eighty and ninety? What may we expect of them, and what may be expected of us, as the years go on? In his recent brilliant address to the students of St. Andrews, Sir James Barrie advised them, in effect, to give their elders the knockout if they can. But can they? Here in an aged Victorian, in our midst, writing better, and thinking more deeply, than our youngest young men and women. He is universal where they are local. His curve encloses their curve, and his thoughts make theirs seem tentative and liable to revision.—John o'London.

TWO POINTS OF VIEW.

"Any man who is too lazy to earn a living by hard work can make one by writing novels," a handsome living, too, if he is lucky—but only those who have labored for years at the job can earn a living by writing plays.—St. John Evening Post.

About one novelist in a thousand makes a living from his writing. We ourselves published six novels by W. J. Locke before he started making a living from his writings.—B. W. Willett, a director of John Lane, Ltd., in the "Daily News."

OVERMARRIED.

The British Weekly tells the following story of Lady Astor and her old negro nurse, whom she met again during her recent visit to America: "Lady Astor was showing Aunt Betty the picture of Cliveden, her beautiful home on the Thames, with its wonderful lawns and handsome house. Aunt Betty looked at the picture, looked at Lord Astor. Then she turned to Lady Astor as follows: 'Well, Miz Nancy, all I'm got to say is dat you suttinly did over marry yourself!'"

A WHIFF OF TAR.

Fresh tar that issues from a bridge new built
Across a prairie river fringed with trees,
A scorching summer gleam, a cooling breeze;
A ridge of rosin weeds in gleaming silt;
A maiden, galloping her steed full tilt,
Dismounting with an acrobatic ease;
A lunzard circling blue, ethereal seas;
A linnet lighting on a limb to lilt.

What alchemistic life the odors give
To dead remembrances! I had forgot
That I possessed this mental negative,—
Snapped many years ago upon the spot,
Until, moving by a town to-day,
I breathed the pariing liquid, melting hot.

THE WHIPPOORWILL

Hush the whippoorwill,
Press his song-bed veiled and dusky,
Fills the night ways warm and musky
With his music's throb and thrill!
'Tis the Western nightingale,
Lodged within the orchards pale,
Starting into sudden tune
Mid the smarms air of June;
Lord of all the songs of night,
Bird unseen, of voice outright,
Oft his shadow-parceled room,
Rouled above by webbed and woven
Leaf and bloom, by moonbeams clothed,
Searched by odorous sephyrs through
Dim with dusk and damp with dew:
He it this unto the soul
An enchantment and delight,
Opening its entrancing tale
Where the strongs rubbie fail,
Ending the victorious strain
When the robins sing again.

J. J. AND THE PERKINSES

(By BYRON STAUFFER, in Toronto Star)

To Peter Perkins and wife, of Carey's Corners, welcome!

This notable couple will arrive at the Union station (the old one), at seven-forty-five to-night—always provided that the Oxbow accommodation is on time, which it almost certainly won't be—and will be met by their son, Alock, his wife, and three little Perkinses who have been sticking pins in a railway map all afternoon to denote the progress of grampaw and grammaw toward town on their annual visit to Toronto and the Ex.

Then won't there be fun!

Two little brats of boys will be running up to greet them, and up and around his wobbly old legs the moment he enters that suffocating gangway on the high steps of the train shed and is get-at-able, while the excited old gentleman is breaking out in a series of nanny-goat chuckles which he gives only when he is superlatively pleased. Meantime tiny Betty has been yelling: "There's grammaw," at the top of her voice, breaking away from the tether of the maternal hand to cover the wrinkled old face with kisses and cause her specs to be dimmed by her moist eyes.

Then the three little Perkinses and the two big Perkinses and the two ancient Perkinses will pile into the tin Lizzie around the corner and ding-dang out to the Danforth, where the Perkinses live, to have a snack before grampaw and grammaw are stowed away in the spare bed for the night. And in the early morning, three little Perkinses will spar and wriggle for first place under the good old couple's kivvers.

Oh, won't there be fun for the whole blessed crowd! There'll be giggles when grampaw snorts into the wash basin and awed silence when he says his long and lovely grace at table. There'll be trips to the Ex and little walks with grampaw to the candy store at the corner, visits from relatives and sleeps on shake downs, crowded table and a whole boiled ham. And lastly, more monstrous in grammaw's eyes and more nanny-goat chuckles from grampaw as the grand old pair take the train back for Carey's Corners.

If Brother J. J. Morrison will forgive it, I will assert that the visit of Peter Perkins and wife prompts me to declare that he, J. J., unwittingly slanders us all in declaring that there is absolute divorce between the farm and the city. On the contrary, this week and next demonstrate conclusively that there are tens of thousands of wedlock ties between this proud metropolis and all the countryside for two hundred miles about it.

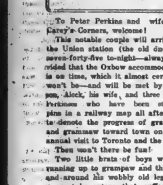

And this is the eternal trouble with the Morrisons—and the Ireners and the Woodworths as well—that is their acadetic speculating about city and farm and capital and labor antagonisms, they forget the love of the Perkinses! They altogether fail to take into account that society is as dovetailed as the pieces of their grandmother's bureau drawer, that town-dwellers and farmers, artisans and merchants, are married and implied by just such sentimental happenings as the arrival of Peter Perkins and wife of Carey's Corners.

No, as long as Alock Perkins meets his old dad at the station during Exhibition week and as long as Mrs. Alock Perkins and her three kiddies go out to spouse at Carey's Corners for a couple of weeks every summer, I'll risk all J. J.'s' stock rouserments at the U. F. O. picnics; he can never do much damage. I shall stake my all on the love of the Perkinses.

Moreover, it will surprise Brother Morrison to learn that though Alock Perkins shook the dust of Carey's Corners from his number nines twenty years ago, he is still working for his father, Peter Perkins. Alock is a seed specialist. Fifty years ago there weren't many of his sort. The pioneer farmers of Ontario used their own products for seeding their next crop. Now Alock does it for them, for they feel they haven't the time nor the facilities. So Alock is in town working for his dad and refusing point blank to be drowned by J. J.

Every Peter Perkins sends us an Alock or two. He's been doing it for a century. He used to be his own shoe-maker; then he got tired of the job and farmed it out to me. For a long time, Peter spun his own wool, dyed and wove it, had his wife make it into garments. When all this became too wearisome to the flesh he sent an Alock or a Lizzie to the city to have his wool made into clothes there. Every time Peter —or J. J.—had a good crop and fair prices, he left off doing something and let the boys in town do it. So Peter and J. J. became specialists on the farm and the city, and when the same specialists in seeds, shoes, clothes and the like in the big and terrible city.

The Feast of Tabernacles held city and rural Jew together. Then was when Jerusalem welcomed the country cousins, with a tent or two on every lawn to accommodate the overflow. This is Ontario's Feast of Tabernacles and, despite J. J.—good old scout as he is—we are all sewed up, all knit together, by this wonderful love of the Perkinses.

"If I die not want my daughter to carry a flask, smoke cigarettes, appear in public half-clothed, and carry on illicit love affairs, then I would not put into her hands books, magazines or pictures filled with descriptions of people who live such lives. The Daily Recipe

BY BERTHA E. SHAPLEIGH

Cooking Authority for NEA Service and Columbia University

This is the season for blueberries and the very last one wants to see them almost every day.

One of the ways to put them in the muffins. These are good for breakfast, and equally good, cold, for luncheon. The recipe which follows makes about large muffins, or 12 small or thinner ones:

¼ cup butter
¼ cup sugar
3-4 cup milk
2 eggs
1 cup blueberries
2 cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt

Work together the butter and sugar until creamy, add the eggs, one at a time, then the milk, and beat well. Sift baking powder, flour and salt. Add to egg and butter mixture alternately with the milk.

When thoroughly mixed, add blueberries and put into well buttered muffin tins. Bake 25 minutes in an even hot enough for small cakes.

These little muffins may be served hot with a liquid sauce for dessert. The mixture may be baked in one pan, and cut into squares when served.

GERMANY DISCARDS EMPEROR'S FAVORITE POSTAGE STAMPS

(Associated Press.)

Berlin, Aug. 11. (By Mail)—One of the last remaining symbols of old regime in Germany will pass away with the withdrawal of all postage stamps of familiar "Germania" type on October 31 next.

This striking design, first adopted in 1900, played a most prominent part in fostering the militarist movement that brought disaster upon the Fatherland.

The original of the beautiful figure of Germania was Frauleln Anna Fuhring, of the Imperial Opera, whose portrayal of the role so impressed the former Kaiser that he ordered her likeness to be placed upon the new postage stamps of the Empire.

Since the establishment of the Republic numerous protests have been lodged against the continuance of this design, and now that the new industrial series of stamps has been completed, instructions for its suppression have been issued.

Mrs. Gene Stratton Porter, author of the "Limberlost" books has recently been devoting her time to the indictment of coarseness in current popular literature. She attacks modern novels and magazines in "The Baptist" as follows:—

"Personally it is difficult for me to understand why tobaccoists that would not be permitted in life, and characters that would not be admitted into a home or a fam ily circle in person on t.by consideration, should be allowed to come there between the covers of a book. Why should men and women be allowed to scatter broadcast on the pages of a book such matters as the courts authorities would not allow for a minute on the pages of a letter? DOUBLE FEATURE PROGRAM AT GRIFFIN'S TONIGHT

Lovers of strong virile Western photoplays will find "North of the Rio Grande," a Paramount picture co-starring Jack Holt and Bebe Daniels quite to their tastes, the picture has scored a decided hit, and is receiving its final showing on the big double feature program at Griffin's to-night.

"Second Hand Rose" can be seen and heard and felt at Griffin's to-night. The popular song hit is played in conjunction with the picture which was based on it. Gladys Walton's characterization of the central figure makes itself "felt" for the role is a pathetic one and with her ability Miss Walton makes it entirely human.

"The Night Before" an amusing 2 reel Educhine comedy is being exhibited on the same program with the two above feature offerings.

THOMAS MEIGHAN HERE TOMORROW IN GEO ADE'S "OUR LEADING CITIZEN"

The combined talents of the famed American humorist, George Ade, Thomas Meighan, the film star, and an able supporting cast, have resulted in one of the most entertaining photoplays of the season, titled "Our Leading Citizen", which is announced as the feature offering at Griffin's to-morrow to Saturday, with a matinee Saturday. Wholesoming, clean, amusing, with a touch of pathos and a masterful interest, the photoplay will no doubt delight scores of Belleville photoplay lovers, for it has wherever it has been exhibited.

It is the story of a young lawyer in Indiana who has no use for politics and who, at the outbreak of the World War, enlists and returns a hero. In France he meets a girl he has admired back home. She returns first and paves the way for his reception, but his modesty causes him to hide his light under a bushel. Finally he is caught and properly "Received" by the populace. He is promoted for courage, but refuses to agree to certain corrupt demands and learning, as he believes that the girl has urged him on to further her brother's ends, disappears from town. Later she is brought back, wins the election and wins the girl she was always true to him and to herself. Lois Wilson will be found charming in the role of the girl. Theodore Roberts, Will Carleton, Charles Ogle and others are in the cast.

"Home Sense", a two reel Century comedy, a beautiful Travelogue of The Flowing Canada, series, titled "Nipigon Trail," and George Wahl, the latest chapter of "With Stanley in Africa" serial, are announced for exhibition on the same program.

We do not care if she is a woman. Congresswoman Alice Robertson of Oklahoma is honor to her State. She is the embodiment of common sense, which is the one particular quality most needful in a man or woman in a member of Congress. We do not now recall any more man who is a greater public and in every vote cast. She is a good Christian, a good American and a good Republican and in the promotion of sound morality, fervent patriotism and straightforward and honest party policy. Miss Robertson is a national leader. Oklahoma has been called a freak State. Congresswoman Robertson is a freak product of which we cannot have too many.

And according to latest returns from the primary election the people of the district which elected Miss Robertson honors by representing feel just as we do about it.

Pain Stops Instantly

THE BANDBOX

By Louis Joseph Vance

The look he bent upon Eleanor was almost a secret; a smile in part contemptuous, in part studious; as though he pondered a problem in human chemistry from the view-point of a seasoned and experienced scientist. He ordered his head a bit to one side and stared insolently beneath half-lowered lids; now and again nodding over as lightly as in confirmation of some unspoken conclusion.

Against the cold, inflexible purpose in his manner, the pitiful prayer expressed in the girl's attitude spent itself without effect. Her hands dropped to her sides; her head drooped wearily hopelessly; her pose personified dejection, tendency perfected and irremediable.

When he had timed his silence cunningly, to ensure the most impressive effect, the man moved, shifting from one foot to the other, and spoke.

"Well, Nelly . . . ?"

Her voice, modulated to an amused drawl, was much like Jil's.

The girl's lips moved noiselessly for an instant before she managed to articulate.

"Jo," she said in a quiet tone of horror—"do it was you all the time!"

"What was me?" enquired the man inelegantly if with spirit.

"I guess," she said, "you were after the necklace, after all."

"To be sure," he said pertly. "What did you think?"

"I hoped it wasn't so," she said brokenly. "When you escaped yesterday morning, and when tonight I found the necklace—I was so glad!"

"Then you did find it?" he demanded promptly.

She gave him a look of contempt. "Do you know it?"

"My dear child," he expostulated insincerely, "what makes you say that?"

"You don't mean to deny you've been in my bandbox?"

"Not at all," he said, "but for that disguise—the hand and motor-coat."

"That just goes to show that final affection will out," commented the man. "You haven't seen me for seven years—"

"Except on the steamer," she corrected.

"Pshe; but there I kept considerably out of your way."

"Considerately!" she echoed in a bitter tone.

"Can you question it?" he asked, lightly ironic, moving noiselessly to and fro while appraising the contents of the room with swift, unwinking glances.

"As, for instance, your actions tonight, . . ."

"They simply prove my contention, dear child." He paused, casting down at her with a quizzical leer. "My very presence here affirms my entire devotion to your welfare."

She looked up, dumfounded by his effrontery. "Is it worth while to watch your time so?" she enquired. "You failed the first time tonight, but you can't fail now; I'm alone, I can't oppose you, and you know I won't make an alarm. Way not stop talking, take what you want and go? And leave me to be accused of theft unless I choose to tell the truth—which it wouldn't believe—that my own father plotted the necklace from me!"

She looked him unjust, you are!" exclaimed the man. "How little you know me, how little you appreciate a father's affection!"

"And you tried to rob me not two hours ago!"

"Yes," he said cheerfully: "I admit it. If I had got away with it then—well and good. You need never have known who it was. Unhappily for both of us, you fooled me."

"For both of us?" she repeated blankly.

"Precisely. It puts you in a most serious position. That's why I'm here to-night—you."

In spite of her fatigue, the girl rose to face him. "What do you mean?"

"Simply that because you have possessed this business up neatly—hard and fast. You see—I hadn't any use for that hat; I removed it as an after-sight telegraph station and left it to be delivered to Miss Landis, never dreaming what the consequences would be. Immediately thereafter, but too late, I what's going on, you know—that Miss Leonard—I've a way of finding out Landis had already put the case in the hands of the police. It makes it very serious for you—the bandbox, returned, the necklace still in your possession, your wild, incredible yarn about meaning to restore it . . ."

RUSSIA ENTERS WORLD OF SPORT

Will Organize an International Competition Between Various Communist Societies

(Associated Press)

Moscow, Aug. 4 (By mail).—A "Red Olympiad" is planned by Soviet authorities interested in athletics to foster Russia's contribution to the world of sport.

Disquieting of wearing admission to the Paris Olympic games in 1924, Russian athletes hope to be able to organize within a year or two an international competition of the best athletes from the Red Trade Unions and other Communist organizations throughout the world. Proletarian sports, including soccer football, rugs of war, wrestling and field sports are to be featured.

Since the end of the civil war there has been a revival of athletic activity in Russia. Though participating in previous Olympic games Russia was never noted as a nation where sports were loved. Instead of baseball or cricket the Russians had the ballet, and they rooted for their dancing favorites with all the vim that American display in cheering their home run heroes. Horse racing also had thousands of followers, and trotters were as much esteemed at Petrograd and Moscow as in the Kentucky blue grass. Horse racing already has been revived and is growing more popular every day, particularly as betting machines are now permitted.

Among the peasants themselves, however, sport, except for country wrestling and occasional bandit running matches, was practically unknown. Peasants comprise at least 70 per cent. of the Russian population. The workmen in the cities are interested principally in football.

The government has now organized a special department to encourage sports and is appointing instructors in every province. The school children are being taught physical cultural exercises and funds for this purpose are extremely limited, however, and there is a great shortage of footballs and other athletic paraphernalia.

A recent football match near Moscow was attended by a crowd of nearly 7,000 persons, and the Soviet sport officials declare that within a few years Russia will show more interest in sporting events than was the custom before the war.

ORIOLES OUST TORONTO LEAFS

Jack Dunn's Orioles Win First of a Five-Game Series

The first clash of a five-game series between the now assured four times champions of the International League, Jack Dunn's Baltimore Orioles, and the Leafs was the attraction that drew a few hundred sports to the island ballyard yesterday afternoon, and the full nine-innings game that resulted gave ample reason for the relative positions of the two clubs in the standing. There was lots of hasty clouting and good pitching, both, unfortunately for the local cause, being produced by the visitors from the southern end of the circuit and when Mike Vincent lofted to Porter for the final out of the game the count was 8 to 0 for the Birds.

The Dunnites recorded sixteen hits and there was nothing of the scratch order about any of them. Four of the home runs by Lawry into right field bleachers, and Jack Bentley smashed two doubles to deep centre, in addition to a couple of singles. Fritz Maisel, Porter and Leon Styles went hit less, but all the rest obtained two or more of the safe variety. Porter laid down three sacrifices and was credited with but one legal turn at bat. In addition to this batting the leaders worked Tommy Thompson in six free trips to the initial station and this combination is sufficient to win almost any old ball game.

So much for the Birds. The Leafs on the other hand, were faced by their old friend, Rube Parnham, and the lanky twirler obtained sweet revenge for the treatment he has received at the hands of the locals on previous starts. He limited the Leaf's hitting to six hits, three of which came in the last two innings, and confined his charitable instincts to Orme, giving the right gardener three passes to Bentley's station. Shupp hit safely twice and Orme had one out of one, in the eighth Shupp singled with one out, and after Kelly had popped to Styles, Wingo cracked one into right for a safety. This was the extent of the Leafs' concerted attacking.

CENT. ONTARIO EXECUTIVE MEET

Lesaide Win Protest From Port Hope; Lindsay Lose to Cobourg

Oshawa, Aug. 29.—The executive of the Central Ontario Amateur Baseball League met this afternoon with the following members present:—Past President B. Lockington, Port Hope; President Parsons, Oshawa; 2nd Vice-President M. P. Daly, Belleville; 3rd Vice-President J. J. Solomon, Peterboro; R. E. Barton, Cobourg; R. D. Adams, Belleville; M. Mason, Bowmanville; Geo. Peacock, executive members, and J. G. Nott, Oshawa, secretary-treasurer. Lindsay was the only town not represented.

The play-off between the winners of first and second section was arranged for September 13th and September 16th, the third game, if necessary, at Oshawa on Wednesday, September 20 or 23rd in case of bad weather. Jack Rosenew, Port Hope, was the choice of umpire to handle the plate, with C. Boundy of Cobourg as his alternate. Dick Bakier of Lindsay and R. E. Barnes of Cobourg to handle bases. Three umpires to act in all three games.

A motion was moved by J. J. Solomon, seconded by J. G. Nott, that a recommendation be sent on the next annual meeting that the 1st of January be adopted as the entrance rule by the Central League for the season 1923, and it was carried unanimously.

Catcher A. Tyson of Cobourg was reprimanded for his action against Umpire Rosevear at Lesaide, and will be asked for an explanation with a strong resolution that any future misconduct will mean his expulsion from amateur ball.

Rev. D. C. Ramsay of Bellevile was elected a member of the protest sub-committee in lieu of A. C. Kimmel of Cobourg handing in his resignation.

Lesaide Win Protest.

Lesaide were awarded their protest against Port Hope, the latter team playing Carter at first base without a certificate. The game was awarded to Lesaide. The sub-committee handed out its decision on the protest of Lindsay against Cobourg, in which the protest was disallowed and the game stands as played, a win for Cobourg.

The next meeting of the executive will be held in Peterboro after the play-off game on Saturday, September 16th. The Central Ontario League can hardly declare a winner before September 20th, and the secretary at the O.B.A.A. will be notified accordingly.

President Toole stated that he is just "taking a look over the situation" in the various International League towns. He certainly made his presence felt yesterday, as Andy Anderson and "Rube" Parnham observed to their sorrow, and sorrow becoming occasioned by $25 fines.

The Pyrotechnic Display at The Big Fair

Above is an artist's impression of the splendid pyrotechnic display which concludes the spectacle of the Prince of Wales Durbar in front of the grandstand at the Canadian National Exhibition, now being held in Toronto.

AT THE BALTIMORE SERIES.

The Toronto Club may send Infielder Richardson to the Montreal Club of the Eastern Canada League. He was recalled from London, but will be kept here until Gonzales is ready to play again.

Manager Dunn did not deem it necessary to don his uniform. He sat in a box seat with President Toole and when the fans raised him they made him rather uncomfortable. One of the "popular" verbal shafts was: "Umpire McGowan must have offended you greatly at Baltimore." McGowan was recently released by President Toole, although Toronto fandom was convinced that he was one of the best athletes on the staff.

Dick Rudolph was among those present and was seen noticed by fans who had not seen him for many years. Rudolph, now a scout with the Boston Braves, has changed but little. The years have been kind to this hero of the 1914 world's series, in which the Braves astonished everybody by taking four straight from the Philadelphia Athletics. It is surmised that Rudolph is looking over some of the Baltimore players who will be for sale this fall.

KIDDIES' DAY AT THE STADIUM

The Toronto Ball Club have been giving ladies' days for years and starting this week they are going to give a kid day on Thursday and Friday, when all boys in short pants will be admitted on these two days to the bleachers for the price of a two-cent tax, the latter being the Government tax collected. Baltimore are playing two games on Thursday, so the youngsters will have a chance to see the champions in action, while on Friday Bonding comes here.

GONZALES BREAKS HAND

Infielder Gonzales is out of the game for the balance of the season with a broken hand, he sustaining the injury a week ago. Richardson was recalled from London yesterday, and will hold down the shortstop position.

UMPIRE TAKES STAND

Umpire Bill Phyle tacked on a $25 fine to Rube Parnham for his unparliamentary language in disputing a pitched ball, while Anderson was fined the same amount for disputing the calling of a grounder down third-base line fair.

YANKEE TRAMP ARRIVES IN EAST

Native of Seattle Tramped Barefooted Over Half The Globe

(By Associated Press)

Bagdad, Mesopotamia, Aug. 12.—Hippolyte Martinet, an American, who hails from Seattle, Wash., and who claims to have tramped barefooted over half the globe, arrived in Bagdad recently, absolutely as well as penniless.

With long hair hanging over his neck to protect it from heat and cold, a kit and that had not seen the shores for two long years, a kit weighing about 20 pounds flung across his back, and a sun panned across his breast to proclaim to the world that he is a globe trotter, Mr. Martinet presented himself to King Feisul and told the following story:

"Tired of my profession as a cabinetmaker and feeling that a tramp quired to do "home work."

around the world would benefit my health, I set out from my home on April 19, 1920, encumbered by very little of things material.

"Walking on an average of 36 miles a day and resting at several places, I reached New York four months later and managed to get a passage across the Atlantic, reaching Southampton in the middle of September. After a tramp to London I embarked for Antwerp.

"From Antwerp I worked my way through the devastated regions to Paris. In Paris I tried to sell picture postcards representing myself in the garb of a globe trotter, but the French police mistook me for a beggar and drove me away.

"Quitting Paris I tramped to Havre, and thence to Nice. From Nice I crossed to Switzerland and gradually worked my way down to Brindisi. Leaving the Italian port I crossed to Albania and thence to Greece. Take me a boat I crossed to Egypt, reaching Cairo in December last year.

"After roaming about Egypt I struck towards Palestine and then to Damascus, where I joined a caravan, crossing the desert to Bagdad in 21 days."

Mr. Martinet is about 45 years of age. He plans to go next to Basra, then to Bombay, to Japan, China and San Francisco.

Emir Feisul, who displayed great interest in Mr. Martinet, presented him with a cheque for £200.

Brockville, Aug. 29.—A move for the abolition of "home work" in the public schools on the ground that in some instances it is oppressive and detrimental to the health of pupils, was made today by the Board of Education, which decided upon a trial of a system whereby all pupils below the entrance grade will not be re-

VALERA REPORTED SERIOUSLY ILL

Irish Republican Leader Said to be in Nursing Institution

Dublin, Aug. 30.—Eamonn de Valera, Irish Republican leader, is seriously ill not far from Dublin, it is reported in circles, protessing to speak with authority. These rumors assert that he returned from the West Cork area badly broken in health, and is now in a nursing institution somewhere in the Dublin district.

It is said he is suffering from an internal malignant growth. Those who have seen him within the last few weeks declare that he looked ill and unable to stand the strain under which he has been working for much longer.

It is officially reported that a band of insurgents led by Erskine Childers tried to cut the Atlantic cables at Valentia. They went out in a small boat and had cut one cable when they saw a party of National troops advancing and escaped.

But He Won.

I am engaged in a work which gives me great pleasure, and the tracing of language through more than 30 different dialects has opened a new and before unexplored field. I have within two years past made discoveries which, if ever published, must interest the literati of all Europe, and realize it necessary to revise all the lexicons—Hebrew, Greek and Latin—now used as classical books. But what can I do? My own resources are almost exhausted, and in a few days I shall sell my house to get bread for my children. —Noah Webster.

TURK DRIVES GREEK FROM KEY POSITION IN ASIA MINOR

Turks Occupy Afum Karahissar, Says Report—A Serious Blow

London, Aug. 30.—If the Turks have actually invaded Afum Karahissar it would mean a serious blow to the Greek fortunes in Asia Minor in the opinion of military observers here familiar with the Anatolian conflict.

Afum Karahissar is a vital key position on the Berlin-Bagdad railway, and constitutes one of the most important supply bases of the Greek army. The Greeks have been in possession of the city for more than a year, during which time they have accumulated vast supplies and have powerfully intrenched themselves.

The occupation of the city by the Turks would cut off the Greeks from Smyrna, Brusa and Eski-Shehr, and would put the Turks within striking distance of the latter city, which is the largest base of the Greek army and the seat of its headquarters.

SISTERS SUPPORT DELORME FIGHT

Fear That Brother-in-law May Try to Prove That They Too, are Insane

Montreal, Aug. 30.—Delorme's fight on the retention of the administrative reins of his and his family's fortune is backed by his three sisters, according to Leopold Houle. The sisters, Rose, Florence, and Lily are in close communication with Mr. Houle, but one other sister, Mrs. Tetrault, has ranged herself on the side of her husband, petitioner for the interdiction. The sister are not members of the family council behind the petition, being excluded by law which limits the personnel of the council to the male kin of the person to be interdicted. Thus the council actually consists of everyone by the real Delorme heirs who stand debarred by their sex.

According to Mr. Houle, the three sisters fear that the interdicting of their brother may lead to similar action being taken against themselves, particularly in view of the strange roles they played during the insanity proceedings. At these the sisters were called to the stand with the view to showing that they were socially deficient, in to support the contention that Delorme's mental condition was hereditary.

Another interesting phase of the case was being discussed by lawyers today. Should the priest satisfy the judge that he is not insane, the court may order his liberation from the asylum. A precedent for such action was furnished in the local courts only recently when Judge Martineau ordered the release of Mrs. Lamontagne from the Hotel Dieu Hospital for the insane, in the face of evidence by an alienist that the woman was insane. The judge simply ruled over-ruled the expert's evidence.

HAMILTON MAN ARRESTED HERE

Telegram Received Here on Tuesday Leads to Arrest of Local Man

An officer from the police force of Hamilton arrived in this city this morning, and secured a prisoner back to that city from the County Jail here.

About 1.30 p.m. on Tuesday, the local police received a telegram from Chief Constable Whatley of Hamilton, asking for the arrest one Edward Harrison of this city, on a charge of fraud. He was described as being almost forty years of age, a Civil Engineer, but in the produce business here.

Later, in the afternoon, the man was arrested, and taken into custody. Harrison, who was in the produce business here, was arrested in connection with his alleged association with a transaction in Hamilton in which a cheque for one thousand dollars figured.

GOODMAN CASE IS ADJOURNED

Story of Hebrew Fracas to Be Continued in Future

The Goldberg—Goodman trial continued before Magistrate Masson this morning.

Laurence Letourneau, a young boy living at 377½ Front street, was the first witness, and to Mr. A. B. Cullen, counsel for Mrs. Goldberg, testified that he witnessed the affray. "I saw the girl Mary Goldberg, clinging on her mother's skirt, mid the boy," and also saw Mrs. Goldberg enter Harry Goodman's store. Mrs. Goodman slapped Mrs. Goldberg in the face, and brushed her by the hair of the head. Later Harry Goodman knocked her out to the sidewalk, hitting her in the chest.

Cross examined by Mr. Butler, counsel for the Goodman's, the witness testified that Harry Goodman shoved her in the chest rather than hit her with his fist.

Chief of Police A. Kidd, to whom Mrs. Goldberg laid the complaint, was the next witness but his evidence was taken under the objection of Mr. Butler. The chief told of marks on the front of her neck and throat and a mark on her chest.

The case was again adjourned until Friday, September 8th at 10 a.m.

NEW KING OF SIAM PREFERS ONE WIFE TO THREE HUNDRED

King of Siam Weds—Father Had 300 Wives—Son Renounces the Harem

Bangkok, Siam, Aug. 30.—The marriage of Maha Mejiravudha, King of Siam, to his cousin, Princess Lakshi Lavan, was proclaimed on Sunday.

The King of Siam is 42 years of age and always has been a bachelor. He is the eldest son of King Chulalongkorn and succeeded to the throne on the death of his father, in October, 1910. He is styled King Rama VI., being the sixth sovereign of the present reigning dynasty. It was officially announced in November, 1910, that until the new king had made issue the succession to the throne would pass presumptively to the line of the queen mother's son.

The king's father is said to have had 300 wives. King Maha Mejiravudh was the first of his line to renounce the rights to a harem. In December, 1920, it was said he had chosen as his queen Princess Watchiral, his first cousin. The following year, however, it was stated that he had annulled his betrothal to her. During the present month advices were received saying that he would wed a pretty Siamese princess named Lakshi Lavan.

PETERBORO PEOPLE ARE SURPRISED

Bellevillian Reported to be "Severely Injured", visits Electric City

The Peterboro Examiner of Tuesday states that Mr. William Doyle, of the Dominion Tax Collectors' Office of Belleville, was in the Electric city on Tuesday renewing old acquaintances and meeting his many friends there that he is still alive and well. In this respect Mr. Doyle had a busy day, because a despatch carried over the wires a few days ago included his name in the list of casualties resulting from an automobile accident in Hastings township, in which two men were killed and one badly injured. As a matter of fact Mr. Doyle was some forty miles from the scene of the accident, and was therefore fortunate enough to be "not present" when the disaster occurred. Like Mark Twain, Mr. Doyle feels that the report of his death or near death was greatly exaggerated.

The other, local gentleman, whom the Examiner stated "died in hospital" as a result of injuries sustained in the Foxboro motor tragedy, is also alive, and well, and by no was miles from the scene of the accident.

DIES OF BURNS, GUIDE ACCUSED

Well-known Sportsman Is Charged With Brutal Murder of Girl

Yarmouth, N. S., Aug. 29.—The Coroner's jury investigating the death of Flora Gray, 19-year-old girl found last night naked and terribly burned under a bed in the home of Omar Roberts with the statement made that she was employed as housekeeper, brought in the following verdict tonight:

"Flora Gray came to her death at four a.m. at Robert Randall's, where Miss Gray had been taken, by shock caused by severe burns received at Omar Roberts' house. The burns were caused by gasoline or some other inflammable substance spread on the floor of her bedroom. As she and Omar Roberts were the only ones in the house at the time, and as evidence points to him as having perpetrated the crime, we come to the conclusion that Omar Roberts was the cause of her death."

Roberts was arrested this morning, following affidavits of inquest and it is said that he had made advances to her last night, and that when she rejected them he threw gasoline over the bed and set it on fire. Roberts is a well-known sportsman and guide, and is 60 years of age.

HONORS FOR SALE HELP PARTY FUNDS

Duke Explodes Bomb in British Politics — Produces Letters Purporting to Offer Baronetcies for Party Donations

London, Aug. 30.—There is a striking contrast between the London and provincial press in the treatment of the Duke of Northumberland's allegations regarding the sale of honors for money paid to party funds. Most of the London papers are silent on the subject, but the great provincial journals, whether strong Conservative like the Yorkshire Post, or Liberal, like the Manchester Guardian, comment freely.

The facts of the position are that the Duke of Northumberland produced a letter written by Mr. Henry Shaw to two wealthy men representing that he was able to obtain baronetcies for them if paid certain sums. As reference for his credentials, Mr. Shaw mentioned a well known newspaper proprietor. Mr. Shaw himself, is a considerable landowner.

Lloyd George, interviewed last night on the Northumberland allegations, denied knowledge or Mr. Shaw The chief coalition Unionist whip makes a similar disclaimer.

Mr. Shaw refuses to make any statement pending consultation with his solicitor.

The gist of press comment is as follows: By the words of the Manchester Guardian, saying: "The letter and its sequel, if genuine, presents a scandalous affair. We say if genuine not because we have a suspicion that the Duke would invent it, but because we are bound to guard against assuming the Duke has not been hoaxed."

SCARED HEIFER CREATES HAVOC AT TORONTO "EX."

Runs Amuck at the Exhibition and Injures Small Child

A two-year-old heifer owned by Mr. Alex. Hume, of Campbellford, Ont., created half an hour's excitement and caused the first casualty at the Toronto National Exhibition on Saturday afternoon. The heifer was being unloaded at the Coliseum when it broke loose and, becoming enraged for reasons best known to itself, ran amuck.

Travelling at a high speed through the cattle sheds, it spun on its heels, north then to the live stock building and along the Midway.

In the rush and scramble to avoid the mad heifer little Elsie Walker, 6 years, of 148 Northcote ave., was knocked down and cut behind the ear. She was rushed to the emergency hospital, attended and was able to go about, visiting the Exhibition.

Meanwhile the heifer continued its wild career, once more on midway, doubled back and raced for the Dufferin gates. Had it reached the gates with the mob coming in there is little saying what may have happened.

As it was, several attendants, headed by a Humane Society officer, were able to trap the cow near the Argonaut Club and finally master- ed it, taking him back to his quarters.

PENSIONS PROBE REVEALS CASES OF INJUSTICE

A Veteran Draws Compensation Two Years; Then it is Discontinued

DOCTOR IS QUIZZED

Country's Liability Should Not be Determined by One Man, Says Chairman

Ottawa, Aug. 29—Actual cases of pensions granted for aggravated disability were considered when the royal commission investigating G. W. V. A. charges against the pension board continued its hearings to-day. Dr. Norman K. McIver, unit medical director, Winnipeg, was on the stand.

In his evidence, Dr. McIver, under examination by N. R. Bowler, counsel for the G.W.V.A., cited a case where a man had served three years in France. He was discharged with 15 per cent disability of which five per cent. was aggravation of preservice disability. The man was pensioned at five per cent.

In another case the pension commission granted a man a pension for 15 per cent disability. Two years later the pension was discontinued, although, Dr. McIver admitted, the condition of the man had not changed.

"Why," questioned Mr. Bowler, "was the man pensionable in 1920 and 1921 and not pensionable in 1922?"

Dr. McIver replied that he did not think the man now had a pensionable disability.

Why It Was Stopped.

Dr. McIver added that the man was pensioned for myalgia, the result of rheumatic fever, which he had suffered in 1920 and 1921. Dr. McIver would have pensioned the man, giving him the benefit of any doubt that after two years considering the nature of the disability, he would not award a pension. An objection had been raised by the head office to continuance of this pension and on rifle ground that the aggravation of preservice disability existed and the pension was discontinued this year. The Winnipeg office concurred in the decision of the head office in regard to this case.

"Would that not lead to the conclusion," questioned Mr. Bowler, "that the head office were considering these awards on a different basis in 1922 than in 1920 or 1921?" "Not at all. We were a year farther away," said Mr. McIver.

"In other words there has been a change of attitude?" "Not at all. There has been a change of time."

Continuing Mr. McIver said the pension was discontinued because aggravation had ceased.

Chairman Gives Views.

Col. Ralston, chairman of the commission, sharply stressed the point that in such a difficult case as the one in question "one man should not be left to determine the liability of the country and whether a man should have a pension."

Dr. McIver replied that the medical examiners were highly trained men.

"It shows how highly trained they are," retorted Col. Ralston, "when they give this man a pension for two years."

Dr. McIver pressed that the case was considered that in 1920 he himself would have given the man the benefit of any doubt.

The medical examiner, Dr. McIver continued, who originally gave the pensioner a 15 per cent. disability had in February of this year, after further examination, reported that the disability in the same case was "nil."

"That was after he had been knocked up by the head office?" said Mr. Bowler.

"Yes," Dr. McIver concurred.

LADY NORTHCLIFFE MAY CONTROL TIMES

Political Element Seeking to Obtain Control of Influential Organ

London, Aug. 30—Lady Northcliffe, widow of the famous British publisher, may upset the aims of political groups which already are battling for possession of the London Times, and assume control of this most powerful British newspaper, it was learned to-day.

Viscountess Northcliffe, her friends declare, has no ambition to dominate Fleet street, as did her husband. But she is expected to assume the head, for the moment assumes a greater sphere of influence than when the publisher lived. Lord Northcliffe, who controlled it. Now, a tremendous balance of power in the political world is uncontrolled.

For this reason, and because she has a severe court fight on her hands, it was predicted the viscountess would retain the Times, for a time, at least. Big political elements are seeking it and Lord Beaver eye to one of the most influential figures of British this coming spring when the nation goes to the polls.
